A COMMENTARY
UPON THE PROPHECIES OF ISAIAH.

TO THE HIGH AND MIGHTIE PRINCE,

HENRIE, PRINCE OF GREAT BRITTAINE, SONNE AND HEIRE APPARANT TO our Soueraigne Lord, IAMES King of Great Brittaine, &c.

AND TO THE MOST NOBLE AND VERTVOVS PRINCESSE, THE LADY ELIZABETHS GRACE, his Highneſſe moſt deare Siſter; all honour and happineſſe, with eternall glorie through Chriſt IESVS.

MOſt gracious and renowned Princes, hauing tranſlated out of French into our Engliſh tongue, the booke of the prophecie of Iſaiah, interpreted and expounded by Maſter Iohn Caluin, of reuerend memorie: I humblie craue that it may be publiſhed vnder your moſt Princely names and protection. The reaſon of this my humble petition is, that the honor of ſo noble a worke may not be imbaſed by the meanes of my endeuours. This Prophet by birth was the ſonne of Amos, eſteemed by many to haue been brother to Azarias King of Iudah, and Father in law to King Manaſſes: which being ſo, this Prophet was by birth of the blood Royal, and deſcended of the houſe of Dauid, which for the promiſe of Chriſt to come of him, was the moſt noble houſe of all the Kings of the earth. Being ſo borne, his education could not be but Princely, and his bringing vp in all good learning, wiſdome, vertue and honor. His ſpirituall graces, not attained vnto by ordinarie meanes, but inſpired into him immediatly by the Spirit of God, were excellent. This appeareth particularly in the ſixth Chapter of this Prophecie, declaring that an Angell of God with a burning coale taken from the Lords Altar, and laide to the mouth of the Prophet, refined his lips and his tongue, that they became pure and precious as the fineſt Gold. The ſame is manifeſt in all the booke of his Prophecie; wherein both the light and the heate of that heauenly fire appeareth. For he not onely declared the will of God ſincerely, according to the lawe and teſtimonie deliuered to Moſes, but alſo foreſhewed the future euents of the Kingdome of Judah, and of all the flouriſhing ſtates and Kingdomes of his time.

He Prophecieth alſo of the birth of Ieſus Chriſt, as if hee had been taught by the Angell Gabriel; who brought the annunciation and meſſage of it to the bleſſed Virgin his mother. Of his paſſion and death he ſpake, as if with the Apoſtle John he had ſtoode by when he was crucified. His reſurrection he deſcribed, as if with all the Apoſtles he had ſtoode vpon Mount Oliuet, where the Lord tooke the cloude of glorie as his heauenly Chariot to aſcend and goe vp to his Father. His zeale and indignation againſt ſinne is euident euery where, in his ſharpe reproofes of the offences of all eſtates.

Finally, the booke of his Prophecie beareth written in the head of it the names of foure Kings, in whoſe time he prophecied; and before whom as a veſſell of golde he bare the name of God with great honour. All which things being royall, it ſeemed to me moſt conuenient that his booke ſhould ſtill beare in the front of it the names of Princes. And as hee foreſhewed that Kings ſhould bee Foſterfathers, and Queenes Nurces of the Church of Chriſt, ſo my deſire was that his booke might be publiſhed vnder the names and protection of Chriſtian Princes.

Moreouer, I was led hereunto by the example of this Interpreter, whoſe expoſition vpon Iſaias propheſie I tranſlate; namelie, of M. John Caluin, a man in his time of excellent pietie and learning; and one of the great lights, whereby it hath pleaſed God both to chaſe away the errors of poperie, as the darknes of the ſhadow of death; and to cauſe his maruellous and comfortable light of the Goſpell to ſhine vnto this preſent age. For hee dedicated his firſt expoſition of this booke to the young Prince, King Edward the ſixth, of famous memorie, for the princelie graces, for the zealous loue of true religion, and of al heroical vertues, wherewith in his young yeeres he raiſed an admirable expectation of future ture glorie, if his precious life had long continued. He was also most worthily renowned with highest glorie, for that gracious reformation in religiō, which was established by his regal authority, and which our English Church at this day with great comfort doth enioy, vnder the happie gouernment of our Soueraigne Lord the King, your most noble and renowned Father.

Furthermore, the same Author setting out againe this Commentarie, amplified and enlarged, he dedicated this second edition to our late most gracious Queene Elizabeth, worthie of eternall memorie in this Kingdome, for the reestablishing (after a few yeeres alteration) of the zealous reformation of her most vertuous brother. Which example hath led mee in most humble manner to seeke for the same worke, the high patronage and protection of such Princes, like those to whom hee presented this his seruice.

To whom I know none so like as your selues, both in regard of your high estate, and also in like most noble descent from the vnited houses of Yorke and Lancaster. Besides which resemblance, your Highnesse also is of like yeeres to the yong Prince King Edward, and in the eies of all the kingdome, of like hope of excellent vertue and zealous proceedings in the aduancement of Christian religion.

In like manner your Grace resembleth the most gracious late Queene Elizabeth, both in her royall name, and also in the constant expectation of all men, to expresse in time all the princely vertues and graces that shined in that most renowned Princesse, from this Westerne part of the world, to the furthest East, and to the rising of the Sunne.

In which respects, esteeming such a dedication, most like that which my author made of his owne worke, I haue most humblie craued that this my translation of it might bee vouchsafed the honour to haue your Princelie names written in the beginning of it. For notwithstanding the great difference that is betweene a reuerend learned writer and expounder of the holie Scriptures, and the translator of such an exposition, yet this meane seruice hath also his good vse in the Church of God; and is of long and tedious labour to such as take paines therein; which being graciously accepted, may encourage others to trauell in this kind, and cause many to giue thankes to God for you both, by whose most princely fauours and protection, they are made partakers of ſuch worthie writings. And I ſhall alwaies pray Almightie God, with this new yeere, to multiply many more vpon you, and dailie repleniſh your hearts with all princely and heroicall graces, that may enable and adorne Princes of ſo hie eſtates, amongſt this people.

Your Highneſſe, and Graces moſt humblie deuoted, in all loyall and dutifull affection,

CLEMENT COTTON.

TO THE MOST HIGH AND RENOWMED PRINCESSE,

ELIZABETH, Queene of England, &c. A most gracious defender of the true Christian Faith.

IOHN CALVIN.

ALthough in correcting and polishing of this Commentary, most noble Queene, I haue trauelled with such diligence, that it may well be esteemed a new booke: yet because in the first edition it was dedicated to your brother King Edward, who in his infancy farre surpassed the men of his time; whose memorie also I wish euer to flourish, as worthily it deserues: I was determined to alter nothing touching the inscription. But because in this miserable and wofull scattering of the Church, and the abolishing of the sincere doctrine which hath happened in so short a space, with an incredible violence; this booke, with the whole word of God, was banished England for a time: and that now as I hope it shall be receiued (as before) at your happie entrance into that kingdome; I haue committed no absurditie, as I thinke, if together with the name of so worthy and excellent a King, I also ioyne yours; which all good men do both loue and honour. Yea, besides this occasion which thus offers it selfe; necessitie also may seeme to require that I should intreate your fauour touching this Commentarie in particular; the banishment whereof hath (I am well assured) been much lamented by very many of the faithfull, your louing subiects.

Although I confesse my meaning is not so much to obtaine your fauour onely in respect of my labours, as humblie to beseech, yea and by the sacred name of Christ to adiure you, that not onely all good bookes may againe find intertainement, and bee freely vsed in your kingdome vnder your allowance: but also that you be carefull in the first place, of that true religion which hath been shamefully corrupted. If Iesus Christ, the onely sonne of God doth iustly challenge this of all the Kings of the earth, then hath he bound you, most noble Queene, with a more holy band to put your sacred hand to such a worke. For in that time wherein your selfe, the daughter of a King, were not free from that dreadfull tempest rushing downe so furiouslie vpon the heads of all the faithfull; (this Lord Iesus I say) plucking you safe thereout, albeit you had your part with them in the feare of this danger; he hath obliged you to vow your selfe and all your designes to his seruice. And so farre is it off that you haue any cause to blush in respect of such a deliuerance, that contrariwise God hath therein giuen you ample and plentifull matter of reioycing, in vouchsafing thus to conforme you to the Image of his sonne; vnto whom our Prophet among other glorious titles giues him this, namely, That out of prison, and from iudgement was he taken, and exalted vnto a soueraigne degree of celestiall rule and dominion. As it is not a common honour then to resemble such a Patron: so as oft as you shall call the same to mind (which you should neuer forget) out of what perplexed and wofull feares you are escaped through

God's

Gods prouidence, who hath in a visible manner as it were, reached forth his hand from heauen vnto you. Know yee, that he sets this marke before you; namely, that with a feareless constancie, and an inuincible magnanimitie of mind, you should interchangeablie reserue vnto your Protector and Redeemer, that right which vnto him appertaineth; and setting all other businesses aside (with which on all sides you shall be enuironed in these beginnings of your reigne) you will (which I nothing doubt of) giue such order that his seruice vnworthilie corrupted for a time in your countrie, may bee there reestablished in its first glory.

And if Satan endeuour to terrifie, or weaken you in proposing many and great impediments; you know of whom you ought to craue courage, cheerefully to goe on, and to ouercome all obstacles. God also for his part, who approoues of mens particular actions, will crowne in you his worke, with an happie and wished end.

Moreouer, your dutie to religion, most excellent Queene, should the rather prouoke you; seeing our Isaiah requires, that Queenes should be no lesse nurcing mothers to his Church, then Kings the nurcing fathers thereof. Neither are you only bound to purge out the filth of poperie againe; and that the flocke lately affrighted and dispersed, be againe gathered together and fostered: but that you also call home the banished exiles, who chose rather to lose the present profits of their natiue countrie, then there to continue, whilest pietie was chased thence. Here is the summe of your thankefulnesse towards God, and a sacrifice of a most sweet sauour, namely, that the faithfull seruants of God, who were constrained to wander to and fro in farre countries for the profession of the Gospell, may now returne home to their houses by your fauour.

As for vs, who for good cause haue bitterly bewailed so lamentable a spectacle (we, I say) haue iust occasion giuen vs now to be glad, and to gratifie you, when by the clemencie of your eie, we presently see the way made open to our brethren, not onelie to serue God with freedome in your Maiesties dominions; but also to be a meanes whereby others may enioy the like benefit there with them.

To conclude, most noble Queene, if of your fauour you accept (as I hope you will) this testimonie of the reuerence which I owe to your Greatnesse; though many may esteeme the same small and contemptible: yet shall I thinke my selfe abundantly recompenced, and will all my life endeuour by all meanes possible to manifest my thankefulnesse to your Highnesse for the same.

The Lord guide and gouerne you, most noble Queene, by his Spirit of wisdome; strengthen you with inuincible fortitude; defend and inrich your Highnes with all sorts of blessings. From Geneua, the yeere 1559. Ianuarie the 15. which, as they say, is appointed for the day of your Coronation; for which cause I did the more willingly set pen to paper, hauing obtained some release from a quartan Ague.

TO

TO THE MOST NOBLE AND RENOWMED, EDVVARD THE sixth, King of England, &c. A true Christian Prince.

IOHN CALVIN.

ALbeit I acknowledge (most noble Prince) this Commentarie to be faithfully and aptly gathered from my ordinarie readings: yet in regard it was polished by another hand; at the first I feared, lest being published vnder the title of your name, it might seeme I had not furnished my selfe with a present worthie of your Maiestie. But one speciall reason among others, in the end freed mee from this feare; namely, that as this Princely Prophet descended of the blood Royall; and a most honourable Ambassador of Christ the Soueraigne King, suted well with your person: so I hoped that my labours which I haue taken in expounding his prophecies, would bee accepted and esteemed of you.

Moreouer, seeing he had good experience of the disposition of fiue Kings, far vnlike each other, to whom he continually preached: yet I need not aduertise you, which of these you ought to follow, neither yet to exhort you to the performance of such duties, vnto which you shew your selfe alreadie most willing.

Vzziah and Iotham fauoured him; and yet they wanted sufficient courage in erecting Gods pure worship: the greatest conflicts he sustained was with Ahaz: not that he was an open enemie; but a false hypocrite, full of dissimulation, and treacherie. And what enemies (I pray you) gaule Gods seruants more then such? His successor Hezechiah not only reuerenced this holy personage, but also modestly, as one of the cõmon sort, submitted himselfe to his doctrine; obeyed his counsels, and suffered himself to be gouerned by his admonitions. Nay which is more, he willingly yeelded to be sharply reprooued by the Prophet when need required. The last, which was Manasses, who, as all the Iewes with one consent affirme, was his father in law, wickedly slew him by cruell torments. Yea, euen during the time that good Kings aided him, and also vnder Hezechias; who shewed himselfe so godly a protector of pietie and godlinesse, yet then, was he continually vexed with sharpe and tedious trauels, and made to vndergoe very grieuous conflicts: so difficult and rare a thing is it to see men consent to wholsome doctrine. I say more; such as will faithfullie and vprightly discharge their duties in this propheticall function, must needes make account to be at continuall oddes with the world. So much the more therefore ought faithfull Kings, by their defence, to succour the Ministers of Christ, that they be not molested nor pressed aboue measure, by the insolencie of the wicked.

But by how much the more as this vertue is excellent, and truely heroicall; so if wee shall call to mind what hath past in all the ages from the first (till now;) how rarely hath it been found; or how few haue giuen themselues to the practise of it? Many being remisse and fainthearted, haue through meere negligence suffered Gods truth to be suppressed, as if the matter had not at all concerned them. The greater part shewing themselues aduersaries, haue with furie and violence rushed against it. And would to God all those who at this day professe themselues Christians, had but so much heart to aduance the doctrine of saluation, as they are proude in glorying of this name.

Bue

But to be ſilent touching others, we may yet at the laſt worthilie eſteeme this comfort not as a common fauour, in the miſeries wherein the Church now is, that you, moſt noble King, haue been raiſed vp of God, with this ſpirit, and excellent magnanimitie of mind, to maintaine the pure religion; and as effectually to offer vnto God your ſeruice in this behalfe, as you know he receiues and approoues the ſame at your Maieſties hands. For howſoeuer the affaires of the Kingdome be yet managed by your honourable Counſell: and that as wel the moſt noble Duke of Sommerſet, your Maieſties Vncle, as alſo many others, haue taken the cauſe of religion ſo to heart, that they labour diligently (as it is very fit they ſhould) to eſtabliſh the ſame: yet doe you in ſuch ſort outgoe them all; that it well appeares, the zeale which they ſee in you prouokes them not a little to follow you. For you haue the fame, not only to be of ſuch a princely diſpoſition as promiſeth much, and to haue ſome ſeeds of vertues alſo, (which yet neuertheleſſe ſeemes great in ſo young yeeres) but more then that, ſuch a ripeneſſe of theſe vertues alreadie growne beyond your age; which to the moſt aged, gets not only rare praiſe, but alſo makes them much to be admired. And aboue al, ſo greatly is your pietie commended, that I am very wel aſſured our Prophet ſhal haueone, that wil with like reſpect reuerence him being dead, as Hezekias did whileſt he was liuing.

As concerning the fruite which may happily redound vnto you thereby, it is beſt your ſelfe ſhould learne it by your owne experience in reading of him: and yet I haue touched that alſo a little in the preface. There is only one thing which I haue determined to ſay vnto your Maieſtie, (and this it is:) After the Prophet hath laid foorth Gods iuſt complaints againſt this ſo vnthankfull a people, and hath threatned the Iewes with ſuch chaſtiſements as their diſloyall reuolt, and deſperate obſtinacie deſerued; namely, that the time approched, wherein they ſhould be brought to an horrible ruine: foorthwith comming to ſet foorth the new and incredible reſtauration of the Church, hee promiſeth that God will ſo reſpect the ſame, that in deſpite of all her enemies, ſhee ſhall alwaies flouriſh in beauty, and happineſſe. Thoſe which returned from the captiuitie of Babylon felt this ioyous and bleſſed eſtate, when the ſacrifices being againe newly erected, they might conceiue ſome good hope of greater benefits, then thoſe which they then enioyed: as when we behold the breake of day, wee expect the Sunne-riſing ſoone after. But when Chriſt the ſunne of righteouſneſſe appeared with his glorie in his Goſpell, the thing it ſelfe greatly ſurpaſſed all that which had been highlie praiſed by the Prophets reuelations.

Within ſhort ſpace the knowledge of the true God was diſperſed almoſt throughout the whole world. The pure religion which before was deſpiſed and ſhut vp within the bounds of Iudeah (as in a narrow corner) now began to bee ſpread into al nations and prouinces, yea, ſo honoured, that God was called vpon with one conſent of faith by infinit multitudes. The ſonne of God hauing here and there gathered the Churches, ſet vp his royall throne, and aduanced the ſame into the higheſt degree to be ſeene of all from the Eaſt vnto the Weſt. The Churches adorned with admirable graces of the holy Ghoſt, not onely taſted of the incomparable fruite of the diuine goodneſſe, but were alſo faire and ſhining theaters to manifeſt the wonderfull power of God, euen to ſuch as were blind. And albeit, Chriſt raigned vnder the croſſe, yet amiddeſt the fierie conflicts and perſecutions, his glorie ſhined more glorioufllie, and his triumphs more ſtately, then if the Church had alwaies enioyed tranquillitie.

In the end it came to paſſe, that that hautie pride of the Romane Empire ſubmitting it ſelf alſo vnto Chriſt, was a ſingular ornament to the houſe of God. But the malice & ingratitude of men was the cauſe why this happineſſe laſted not ſucceſſiuely. And ſo the ſpouſe of Chriſt as one ſtripped of ſo pretious a robe, ſpoiled of her dignitie, and depriued of her honourable attire, was brought backe againe to a miſerable deformitie: yet God alwaies preſerued ſome remainders, as it were in ſecret corners; but as touching the outward face of the Church, for the ſpace of many yeeres, nothing appeared any where, but ſcatterings and confuſed waſts. And we at this day behold how the Roman Antichriſt, vſurping farre and neere ouer the ſanctuarie of the Lord, by a ſacrilegious tyrannie holds it vnder his feet rent and oppreſſed. For ſeeing the puritie of doctrine is there corrupted by monſtrous errors, and that Gods ſeruice being ouerturned, idolatries raigne there without number; that in ſtead of a gouernement rightly inſtituted, a cruell torture hath been brought in, that the Sacraments be in part by grosse and absurd abuses corrupted, and partly shamefully set to sale? what remaine there (I pray you) but wofull ruines of that naturall beautie of the spirituall building?

Notwithstanding the Lord in our times hath begun againe to set vp that which was fallen downe, that at least there might be some image of the true Temple where he was purely serued according as he hath ordained in the Gospel. To which end he hath selected our as it were from among the least of the common people, his chiefe builders, to aduance this worke by sincere doctrine. I grant, it is of it selfe a difficult worke, and of great waight, though Satan should let vs alone in quiet. But if euen now whileſt some part of this building is raised vp, he doth his vtmost to break it downe, is it any maruell if we labour much, and with great care, & yet see little or no fruit for the present to come of our labors? Therfore these mightie Giants proudly scorne vs: as if whileſt we studying how to practise the ruine of the tyrannous Romane sea; wee should striue to ouerthrow the mount Olympus.

These great wits also, who (as they thinke) know somewhat, deride our diligence; in regard we are so earnestly busied in restoring the Church to her first estate: as if in the same any certaine or setled estate were to be expected. For these (forsooth) imagine that they are so well founded, and on all sides so furnished, that it is no lesse easie to abolish poperie, then to mingle heauen and earth together. But the conceit of these wise men differs somewhat. For in regard the peruersitie of the world is so great, that it cannot be held in awe, they thinke we trauel in vaine, and against the streame to seeke in correcting vices, to haue a pure and sincere administration of a Church. The flout of Erasmus is well enough knowne; What hopes Capito of the tenth which shall come after him? It cannot be denied but Wolfangus Capito was an holy man, who with a most sincere affection endeuoured to purge the Church. But because he was perswaded that the Ministers of Christ should no lesse lose their labour in correcting the stubbornenesse of the world, then if they should haue taken vpon them to haue forced the streame the contrarie way (for thus they are wont to thinke who talke of things in the shade) he taxeth vs all of inconsiderate zeale in the person of one. But both the one and the other are much deceiued, in that they consider not, that wee so imploy our selues in the Lords seruice, as he hath commanded, that in the meane while the restauration of the Church is meerely the worke of his owne hands. Neither is it without cause that the whole Sctipture commonly testifies, and that our Prophet againe and againe so carefully repeates it. Wherefore being mindfull of this doctrine, let vs no way be discouraged from vndertaking vnder Gods guidance, a businesse which farre surmounts our owne abilities; that so no encumbrances may either breake off our purpose, or so weaken vs, that we should desist from our enterprise.

And here I doe expresly summon you, most excellent King, or rather God by the mouth of his Prophet Isaiah calles you, namely, to goe on in imploying whatsoeuer power and force God hath endued you withall; and with new encreases to set forward the restauration of the Church, which is now so happily begun in your kingdome. First, you daily heare and reade that this charge is committed vnto you in that Kingdom ouer which God hath placed you. Yea, and Isaiah, as I haue said, calling Kings nurcing fathers of the Church, permits not that the helpe which shee in this behalfe requires of you in her affliction, should now be wanting vnto her. Neither ought your heart to bee lightly touched with that, where the Prophet denounceth an heauie curse to fall vpon all Kings and nations, which shall defraud her of their aide.

Againe, your Maiestie also euidently knowes, that euen the necessitie of these times requires it. And albeit by your endeuours, it may be you shall gaine little; yet knowing how acceptable a seruice this is vnto God, and that it is a sweete smelling sauour in his nostrils, no dangers whatsoeuer ought to turne you from this enterprise.

Seeing then that God thus exhorts you to behaue your selfe valiantly, and therewithall promiseth you an happy issue: why shuld you not cheerfully follow him whē he cals you? In another place our Prophet cries; Prepare, prepare the way for my people. It is wel enough knowne, how there was no hope that the poore captiues could bee restored home to their countrie againe, neither was this presently performed. But in regard the Prophet by the spirit of prophesie, then foresaw what the posteritie should effectually feele, lest by so lamentable a ſpectacle, the faithfull might be diſcouraged, he preuents them betimes; telling them that there are no obſtacles or impediments, whatſoeuer (be they as firme and as cloſe as they may be) thorow which God wil not make a way to deliuer his Church. Neither do we ſtand in leſſe need of conſolation to quicken vs vp at this day. And as for you, moſt noble King, it is very requiſit that you be readie and watchfull, in reſpect of the charge which is committed vnto you, ſeeing Iſaiah exhorts all Kings and Magiſtrates, in the perſon of Cyrus, to reach foorth their hand to the Church in her trauel, to the end ſhee may be reſtored to her former eſtate. Although in this regard your condition differs much from that of Cyrus, in that he being but a ſtranger ouer the Lords flock was neuer taught expreſſlie, willingly, and with a franke courage to offer himſelf to reſtore & maintaine the Church: but you, whom the Lord hath not only vouchſafed to receiue by adoption, but hath alſo placed you in higheſt ranke among his children; the Prophet calles you to this office, as if he reached you out his hand. So much the more confidently therefore, and with the more ardent affection ought you to proceede on in this race. The matter (as I haue ſaid) is in it ſelfe full of great difficulties, intangled with much tedioufneſſe, and mingled with dangers; becauſe Satan ceaſeth not to broch his cunning ſhifts and deuices (if by any meane he might) either to ouerthrow, or deſtroy the holie temple of God; ſometimes alſo God by ſuch trials will prooue our conſtancie. But if you be reſolued, that hitherto you haue enterpriſed nothing by your moſt graue Counſell but by diuine authoritie from Gods word, and that for the preſent you ſo continue in reſtoring the eſtate of ỹ Church, no doubt but you ſhall find by experience how wonderfully God will effect that which he hath giuen his Miniſters in charge. England ſhall receiue an incomparable fruit from this ſo happie a going forward: and we ſhall haue cauſe too, with you and your whole kingdome to reioyce. In the meane while I will not ceaſe to further your holy endeuours, as there is good cauſe, by my poore prayers, in regard they are the beſt meanes I am able to afford you.

Farewell moſt noble King. The Lord long preſerue your flouriſhing eſtate, aſſiſt and guide you by his holy ſpirit, and in all things bleſſe and proſper you. So be it. From Geneua this fiue and twentieth of December.

To the Reader.

OF ſuch pretious eſteeme (Chriſtian Reader) were the expoſitions of this reuerend author in the Church of Geneua, that albeit ſome of them were by himſelf * ſpoken, and others of them * written in Latin; and that in fauor of the learned eſpecially: yet becauſe with his more then ordinarie depth of iudgement he alwaies matched a ſingular ſimplicitie and plaineneſſe, ſo that hee therein ſtoopes to the capacitie, euen of the ſimpleſt; it was thought fit, that by ſome of good note in the ſaid Church, they ſhould all be tranſlated into the vulgar French, for the benefit of all ſuch as vnderſtood the ſame.

* To wit, his ordinarie Lectures vpon the Prophets, which being read in the Schooles, were by approued Notaries there, taken from his mouth verbatim, and afterwards vnder the title of his leſſons, or readings, imprinted.

Which commendable zeale and godly care of theirs, as it worthily prouoked many of this our Church for the common good, (at the happie entrance of our late deare and dread Soueraigne Ladie Queene Elizabeth into this kingdome) to tranſlate diuers of his Commentaries vpon the bookes both of the * old, and * new Teſtament into Engliſh; ſo if their good beginnings had been ſeconded by anſwerable proceedings, thouſands might, I doubt not, haue reaped the like fruit by thoſe that are yet * vntranſlated, which they haue done by the former. Wherefore, this ſeruice to the Church of God hauing been a long time neglected, and not hearing of any that purpoſed to ſet his helping hand to this ſo neceſſarie a buſineſſe, I thought it might happily prooue a labour not altogether vnſeaſonable nor vnprofitable, if according to my poore abilitie I endeuoured either to continue forth thoſe former good beginnings, or at leaſt thereby to quicken vp the care of ſuch as are much more able then my ſelfe, to proſecute the ſame.

* Namely, his Commentaries, which were written by him at ſpare times in the houſe.

* Geneſis, Ioſhua, and Pſalmes.

* All the Euangeliſts, Acts, Rom. &c.

* Namely, his leſſons vpon the prophecie of Ieremiah, the Lamentations, Ezechiel, &c.

To which purpoſe (good Reader) ſome few yeeres ſince, for the firſt aſſay, I ſelected out of this learned Authors workes in French, his Commentary vpon the Hebrewes, not before tranſlated; which being authorized, I was bold ſoone after to preſent thee therewith. Now becauſe, as I ſuppoſe, it hath not paſſed abroad without ſome good fruit, it hath the rather incouraged me once more, whileſt I profited my ſelfe in reading this Commentarie vpon the princelie Prophet Iſaiah, to haue ſome reſpect of thy profiting alſo. For which cauſe thou haſt the ſame now, as the former; tranſlated, allowed, and alſo publiſhed (if thou wilt) for thy particular vſe and profit.

As touching the fruit that is thence to be reaped, it would bee much better that thy ſelf from thine owne experience mighteſt be able to report, then for me here at large to dilate. Only this I thinke I may not omit: if in reading this propheſie thou wouldeſt haue the difficulties therein cleared; thy iudgement in other things not obſcure, either rectified, or confirmed; thy meditations concerning diuers ſorts of inſtructions, menaces, reprehenſions, promiſes, and conſolations enlarged; loe here a Philip readie at hand in any of theſe things to ſa- Act 8. 27. to 39.

THE FRENCH TRANSLATOR TO THE READER.

IT is twentie yeeres ſince and more, good Reader, that the leſſons of M. Iohn Caluin vpon the Prophet Iſaiah (which being collected by M. Nicolas Gallars) were printed vnder the title of a Commentarie; and dedicated to that noble Prince of bleſſed memorie, Edward the ſixth, King of England. A long time after, the Author himſelfe reuiewing this collection, imprinted both in Latin, and in French: ſatisfied not himſelfe only to reuiew it, thereby to explane that, which otherwiſe ſeemed obſcure, by reaſon of the breuitie of it; and to ſet that in order, which was ſomewhat confuſed: but he laboured therein with ſuch diligence and good ſucceſſe, that he augmented it in Latin with excellent and neceſſarie matters for the vnderſtanding of the text; more then the third part: bringing all things into ſo exact a forme, that if any bee pleaſed to take ſo much paines, as to conferre the firſt Commentarie or collection of thoſe leſſons, with this ſecond; he ſhall find that which we haue ſaid to be very true. Neither was this gathered in the ſchooles the ſecond time, as at the firſt; but was written in the houſe, euen word for word by the Authors owne direction: who hath ſo aptly diſpoſed and couched the whole together, that in peruſing of it, you ſhall perceiue in this booke, as well as in others which haue alreadie paſſed his hands, that he hath done great ſeruice to the Church of God, and hath alſo faithfully chalked out the way vnto ſuch as deſire to profit in diuine ſtudies. But eſpecially by theſe his Commentaries, which being carefully read, will ſerue no leſſe to the explaning of many texts that are contained in other bookes of the holy Scripture, as they will alſo be moſt helpefull to giue the true ſenſe of the Prophet Iſaiah; which hath mooued mee (good Reader) to beſtow my paines in tranſlating the whole anew into French: leſt ſuch among you as vnderſtand not the Latin tongue, ſhould be deprined of ſo great a benefit.

Reade, and profit thereby in the feare of God.

A PREFACE TO THE PROPHECIE OF ISAIAH:

BY Mr. IOHN CALVIN.

THey haue been wont to spend many words in setting forth the office of the Prophets. But I see no readier way then to referre them to the law; whence their doctrine is drawne, as the riuers from the fountaines. For they set the law before them for their imitation, so as by good right we may affirme and hold them to be the expositors thereof, in whom there is nothing separate from it. Now the Law containes three points. First, the doctrine of life: secondly, the threatnings and promises: thirdly, the couenant of grace, which is founded in Christ.

The Prophets ground their doctrin vpon the law.

Whereof they are the Expositors.

The law containes three points:

For as touching the Ceremonies, they were exercises, by which the people were held in the seruice of God, and in godlinesse; according to the Contents of the first Table.

The Prophets then expound the doctrine thereof more at large; and lay that foorth in more plaine termes, which is brieflie contained in the two tables; teaching that which the Lord principallie requires.

As touching the threatnings and promises which Moses touched in generall; they applie them to their owne times, and describe them particularly. Lastlie, that which is said obscurely in Moses, touching Christ and his grace; they set it foorth more perspicuouslie, and alleage more ample and abundant testimonies of the free couenant.

Threatnings:

Promises:

But that the thing may be more cleere, we must fetch the matter further off; namely, from the Law it selfe, which God ordained as a perpetuall rule for his Church, that it might alwaies be in mens hands: and that all their successors should follow it.

Now because this doctrin of the law sufficed not this obstinate & vnruly people; the Lord also foreseeing that they would neuer be held in, vnlesse it were by some bridle: hee addes a prohibition, not to seeke to Magitians, Southsayers, Inchanters, Sorcerers, nor to such as regard the times, or the flying of birds, to such as asked counsell of familiar spirits, or at the dead; because such things were an abomination to the Lord.

Prohibitions. Deut. 18.9. 10.11.12.

And to preuent the replies which they might make, namely, that their condition should be worse, then that of the infidels, who had their Southsayers, Astrologers, Sacrificers, and such like, of whom they might aske aduice and counsel; but they shuld be destituted of any that might be able to giue them satisfaction in doubtful and intricat causes: herein, to take away al pretext, & that they might not defile themselues in these execrable customes of the Gentiles, God

Deut.18. promiseth to raise them vp Prophets, by whom he wil manifest his wil, who also shall faithfully teach them whatsoeuer hee shall giue them in charge; that they might haue no cause to complaine for the time to come, as if any thing were wanting vnto them.

I grant, that in that place Moses mentions a Prophet, and not Prophets. Notwithstanding it is a change of the number, to wit, the singular for the plurall, a thing common in the Scriptures. And howsoeuer the place ought properly and principally to bee vnderstood of Christ (as S. Peter expounds it Act.3.) in regard he is the Prince of the Prophets, and that all of them, with their doctrine also depend vpon him, and with one consent aime at him: yet by this name, which is collectiue, it also comprehends the rest of the Prophets.

The Lord then hauing promised them Prophets, by whom hee would declare vnto them his counsell and will, he commanded the people to rest in their exposition and doctrine. Not that the Prophets should adde any thing to the law, but that they should faithfully expound the same, and conserue the authoritie thereof.

Whence also it is, that Malachi exhorting the people to persist in that doctrine, saith, or rather God by him: Remember the Law of Moses my seruant, which I gaue him in Horeb for all Israel. Thus bringing them backe to Gods law only; and commanding them to be content therewith. But would Malachi haue them to despise the Prophets then? No. But for asmuch as the propheſies are dependances of the law, and that the law summarilie comprehends them all, this exhortation sufficed. For such as are well acquainted with the summe of the doctrine, and principall heads of it, hauing their willes well inclined thereto; it is certaine that they will not contemne the propheſies: for it were a thing too fond to boast of hauing affection to the law, and yet in the meane while not to make any account of the diuine interpretation thereof: such as are some at this day, who are so shameleſse, that they dare brag of louing Gods law, and the whilest cannot endure to bee admonished or reprehended by the doctrine which is drawne and collected from the same.

Note.

Thus when the Prophets deale with mens manners, they bring in no new thing, but explane those things which were misunderstood in the law. As for example, the people thought they had done their duties to the vtmost, when they had offered sacrifices, and obserued the ceremonies: for the world is wont alwaies to measure God according to their owne ell, and to botch him vp a carnall seruice. This corruption the Prophets reproue sharpely, shewing that all ceremonies are nothing where the integritie of the heart is wanting; and that God will be worshipped by faith, and a right inuocating of his name. This was manifested to them plainely enough in the law, but it was needfull it should take a deeper impression, and that they should be put againe in mind of it. The hypocrisie, wherewith men maske themselues vnder the vaile of ceremonies, was to be discouered.

The first table.

The second table.

As touching the second table, the Prophets thence drew their exhortations, shewing how all wrong, fraud and violence was to be abandoned. The Prophets office then was nothing else, but to hold the people in obedience to Gods law.

In the threatnings and promises they haue something more speciall. For what Moses propounded in generall, they describe in particular. Besides, they had visions, which were proper to them: by which the Lord reuealed things to come, that so they might applie the promise and threatnings to the peoples vse, and might further assure them of Gods will.

Threatnings.

Visions.

Moses

Moſes threatens, God will purſue thee with the ſword, the enemies ſhall vex thee without, and within, domeſticall contentions ſhall annoy thee. Thy life ſhall hang as by a thread; thou ſhalt tremble at the ſhaking of a leafe; and ſuch other things. Moſes.

But the Prophets ſay: Behold, God hath raiſed againſt thee the ſword of the Chaldeans, and of the Egyptians: alſo, God hath armed theſe to the battell. This citie ſhall be deſtroyed at ſuch a time. The like is to be ſaid of the promiſes. The Prophets Moſes ſaith, If thou obſerueſt the commandements, God will bleſſe thee. And then he goes on in recounting bleſſings in generall. Moſes.

But the Prophets in particular affirme, The Lord will bleſſe thee in ſuch a thing. The Propheis Alſo the Lord promiſeth by Moſes in theſe words, Although thou wert ſcattered and driuen to the vtmoſt parts of the earth, yet from thence will I gather thee. Moſes.

But the Prophets promiſe, that albeit the Lord hath ſcattered them as farre as Babylon, yet within 70. yeeres he will cauſe their captiuitie to returne. The Prophets

And as touching the free couenant which God made with man through Chriſt, the Prophets are much more euident, and doe much more confirme the people in it. For they ſet Chriſt before their eies, when they would comfort the faithfull, and raiſe vp their minds to the hope of his comming, euen as it were to the foundation, and to the place of the couenant, vnto whom the effect of the promiſes was to be referred. Couenant of grace.

Whoſoeuer ſhall ponder theſe things, ſhall eaſilie perceiue what hee is to ſeeke in the Prophets, and whereunto their writtings tend. But for the preſent, it ſufficeth that we haue pointed it foorth as with the finger.

Hence we may ſoone gather how wee ought to handle the doctrine of the word, and how we ought to imitate the Prophets; who ſo much admired it, that thence they collected the admonitions, reprehenſions, threatnings and conſolations, to applie them to the peoples vſe. For though it be not dailie reuealed vnto vs what we ought to doe, yet are wee to compare the conuerſation of the people of our times, with that of the people of old; and by hiſtories and examples to denounce the iudgements of God. Namely, that from the vengeance he tooke vpon ſuch ſinnes in that time, he will likewiſe be reuenged vpon thoſe that reigne euery where in our time. Why ſo? Becauſe he is alwaies like himſelfe. Note. God alwaies like himſelfe.

The faithfull teachers then muſt come furniſhed with the like wiſdome, if they meane to handle the doctrine of the Prophets profitablie. Thus much as touching the propheſies in generall.

To come to our Prophet Iſaiah: the inſcription ſufficiently ſhewes both what he was, and in what time he publiſhed his propheſies. For his father is here named, to wit, Amos brother of Azarias king of Iuda. Whence it appeares hee was of the blood royall: and of this opinion are all the ancients. And yet neither his ſtocke, nor neere affinitie to the King (for the Iewes affirme he was father in law of Manaſſeh) could hinder him from being put to death in hatred of his doctrine, neither was he reſpected any more, then if he had been of ſome baſe eſtate or condition. The inſcription. Iſaiah deſcended of the blood Royall.

The names of the Kings here mentioned, ſet foorth the time, in which hee propheſied. There are ſome who thinke that he began about the end of Vzi-ahs raigne. And they take their coniecture from the viſion which is recorded in the ſixth chapter, by which he teſtifies hee was confirmed. But this coniecture is too weake; as ſhall be ſhewed in place conuenient. It rather appeares by the inſcription, that he propheſied in the daies of Vziah; of which I ſee nothing The time when Iſaiah Propheſied.

thing to the contrarie. How euer it bee, it plainely appeares that he propheſied aboue 64. yeeres. For Iotham raigned 16. yeeres: Ahaz as much; Hezekias 29. This makes 61. Ad thoſe in which he propheſied vnder Vziah; and afterwards vnder Manaſſes, who put him to death: Theſe at the leaſt will make vp 64. yeres; in which Iſaiah ceaſed not to performe the office of a Prophet. And it may well be that he propheſied longer: but of this we can gather no certentie from the hiſtorie.

Iſaiah put to death by Manaſſes.

Iſaiah, a paterne for all Paſtors.

This then ought to be ſeriouſlie marked of all the Miniſters of the word, that from his example, they may learne patiently to beare the burthen of their office, though it be cumberſome and painefull: not thinking it any diſgrace to ſuffer many ſore and tedious trauels, ſeeing they haue ſo many worthie paternes ſet before them. I grant it muſt needs diſcourage them exceedinglie, when they ſee that things goe not forward; and that their labours take not ſuch good ſucceſſe as they deſire: thinking it better to leaue all, rather then to beſtow ſo much labour in vaine. They haue need therefore often to remember, and to ſet before their eies ſuch examples. (Why ſo?) Becauſe Iſaiah fainted not, although he gained little by ſo many painfull trauels.

Ieremiah.

Ieremiah alſo ceaſed not by the ſpace of 50. yeeres to call vpon this people, who in the meane while hardned their hearts the more: and yet wee ſee they forſooke not their charge, whatſoeuer difficulties came betweene. Euen ſo muſt wee follow our vocation, and conſtantlie beare all ſorts of encumbrances.

The change of Kings.

Note alſo the circumſtance of the change of Kings which are here numbred vp, chap. 1. 1. For it is impoſſible that in ſo great diuerſitie, the State ſhould alwaies continue alike. No doubt but many troubles fell out. And yet our Prophet perſeuered with an inuincible conſtancie; and neuer ſuffered his heart to be ouercome of feares.

Queſt.

Anſ.

But ſome may aske whether Iſaiah himſelfe put this title to his propheſie, or ſome other. None of the expoſitors that I haue read, anſwers this queſtion. For my owne part, albeit I am not very well ſatisfied, as touching this queſtion, yet I will ſhew what I thinke.

How the Prophecies were collected.

After the Prophets had preached to the people, they gathered a compendious ſumme of their ſermon; which they affixed to the gate of the Temple, that the propheſie might the better be viewed and learned of all. And after it had remained there a ſufficient time for ſome certaine daies; the Miniſters of the Temple took it downe, and put it into the treaſurie of the Temple, that the memorie thereof might continue for euer. Very likely it is (I ſay) that the bookes of the Prophets were thus gathered, as may appeare by the ſecond Chapter of Habacuk; whoſoeuer be diſpoſed to conſider the ſame well: as alſo from the eight of this propheſie.

Hab. 2. 2. See chap. 30. 8. and chap. 8. 1. 2.

The Propheties preſerued by the ſingular prouidence of God.

Now this was done no doubt by the ſpeciall prouidence of God, that by the Prieſts themſelues, whoſe office it was to conſerue the propheſies for ſuch as ſhould ſucceed, it is come to paſſe that wee at this day enioy theſe treaſures; which they for the moſt part lightly eſteemed. For the Prieſts were the greateſt enemies, that the Prophets had to deale withall.

A COMMENTARIE VPON THE PROPHESIE OF ISAIAH, WRITTEN BY THAT REVEREND AND PAINEFVLL Paſtor, in the Church of Chriſt, Maſter IOHN CALVIN.

Verſ. 1. A viſion of Iſaiah the Sonne of Amos, which he ſaw concerning Iudah and Ieruſalem; in the daies of Vzziah, Iotham, Ahaz, and Hezekiah Kings of Iudah.

ALthough the Hebrew word Chazon which the Prophet vſeth be deriued of ſeeing, and doth properly ſignifie viſion: yet notwithſtanding for the moſt part it imports aſmuch as Reuelation. For as oft as the Scripture makes mention of ſpeciall viſions which appeared to the Prophets, whereby the Lord meant the better to confirme them when hee would haue ſome excellent thing come to light, it vſeth the word Mareah, which properly ſignifies viſion. But to the end I heape not vp many teſtimonies, in the third chapter of
1. Sam. 3. 1. 15. the firſt booke of Samuel (where mention is made in generall of propheſies) the author of that booke ſaith, that the word of the Lord was precious in thoſe dayes, becauſe there was no manifeſt viſion (where he vſeth the word Chazon) and a little after, the viſion by which God manifeſteth himſelfe to Samuel, is expreſſed by the word Mareah. Alſo in the Numb. 12. 6 twelfth chapter of the booke of Numbers, where Moſes diſtinguiſheth the two ordinarie meanes of Reuelation, hee there with dreames conioyneth viſion as the ſpeciall.
1. Sam. 9. 9. And yet by the ninth chapter of the ſame booke of Samuel, it appeares that the name of Seer was impoſed in old time vpon the Prophets: but by way of excellencie; becauſe God diſcouered his counſell familiarly vnto them.

Now as touching this preſent place, it is out of doubt that the certaintie of doctrine is deciphered out vnto vs by this very word; as if it had been ſaid; There is nothing contained in this booke which was not manifeſted to Iſaiah by God himſelfe. Wherefore the true ſenſe of the word is to be obſerued; for thereby wee learne, that the Prophets ſpake not of themſelues, neither yet preferred their owne imaginations: but that they were enlightened by God, and had their eyes opened to ſee thoſe things which otherwiſe of themſelues they had not been able to haue comprehended. The doctrine of Iſaiah then, euen in the very inſcription, is recommended vnto vs; to wit, becauſe it containes nothing of mans inuention, but the reuelations of God: to the end we might bee aſſured that whatſoeuer is contained in this booke, was reuealed vnto him by the holy Ghoſt.

Concerning Iudah.] It were not amiſſe if it were tranſlated Againſt Iudah. For the particle Al ſignifies both the one and the other; and the ſenſe will be all one: for whatſoeuer this booke contains, it doth properly appertaine to Iudah and Ieruſalem. But if any ſhall obiect that there are many things mingled in this booke which concerne Ægypt, Tyrus, Babylon, with other cities and countries: the anſwere is, that it was not neceſſarie to recite euery particular in the inſcription; becauſe it was ſufficient that the principall ſumme ſhould be ſet before vs, thereby ſhewing to whom the Prophet was chiefely ſent, namely, to Iudah and Ieruſalem. For whatſoeuer his propheſies containe beſide, it is accidentally as they ſay: neither yet was it any digreſſing from the ſcope of his office to preach to others alſo what calamities approached neere vpon them: for Amos, though he were ſpecially ſent to them of Iſrael, yet paſſed hee not the bounds of his vocation when he propheſied alſo againſt Iudah: yea we haue yet a more familiar example hereof in S. Peter and S. Paul; Peter was appoynted ouer the Iewes, and Paul ouer the Gentiles, and yet Saint Peter paſſed not beyond the bounds of his office in preaching to the Gentiles, as when he went in to Cornelius: neither S. Paul, when he offered the preaching of the Goſpell to the Iewes, to whom he reſorted as ſoone as he entred into any citie. And thus was it lawfull for Iſaiah to doe, in like manner. Nor whileſt he endeuoured to diſcharge his dutie to the vttermoſt in teaching of the Iewes, and purpoſely bent all his ſtudies that way: did he yet go beyond his calling when hee ſpeakes (as it were by the way) of other nations?

Obiection.

Anſwere.

Gal. 2. 8. Act. 10. 17. & 13. 5. & 14. 1. & 17. 2. 10. & 18. 4. 19.

He takes Iudah here for the whole nation, and Ieruſalem for the chiefe ſeate of the kingdome: for hee ſeparates not the citie from the kingdome; but names it by way of excellencie, as being the mother citie. Euen as if a Prophet at this day ſhould be ſent to ſpeake vnto the whole kingdome of France, ſhould name the citie of Paris, as the chiefe of the kingdome. And it was needefull that 1 this ſhould be done; firſt, to the end the Citizens of Ieruſalem ſhould not exempt themſelues, as though they were guiltleſſe: or rather, as being diſpenced withall, from being vnder any checke, in reſpect of the greatnes of their dignitie. Secondly, that by meanes 2 hereof they might be preuented from ſending the Prophet backe to the Commons, and countrie people. But they are deceiued, who would haue Ieruſalem to bee named a part, becauſe it was ſituated in the tribe of Beniamin, ſeeing the one halfe thereof, which was ſubiect to the ſucceſſors of Dauid, is comprehended vnder this name of Iudah.

Verſ. 2. *Heare O heauens, and thou earth hearken: for the Lord hath ſaid, I haue nouriſhed, and brought vp children, but they haue rebelled againſt me.

* Or, haue done wickedly againſt me.

Iſaiah hath here imitated Moſes: for ſo it is the cuſtome of all the Prophets to doe; neither is it to be doubted but he alludes to that excellent ſong of Moſes, Deut. 32. 1. in the very entrance whereof he cals heauen and earth to witneſſe againſt the people. I graunt that it is a terrible proteſtation: for it is as much as if both of them ſhould turne themſelues to the dumbe elements voyde of ſenſe, becauſe men had no eares to heare, but were become vtterly benummed in all their ſenſes. Iſaiah then ſpeakes here as of a rare and prodigious thing, which were euen enough to ſmite the very elements with aſtoniſhment (though otherwiſe ſenſeleſſe in themſelues.) For what could be more horrible then to ſee the Iſraelites reiect the Lord, from whom they had receiued ſo many benefits? Thoſe who by heauen, vnderſtand the Angels, and by earth, men, doe too much leſſen the force of theſe words: and doe alſo take away that wherein the chiefeſt weight of the Prophets vehemencie lieth. Now all the expoſitors almoſt doe finiſh the clauſe, For the Lord hath ſpoken, here: As if the Prophet meant to ſay, Seeing God hath opened his ſacred mouth, it ſtands all men in hand attentiuely to receiue his word. And thus the ſentence in appearance indeed is more full: but the circumſtance of the place requires another knitting together of the words; namely, that this word hearken bee referred, not generally to what purpoſe one will; but ſolely and onely to the next complaint. And ſo, the ſenſe is thus; Heare the complaint which God commenceth againſt you: I haue nouriſhed, &c. For he recounts ſuch a monſtrous thing, as he is almoſt caſt into a ſwound at the ſight of it: ſo as he is faine to call in all the inſenſible creatures (contrarie to all order) to be witneſſes thereof. I had rather then take theſe things in their proper ſignification, becauſe they doe better ſet forth the Prophets meaning.

And to the end that no man ſhould wonder why he ſpeakes thus to things without ſenſe or reaſon, experience it ſelfe not obſcurely teacheth vs that the voyce of God is heard euen of the dumbe creatures: yea, and the very order of nature is nothing elſe but an obedience, which is yeelded vnto him thorowout all the partes of the world, to the end his ſoueraigne authoritie might ſhine in all places. For the elements, the heauens and the earth, doe their duties, and yeeld obedience to the commaundement which is preſcribed them, and that at the leaſt becke which God maketh to them: The earth bringeth foorth her fruits; The Sunne, the Moone and the Starres doe finiſh their courſes; The Sea paſſeth not beyong the limits which God hath appointed vnto it; The heauens alſo doe turne about to their certaine ſpaces: Finally, in all things wee may obſerue a wonderfull diſtinction, although all theſe creatures be deſtitute of reaſon and vnderſtanding. But man, who is indued therewith, in whoſe eares and heart the voyce of the Lord ſo often ſounds, as if he were wholly ſenſeleſſe, mooueth not, neither boweth he his necke to ſubmit himſelfe to the obedience of his God. The dumbe and inſenſible creatures then ſhall beare witnes againſt ſuch obſtinate and rebellious perſons, to the end they may one day feele that this obteſtation was not vſed in vaine.

I haue nouriſhed.] Word for word it is, I haue made them great. But becauſe he ſpeaketh of children, wee cannot turne it better then that, I haue nouriſhed, or brought vp. For the Latines, in ſtead of nouriſhing; ſay, to bring vp children. Yet hee by and by addes other benefits wherewithall hee had wonderfullie inriched them: as if he ſhould ſay, I haue not onely performed the office of a good father in nouriſhing, and ſuſtaining you in this life: but I haue alſo taken paines to exalt you to honour and dignitie. For there was no kind of fauour or mercie which the Lord withheld from thē, euen as if he meant wholly to emptie himſelfe. As hereafter in the fifth chapter he reprocheth them ſaying, What could I haue done any more to my vineyard that I haue not done vnto it? Why? the Lord might very well haue ſaid as much to all nations, ſeeing hee nouriſhed, and beſtowed many bleſſings vpon them: but the Iſraelites were his ſpeciall choſen people, whom he had adopted before the reſt of the world to himſelfe, and intreated them as his moſt deere children, embracing and cheriſhing them with a ſpeciall care, euen as in his very boſome. In a word, he adorned and beautified them with all manner of good things.

Now to apply this to our time; let ys conſider ſider whether our condition bee not like, or rather much better than that of the Iewes in auncient times. The adoption of God obliged them to the puritie of his ſeruice: our bond or obligation is double: namely, becauſe he hath not onely redeemed vs by the blood of Chriſt, but becauſe he who hath once vouchſafed to deliuer vs, doth ſtill call vs alſo to himſelfe by the preaching of the Goſpell, and therein prefers vs farre before all thoſe whom he hath yet left blinded in their ignorance. If we acknowledge not theſe things, of how much greater puniſhment ſhall we be worthie? for by how much the more the grace of God hath been abundantly powred forth vpon vs, of ſo much the more ingratitude ſhall we be conuinced before him.

But they haue rebelled] S. Ieroome tranſlates it, They haue deſpiſed me. But it appeares ſufficiently by other places, that the Hebrew word Paſhang, expreſſeth yet ſomewhat more; namely, that they reuolted. God teſtifies then that he could not hold them vnder his obedience; no not by all the benefits hee could beſtow vpon them. But that they turned away more and more, & eſtranged themſelues, no otherwiſe then the ſonne, who by leauing his fathers houſe, ſhewes that hee is become altogether incorrigible. It is a monſtrous thing for children not to be obedient to their fathers; eſpecially to ſuch a one as neuer ceaſeth to doe them good, beſtowes his whole care as it were vpon them. Lycurgus would not make any law againſt the vnthankfull (becauſe it was a thing againſt nature not to acknowledge a benefit receiued. A child then that is vnthankfull to his father is a double monſter, yea rather a threefold monſter againſt a liberall father, who ceaſeth not to doe him good. For albeit the Prophet cals them children, it is not giuen them heere as a title of honor, but the more to aggrauate this their reuolt, and to make it the more odious.

Verſ. 3. The Oxe knoweth his owner, and the Aſſe his maſters Crib, but Iſrael hath not knowne: my people hath not vnderſtood.

THis compariſon doth further exemplifie the crime of their reuolt. For the Lord might well haue compared his people to the Heathen, and Infidels: but he toucheth them neerer, in comparing them to brute beaſts, and in ſhewing that they are yet more fooliſh then they. For albeit theſe beaſts be voyd of reaſon & vnderſtanding, yet are they teachable, at the leaſt wiſe in this reſpect, that they acknowledge thoſe who feedes them. Seeing then that the Lord had not only fed this people as in a ſtaule or Crib, but had fed them largely and abundantly, no otherwiſe then the father doth his children whom he tendreth; and had not onely pampered their bellies, but did alwaies repleniſh them with ſpirituall foode: had he not good cauſe, think you, to eſteeme them worthie rather to bee ſent to ſchoole to learne of Oxen and Aſſes then of men; eſpecially when hee ſaw they were become ſo beaſtly? he ſends his people then to theſe brute beaſts to learne their duties of them. And no meruaile; for it often fals out that the vnreaſonable creatures do better follow the order of nature, and doe in their kind ſhew more humanitie then men themſelues. And not to alleadge many examples, this one which Iſaiah here propounds ſhall ſuffice: namely, that theſe beaſts being altogether ſenſeleſſe and blockiſh, doe yet notwithſtanding obey their maſters and thoſe who haue the gouernment of them. And if in other things we ſhall conſider wherein the beaſts doe ſurpaſſe men, how many particulars ſhall wee find out? What is the cauſe that ſcarcely any beaſt will offer violence to one of his owne kind? and that he ſhould therein, as you would ſay, acknowledge his owne likenes. What is the cauſe alſo that all ſorts of beaſts doe take ſuch paines to nouriſh their little ones, ſeeing it often falleth out that women forgetting nature, and all womanhood, doe reiect and forſake their children? And do we not obſerue how beaſts wil keepe ſuch a mediocritie that they will eate and drinke no more then that which ſufficeth them for life, and to vphold their ſtrength; whilſt men in the meane ſpace doe ſtuffe and gorge themſelues, or which is worſe, do ouerthrow themſelues with ſurfetting? Laſtly, the beaſts do in nothing paſſe beyond ỹ bounds of nature, which are ordained for them.

But the Papiſts (whoſe cuſtome it is to ouerthrow the natiue ſenſe of the Scriptures and by their dreames do corrupt all the myſteries of God) haue here found out a notable fable: for they make men beleeue that the Oxen and the Aſſes did worſhip our Lord Ieſus Chriſt lying in the cratch after he was borne: wherein they ſhew themſelues to bee excellent aſſes. And yet would to God they themſelues would but follow the poore Aſſe which they haue forged! namely, that they were Aſſes worſhipping the Lord Ieſus Chriſt, and not rather wincing and kicking againſt his Maieſtie with their heeles. For the Prophet ſpeakes not here of a miracle, but of the order of nature: declaring that whoſoeuer they be that doe ouerthrow the order thereof by a bad conuerſation, are become monſters. We neede not forge new miracles then to giue authoritie to Ieſus Chriſt: for ſo, by mingling the falſe with the true, this inconuenience would follow vpon it, ỹ none would beleeue either the one or the other. Neither neede we doubt, if there had been any ſuch miracle, but the Euangeliſts would haue put it in writing.

The name Iſrael which here he oppoſeth againſt theſe beaſts, hath a very great emphaſis in it. We know what honour it was to the poſteritie of Iacob to beare this name, which God himſelfe had impoſed vpon this holy Patriark, becauſe he ouercame the Angel in wraſtling. Which name was ſo much the more diſhonoured, by how much the more theſe baſtard and degenerate children durſt notwithſtanding make their bragges of that title. And firſt there is a cloſe reproch in it; not onely becauſe they vſurped the name of this holy perſonage (whoſe vertues they imitated nothing at all) but alſo becauſe they were vnthankfull vnto God from whom they had receiued all manner of benefits. Laſtly, we muſt ſupplie an outerthwart comparison: for the greater their dignitie was, in that they had been exalted farre aboue all other people, ſo much the more (to reproch them vnder this honorable title) are they ſeparate from other nations. The Greeke Interpreters haue added this word me; but I had rather repeate that which the Prophet hath ſaid, to wit, that Iſrael hath not knowne his poſſeſſer or owner; that is to ſay, God: nor his crib; that is, his Church, wherein hee was nouriſhed, and to which hee ought to bee gathered. Eſpecially ſeeing theſe poore beaſts doe acknowledge their maſter that feedes them; and doe voluntarily returne to the place where they were wont to find paſture.

Verſ. 4. Ah, ſinfull nation, a people laden with iniquitie, a ſeede of the wicked, corrupt children: They haue forſaken the Lord: they haue * prouoked the holy one of Iſrael to anger: they are gone backward.*

* Or, ſinfull woman.

* Or, they haue deſpiſed.

AH.] Although he had reproued their fault ſharpely enough, yet notwithſtanding the more to amplifie it, he yet further addes this exclamatiō: by which he ſhewes his deteſtation againſt ſo horrible and foule an ingratitude. Some thinke this particle Ah, is put here in ſigne of lamenting. Saint Ierome hath interpreted it, Woe: but me thinks it ſhould more fitly agree to an exclamation, ariſing partly from aſtoniſhment, and partly from ſorrow. For wee are wont to burſt into outcries, when ſo vnworthie a thing is committed, that words cannot expreſſe it; or rather when words anſwerable to the greatnes of the griefe failes vs. In ſtead of ſinfull nation as we haue tranſlated it, the Greeks haue turned ſinfull woman, the vulgar tranſlation alſo bearing the ſame. But the Hebrew word ſignifies thoſe who are giuen ouer to wickednes, and it is not to be doubted, but the Prophet here accuſeth them of their deſperate malice.

A people laden] &c. We muſt note the force of the ſimilitude; for hee not onely meanes that they were plunged in their iniquities, as in a deepe mirie pit; but alſo reprocheth them that they ſinned not ſo much of ignorance or infirmitie (as the weak often do) but that they followed on and continued in their rebellion of ſet purpoſe. As if he ſhould haue ſaid, They are giuen vp to all iniuſtice, and haue wholly ſold ouer themſelues to commit euill. Where he addes, Seede of the wicked; it is as much, as miſchieuous ſeede. Some expounding it more wittily, ſay, that they declared themſelues vnworthie to hold any place among the children of Abraham: becauſe they were become baſtards, and degenerate. As in other places they are called a ſeede of Canaan; yea they are reproched with the name of vncircumciſed; euen as though they had bin begotten of prophane or a ſtrange people. But it is an vſuall manner of ſpeech among ỹ Hebrews; which the Greekes alſo obſerued in their ſpeech, when they ſay, ſonnes of the good, for good children.

Corrupt children.] It is word for word, corrupting: and therefore the expoſitors ſupplie, Themſelues, or, their waies. But me thinks baſtard, or degenerate agrees better. For his meaning is that they are ſo depraued, that they reſemble their fathers nothing at all. Moreouer, hee adornes his nation here with foure titles, which are not very ſeemely: And ſuch indeed as were farre remote from the good conceit which they had of themſelues. But thus muſt hypocrites bee dealt withall, to awaken them: and the more they ſooth vp themſelues in caſting off the feare of God, ſo much the more muſt they bee thundred againſt. For a milder and a more gentle doctrine would not haue preuailed with ſuch a kind of people any thing at all: neither would a ſlight manner of reproſe haue moued them. The falſe perſwaſion therefore of their righteouſnes and wiſedome was to be plucked away from them; for therewith they maſked and diſguiſed themſelues, and often made their bragges thereof in vaine.

For they haue forſaken the Lord.] Now hee addes the reaſon why hee hath ſo ſharpely and bitterly reproued them: namely, leſt they ſhould complaine as they were wont to doe; that they were too ſeuerely dealt withall. Firſt then he vpbraids them with that, which is the fountaine of all euils: to wit, they had forſaken the Lord. For euen as it is the chiefe perfection of righteouſneſſe to cleaue vnto God, as Moſes teacheth; What doth the Lord thy God require of thee but that thou cleaue vnto him? ſo is it the greateſt miſerie wee can plunge our ſelues into, when wee haue forſaken him. Now the Prophets meaning is, to let the Iewes ſee, that they were not onely guiltie of one fault: but to ſhew them that they were become Apoſtats altogether. No doubt, but that which followes ſerues for an amplification; whether we reade, To prouoke, or, to diſpoſe; yet I rather reſt in the latter. For it was too groſſe an ingratitude to make light account of him who had adopted them for his owne, from the reſt of all nations. And for this cauſe he calles himſelfe the holy one of Iſrael, becauſe in giuing himſelfe vnto them he had thereby adorned them with his holines. For this name is ſo attributed vnto him euery where, in regard of the effect. From how barbarous a pride then did the deſpiſing of ſo great an honour proceed? If any had rather retaine the word prouoke; the ſenſe will be, that they had reiected the Lord: euen as if they meant to prouoke him to anger of ſet purpoſe. Whence we may ſee how deteſtable their Apoſtaſie was. Deut. 10. 12

They are gone backward.] The ſenſe is that when the Lord did ſet a certaine way and forme before them how hee would haue them to carrie themſelues, they on the contrarie were carried away with their luſts:

and yet he confirmes the former ſentence; to wit, that they had giuen the bridle ſo farre to their ſhameleſſe malepertnes, that they were altogether reuolted from God: yea, and that wittingly and willingly, by erring from that marke vnto which they ought to haue bent their courſe all their life long.

Verſ. 5. Wherefore ſhould ye be ſmitten any more? for you fall away more and more: the whole head is ſicke, and the whole heart is heauie.

Wherefore ſhould] &c. Some do turne it, vpon what? or, in what part? And they take it as if the Lord ſhould ſay, There are no more plagues left to ſtrike you withal. For hee had tried ſo many waies to bring them into the right way, that there was no chaſtiſement left. But I had rather interpret it, Wherefore, or, to what purpoſe? As alſo the Hebrew word importes ſo much; and withall I take it that the ſenſe ſeemes to agree beſt thereto. For ſo we are wont to ſay, wherefore; to what purpoſe, &c. His meaning is then, that the Iewes are growne to ſuch a pitch of wickednes and vngodlines, that it is impoſſible to make them become any whit better. We know by experience that after deſperate men haue once hardned their hearts, then they will rather be broken all to peeces then receiue any correction. Now he complaines that there was ſuch an obſtinacie in them, euen as if the Phyſitian hauing aſſaied all good remedies to cure his diſeaſed patient, ſhould begin to ſay at the laſt, All the skill I haue, will doe no good. And withall hee accuſeth them of extreame malice: for when the wicked are come to that paſſe that chaſtiſements will not humble them, then are they come to the very top of all wickednes. So then it is as much as if the Lord had ſaid, I ſee very well, that though I ſhould correct you neuer ſo much, yet I ſhall do you no good. For queſtionleſſe things are then become wholly deſperate when the chaſtiſements and calamities which God vſeth as remedies to heale our vices, will profit vs nothing. And yet for all that the Lord is ſo farre off from ceaſing to puniſh ſuch ſtil, that (which more is) it ſtirres vp and inflames his wrath ſo much the more againſt vs: For there is nothing more burthenſome to him, then ſuch an obſtinacie. Notwithſtanding it is rightly ſaid, that he loſeth his labour, when he cannot thereby draw vs to repentance: and that all the remedies hee applies to a people ſo vtterly paſt cure are in vaine. So then he is ſo farre off from ſparing ſuch, that hee not onely doubles his blowes and afflictions vpon them, trying all meanes poſſible; but he is conſtrained neuer to giue ouer till he hath vtterly conſumed them. But then indeede he plaies not the part of a Phyſitian, but rather of the Surgion: which is the cauſe why he ſo laments here, that his chaſtiſements ſhall now become vnprofitable to the people.

You fall away.] This is a confirmation of the former ſentence, ſo that I diſtinguiſh this member from the former, which others notwithſtanding doe connioyne together. As if he ſhould ſay, You wil be ſo far off from ceaſing to erre, that (which worſe is) you augment your wickednes more and more, for I ſee you are ſo carried away to doe euill, as if yee had laid your heads together, deliberately to conſpire thereof in your minds: ſo that there is no hope at al left of any moderation. Now God in this ſpeech purpoſed to manifeſt vnto al men how incorrigible their ſpirit was, to the end they might pretend no excuſes afterwards.

The whole head.] Others tranſlate, Euery head: and thinke that the princes and great men among the people are here meant by theſe particular names. But for mine owne part, I rather agree to their opinion, who tranſlate, all the head. For me thinks it is a plaine ſimilitude, taken from the body of man; to wit, when the bodie is ſo ſore afflicted, that there is no hope of health left. Now he names two principall partes whereupon the health of the whole bodie depends: and hereby he declares the extremitie of the diſeaſes, wherewith this wretched people was vtterly ſpent. It was not ſome part or common member of the bodie then, which was pained, but the heart was wounded; and the head very ſore diſeaſed: in a word, that the vitall parts (as they are called) were ſo putrified and infected, that they were incurable. But the Interpreters doe not agree in this behalfe: for ſome referre this ſicknes to ſinne: others, to puniſhments. To ſinnes thus; You are alreadie become a rotten and ſtinking bodie, wherein nothing that is whole and ſound is left: wickednes and ſinne hath gotten the ſwinge amongſt you, by the infection whereof all is defiled and corrupt. But I had rather vnderſtand it of the puniſhments: for the Lord doubtles ſtil purſues this complaint: namely, that the people are ſo rooted in obſtinacie, that they cannot bee brought to amendment of life for any plague inflicted vpon them; and that howſoeuer they had been ſmitten euen to death (at the leaſt wiſe, rent and torne in peeces with ſore blowes in a fearefull maner) yet that they became neuer the wiſer for all that.

Verſ. 6. Euen from the ſole of the foote vnto the head, there is nothing whole therein, but wounds, and ſwelling, and ſores full of corruption: they haue not been wrapped nor bound vp, nor mollified with oyle.

THeſe words alſo haue affinitie with the former, wherein hee ſtill proſecutes the very ſame matter vnder the ſame ſimilitude and manner of ſpeech. Thoſe who referre the firſt part vnto ſinnes, doe not ſufficiently waigh the remainder of ỹ text that followes. Let vs grant that the people corrupted with vices are compared to a ſicke bodie: what coherence will there be touching the things which by and by follow, to wit, that their wounds were not wrapped nor mollified with oyle? It appeares therefore that the Prophet speakes of the afflictions wherewith the people were almost consumed. And he also sets forth this continuall languishing in them, as a testimonie of their extreame hardning. He calles the wound Corrupt, from whence flowes a continuall infection, as if a spring (deepe in the earth) should continually send forth new streames of venome. So that by this similitude, he shewes that the maladie is incurable, seeing the corrupt water which is in it runnes without stay. The amplification also is not small, when hee saith, there were no remedies applied thereunto. For the three similitudes which he cõioynes together, tend al to one end, namely, that this people were in so miserable a plight, that they were without any hope of comfort, without consolation and without remedie. So that in such kinds of punishments, one might easily discerne the extreame severitie of God.

Vers. 7. Your land is waste: your cities are burnt with fire: strangers devoure your land in your presence, and it is desolate like the overthrow of a strangers.

a Or, forreine enemies.

WAste] Word for word it is, desolation. And thus Esaiah prosecutes that more largely, and more clearely, which he had said before figuratiuely touching the wounds: to wit, that the land was afflicted with an horrible waste. For I had rather referre the sentences to the time past: because the Prophet rather recountes how many calamities have formerly happened, before he denounceth the vengeance of God. For he casts their dotage and benummednes of hart in their teeth, in that they continued so besotted in their miseries. As the overthrow of strangers. This is added for amplification sake. For their sense is too narrow and constrained, who would haue the Hebrew word zarim, which signifieth destruction (which word the Prophet also here vseth) to bee put in the stead of zerem, which signifies an ouerflowing of waters. True it is that the word may be applied to enemies: but it is better to take it in his proper signification, for strangers. For the calamitie is then much more grieuous when men vnknowne, and those that come from a farre countrie doe make warre in a kingdome; because they are lightly farre more cruell, and doe more hurt then the nighbour enemies. For they race the cities: they burne vp houses, buildings, and villages; destroying all things; and sparing nothing. In a word, they rush in with barbarous inhumanitie, seeking nothing but to kill, sack, and burne: yea, they study rather to do hurt, thẽ to get their booty. But ỹ neighbour enemies because they are able to hold that which they haue won, vse to leaue garisons there; and as soone as any reuolt is intended, or any trouble moued, they forthwith send succors: and therefore are not so cruell, neither doe they spoyle the countrie out of which they may fitly reape any commoditie. Hee therefore describes no ordinarie destruction, but rather so bloodie and fierce an one, as exceeded all the rest.

From hence then we may note, that when God hath once begun to chastice & correct, he makes not an end with vs by and by. But in striking vs with many wounds, hee redoubles the blowes, and ceaseth not to visit vs stil with one plague after another, if so bee wee cannot be brought to true repentance. Let vs then eschew and flee such an obstinacie, if we meane to escape the like punishments: or if we meane this reproach which was iustly cast vpon the Iewes, should not by as good right light vpon vs: namely, that albeit wee haue been diligently admonished, and haue felt the hand of the Lord, yet for al that we could not bee corrected nor amended. What matuaile is it then, I pray you, if wee are pressed with so many and so diuers calamities, whereof we can see neither end or issue? Surely we euen fight hand to hand as it were with God and against all his roddes by our rebellion. Is it not needefull then that hee should take vs in hand; and deale with vs, as men do with restie and vnruly Iades, who the more they wince and kick, the more they must bee pummelled about the head, and spurred vpon the sides? There want not many at this day, I dare say, who accuse God of crueltie as if he were too outragious, and that he ought to carrie a more soft and gentle hand ouer vs: But in the meane while they consider not how horrible our wickednesses be. For if they would looke well into them, truely they should easily perceiue an admirable mercie of God, euen in the midst of this his seueritie, which seemes so great in their eyes. And to the end wee may not thinke the Lord was too rigorous towards this people, let vs consider the vices which he by and by reckons vp.

But a question may here be demanded; to wit, why the Prophet should say that the people were so many waies afflicted, seeing he began to prophesie (as we said before) vnder the reigne of Vzziah; in whose time the state of the kingdome of Iudah was verie quiet, so that howsoeuer the kingdome of Israel sustained some losse towards the ende of Vzziah his daies, yet that notwithstanding appertained nothing at all to the kingdome of Iudah. For which cause the Iewes indeed thinke this to appertaine to the reigne of Iotham, and not to the reigne of Vzziah. Now howsoeuer their opinion seemes not to agree very well at the first blush, yet is it not without some probabilitie of reason, if wee shall examine the opinions of others. For wee know that they haue not alwaies kept the order of time in gathering together of the prophesies. And it may bee that this Sermon of Esaiah had obtained first place here for no other cause, but for that it containes a summe of that doctrine which shall be handled afterwards. Others thinke they escape easily away when they expound all these things of vices; and not of punishments: but they cannot so easily auoid that which is spoken of the burning of cities, and wasting of the land. If any thinke the Prophet speakes not of the preſent eſtate of the kingdome, but of that which was to come; and that in the perſon of God, hee denounceth the iudgements which were at hand, howſoeuer they then ſaw them not before their eyes; I doe not greatly gainesay it. Although it be very likely that the Prophet ſpeakes of things which were knowne vnto him. It is rather a certaine narration then of a thing done, than a propheſie: though in the verſe following I confeſſe he ſhewes what the iſſue is, which approacheth.

Verſ. 8. And the daughter of Zion ſhall remaine like a cottage in a vineyard, like a lodge in a garden of Cucumbers, and like a beſieged citie.

HE alludes euen to that cuſtome which is now in vſe amongſt vs in France: namely, to a little cottage which the Vinekeepers prepare when the grapes doe ripen. Alſo he vſeth another Similitude which is almoſt like vnto the former; drawne from the manner of that nation, when the ſeruants watched to keepe the gardens of cucumbers. Afterwards in verſ. 9. he himſelfe expounds what he meanes both by the one & by the other. Now the expoſition may be double; to wit, that all the countrie ſhould be waſted, and nothing left in ſafetie, but the citie of Ieruſalem, which ſhould remaine as a cottage: or, that the citie it ſelfe ſhould bee brought to nought. The Iewes follow the firſt interpretation, and vnderſtand this place of the ſiege of Senacherib: but I thinke it reacheth further off; namely, to the deſtructions which followed afterwards. We may alſo referre it to the neerenes of neighbourhood, which being ruinated and deſtroyed amongſt them, it could not bee auoyded, but that the citie ſhould feele great loſſe thereby. But as I take it, the true meaning of the Prophet is, that the euils whereof he ſpeakes, ſhould come euen to the citie it ſelfe, ſo as it beeing conſumed, ruinated, and brought to nothing, and into deriſion, ſhould become like a cottage. Now he calles Ieruſalem, the daughter of Zion, by a phraſe of ſpeech vſuall in the Scriptures, which intitleth ſome people by the name of daughter, as the daughter of Babylon, and Tyre, for the Babylonians, and Tyrians themſelues. Alſo hee rather mentioneth Zion, then Ieruſalem; becauſe of the dignitie of the Temple: and this manner of ſpeech alſo is very frequent thorowout the whole Scriptures.

Verſ. 9. Except the Lord of hoſts had reſerued vnto vs, euen a ſmall remnant, we ſhould haue been as Sodom, and ſhould haue been as Gomorah.

HEre he concludes that which he had pronounced before touching the ſcourges of God: to wit, that there ſhould be ſuch a ruin; or rather, that it is alreadie preſent, ſo as by the beholding of it, it might bee fitly reſembled to the deſtruction of Sodom: were it not that the Lord ſhould pull out a few remainders as out of the midſt of the fire. This verſe therefore confirmes that which I ſaid erewhile: where the Prophet hauing ſpoken of the calamities which were alreadie happened, did in briefe manner conioyne therewith the euent which ſhould ſhortly enſue: as if hee ſhould haue ſaid, Suffer not your ſelues to be beguiled with faire words: For looke what deſtruction hapned to Sodom and Gomorah, the ſame ſhould fall vpon you, vnleſſe the Lord in hauing compaſſion vpon you, ſhould reſerue ſome few. And vnto this agrees that which is ſaid in Ieremiah, It is the Lords mercies that wee are not conſumed, &c. Lament. 3. 22.

Now from hence we are to note two things: 1
Firſt, that he here denounceth an extreame ruin: yet for as much as God hath to doe with his Church and elect people, therefore this iudgement ſhall be mitigated by a particular and ſpeciall fauour; to the end the faithfull (whom hee here rightly compares to ſmall remnant) may bee deliuered from the generall deſtruction of the whole nation. Now if God hath puniſhed the iniquities of the Iewes by ſuch horrible chaſtiſements, doe we thinke the like will not befall vnto vs if we partake with them in their rebellions? for the Lord had conſecrated this people to himſelfe, and had exempted them from the common condition of others. And wherefore ſhould he rather ſpare vs if we continue hardned in our impietie and diſloyaltie? But which more is, what iſſue can wee expect in the midſt of ſuch an heape and puddle of vices whereinto men plunge themſelues euery way thorowout the whole world? Truly euen the ſame that befell to Sodom and Gomorah: namely, if we ſhould be brought to nothing, did not the reſpect which God hath to his free couenant (wherein hee hath promiſed that his Church ſhall neuer periſh) withhold his vengeance from vs. This threatning alſo which is very terrible and fearefull, appertaines to all thoſe that are obſtinate and deſperate, whoſe manners cannot bee reformed by any ſtrokes of God his roddes.

On the other ſide, wee are to note that which I haue alreadie touched out of Ieremiah; namely, that we ought to attribute it to the only mercie of God that we are not al vtterly conſumed and brought to nothing. For if we ſhall behold how great the iniquities are which do reigne in euery place, and amongſt all ſorts of men, we ought to admire Gods mercie that we ſee ſo much as one man aliue, and that all haue not been cleane ſwept away from off the earth. Thus it pleaſeth the Lord to keepe his hand in; to the end he may ſtill continue a Church in the world. And S. Paul alſo who is the beſt expoſitor of this place yeeldes the ſame reaſon: for alledging it in the Epiſtle to the Romans, chap. 9. 29. he beates downe the inſolencie of the Iewes, to the end they ſhould not bragge of that naked title which they bare, as if it had been enough for them that they were deſcended from the ancient fathers, in regard of the fleſh. For he admoniſheth them that God could deale with them as hee had done in old time with their fathers: but that he is ſtill minded for his mercies ſake to reſerue a Church to himſelfe: and to what end? euen that it ſhould not vtterly periſh. For it is for the loue and fauour which hee beares toward it, that the Lord reſerueth ſome little ſeede, when in regard of our rebellion hee is conſtrained to exerciſe his rigorous iudgements. Which ſentence ought greatly to comfort vs in our extreameſt calamities; yea, euen then when we ſhall thinke the Church as good as forlorne: that when we ſee the ſtate of things turned vpſide downe, ſo as to our ſeeming heauen and earth goeth together (as they ſay) yet that we euen then continue firme and inuincible touching our truſt in God his mercie notwithſtanding, reſoluing our ſelues that God will neuer ceaſe to haue care of his Church howſoeuer the world goe.

Euen a ſmall remnant.] This particle ſmall, may be referred as well to that which went before as to that which followes. And therefore ſome tranſlate, We had been almoſt as Sodom. Notwithſtanding, I had rather referre it to the former ſpeech: to declare that the number which God reſerued from the common deſtruction, was very ſmall. But ſome rather thinke that this is taken affirmatiuely, and was therefore put to expreſſe the matter the more liuely: which I reiect not; although it may be taken in his true and natiue ſenſe, as if it had been ſaid, There ſhall but a ſmall number of the people remaine. Now we are to note this ſentence diligently: for, vnles the Church haue faire and large dominions, men are wont to deſpiſe her. And from thence it comes that hypocrits bragge ſo much of their multitudes; and that the weake alſo ſtagger, as being dazled with their pompe and glorie. It therfore appeares by this place, that wee muſt not meaſure the Church by the hugenes of the multitude, vnleſſe we meane to eſteeme more of the chaffe, then of the wheate; becauſe the quantitie therof is greater. But it ought to ſuffice vs that although the number of the faithful be verie ſmall, yet that God notwithſtanding acknowledgeth them for his elect people. And with this alſo ſhould that conſolation of Chriſt come into our minds: Feare not little flocke, for it is your fathers pleaſure to giue you the kingdome, Luk.12.31.

Verſ.10. Heare the word of the Lord O princes of Sodome: hearken vnto the law of our God O people of Gomorah.

HE confirmes that which he had ſaid before; to wit, that God his vengeance is not crueltie: why ſo? Becauſe they had deſerued a farre greater puniſhment. And howſoeuer there was ſome difference betweene them and the Sodomites, in regard of the puniſhment; yet the fault was alike: ſo as if the Lord had not pardoned them, hee might euen iuſtly haue plagued them with the like iudgement. In a word, he telles them, that if God doe ſpare, it is not to the end they ſhould conclude with themſelues, that their ſinnes were leſſe then thoſe of the Sodomites; but that they were to attribute it rather vnto the mercie of God. Now there is no great diuerſitie in that he attributes the name of the citie of Sodom to the Princes, and the name of Gomorah to the people: but it rather ſhewes their condition to be both alike. But whereas hee repeates one thing twice; this diuerſitie of names hath the greater elegancie. As if he ſhoud ſay, The Princes and people differ no more one from another, then Sodom differed from Gomorah. True it is that hee alludes to the diuers degrees of men, when he attributes two cities to them as it were apart: but in regard that Sodom equals Gomorah in value, wee ſee hee binds them vp both together as it were in one fardle. The ſumme then is; If any man wil iudge of the Princes and people, he ſhall find them agreeing as well together in one, euen as Sodom and Gomorah did. That is to ſay, there was neuer a barrell better hearing: but they were as like, as one egge is to another. For there was no more vprightnes in the princes, then in the people. The Prophet begins now therfore to vnmaske the Iewes, and that very iuſtly: for as it is a common thing with all hypocrites to ſhroud themſelues vnder 1 mercifull pretences, to the ende they may not bee eſpied: euen ſo ſtood the caſe with this people, who were ſtained with this vice aboue any other. And therefore the Prophets had no ſharper conflicts with them, then about this matter. Pride alſo (with this 2 bragging of fained holines) reigned amongſt them; and they gloried no leſſe in the nobleneſſe and excellencie of their nation, then of their outward ceremonies and ſeruice: by reaſon whereof this ſeueritie of the Prophet did greatly gall them. But in as much as it was needefull to draw out their villanies into light, the more they ſet vp their briſtles, the more liuely doth the Prophet thunder againſt them. And thus muſt all hypocrites be ſerued.

The word of the Lord.] The Prophet takes the word of the Lord and the law, for one and the ſame thing. And yet notwithſtanding I doubt not but hee vſed this word law of ſet purpoſe, to the end he might taxe their ſottiſh opinion: For whileſt they imagined to appeaſe God with ſacrifices which they offered without faith or repentance, they interpreted the law of God after their owne fantaſies. By which words then he admoniſheth them, that in alledging the authoritie of Moſes, he brings in no new deuice of his owne, neither addes he any thing to the law; but that in hearing him, they ſhould only heare the will of God, whereof hee faithfully enformeth them. Alſo that the law of God doth in no ſort fauour or allow of their dealings in this point: to the end they ſhould not thinke to beguile the Lord with a falſe perſwaſion of their owne righteouſnes.

Verſ. 11. What haue I to doe with the multitude of your ſacrifices, ſaith the Lord? I am full of the burnt offerings of Rammes, and the fat of fed beaſts: and I deſire not the blood of Bullocks, nor of Lambs, nor of Goates.

NOw Iſaiah brings in God ſpeaking, who interprets his owne meaning himſelfe. For it is not enough that the Lawgiuer doe command onely, but that he alſo ſhould adde a natiue expoſition to the lawes, that they be not corrupted. Now it is not to be doubted, but that the former ſharpe reprehenſion was very ill taken: For what could one haue ſpoken more boldly or roundly againſt them? They gloried in the name of Abraham, bragging in the title of his children, and proudly vaunting themſelues thereof. For which cauſe the Prophet thus armes himſelfe with the authoritie of God againſt them. As if he ſhould ſay, Know you, that you haue not ſo much to doe with me, as with God himſelfe. Next he ſhewes what it is that God reſpects, and what his meaning is in demanding ſacrifices of them: namely, not that hee doth ſo much eſteeme of the ſacrificing of brute beaſts; but that they ſhould ſerue, as outward props and helpes of godlines. And therefore that the Iewes greatly deceiued themſelues, who put their chiefeſt holineſſe in ſuch outward ceremonies. For they thought they had diſcharged their duties very well, when they ſacrificed and offered their offerings: and when the Prophets required any thing more of them, then they complained as it they had been ouer hardly dealt withall. But the Lord telles them that hee abhors and reiects their offerings. Now it may ſeeme that this is too ſtrict a courſe: for were they not the things which God himſelfe had inſtituted and commanded? But wee muſt note that as touching the commandements of God ſome ought to be obeyed ſimplie, and others for another end: as for example; The law commands, 1 firſt, that we ſerue and honor God: 2 ſecondly, that wee ſeeke our neighbours profit. Deut.6.5. These things are of themſelues pleaſing vnto God, and are abſolutely required of vs. 1 But it is otherwiſe in regard of ceremonies, for Leuit.19.18 they are exerciſes which are not ſimplie required in reſpect of themſelues, but for another end. 2 And the like we may ſay of faſting. Rom.14.17. For the Kingdom of God ſtands not in abſtinence from meats and drinkes: faſting therfore hath reſpect to an higher end.

God therefore hath not ſo inſtituted ceremonies as if hee would bee appeaſed by the worke wrought; but that the people ſhould by them exerciſe themſelues vnto godlines: and ſhould thereby bee the more ſtirred and trained vp in faith, and in his pure worſhip and ſeruice. But hypocrits are onely forward and carefull in obſeruing theſe, as if the principall matter of religion conſiſted in them: and thinke themſelues the moſt deuout people in the world, whilſt they wearie and tire themſelues a long time in the obſeruation thereof. And that they might yet appeare the more holy; they euer lightly ad ſomething of their owne, and inuent ſome noueltie from day to day: but in the meane time they wickedly abuſe the holy ordinances of God, in that they refer them not to their right ends. All their ceremonies therefore are nothing elſe in God his account, but prophanations of his holy worſhip and ſeruice. For whilſt they reſt fettered as it were in the bare and naked outward action only, what difference is there betweene their ſacrifices, and thoſe of the Gentiles? which wee know are ſtuffed full of ſacrileage, becauſe they are not referto a right and lawfull end. This then is the reaſon why the Lord reiects all ſuch ceremonies notwithſtanding himſelfe had inſtituted them: to wit, becauſe the people looked not to the right end and vſe, for which they were ordained. Herein then ſtode the continuall conflict which the Prophets had with the people; namely, in plucking off theſe vizzards from their faces: and in ſhewing them that the Lord did not content himſelfe with outward ſeruices, neither could be appeaſed with ſuch faire ſhewes.

And the faithfull ſeruants of the Lord haue euery where experience of the ſame combats euen at this day. For men doe alwaies meaſure God by their owne ell; and thinke to appeaſe him with outward appearances, and will not be brought by any meanes to offer vp vnto him a pure and vpright heart. But Ieremiah will eaſily diſſolue all the difficultie of this place. For in the 7. chapter, he ſaith out of the mouth of the Lord: When I redeemed your fathers out of the land of Egypt, I did not command them to ſacrifice to me: only I commanded them that they ſhould heare my voyce and keepe my commandements. Wherein he ſhewes, that all the obſeruation of the ceremonies did depend vpon the word; and that they are vaine and vnprofitable, if they be ſeparated from it, euen as if one ſhould diuide the ſoule from the bodie. Hereunto alſo belongs the argument of the fiftieth Pſalme: Will I eate the fleſh of fat Bulles, or will I drinke the blood of Goates? Offer vnto God praiſe, and pay thy vowes vnto the moſt high. Ieremiah alſo in another place ſaith: Truſt not in lying words ſaying, The Temple of the Lord, The Temple of the Lord, but rather amend your waies, &c. Alſo Micheah: Doth the Lord delight in thouſands of Rammes, or in ten thouſands of fat beaſts of the Valleies? By and by after he addes: I will ſhew thee O man what is good: and what it is that the Lord thy God requireth of thee, to wit, To doe iudgement, to loue mercie, and to humble thy ſelfe to walke with thy God: Mich.6. By which places it appeares, that God reiects ceremonies, becauſe they were ſeparate from the word, as from their ſoule or life. Whereby we may ſee how great the blindnes of men is, who cannot bee perſwaded that all the paines they take this way in the ſeruice of God is vnprofitable vnleſſe the integritie of the heart goe before.

And this vice is not onely rooted in the common people, but almoſt in all men; yea, euen in thoſe who in their owne opinion thinke they excell moſt. From hence it is at this this day that this goodly deuice of * the worke wrought cannot bee pulled out of the minds of many; which the doctors of the Papists haue found out. But it is not man which speakes here, but God himselfe: who by an immutable decree, declares that men sacrifice vnto him in vaine: and that whatsoeuer they doe else, is without fruite, vnlesse they call vpon him by a true faith.

* That is to say, a worke which they esteeme good in it selfe: albeit the heart of him which doth it be neuer so bad.

Vers. 12. When yee come to appeare before mee, who required this of your hands to tread in my courts?

BEhold here a most excellent refutation of counterfeit worship; when God affirmes they came not before him as hee commanded them: pronouncing in generall that it is but lost labour when men offer him that which he requires not: because he will be no otherwise serued then according to his commandement. Whence is it then that men doe so please themselues in such inuentions, but because they vnderstand not that all their seruing of God is vnprofitable and odious in his eies? For otherwise they would by and by thinke thus with themselues, Surely, God requires obedience as the principall: neither would they with such ouerweening extoll their owne workes; which hee on the other side scornes and derides: not onely for that he receiues no profit at all there by; but because hee would not haue men to attribute that vnto him, which they haue rashly inuented of their owne heads without his commandement: and also because hee cannot endure that men should establish their owne fantasies, in stead of his law. Although to the end he may yet touch them neerer to the quicke, he by and by addes, That it is a seruice falsely so called; which he esteemes to be but lost labour: namely, that in assembling themselues in the Temple, they did nothing else but weare the pauements thereof with their feete: as if he should say, You must needes thinke that I am much bound to you, for beating mine eares thus with your feined prayers.

1. Sam. 15. 22.

Vers. 13. Bring no moe oblations in vaine: incense is an abomination vnto me: I cannot suffer your new moones nor sabbaths, nor solemne daies (it is iniquitie) nor solemne assemblies.

THis is a very profitable admonition to represse y inordinate appetite of those who ceased not obstinately to follow their vaine and feined seruices, that at least being warned of God, they might repent, if at any hand they would be admonished. But it appeares by this place, how obstinate hypocrits are in their false confidence, being once hardned therein, because they cannot possiblie heare the Lord, although hee manifestly warne them that they should cease to lose their labour as they doe. Incense is an abomination] &c. That he might pricke them vnto the quicke indeede, he passeth yet further, and tels them that such seruice is not only vnprofitable, but that he also detests it, as abominable vnto him: and very iustly; for it is an high sacrilege to prophane the seruice of God; vnder which they falsely shrouded themselues. For euen as God esteemes nothing more deare and precious vnto him thē his glory; so is nothing lesse tolerable vnto him, then to see it trodden vnder feete by any corruption whatsoeuer: which yet is then done, when euery vaine thing is set vp in stead of his true worship. Some are deceiued in vnderstanding this place, thinking that the Prophet speakes of the abolishing of the law; for that is not his meaning: but he rather brings the people of his time to the true obseruation of the ceremonies; and shewes wherefore, and to what end they were instituted. The seruice of God was spirituall euen from the beginning of the world. And whereas there were other exercises diuers from ours in the old Testament, it was in regard of men, and not of God; for there is no changing with him; but he applied himselfe to the weakenes of man. This gouernment then was fit for the Iewes, as an Abce for children. Therefore he shewes to what end this gouernment was established, and what was the true vse of ceremonies.

Iames 1. 17.

Vers. 14. My soule hateth your new moones and your appointed feasts: they are a burthen vnto me: I am wearie to beare them.

THe Prophet addes nothing different from the former doctrine, but in generall pronounceth of al ceremonies, where there is not spirituall trueth ioyned but onely a false pretence appeareth, that they are not onely things vnprofitable, but wicked. From hence we must obserue, that we labour but in vaine vnlesse we worship God aright as it is meete, and himselfe prescribeth: For if trueth be it indeede which pleaseth God in all things, then much more doth he looke for it in the worship which is done to his Maiestie. Moreouer our labour is not only lost (as hath been said heretofore) but the worship of God is hereby perverted, which is the greatest villanie that can be committed. Now all superstitions are so many corruptions of the pure worship of God: and therefore it followes that they are wicked and detestable. Superstition then is to be esteemed either by the thing it selfe, or by the affection of the heart from whence it proceedes. By the thing it selfe; when men dare bring in of their owne heades, that which God hath not commanded. As all those things are which superstition (commonly called deuotion) hath begotten. One will set vp and Idoll; another will build a chappel; the third will found yeerely pensions to haue Masses said daily for him; others, such like paltrie stuffe without end or measure. Now when men take vpon them to be so malepert as to forge new ser-

uices, there hath ſuperſtition the full ſwinge. It may alſo be in the affection of the heart, when men doe vſe the ceremonies (which God hath allowed and commanded) in outward appearance: who in the meane while ſticke faſt there; neuer aiming at the marke, and trueth of them. As for example, the Iewes hold the ceremonies ordained by Moſes with tooth and naile, but yet they leaue that which is the principall behind them. For they regard a good conſcience nothing at all; a man ſhall not heare them ſpeake of faith, or of repentance; they haue no knowledge of their ſpirituall miſerie: and (which is worſt of all) they ſeparate Chriſt from their ſacrifices, giuing no place at all to the trueth. Wherein we cleerely ſee the trueth of that which wee haue taught heretofore; to wit, that it was a baſtardly & painted ſhew which they made: ſo as their ſacrifices differed in nothing from the ſacrifices of the heathen. We needе not wonder then if the Lord call them an abomination. I will not ſtand to ſcan the phraſes of ſpeech which the Prophet here vſeth; they are diuers: and yet notwithſtanding they are not to be lightly paſſed ouer. For the Lord well diſcernes how great the rage of man is to forge new ſeruices, and therefore he vſeth amplifications to depreſſe this vice the more; and againe pronounceth, that hee hates them. Beſides, for as much as men doe flatter themſelues and are perſwaded that the Lord will make ſome account of their dreames and ſtore of deuices, he on the contrarie ſaith that he abhorres and deteſts them.

Verſ. 15. And when you ſhall ſtretch out your hands I will hide mine eies from you: and though you make many prayers, I will not heare: for your hands are full of blood.

IT came not from any ſuperſtition that the people in old time vſed to ſtretch out their hands in prayer: neither came this geſture of any vaine or friuolous luſt, as many others haue done: But in regard that nature her ſelfe thruſteth forth her hands to ſeeke for that which ſhe deſireth: teſtifying euen by outward ſignes that ſhe hath her recourſe vnto God. Therefore in as much as we cannot flie vp vnto him, wee lift vp our ſelues as it were vnto him by this ſigne or geſture. True it is that the fathers had no commandement to doe it: notwithſtanding they vſed it as being inſpired of God. And by this very ſigne are all idolaters conuinced euen of ſottiſh blindnes: for they proteſt by this outward geſture that they haue their refuge in God, and yet notwithſtanding in effect they withdraw their hearts from him to idoles. Alſo to the end the ſuperſtitious might be the more conuinced, the Lord was pleaſed that this cuſtome ſhould alwaies continue in vſe amongſt them. The Prophet then condemnes not the lifting vp of the hands ſimplie, but their hypocriſie, whereby in appearance they made ſhew to call vpon God, but in their hearts they were farre from him, as in the 29. chapter he doth more fully charge them. The Lord confeſſeth indeed that he is neere; but it is to thoſe that call vpon him in truth, Pſalm. 145. 18. For where hypocriſie reigneth, there can be no true inuocation. That therfore which is ſaid in another place is not contrarie to this; namely, when they ſhall ſtretch forth their hands vnto me, I wil heare them. For the Lord there ſpeakes of that inuocation which proceedes of faith. For faith is the mother of prayer: but if faith bee abſent, prayer is a meere mocking of God. This he yet amplifies further when hee tels them that he will not heare their cries, although they ſhould multiplie their prayers: As if hee ſhould ſay; Be it that you neuer ceaſe praying, yet this your diligence ſhall profit you nothing: For hypocrites haue this vice alſo peculiar vnto them, that they imagine the more they babble, & more holy they are, and that they can the more eaſily obtaine the thing they aske. But he refels their babling here, as we ſee. Rom. 10. 14.

For your hands.] Now he begins to declare more plainly why he abhors, yea, reiects their prayers, as alſo their ſacrifices with diſdain; namely, becauſe they preſented themſelues before his face with a brauerie full of diſſimulation: and in the meane while were cruell, bloudy and giuen to euery kind of iniquitie. Now howſoeuer he by and by addes other ſorts of iniquities, he yet ſpeakes thus notwithſtanding in regard that he had mentioned the lifting vp of the hands: and ſaith, that euen in them, they bare a ſigne and marke of their impieties, ſo as they need not to marueile why they be ſo ſharpely beatē back. For otherwiſe this manner of ſpeech, To lift vp pure hands, was not only in vſe among the Prophets and Apoſtles, but alſo euen amongſt prophane authors, who were pricked forward by the very inſtinct of nature, to exerciſe themſelues in reprouing the ſottiſhnes of mē: or rather it may be the Lord plucked this confeſſiō or ceremonie from them, to the end that at the leaſt wiſe there might alwaies be ſome appearance of true religiō amongſt thē. 1. Tim. 2. 8.

Notwithſtanding the Prophet meant not to charge the Iewes to bee ſuch theeues or murtherers as rob and kill by the high waies ſide: but hee ſtrikes at their priuie deceits and opreſſions whereby they got other mens goods into their owne hands. For God iudgeth otherwiſe then man doth: man eſpieth not the priuie iuglings and wilie practiſes of the wicked by which they are accuſtomed ſmoothly and cunningly to beguile the ſimple ones; or if ſo be they chaunce to come to light, they are extenuated, and not examined according to the weights of the Sanctuarie: But God pulling out theſe gallants by the poll into light, who were wont to ſhroud their robberies vnder honeſt titles, pronounceth before all men that they are murtherers. For if thou kill a man, be it after what manner thou wilt, then art thou a murtherer, whether thou cutteſt his throate, or takeſt away his maintenance, and that which is conuenient for him. He ſpeakes not of them then which were openly openly wicked, being deteſted of all for their diſhoneſt dealing: but of ſuch as caried two faces vnder one hood; profeſſing themſelues good men in outward ſhew, and kept their credit with the world. And this is a circumſtance well worthie our obſeruation. For thus muſt wee proceede at this day againſt thoſe lanke and emptie fellowes who will cloake their villanies vnder vizzards of honeſtie, and in the meane while, what by deceit, violence, or ſome ſuch other iniurie, they oppreſſe the poore and needie. Although then they impudently crie out that we doe them wrong to compare them to theeues and murtherers, yet muſt they be reprehended with ſuch ſeueritie, as the Prophet vſed here to their fellowes. For when wee ſpeake in the name of God, we muſt not iudge according to the reaſon and opinion of men: but muſt with all boldnes pronounce that which the Lord his iudgement approueth.

Verſ. 16. Waſh you, make you cleane: take away the euill of your workes from before mine eies: ceaſe to doe euill.

NOw hee exhortes the Iewes to repentance, and ſhewes the true way to come thereto, if ſo be they meant by their ſeruices ſhould be allowed of God. Whence wee gather, that nothing can pleaſe God, vnleſſe it come from a pure conſcience. For God is not like a man, that he ſhould eſteeme our works by the outſide of them. Men do many times praiſe the worke which a wicked man hath done, but in God his ſight (who chiefly reſpects the heart) the polluted conſcience defiles all the reſt of the vertues. And that is it which the Prophet Haggie teacheth, ſetting
Hag. 1.14.15 an example of the ancient ceremonie before them: namely, that whatſoeuer a polluted man had touched was vncleane: whence he concludes, that no cleane thing can proceed from the wicked. Our Prophet hath alreadie affirmed, that it is in vaine to offer ſacrifices vnto God, in vaine to make vowes, in vaine to cal vpon him, if the integritie of the heart do not ſanctifie the outward ſeruice. Wherefore to the ende the Iewes ſhould not labour any longer for nothing, he requires this cleannes: and begins with a generall reformation, to the end they ſhould not think they had bleared the eies of God by doing their duties in ſome one or two things only. And thus muſt they be handled who haue eſtranged themſelues from God. Wee muſt not touch a diſeaſe or two of a ſicke infected body: but if care be had to heale it truely and ſoundly, we muſt de forced to call them backe, and to begin all anew: yea the contagion of the diſeaſe muſt be purged wholly from within; that ſo they may begin to pleaſe God, whereas before they were deteſtable and abominable in his ſight. And no doubt alſo by this Similitude of waſhing, hee exhortes them to purge themſelues from their inward vncleanneſſes. But vnto this hee will by and by ad outward workes.

Now in that he commands them to waſh themſelues, it is not becauſe men come to repentance by their owne proper mouing, and free will; but he ſhewes that no other remedie will ſerue the turne, vnleſſe they appeare pure and cleane before God. Now we know that the Spirit of God is wont to attribute that to men, which himſelfe workes in them, who therefore is called cleane water, Ezech. 36.25. becauſe repentance is a worke proceeding from him.

Take away.] Now the Prophet deſcends to the fruites of repentance. For he not onelie declares in plaine termes that they ought to be cleanſed and waſhed; but he commands them to ſhew a teſtimonie of their change in their whole life, and in all their actions. Notwithſtanding hee confirmes the former ſentence; namely, that the filthines of the people is before the Lord, which defiling and ſtayning all their works takes away all the goodnes which might ſeeme to be in them. He makes expreſſe mention of the eies of God, to the end that whilſt he beholds them, they ſhould not thinke to depriue him of ſeeing, and ſo make him a companion with them of their blindnes. Ceaſe from euill. He goes on ſtill to blame their life. Some expound this place, as if by euill doing, the Prophet ſhould vnderſtand euill liuing: But it ought properly to be vnderſtood of thoſe miſdoings wherby a mans neighbour is offended. Seeing in the next verſe following, it is ſaid, Learne to doe well: where the clauſe, To your neighbour, ſhould be ſupplied. For he ſpeakes of the iniuries, and good turnes which our neighbour receiues of vs. Now becauſe repentance hath his ſeate in the heart, therfore he ſets it forth by theſe kinds, whereby men may come ſomewhat neere to the knowledge of it. For euery man would bee taken for a good man: but the outward works ſhew what euery man is within. He brings them then to externall workes, that by them they ſhould ſhew forth the truth of their repentance. Now hee comprehends the fruits of repentance vnder two members, to wit, a ceaſing to doe euill; and a learning to doe well. For firſt wee muſt abſtaine from doing all wrong: yet ſo, as wee deale not like thoſe prodigall ones who would be eſteemed liberall, when they take from one to giue to another: neither yet like thoſe pinchpennies who thinke they haue quit themſelues well when they are carefull in keeping their own, doing others no harme; and yet in the meane while will doe good to none at all. His meaning is then, to comprehend both the one and the other: for the obſeruation of the ſecond table conſiſteth in theſe two points.

Verſ. 17. Learne to doe well: ſeeke iudgement, relieue the oppreſſed: iudge the fatherleſſe, and defend the widdowes.*

* Or, him who is trampled vnder foote.

EVen as immediatly before, where he commanded them to abſtaine from euill, hee therein comprehended a continuall exerciſe thereof: as if hee ſhould ſay, Hitherto your whole life hath been nothing but a committing

ting of euill: now on the otherſide he teacheth them to bee meeke and curteous; and drawes them to learne what it is: euen as if he had had to doe with new apprentiſes, and raw ſchollers. And firſt he commands them to ſeeke iudgement: others tranſlate, Examine your ſelues; which I approue not. For by the word ſeeke, hee ſignifies a further thing, namely, an actuall ſtudie, as they call it. Alſo by the word iudgement he comprehends whatſoeuer is good and right, as if he ſhould ſay, Study to be vpright.

Relieue the oppreſſed.] The Prophet after his accuſtomed manner comes to particulars, after he hath ſpoken of things in generall: and howſoeuer he had alreadie exhorted them to weldoing and equitie in ſpeciall manner; yet now willing to preſſe them more neerely, he reckons vp ſome particular kindes thereof in plaine words, by which hee comes to a more ample and full declaration of the generall. For otherwiſe men would alwaies goe for iuſt and vpright; and hardly ſhould you ſtirre or mooue them with generall doctrine. But when one comes once to particulars, euen as if one ſhould bring them out by the polles into open view, then they are conſtrained to ſubmit themſelues; or at the leaſt to become more tractable: whereof we haue daily experience.

Iudge.] The Prophet makes choice here of two particulars, which do beſt of all lay open and diſcouer the wickednes of men. For they very ſeldom take the cauſes of the widow and fatherleſſe in hand, becauſe they looke not for the reward. And hence it is then that poore creatures are expoſed to infinite ſorts of iniuries; namely, becauſe no man is haſtie to ſuccour them: for who will ſerue in the place of iuſtice for nothing? nay are there not many who giue themſelues to poll and pill the poore and needie? And doth not this manifeſtly ſhew, how few make conſcience of executing iudgement? Indeed it is no wonder if the rich and mightie haue friends to maintain and vphold their cauſes, ſeeing they are drawne and allured thereunto, not of conſcience, but for hope of gaine. But the Lord here ſhewes that he takes care for the fatherleſſe and widowes; and that he will iudge and reuenge their cauſe, if any haue offered them violence. And as much he ſaith of all other diſtreſſed, who being held down by violence and tyrannicall cruelty, do ſigh and grone vnder the oppreſſion of them who are more mightie then they.

This ought to miniſter a ſoueraigne conſolation to all the children of God: whoſe condition it is to poſſeſſe their ſoules by patience. For how proudly ſoeuer the wicked aduance themſelues, yet ſhall not that hinder the faithfull to triumph in their anguiſhes. Let this ſentence therefore bee alwaies ingrauen vpon their hearts, The Lord will ſuccour vs: and, Although men deſpiſe vs, yet will he care for vs: He will helpe the helpleſſe, and will defend their cauſe.

Verſ. 18. Come now and let vs reaſon together, ſaith the Lord: though your ſinnes were as crimſin, they ſhall bee made white as ſnow: though they were red as skarlet, they ſhall be as wooll.

COME NOW.] The Expoſitors haue beene wont to tranſlate, I pray you, or Then: but me thinks the aſſurance of a good cauſe is here noted; ſo as the Hebrew particle now, ſerueth for an exhortatiõ. For he ſhewes that the Iewes ſhould be able to make no replies, and that they would remaine ſtarke dumbe; although long time ſhould be giuen them to iuſtifie themſelues. And ſurely ſo muſt hypocrites be dealt withall: for they are skilfull to pleade boldly with God, and will bee ſeeking out ſtarting holes. Therefore he ſaith if they bee minded to plead, he is as readie as they.

But ſome may demand what reaſon the Prophet hath to ſtand chiefly vpon the duties of the ſecond Table, rather thẽ vpon the duties of the firſt. For we know that in diuiding of the law, it is not without cauſe that God hath placed the firſt Table formoſt, as in the chiefe ranke. Neither is it to be doubted, but as it is firſt in order, ſo is it alſo formoſt in dignitie. I anſwere, that the Prophets haue ſpoken diuerſlie in reproouing the hypocriſie of men. For ſometimes they complaine that the Sabbath is violated: otherwhiles that prayer is neglected: but chiefly and principally they crie out againſt idolatry and ſuperſtitions. But our Prophet complaines here, that men made none account of their duties towards their neighbours. Yet ſo it is, that all tends to one end: namely, that our workes are vaine before God, when they come not frõ a pure conſcience: and that we haue no feare of him at all before our eyes. Now they are wont to ſet forth the feare of God, one while by the calling vpon his name; another while by the obſeruation of the Sabbath; and ſometimes by other workes. But in regard that a man beſt knowes the certaine difference which is betweene the true ſeruice of God and hypocriſie, by workes of charitie; the Prophet keeps a very direct courſe in mentioning of them. For hypocrites are very diligent in outward ſeruices and ceremonies: and yet are full of enuie within. They burſt with pride and contempt of their brethren; they burne with auarice and ambition: neither can they eaſily be vnmasked whilſt they couer themſelues vnder the performance of outward ceremonies. Such then muſt be examined by this rule, euen as by a touchſtone, and thereby bee tried whether they haue the true feare of God in them or not. We may well bee deceiued indeede if we will iudge of the godlines of a man by the ſecond Table onlie: but if any man ſhall exerciſe himſelfe in the duties of the commandements of the firſt Table, which are teſtimonies of godlines and of the ſeruice of God, then muſt he be brought to this triall: to wit, whether hee walke without deceit with his brethren: whether he abſtaine from wrong and violence: whether he be true in his word and promiſes: and whether hee carrie himſelfe selfe louingly towards his brethren. And this is the cause why Iesus Christ saith, that Mercy, Iudgement, and Truth are the principal parts of the law, (when he reprocheth the Pharisies for laying aside the care of true iustice, in that they pleased themselues onely in pettie things, tithing Mint, Anis, & Cumin, Mat. 23. 23. By faith in that place he vnderstands fidelity, which we commonly call loyaltie: and by Iudgement all vprightnes when wee render to our neighbour that which to him appertaineth: not suffring him to bee wronged by others, but helping him as farre as we are able.

Obiect. But if these be the principall parts of the law, in what degree shall we place the commandements of the first Table?

Ans. I answer, that they still keepe their order and dignitie: but by these of the second, which Christ straightly requireth, whereupon hee also insistes, the hypocrisie of hypocrits is chiefly discouered, so as a man may more plainly discerne thereby whether the true feare of God be in any one in truth or not. And in the same sense must that be taken where it is said, I wil haue mercie, and not sacrifice: Hosea 6.6. 1.Sam. 15.22. Matth. 9.13. & 12.7. For mercie is a declaration and proofe of true pietie. Moreouer because it is a true demonstration of loue, it pleaseth God of it selfe: but sacrifices, please him for another end. Now it appeares sufficiently, as I thinke, why Isaiah rather mentioneth here the doing of good to our neighbours, then faith, or calling vpon God his name: as also why the Prophets doe speake so diuersly when they meane to bring hypocrits backe to the true seruice of God, and to shew it forth by the outward fruits.

Though your sinnes] &c. This is as much as if he should haue said, I accuse not innocent persons, neither take I pleasure to pleade thus with you; but know, that the cause is great that makes me thus vrge and accuse you. For hypocrits are wont to quarrel with God, as though he dealt too sharplie with them, or as though he were vnappeaseable. Yea in their obstinacie they find out this excuse, That it is in vaine for them to endeuor to returne into fauour with God. And if all excuses faile them, yet notwithstanding they haue this shift, That they ought not to be pressed so neere: and that men must be borne withall in some things, yea euen the best of all. Therfore the Prophet preuents them, and brings in the Lord speaking thus; For my part if neede require, I refuse not to pleade with you; for thereby it shall appeare that your obstinacie is the cause why we are not at vnitie together: bring with you therfore cleannes of heart, and then all our strife shall cease. I would not stand to pleade with you, if you would offer me the sacrifices of an vpright heart. Now from hence wee may gather a wonderfull consolation, namely, that God pleades not with vs, as if he meant to pursue vs with rigor. For if we would earnestly conuert and turne to him, hee would by and by receiue vs into fauor & blot out the remembrance of all our offences, so as he would not call one of them into account. For he is not like men, of whom one cannot obtaine pardon for the least offence, that shall bee committed against them. Nay, on the contrarie, he is readie to cleanse and pardon vs: so farre off is it that we haue any cause to complaine of his ouer great rigorousnes. For he contēts himselfe with the cleannes of the heart; and if there be any sinne that breakes out, besides our purpose, he forgiues it, by pardoning such as haue prouoked him.

Vers. 19. If yee will consent and obey, yee shall eate the good things of the land.

Isaiah still pleades the cause of God against the people: and in briefe affirmes, that all the calamities which the people susteined ought to be imputed to their owne default: and that they were to blame themselues for not recouering a more happie and comfortable estate. Why so? Because God for his part is alwaies readie to pardon their sinnes, if they harden not their owne hearts against him. But for as much as it seemes, that the Prophet placeth felicitie here, in the will and power of man, the Papists contend with Obiect. open mouth that men haue power of their owne free mouing to doe good or euill. Is it so? As if God discourſed here how great the Ans. abilitie of men is; when hee accuseth their obstinacie. But he should then say in vaine, Obiect. if yee will consent, if so be it were not in their power. I answere, that howsoeuer the choice Ans. bee not in our owne power, as they would make vs beleeue it is, yet God iustly chargeth sinners to be the voluntarie authors of their euils, because they pull downe the wrath of God vpon their owne heads willingly, and without constraint. I grant then, that it is a speciall gift of God for a man to endeuour to doe good: but it is also as true, that the wickednes of reprobates hindreth them from applying themselues thereunto: and therefore that al the fault of their hardning abides and remaines in themselues. And hereupon dependes this reproach, namely, That the people might haue had an happie issue, and a comfortable life, if they would haue become teachable and obedient to God. For seeing that of his owne nature hee desires nothing more then to doe good, we may iustly impute it vnto our owne malice, and vnthankfulnes, that this liberalitie which hee daily offereth, comes not vnto vs.

On the contrarie, he addes a terrible and grieuous threatning, to wit, that the vengeance of God is readie to seaze vpon them, to the end they might feele that the contemners of God shall not remaine vnpunished. We must also note that there is but one only rule of well liuing; that is, the obedience which wee yeeld vnto God, and to his word. Also in these words, there is a trāsported sentence by a figure which wee call Hypallage, because the speech should be resolued thus, If you be of a readie mind, and haue full consent of will to obey; or else thus, and yet in the same sense: If ye hearken and obey me, and my word. Seing then that God placeth the felicitie of men in obedience, it followes that that our life is then well ordered when wee heare God ſpeaking, and that we obey him in all things. Now wee may ſee how great the wickednes of men is when they vouchſafe not to lend their eare to God, but reiect the felicitie which hee offereth and prepareth for them. Truely their froward affections ought to bee tamed, to the end that whilſt theſe poore wretches draw the wrath of God vpon their owne heads, they might not wittingly and willingly caſt themſelues headlong vpon the edge of the ſword. Wee muſt note alſo, that in the verſe following, which is the concluſion, he threatens them with extreame ruine, if ſo be they ſtill continue to rebell obſtinately againſt God.

The good things of the earth.] He meanes the fruites which the earth brings forth for the neceſſitie of our life. For the earth ſeemes to bee ſomewhat vnkind when it brings not forth her fruites, but keeps them as it were in her boſome. Although I make no queſtion but hee alludes to the promiſes of the law, where God promiſeth that he will bleſſe the ground of ſuch as walke in his commandements, that they may haue abundance of all good things. And yet hee offereth not the commodities of this life vnto vs to the end he would ſtay vs in an earthly felicity, which hypocrits indeed only gape after, wholly imploying all their wits thereabouts: but that by the contemplation thereof, we ſhould lift vp our minds to the heauenly and ſpirituall felicity: as alſo that by the taſte of his ſo great goodnes he might accuſtome vs to reliſh the eſtate of eternall happines. Now the ancient people were inured rather to be called by ſuch ſhadowes and reſemblances to the heauenly inheritance, namely, by the taſte of earthly benefits. And this difference is well to be noted, that we may applie this doctrine to our vſe according to that degree whereunto God hath been pleaſed to exalt vs. Now the Prophet would teach vs that true felicity, with the complements thereof, conſiſts in the obedience of God: alſo, that the wicked, in rebelling againſt him, doe draw vpon themſelues all manner of calamities: and that we therfore ought to impute all the euils which we endure, to our ſinnes and rebellions, as to the proper cauſe thereof.

Verſ. 20. But if yee refuſe and be rebellious, yee ſhall be deuoured with the ſword: for the mouth of the Lord hath ſpoken it.

THe wicked alwaies thinke the puniſhments which they ſuffer are farre greater then their fault, although God deale mercifully and fauourably with them. And howſoeuer they dare not wholly iuſtifie themſelues; yet notwithſtanding they ceaſe not (as we haue ſaid heretofore) to accuſe him of too great ſeueritie. But the Prophet ſhewes how there ſhall bee no end of their plagues which they often ſuffer, till they bee wholly conſumed: as alſo that there are yet more heauie chaſtiſements prepared for them of God, that they ſhould not imagine to eſcape with thoſe light fillips wherewith they were hitherto ſmitten. The Papiſts wreſt this place to eſtabliſh their free will. And thus they reaſon: If men be happie when they will obey God, then it followes that it is in their owne power to will. Behold a childiſh argument. For the Lord by the mouth of his Prophet diſputes not what or how great our power of will is to good or euill: but admoniſheth, that it is by our owne default that we enioy not the abundance of all good things: and further that the neceſſities wherewith wee bee pinched, are the iuſt rewards of our diſobedience and rebellion. Now there is great ods betwixt demanding, whether a man bee able to make his will which is euill, good; and, whether by his wicked will (which is his owne by nature) hee drawes vpon himſelfe all the plagues which he endureth. Theſe ſubtile and craftie doctors therfore do vniuſtly and falſelie ground their doctrine of free choice of good and euill vpon this place.

For the mouth of the Lord hath ſpoken it.] Becauſe threatnings ordinarily doe not much moue ſuch as are carried away with their inordinate deſires and luſts, the Prophet to the end he might awaken them from out of their ſo great drouſines, admoniſheth them that this ſentence proceeds not from the mouth of a mortall man, but that it is come out of the mouth of the eternall God, who is not mutable as men are, but is alwaies as good as his word. He ſets the authoritie of God before them then to feare and terrifie them; to the end that ſuch among them as were fallen into a dead ſleepe in their vices, might earneſtly giue themſelues to hearken to his threatnings.

Verſ. 21. How is the faithfull citie become an harlot! It was full of iudgement and iuſtice lodged therein, but now they are murtherers.

TO the end the reprehenſion might be the more forcible, and that their wickednes might be ye more deteſtable, in that this people were thus reuolted from God and from all integritie and vprightnes, he cries out as if he ſaw ſome ſtrange and vnwonted thing. And ſurely it was an horrible change, that the people whom the Lord had choſen and ſet apart to bee a royall prieſthood to himſelfe, ſhould thus fal from ſo ſoueraigne pietie and godlines, into the gulfe and ſincke of all ſinne and wickednes. But he ſpeakes chiefly of the citie of Ieruſalem, which was the royall ſeate of the Sanctuarie of God: hee complaines that ſhe which heretofore was a faithfull gardian of iuſtice, is now become a denne of theeues: and that of an holy and chaſt virgin, ſhe is become an harlot. To the ende therefore hee might make the baſtard Iewes (who were farre from the integritie of the holy Patriarks) the more aſhamed, hee takes vnto himſelfe the perſon of a man aſtoniſhed, who wondreth and reaſoneth with himſelfe ſelfe how ſuch a thing could come to paſſe. Alſo in this word faithfull, hee alludes, as I thinke, to the faith in mariage which the wife ought to keepe to her husband. I graunt that the ſignification of the word reacheth further: but waying the circumſtance narrowly, I thinke it not amiſſe to take the word faithfull, for chaſte. For a little after he oppoſeth the contrarie member; calling her harlot. So as being in times paſt a loyall wife keeping faith to her husband, ſhee is now become an harlot paſt ſhame, and bluſheth not at her villanie. Now it is an vſuall thing in the Scriptures to call the Church of God by the name of his wife: which degree of honour Ieruſalem kept whilſt ſhee retained her ſpirituall ſhamefaſtnes and perſeuered in the lawfull and pure worſhip of God: but as ſoone as ſhe gaue ouer that, then ſhe became an harlot.

Now it is not to be doubted but this aſtoniſhment of the Prophet was ioyned with great ſorrow. For it ought to make our haire to ſtand an end, to ſee men reuolt and ſlide backe from God; and forſake the faith and allegeance which once they promiſed him. Neither can it be but men of any good heart, will be deeply touched with extreame ſorrow at ỹ beholding of ſuch a wofull ſpectacle. We reade, Luk. 15. 10. how the Angels reioyce at the conuerſion of a ſinner, and therefore they are much grieued at the perdition of any one of them. But how much more heauie and ſorrowfull are they when they behold the ruine and deſtruction of a whole citie and Church?

Now this admiration carries with it a complaint: as if the Prophet ſhould haue ſaid to Ieruſalem; From what an excellent and flouriſhing eſtate art thou fallen? into what miſerie haſt thou plunged thy ſelfe? What ſhame and diſhonour haſt thou laid thy ſelfe open vnto? For in making mention of her former eſtate, in which ſhee had flouriſhed and had been honourablie accounted of, hee thereby prouokes her to bee ſo much the more moued; ſo as ſhe who in times paſt had been an honeſt mother of a family, ſhould haue much more care of her honour and reputation, then ſuch a one as hath paſſed her whole life in all kind of wicked and leude behauiour.

She was full of Iudgement.] He ſhewes what the fruites of this loyaltie was in times paſt. We may take iudgement for vprightnes only, or, if any will, he may take Iuſtice for giuing to euery one that which to him belongeth: and Iudgement for taking the cauſe of the innocent in hand; and reuenging the poore and needie: For ſo the Scripture indeede vſeth them, when theſe two words are ioyned together. But becauſe they are not wholly ioyned together in this place, I take iudgement ſimplie for vprightnes; as being one, and the ſame thing twiſe ſpoken, to manifeſt it the more clearely.

But now they are murtherers] Here hee ſhewes how Ieruſalem is become an harlot. For whereas iuſtice and equitie were in times paſt highly in eſtimation in her eyes: now on the contrarie ſhee is full of murthers. Now he meanes not murtherers and theeues onely, as hath been ſaid: but thoſe who vnder colour of iuſtice drew other mens goods to themſelues by deceit, and violence: and laſtly thoſe who walked not plainely and ſimplie with their neighbours, in what eſtimation ſoeuer they were: as ſometimes, nay very often it falles out, that the moſt wicked are the moſt praiſed. Now from this eſtate whereunto Ieruſalem was come, let vs conſider after what manner Satan for the moſt part exerciſeth his tyrannie ouer the Church of God, euen as if the bridle were laid in his necke. For if euer there were a Church, it was in Ieruſalem; and yet notwithſtanding Iſaiah ſaith, that it was become a denne of theeues, or as a caue wherein men were deuoured and ſwallowed vp. But if Satan had his ſwinge ſo there; let vs not meruaile if the caſe bee now alike with vs; but let vs rather giue order that we be not corrupted by ſo wicked examples.

Verſ. 22. Thy ſiluer is become droſſe: thy wine is mixt with water.

THe Prophet ſpeaks by a figure: and vnder two ſimilitudes, ſhewes here, how that although things were not wholly ouerturned in appearance, yet that their eſtate notwithſtanding was changed and corrupted in ſuch wiſe, as it was far from that which it was wont to be. For he ſaith, that droſſe ſhined in ſtead of Siluer: and that there was nothing in their wine but colour, without any ſauour: as if he ſhould haue ſaid, Howſoeuer thou makeſt a faire ſhew of goodnes, yet there is nothing that is pure to bee found in thee. Thy wine which was wont to be of it ſelfe, is now mixed; and howſoeuer it deceiues them that looke vpon it, yet by the taſte one may know it is corrupted. Now all this is to none other end, but that the Iewes, hauing once purged themſelues from all diſſimulation, ſhould begin to confeſſe their ſinnes, and not to pleaſe themſelues any longer in them, as hypocrites are wont to doe. To which purpoſe theſe Similitudes which he here vſeth, are very apt and fitting: for the droſſe of ſiluer hath ſome reſemblance with ſiluer; alſo the water that is mixed with the wine, hath ſome ſhew of the colour of the wine it ſelfe: and yet notwithſtanding they are farre off from the puritie of the things, which they reſemble. So the hypocrits paint themſelues with the colour of falſe ſiluer, although indeed they deſerue no more commendations then droſſe: yea they are more deteſtable therein, then if they were openly wicked. Yet notwithſtanding, they oppoſe themſelues againſt God and men, and no leſſe diſloyally then wickedlie paint ouer themſelues with vanitie and vaine ſhewes to couer their malice withall.

Verſ. 23. Thy Princes are rebellions and companions of theeues: euery one loueth gifts, and followeth after rewards, they iudge not the fatherles, neither doth the doth the widowes cauſe come before them.

THere is an alluſion and meeting together of wordes in this place, which hath a verie good grace; as if hee ſhould ſay, Thy Princes are pincers. Neither ſpeakes he ſo of the princes as if the people were holy and blameleſſe, but hee toucheth the welſpring of the miſchiefe: for euen as no euill is more hurtfull, then that which comes from the head, and diſperſeth it ſelfe into all the members; ſo alſo is there nothing more pernicious in a commonwealth, then a corrupt and wicked Prince, who ſpreadeth abroad his corruptions ouer all the body, as well by example, as by giuing libertie thereunto: Prou.29.12. From whence alſo came the prouerb, Such a maſter ſuch a man. It is all one then as if the Prophet ſhould haue ſaid, that it was no particular vice that reigned among the common people, but that the Princes and great Lords had let looſe the raines to al wickednes. Alſo there is a cloſe amplificatiõ in the word Princes; becauſe it is a thing much to be lamented, that the euill ſhould come from thence, where remedie ſhould be ſought. He ioynes one particular, which is, that they are companions of theeues: by which words he ſignifies, that they were ſo farre off from endeuoring themſelues to repreſſe theeueries and wrongs, that on the contrarie, they drew gaine and profit from thence: and he calles them theeues iuſtly, who in taking part of the pray, gaue licence to others to ſteale. Neither can it be auoided when a Iudge ſuffereth himſelfe to bee corrupted by bribes, that diſorders ſhould not raigne: for it is all one, as if hee himſelfe ſhould conſent with theeues.

Euery one loueth gifts.] Hee alſo ſhewes the cauſe wherefore the Princes had ſocietie with the theeues, and by a wicked conſpiracie had coupled themſelues with them, to foſter and maintaine all iniuſtice: to wit, couetouſnes. For iuſtice is gone when Iudges are giuen to the loue of monie: for if accepting of perſons be ſuch a corruption in iudgment, that where it reignes, equitie hath no place at all; truely, whoſoeuer he be that is poſſeſſed with couetouſnes, ſuch a one hath more reſpect to the perſon then to the cauſe. And therefore he cannot ſee the right: but will practiſe that which one ſaith, to wit, hee will make lawes, and vnmake them againe.

By this we are aduertiſed, what a vertue it is in a Magiſtrate to know how to contemne gifts: for if he cannot curbe his deſires, his hands and eyes, he will neuer iudge iuſtlie. It is therefore but a tale when ſome ſay, they can keepe a good conſcience, though they receiue rewards, ſeeing that which the Lord ſaith, remaines euer true; namely, that gifts doe blind the eyes of the wiſe, and peruert the words of the iuſt: Deut.16.29. There is no man then ſo perfect, nor ſo wiſe and learned, whoſe eyes & vnderſtanding may not be blinded with gifts. Whence it is that he iuſtly chargeth ỹ Iudges to be cõpanions with theeues, becauſe being carried away with a blind deſire of monie, there was no law neither of God nor of man which they peruerted not, and that there remained amongſt them no reſpect either of ſhame or equitie.

Wee muſt alſo note, that for the conuiction of hypocrites, the Prophet ſets their workes, which were notorious, before them; which were alſo apparent to all the world: becauſe otherwiſe they would neuer bee brought vnder. And yet no doubt but there were many at that time which winced when they were thus tenned by ỹ name of theeues: as alſo at this day, many crie out impudently, and obſtinately that they are not theeues for taking thoſe bribes and giftes which are offered them, and that it will hinder them nothing at all from iudging iuſtly. Now becauſe ſuch anſwers are friuolous, the Prophet hauing diſcouered their wickednes, and contenting himſelfe thus to haue reprooued them, he pleades no more with them. And verily nature it ſelfe teacheth vs, that it is vnpoſſible to giue right iudgemẽt, when Iudges are ſo greedie of recompence and reward: for it cannot bee but that thereby they muſt needes ſet both their faithfulnes and eſtimation to ſale.

They iudge not the fatherleſſe.] Euen as the Lord doth ſpecially recommend vnto vs the cauſes of the widowes and of the fatherleſſe, becauſe they are deſtitute of mens ſuccour and helpe; ſo alſo it is no meruaile if hee be offended when hee ſeeth the Iudges neglect them, in ſtead of being mouth, eyes, eares and hands for them. For when no man puts forth himſelfe to ſuccour ſuch as are deſtiture of counſell, forecaſt, and meanes, they muſt of neceſſitie bee laid open to iniuries, and all manner of violences, without hope of redreſſe. Now when no man takes their cauſe to heart, it is a ſigne that couetouſnes and briberie haue the chiefeſt ſway there, and not equitie.

Verſ.24. Therefore ſaith the Lord the God of hoſts, the mightie one of Iſrael, ah, I will * eaſe me of mine aduerſaries, and auenge me on mine enemies.

* Or, comfort me, &c.

THe word Adon, which is put in the firſt place, ſignifies properly Lord, and is to bee referred to the word that is oppoſite, to wit, Seruant. The name Iehouah, by which the eternall eſſence and Maieſtie of God is expreſſed, is added conſequently. After then that the Prophet Iſaiah had recited ſome particular ſinnes by the which he made it manifeſt to euery one, that all things were corrupted amongſt this people, minding now to vſe ſome threatnings, and to ſet God his iudgement before them; hee not onelie adornes the Lord with the office, and power of a Iudge, but alſo hee admoniſheth them, that the children of Abraham are a peculiar people vnto him; and in this ſenſe, the mightie one of Iſrael, is added: although there may be here a priuie and cloſe kind of deriding, wherewith hee galleth the Iewes; as if hee ſhould ſay, that they did fooliſhly bragge of the name of God, ſeeing they are ſuch wretched and wicked ſeruants: and that they truſt in his ſtrength in vaine: which ſtrength he is forthwith readie to diſplay againſt them. Hauing thus then begun to ſpeake, he addes, Ah, I wil comfort me. By which words he meanes that God will not bee appeaſed till firſt hee hath had his fill in chaſtiſing of them. He takes the word comfort, after the manner of men. For euen as wrath is nothing elſe but a deſire of reuenge: ſo reuenge it ſelfe alſo is a kind of contentment: for when any is reuenged, he is glad, and ſatisfied. Thus the Lord ſaith that hee will ſatisfie himſelfe in chaſtiſing his enemies, as if it were a kind of recompence.

It is true that this place is diuerſly expounded, and I meane not to trouble my ſelfe ſo farre as to examine all interpretations, neither will I ſtand to refute thoſe which ſute not with the text: it ſufficeth for this time, that wee haue the true ſenſe of the Prophet. He ſpeakes not here of the Chaldeans, or Aſſiryans, as many thinke; but of the Iewes; againſt whom he proclaimes open warre in the name of God, whoſe herauld he is: which threatning was very harſh and vnpleaſant vnto their eares, in regard they thought themſelues ſo linked to God, that hee would bee an enemie to their enemies. But God contrariwiſe ſhewes that he is become their enemie, becauſe they haue prouoked him by their naughtines. And after this manner muſt we awaken the hypocrits, who continually fighting againſt God, notwithſtanding bluſh not ſtill to claime his protection for their ſafegard. Therefore let vs not maruaile, if the Prophet doth ſharpely terme them the enemies of God, who hauing broken the couenant, were thus combined togeather to make warre againſt him.

And yet notwithſtanding, to the end hee may ſhew that God is as it were conſtrained and enforced to chaſtiſe his people, he threatens them, as it were, with a kind of inward ſorrowing. For as nothing is more agreeable to his nature, then to doe good: euen ſo as oft as his anger is ſtirred vp againſt vs, and that hee handles vs ſeuerely, it is certaine that our owne frowardnes hath conſtrained him ſo to doe, becauſe we will not ſuffer him to beſtow his benefits vpon vs; but eſpecially he is inclined to deale thus louingly with his owne children: & albeit he ſeeth that his louing kindnes and gentlenes can nothing preuaile with them, yet is it in ſorrow of hart that hee ſtrikes them. But paraduenture ſome had rather expound the particle Hoi, as if God ſhould crie out as one being enflamed with wrath. For mine owne part I take it, that in this place there is a voyce of griefe and ſorrow: becauſe the Lord in thinking often vpon his couenant, would willingly pardon his choſen people, were it not ſ they their owne obſtinacie they did altogether reiect it. In the ſecond member, and auenge me of mine enemies, there is a figure very vſuall with the Hebrewes, who repeate in one and the ſame verſe many times one ſelfeſame thing: whence we alſo gather, that this ſentence hath this drift, namely, that God could not quite himſelfe, vntill he were reuenged vpon this traiterous and diſloyall people.

Note.

Verſ. 25. Then I will turne mine hand vpon thee, and burne out thy droſſe, till it be pure, and take away al thy tinne.

THis is a moderation of the former threatning. For howſoeuer hee purſues that which he hath begun to ſpeake of touching his ſeueritie, notwithſtanding he addes therwithall, that the Church ſhall remaine ſafe ſtill in the midſt of all calamities, wherewith the people ſhould be ſmitten: neuertheleſſe his principall drift is to comfort the faithfull, to the end they ſhould not thinke the Church ſhould be brought to ruine, although God was conſtrained to deale more ſharpelie with it then he hath been wont to doe. For the holy Ghoſt alwaies prouides in the miniſtrie of the Prophets for the vpholding of the faith of Gods children (who continually tremble at his words) that they ſhould not bee diſcouraged, being humbled with feares and threatnings; becauſe ſo much the more as the wicked ouerflow the bankes, and ſcoffe at all threatnings, ſo much the more doe they which are touched with the true feare of God, tremble thereat.

Moreouer, the turning of the hand of God, generally ſignifies the witneſſe of his preſence: as if he ſhould ſay, I will lift vp mine hand: which he is wont to doe after two ſortes, either when he chaſtiſeth the wicked, or when he pulles the faithfull out of their miſeries. Seeing then it eaſily appeares by the circumſtance of the place, that God would aſſwage the ſharpenes of the correction by mingling ſome conſolation; The turning of his hand, ought to be referred here to the reſtauration of the Church. For although he pronounceth in generall that they are all his enemies: yet now he moderates & reſtraines this ſpeech, in calling Ieruſalem or Zion by his own name. 1 2

When he addes, I will burne out thy droſſe; although he notes the fruit of the correction, to the end it ſhould not be grieuous and burthenſome to the faithfull beyond meaſure: notwithſtanding, wee gather from thence that the reſtauration of the Church, is a ſpeciall worke of God. He euermore lifts vp his hands to the end he may puniſh ſinne and bring thoſe that erre into the right way: but yet his roddes ſhould auaile little or nothing, if he himſelfe did not make them profitable, by touching their hearts inwardly. And becauſe hee here makes mention of a ſpeciall fauour which hee communicates to his choſen: from thence it followes that repentance is a true and peculiar worke of the holy Ghoſt: becauſe otherwiſe the ſinner would harden himſelfe more and more vnder the blowes, rather then profit thereby any thing at all. Further we are not to vnderſtand this cleane purging, in ſuch wiſe, ſ there ſhould remaine no droſſe, as if God would wholly purge his Church in this world from all filthines: but this manner of ſpeech is rather to be referred to the common faſhion of of mens actions, as if he ſhould ſay, The eſtate of the Church, ſhall be ſuch, that the beautie thereof ſhall ſhine like ſiluer. The true poſitio then is ſignified by theſe words, becauſe the Iewes had too much pleaſed themſelues in their filthines before. Now this ſimilitude is very fit, for by it the Prophet ſhewes, that although the Church of God was then ſo ſtuffed with multitudes of corruptions: yet notwithſtanding there ſhould remaine a remnant which ſhould recouer their brightnes, after that the droſſe and corruption ſhould be conſumed. And thus he now ioynes both members together, becauſe hauing ſpoken in ver. 22. of their offences, hee ſaid, that their ſiluer was become droſſe.

Verſ. 26. And I will reſtore thy Iudges as at the firſt, and thy Counſellers as at the beginning: afterward thou ſhalt be called a citie of righteouſnes, and a faithfull citie.

NOw he ſpeakes plainely without any figure. And becauſe hee had ſaid that the ſpring and beginning of all euils was in the princes; thus hee teacheth, that their offices and places ſhall be purged by the Lord, when he begins to reſtore the perfect health and welfarre of the Church againe vnto her. And from thence it is alſo that iuſtice in the politicall gouernment comes; to wit, when the gouernors that rule are vertuous, and fearing God: becauſe all things goe to hauock, when thoſe which gouerne, are wicked. It is plaine enough, that by Iudges and Counſellers he meanes all Magiſtrates of what ſort ſoeuer. In that hee promiſeth they ſhall bee ſuch as they were at the beginning, he puts them in mind of the ſingular benefit of God, whereof they had been depriued. God by his direction had exalted the throne of Dauid, and commanded that in this gouernmẽt there ſhould ſhine an Image of his fatherly loue. Now although they had corrupted the ſame by wicked tyrannie; yet notwithſtanding, they ceaſed not to make their bragges of falſe titles: for they boaſted much of the kingdome of Dauid, euen as the Papiſts glorie at this day vnder a falſe pretence of the Church. Therefore the people are iuſtly admoniſhed from what an happie eſtate they were fallen by their owne default, that ſo they ſhould not be diſpleaſed to haue their multitudes of mẽ diminiſhed, but might rather be mooued to recouer againe the good order which God had ordained.

Afterward thou ſhalt be called.] He extends the fruite of this reformation, whereof he hath ſpoken, to the whole bodie. For the Prophet hauing ſaid that Ieruſalem was a faithfull Citie, and full of iudgement before ſhe reuolted from God; now he ſaith, that after ſhe ſhall be chaſtiſed, theſe vertues here ſpoken of ſhall be ſeene to ſhine in her. The ſumme alſo of true repentance is ſet forth in this place: for by Iuſtice, is vnderſtood integritie, wherein euery man obtaines of another that which to him belongeth, and that one man liues with another without oppreſſion. The word faithfull extends it ſelfe further: becauſe we call that a faithfull Citie, not onely where equitie and mutuall Iuſtice ruleth among men, but alſo where God is purely ſerued. And thus vnder this word, the puritie and chaſtitie of the vnderſtanding is comprehended. Yet we muſt note that Iuſtice deſcends from this faithfulnes, becauſe that when we carrie our ſelues vprightly one towards another; there Iuſtice will eaſily beare the ſway. And ſurely by examining the whole a little more narrowly; it ſeemes the Prophet takes not the word fidelitie in ſo ample a ſignification as heretofore. Alſo that hee ſo ioynes theſe two vertues together, as if they tended both to one end: ſo as truth ſhould be the firſt in order as being the cauſe; then that Iuſtice ſhould be the effect of it.

Moreouer Iſaiah not onely promiſeth that ſhe ſhall be iuſt and faithfull, but alſo that by theſe badges and markes ſhe ſhall become excellent and renoumed: thereby further ſignifying, that her righteouſnes ſhal be ſuch that the knowledge and renoune therof ſhall be ſpread abroad euery where. We know alſo that hypocrits obtaine great and honorable titles: but becauſe Iſaiah brings in the Lord ſpeaking, hee holds it as a ſure concluſion that the citie ſhall bee iuſt according as hee hath foretold. In the meane while, as I haue ſaid, he ſets before vs the fruit of a true conuerſion, as if he ſhould ſay; When Ieruſalem ſhall bee once brought to true godlines, then others ſhall ſee the fruites of her renouation alſo.

Verſ. 27. Zion ſhall be redeemed in iudgement, and they that returne in her, in iuſtice.

HE confirmes the ſame doctrine: and becauſe the reſtitution of the Church was a thing hard to bee beleeued, hee ſhewes that it hangs not vpon the will of men, but that it is grounded vpon the Iudgement and Iuſtice of God: as if he ſhould ſay, God will by no means endure that the Church ſhould wholly be deſtroyed, becauſe he is iuſt. The meaning of the Prophet then is, to withdraw the minds of the faithfull, from all earthly cogitations, to the end, that when the hope of the ſaluation of the Church is in queſtion, they ſhould depend vpon God, and not be diſcouraged, although in ſtead of helpe and ſuccour they ſhould ſee lets and hinderances on all ſides. For thoſe that referre theſe words of Iudgement and Iuſtice to men, are deceiued; as if Iſaiah ſhould ſpeake now of the well ordred eſtate of a city: and therefore that ſenſe which I haue giuen is according to the true meaning of the Prophet, to wit, that although no ſuccour appeare vnto them from men, yet that the iuſtice of the Lord notwithſtanding is more then ſufficient to redeeme his Church. And truely whilſt wee looke into our owne ſtrength, what hope of helpe can we conceiue? Nay, how many rockes doe there by and by rather appeare, to daſh our faith all to peeces? It is in God only then that we shal finde a perpetuall firmenes of trust. In the second member, and they that returne, the means of the redemption is expressed, to wit, that those which were banished and scattered farre off, shall be gathered together againe.

Vers. 28. And the destruction of the transgressers, and of the sinners shall bee together, and they that forsake the Lord, shall be consumed.

TO the end hypocrits should not thinke that any fruit of these promises did appertaine vnto them, and lest they should boast in vaine, he threatens that they shall perish, although God redeeme his Church. For hypocrites are alwaies mingled amongst the faithfull: and which more is, they thrust themselues into the chiefest places, valuing the Church according to the outward forme and shew thereof, audaciously drawing whatsoeuer God hath promised, vnto themselues. But the Prophet pluckes this trust (if it may be so called) from them, because it proceedes from nothing else but pride of heart, and a vaine perswasion. Here therefore is diligently to be considered, with what wisedome and discretion the faithfull Teachers haue neede to be endued withall, for the comfort of the good, that they may refresh their minds with some consolation; and preserue them from fainting, and from being discouraged, whilst they terrifie the wicked with the iudgements of God. On the contrarie also the faithfull being stayed by the promise of God, and that the wicked seeke to wrest it to themselues, and lift vp their crests with a vaine confidence, we must then keepe this order and meane, that we giue the wicked no occasion to become proud and insolent: as also that the faithfull be no whit out of heart, nor discouraged: as Isaiah doth here in this place. For hauing spoken of the redemption of the Church, hee threatens the obstinate and wicked, and denounceth their ruin, to the end they might not thinke, these benefits of God did any thing at all belong vnto them. Now although he iudgeth ϒ wicked to perdition, yet by this comparison he amplifies the grace of God towards the faithfull: the which should then be the better perceiued, when God should heale those that were his, whilest the wicked in the meane while should perish, as it is said in the 91. Psalme, vers. 7. Againe, he also moderates the sorrow which might disquiet the hearts of the faithfull, for the wast of the Church; for he admonisheth them that the whole bodie could not otherwise be healed vnlesse the corruption which was in it, were cut off.

* Or, to wit. Vers. 29. * For they shall be confounded for the Oakes which yee haue desired, and yee shall bee ashamed of the gardens that yee haue chosen.

THe particle, Ci, is put in the Hebrew, which shewes the cause: but it is often also vsed for an exposition. Now because the Prophet addes no new matter here, but only manifests vnto them the cause of the ruine, which hung ouer the heads of the wicked, the Hebrew word, which wee haue translated, to wit, hath seemed to agree very well; as if the Prophet should haue said, There was no plague more hurtfull to them then superstition; the idols, saith hee, which you doe so heape together to procure your welfare, shall rather turne to your ruine. Now whereas some haue heretofore translated gods, for the word trees is refuted by the text it selfe: for he by and by makes mention of gardens. Moreouer he reprooues all false, and new found seruices vnder the names of trees and gardens, by a figure called Synecdoche, when a part is taken for the whole. For howsoeuer there were all sorts of Idolatrie among the Iewes, yet this particular kind, namely, to chuse woods and forrests, to offer sacrifices, was specially the most vsuall amongst others. Now be it that one would reade woods or gardens in the second place, yet no doubt, but he meant to point at their Altars, and Chapels, where they performed their diuelliſh worships: and although it was not their meaning, wholly to reuolt from the true God, yet notwithstanding they forged new seruices: and as if one place had been more acceptable to God then another, they consecrated and dedicated them to their deuotions, as wee see it is come to passe in the Papacie. But by and by there followes a change of the person: for to the ende the reproofe might bee the more sharpe, he speakes euen to the wicked themselues, of whom he spake before in the third person.

Afterward by the word, to cover, he taxeth the furious affection wherewith the wicked are set on fire in their superstitions. God requires that the whole heart be dedicated vnto him: but they violently plunged themselues in a blind pursuing of their new deuised seruices, as if they were carried away with a beastly and brutish affection. And to say the trueth, this sicknes is rooted almost in the vnderstandings of all men, that hauing once forsaken the true God, they runne a madding after their Idols. Therefore it is, that the Scripture often compares this fury to ϒ loues of harlots, who not only cast off al reason, but likewise all shame. Although it further appeares by the second member, that hee not onely taxeth their intemperancie, but also their boldnes to violate the seruice of God, when he saith they chose gardens: which word is opposed to that which was commanded in the law. For with what flourishes soeuer the vnbeleeuers seeke to shadow their superstitions withal, yet notwithstanding this sentence remaines sure, that obedience is better then sacrifice, 1. Sam. 15. 22. And therefore S. Paul Col. 2. 23. vnder the word superstition, comprehends all those corrupt worships, which men forge to themselues without the commandement of God. God then complaines, that the Iewes hauing despised his word, pleased themselues in their owne inuentions: as if he should say, It was your duties to haue obeyed me, but you haue liked better to follow your owne fantaſie, or rather a franticke libertie.

And this is ſufficient to condemne all the inuentions of men, to wit, that it is not lawfull in any ſort, to chuſe a way how to ſerue God, becauſe the right of preſcribing that appertaines vnto himſelfe. God had then commanded that no ſacrifices ſhould be offe-
Deut. 12. 13 vnto him but in Ieruſalem; the Iewes thought to pleaſe him in other places: which falſe imagination alſo deceiued the prophane nations. And I would to God that it had onely reſted there; but we ſee how the Papiſts are wrapped euen in the ſame error. Laſtly, experience it ſelfe teacheth, that this diſeaſe is common to euery age.

Obiect. If any obiect that the matter is not ſo great in reſpect of the place, that God ſhould therefore abhorre the ſacrifices which were euery where offered him. Anſ. Firſt we muſt note the cauſe why God as then would haue but one onely altar, namely, to the end it might be a band of holy vnitie to this rude people, and that by this meanes Religion might continue ſound and immutable. Now although that this ſpeciall cauſe ceaſeth, yet muſt we holde this principle, that commaundements were giuen of God, euen touching the leaſt things; to the end the Iewes might inure themſelues the better to obedience. For in regard that ſuperſtition paints her face with the colour of deuotion, it is impoſſible, but men ſhould flatter themſelues in their inuentions. Notwithſtanding ſeeing that obedience is the mother of true religion, it followes thereupon, that the fantaſies of men, on the contrarie, are euen fountaines of ſuperſtition.

Obedience the mother of true religion.

Mens fancies, the fountaines of ſuperſtition.

This alſo muſt be added, that euen as Iſaiah did a little before reproue the wickednes of the people, which raigned amongſt them againſt the breach of the ſecond Table of the law, which is loue; now alſo he makes his complaint, that they haue tranſgreſſed the firſt table. For in as much as all perfection of righteouſnes conſiſts in the obedience of the law, the Prophets when they would reproue the ſinnes of men, one while they ſpeake of the firſt, and then of the ſecond table. We muſt alſo alwaies obſerue this figuratiue manner of ſpeech, when vnder one kind the Prophets do comprehend the whole in generall.

Verſ. 30. For yee ſhall be as an Oke, whoſe leafe fadeth, and as a garden that hath no water.

THe Hebrew particle may bee taken affirmatiuely, as I haue turned it: and it ſeemes that the Prophet alludes to thoſe gardens vnto which they had falſely tied the ſeruice of God; for becauſe he had made mention of theſe gardens, he threatens them with drought, caſting in their teeth the confidence, which they repoſed in them. You pleaſe your ſelues very much, in yoour gardens, and in your trees (ſaith he) but you ſhall be as trees dried, and ſubiect to fall. The Lord then ſcornes the fooliſh bragging of the idolaters who pleaſe themſelues maruelouſlie in their inuentions: and thinke that heauen muſt needs be opened to them, when they are in the midſt of their ceremonies. As at this day when the Papiſts haue lighted vp their lampes, and decked their temples; when they ſhine with gold and pretious ſtones; when they heare the melodie of their Organes, and the ſound of their bels, they thinke themſelues the moſt happie people vnder the ſunne, as if God being infinitelie beholding vnto them, and ſatisfied with ſuch baggage, they were freed from feare of any danger.

Verſ. 31. And the ſtrong ſhall bee as tow, and the maker thereof as a ſparke: and they ſhall burne both together, and none ſhall quench them.

THe Hebrew word Chaſan ſignifies ſtrong; now it is here attributed to God: and yet notwithſtanding it retaines ſtill his ſignification, as if hee ſhould haue ſaid, That god whom you made your ſtrength, ſhal be turned into tow. And the maker thereof: hee meanes the caruer: but becauſe mention is made of the idole, it muſt bee referred to the thing in queſtion. Some thinke that the Prophet doth here note out the repentance of the idolaters, who ſhould acknowledge their follie, and with ſhame ſhould burne their idols: but me thinkes, the Prophets meaning is otherwiſe. For euen as fire is made of drie ſtuffe, as tow and ſuch like: ſo ſaith the Prophet, God ſhall gather you and your idols together vpon an heape (as when one pileth vp a ſtacke of wood) to the end you may bee conſumed together. So as the idols ſhall be as tow, and the men as the fire; to the end the flame may conſume them both together.

And there ſhall be none to quench them.] Wee muſt note that when the Prophets ſpeake of the wrath of God, they repreſent it by externall ſignes, becauſe it cannot be perceiued by our eyes, or other ſenſes. Thus the wrath of the Lord, by which the wicked are deſtroyed, is compared to fire, that conſumes all things. Now it ſufficiently appeares by this, what the Prophet meant to ſay, namely, that al the wicked ſhall periſh, let their confidence be what it will; yea which more is, their ruine ſhall be ſo much the greater, by how much they ſhall haue placed their truſt in falſe and deceitfull things: and that in the place from whence they hoped and looked for ſaluation, euen there ſhall perdition fall vpon them. For the idols and puppets are but matches to kindle the wrath of God withall; and that in ſuch wiſe, as it can neuer be quenched.

THE II. CHAPTER.

Vers. 1. The word that Isaiah the sonne of Amos saw vpon Iudah and Ierusalem.

THis propheſie is a confirmation of the doctrine which we haue had a little before, as touching the reſtauration of the Church. For in as much as it is a very hard matter to expect the ſaluation of the Church in the middeſt of the ruine of it, when as the wrath of God being once kindled doth begin to conſume all things round about; then are the bare and naked promiſes very hardly thought to bee ſufficient for vs to reſt and ſtay our ſelues vpon. For this cauſe the Lord would haue this ſpeciall viſion conioyned in ſtead of a confirmation with the conſolation, which was propoſed heretofore; the more aſſuredly to confirme our faith, that the Church ſhould not periſh, no not in all the calamities that could poſſiblie befall it. Thus I doubt not but this viſion hath affinitie with that which we haue ſeene in the 26. and 27. verſes of the former chapter. And by this we may know what was the vſe and end of viſions. For in as much as the bare doctrine is of no ſufficient authority at all with vs; therefore the Lord addeth viſions, by which he ſeales vp in vs the trueth of his word. Seeing then that this viſion is ioyned with the former promiſe, from thence we gather a very profitable doctrine: to wit, that all the viſions which the Lord reuealed to his Prophets in times paſt, ought to be ioyned with the promiſes, and to be as ſeales annexed vnto them. Herein alſo we haue greatly to magnifie, and extoll from time to time the wonderfull goodnes of God, who is not contented to giue vs his word alone, but doth alſo vouchſafe to ſet the view of the things promiſed euen as it were before our eyes.

Now he addes a confirmation, becauſe the reſtauration of the Church is a thing of wonderfull importance: which alſo ought neceſſarily to be knowne. For what ſhall become of the trueth of God; what ſhall become of faith, if there be no Church? And if there be no Church, it would follow, that God were a lier, and that all which his word containes, were falſe. But euen as he ſhewes by memorable ſignes, that it is he alone, who without the aide of men, and by meanes vnknowne, conſerues his Church: ſo here now by an excellent propheſie, he promiſeth to doe the like.

The vſe of this propheſie then is double: for in as much as Iſaiah and others after him were without ceaſing to terrifie and feare this people (ſo full of obſtinate malice) til ſuch time as they ſhould be carried away captiues; the Temple burnt, and the citie deſtroyed: it was very needfull in regard of the faithfull, that ſuch rigour ſhould be aſſwaged by ſome conſolation of hope. Moreouer, in regard that they ſhould languiſh long in captiuitie, and that after their returne many calamities would breake in vpon them to ſhake their minds; and in the end ſhould bee wrapped, and as it were ouerwhelmed with a ſea of an horrible ruine, and almoſt a deſperate confuſion: if they had not bin comforted againſt ſo many terrors, they would haue periſhed an hundred times. But the promiſe of the reſtauration of the Church did comfort and ſtrengthen thoſe who were alreadie fallen, to the end that at the leaſt the calling vpon the name of God (which againſt al dangers is the onely and chiefe remedie) might haue it force amongſt them. The word, ſome tranſlate, The thing; becauſe the ſignification of this word is generall: but it is rather to be taken for decree, or ordinance. Iſaiah ſaith then, that this was reuealed to him by a ſpeciall viſion.

Vers. 2. It ſhall bee in the laſt daies that the mountaine of the houſe of the Lord ſhall be prepared in the toppe of the mountaines, and ſhall be exalted aboue the hilles, and all nations ſhall flow vnto it.

WHen he makes mention of the terme or full end of daies, let vs remember that he ſpeaks of the kingdome of Chriſt. We muſt alſo vnderſtand the reaſon why he calles this kingdome ſo. Vntill this time all things did hang in ſuſpence, to the end the people ſhould not reſt in the eſtate of that time, which was but a ſhadow; but in the Redeemer, who was to declare vnto them the ſubſtance. After Chriſt came then, if wee will compare that time with ours, we are indeede come to the verie terme of thoſe daies. But it was needfull that the fathers which liued then, ſhould with armes ſtretched forth endeuour to come vnto Chriſt. And becauſe the reſtauration of all things depended vpon his comming, it was for good cauſe that they are commanded to enlarge their hope euen vnto that day. For it was alwaies profitable vnto them, to know that the eſtate of the Church ſhould bee more perfect vnder our Lord Ieſus Chriſt: eſpecially ſeeing they were held vnder ſhadowes and figures; and yet in the meane while were ſubiect to diuers changes. Alſo the Lord did terrifie them many waies of ſet purpoſe, that hee might hold them in ſuſpence. But the circumſtance of this propheſie had 4 particular reſpect: for they might haue very well haue fainted in the ſpace of foure hundred yeers, or thereabouts, if this fulnes of time ſhould not haue come in in their minds, wherein the Church should be restored to her perfection. Therefore as the Church was euer and anon almost ouerwhelmed with diuers tempests, so euery one of the faithfull laid fast hold in these dangers vpon this sentence as vpon a board or planck to bring them safe to the hauen. In the meane while we must note, that the perfection of daies, did so begin at the first comming of Christ, that it runnes on still with a continuall course, vntill hee appeares the second time againe for our saluation.

Shall be prepared.] This vision in appearance might almost haue seemed rediculous: not only because Zion was a little hill of no great height: (as if comparison had bin made of a heape of dust, with great mountaines) but also in regard that a little before he had foretold her ruine. How could one haue then beleeued, that Zion which had lost all her dignitie, should againe bee thus honoured with so great an excellencie, that she should turne the eies of all the Gentiles to the beholding of her beautie? yet is shee so aduanced notwithstanding, as if shee should bee mounted higher then the Mount Olympus. Let the Gentiles bragge of their mountaines, as long as they will; yet shall they be nothing in comparison of this little hill (saith the Prophet) although it be low and small in appearance. To naturall reason indeede this is verie vnlike. What? shall Zion hang in the cloudes? And therefore no question but the wicked scorned this promise. Wee know well enough that impietie hath alwaies ouerflowed her bankes against God. Yea, the circumstance which I haue touched alreadie, was enough at the first push to haue ouerthrowne this prophesie. How is it then that this little hil could be so soone exalted, being fallen after the destruction of the Temple into vtter dishonour? But doubtlesse Isaiah foretold not these things in vaine. For in the end, this little hill was truely exalted aboue the mountaines: because that from thence the voyce of the Lord was heard; which sounded forth thorowout all the world euen to lift vs vp into the heauens; from thence the Maiestie of God shined. Lastly, because it was the sanctuarie of God, it surmounted aboue all the world in height of excellencie.

Now we must note the vse of this prophesie, namely, that Isaiah meant to set before them a consolation, whereupon they were to stay themselues in their captiuitie: that howsoeuer the Temple should be destroyed, and that the sacrifices should cease, yea and all things should fall to the ground: yet notwithstanding this hope should encourage the faithfull; and that in this horrible confusion they should thus thinke: True it is that the mountaine of the Lord is now desolate; but yet shall shee haue her seate there againe, so as the glorie of this mountaine shall surpasse the glorie of all others. To the end then that they should not doubt of the euent hereof, the Prophet hath pictured it forth here as in a tablet, wherein they might behold the glorie of God. For although the mountaine continued then safe, yet was it in a manner detestable, because it was brought to a miserable desolation, hauing lost all her glorie, in regard that God himselfe had forsaken it. But the faithfull were to behold, not these ruines, but this vision. It also sufficiently appeares by that which followes, why hee speakes so highly of the exaltation of this mountaine of Zion, because from thence came forth the Gospell, wherein the Image of God shined. Other mountaines might surmount it in height: but because the glorie of God did appeare vpon it in an higher degree, therfore it was also necessarie that the mountaine in which he manifesteth himselfe, should bee exalted aboue others. He doth not praise the mountaine of Zion then in regard of it selfe, but in respect of her ornament or glorie, wherewith also all the world was to be beautified.

Vers. 3. And many people shall go and say, Come, and let vs goe vp to the mountaine of the Lord, and to the house of the God of Iacob, and hee will teach vs his waies, and we will walke in his paths: for the law shall goe forth of Zion, and the word of the Lord from Ierusalem.

IN the former verse he had briefly touched the cause from whence such an excellencie should come vnto the mountaine of Zion, to wit, because all nations should flow vnto it, as if the riuers should ouerflow with ouermuch abundance of waters: now he declares the same thing, adding also the reason of it. For one might demand vpon what occasion so many sorts of people should flow thither by bands from countries so farre off. He saith then that they shall come thither for no other end but to serue God. But in the word Many, there is an antithesis, for he signifies that there should not be one nation onely, as before; which should yeeld obedience vnto the true worship of God: but that those which were altogether strangers, should come to consent with like agreement in religion with them: as if he should say, The Church which before was shut vp as in a corner, shall now be gathered out of all parts. Hee hath put many then, for diuers. For it is certaine that he meant not to lessen [illegible] which he had said ere while of all nations. Further, although this was neuer fulfilled, to wit, that all the people of the whole world hauing left their countrie should assemble to Ierusalem; notwithstanding because the doctrine of the Gospell (by which God did there gather to himselfe a Church indifferently from out of al the world) came forth of this mountaine of Zion; hee well affirmes that those who embraced the couenant of saluation, with one consent of faith, and ioyned themselues to one only Church, should come thither. The agreement also which is betweene the figures of the law, and the spirituall worship, is to be noted; such as it began to be after the comming of Christ.

theſe words that the faithfull ſhall bee filled with ſuch affection, and zeale to enlarge and ſpread abroad the doctrine of ſaluation, that none of them ſhall content himſelfe with his particular knowledge, and vocation, but ſhall deſire to draw on others with them. And queſtionleſſe there is nothing more remote from the true nature of faith, then that deadnes of heart, by which men caſting aſide all care of their brethrens good, doe ſhut vp in themſelues, all the light of knowledge they haue receiued: ſo as it comes to bee ſmothered and choked within them. Therefore by how much the more any hath receiued abundance of grace from God, by ſo much the more ought he diligently endeuor to lighten others by his light. Behold here then the true means how to gather a Church together; to wit, by the externall voyce of men. For although the Lord might draw euery man to his knowledge by his ſecret inſpiration: yet notwithſtanding he will bee ſerued by the miniſtrie and labour of men, to the end hee may exerciſe them in a mutuall care about the ſaluation of one another. And by this meanes alſo he knits them the better together, and takes triall of their teachablenes, to wit, when one of them will ſuffer himſelfe to be taught by another.

Moreouer, Iſaiah ſhewes that all thoſe which haue charge to teach and exhort, ſhould not reſt themſelues, onely in commanding of others: but rather to ioyne themſelues vnto them, and to walke together as companions with them. For wee ſee ſome that will command with authoritie, and prick men ſtoutly forward with exceeding great ſeuerity, when as they themſelues in the meane while will not mooue a foote. But the faithful here content not themſelues, in commanding their brethren ſaying, goe vp; but rather leading them the way in going firſt, they ſet their owne example before them. This therfore is the right manner of teaching, when by putting that in execution our ſelues firſt, which wee require of others, wee make it knowne before all men that we ſpeake truely, and in good earneſt.

1 And he will teach vs his waies.] In the firſt place he ſhewes, that wee cannot ſerue God rightly and as we ought, vnleſſe the light of
2 the holy doctrine goe before. Secondly, that God is the onely teacher of his Church; vpon whoſe mouth we ought to hang: whence
3 alſo it follows, that he takes no delight in the fooliſh, and vnſtable deuotion of mens inuentions. And laſtly, that howſoeuer he vſeth
4 the miniſtrie of men to teach vs by, yet that he reſerues this notwithſtanding as proper to himſelfe, to wit, that they preach nothing but his pure word. And if all thoſe which call themſelues doctors of the Church had followed this rule, religion had not been ſo fouly corrupted, with an endles, and confuſed diuerſitie of ſuperſtitions. Neither can it be auoided that we ſhould not fal by heaps into multitudes of errors, when men turne and wind vs thus after their owne fantaſies. Iſaias then in attributing the authoritie and office of teaching the Church to God onely, by good right he ſtoppes al the mouthes of mortall men: ſo as the very office of teaching is not committed to the Paſtors of the Church, but vpon this condition, that Gods voyce be onely heard there. Let ſuch then as would be eſteemed his ſeruants, ſuffer themſelues to be ruled in their duties by this ſentence, to the end they may in no ſort diminiſh the leaſt iot of his authoritie.

There is in the member following, word for word, He will teach vs his waies: which is thus much in effect, That hee will teach vs what his waies are; or hee will ſet his waies before vs for a perfect inſtruction. Then he ads vnto it obedience, And we will walke in his paths. Wherein he ſhewes both the fruit & the end: for the doctrine which is giuen vs by the mouth of God conſiſts not in idle ſpeculations, but directs the whole courſe of our liues, and frames vs to his obedience. But we muſt note againe, that the waies and paths of God are called his commandements, to the end we ſhould know that they erre miſerablie which turne aſide from them, bee it neuer ſo little. And thus all licentious libertie is here reſtrained, and the rule of inſtruction is in this place giuen vnto all, euen from the greateſt to the leaſt, namely, that they containe themſelues within the compaſſe of Gods word.

For the law ſhall goe out of Zion] This is an expoſition of the verſe going before, in which he ſaid that the mountaine of Zion ſhould be exalted aboue all other mountaines, to wit, that it ſhould be exalted into an high degree of honour, when it ſhould bee the fountaine of the doctrine of ſaluation, which ſhould ſpread thorowout the whole world. Hee cales it the law. But wee haue elſewhere Chap.1.10. ſpoken of the originall and proper ſignification of this word. The word Torah, which is here interpreted law, ſignifies doctrine, becauſe the law containes ſo perfect a doctrine in it, that nothing is to bee added or taken away. And ſo he ſpeakes after the manner of the Prophets. For in as much as the rule of all pietie is comprehended in the law, they are wont vnder this word to comprehend the whole word of God: as alſo vnder this word Altar, they comprehend the ſeruice of the Lord. Moreouer, ſeeing wee know that this propheſie was fulfilled, when the preaching of the Goſpell began in this verie place (for Chriſt firſt taught in Ieruſalem; and afterward frō thence the doctrine ſpread thorowout the world) this word law, is not to be taken ſtrictly, which then was rather aboliſhed, as touching the yoke and bondage of it. Whence we gather, that this word without reſtraint, is to bee taken generally for the word of God. And whereas the Prophets ſay that the waters ſhal flow frō out of the Temple, which ſhal water the whole world; by a ſi- Ezek.47.1. militude they ſhew thoſe things which Iſaiah in plaine words here teacheth; to wit, that the beginning and welſpring of the doctrine of ſaluation ſhould come from this place. For from thence the Apoſtles, and other Teachers did ſpread the glad tidings of ſaluation thorowout the whole world.

But

But the reaſon why the Prophet thus ſpeakes, is to be noted: namely, to confirme the faithfull againſt all the changes, which otherwiſe vpon euery occaſion might haue quailed their courage. And therefore it was needefull to preuent offences, and to furniſh the conſciences of the faithfull with comforts againſt all ſtormes, in what condition ſoeuer they ſhould be; as if he ſhould haue ſaid, Let your affaires proſper how they will, yet in the midſt of the calamities and afflictions which oppreſſe you, wait notwithſtanding; and be you certainely perſwaded, that the Law ſhall come forth of Zion, and the word of God from Ieruſalem. For it is a decree of God, which cannot be falſified nor ouerthrowne by any chance or change of time.

We may gather by the courſe of the times which followed, how needfull this conſolation was for the faithfull. For when Iuda was forſaken and deſolate, the temple deſtroyed, and the gouernement of the Church wholly defaced, and that tyrannie increaſed more and more; it was an eaſie matter to quench all hope, and to haue become deſperate altogether. On the other ſide, when the Iewes were come home out of captiuitie from Babylon, when horrible ſuperſtitions by little and little increaſed, and that the Prieſts had vſurped a wicked tyrannie, in ſtead of excercising their office as became them; if this promiſe had not comforted the faithfull, what might they haue elſe imagined, but that Religion was aboliſhed, and that the ſeruice of God was quite and cleane extinct? And no doubt but this temptation, which happened by meanes of the vices which were in the middeſt of them, was more troubleſome for them to beare than their exile in Babylon. In their baniſhment they had Prophets, by whoſe doctrine they were put in hope; but in this corrupted eſtate all fruit of doctrine was taken from them, Religion and godlines was deſpiſed: but the Lord ſuſtained them at a pinch by the onely ſtay of this propheſie. For whenas the law was ſo vilely prophaned and contemned, and as it ſeemed caſt downe from his proper ſeate, which the Lord had conſecrated and appointed for it; would any man haue thought, that not onely it ſhould haue had his place there, but that it ſhould alſo raigne ouer all ſtrange countries that were farre off? Contrariwiſe, the Propher not onely ſaith that the Law ſhall be eſtabliſhed in his throne, but alſo that it ſhall goe a great deale further off: whereby hee ſignifies, that it ſhall bee no longer ſhut vp within his firſt bounds, becauſe it ſhould be indifferently publiſhed among the Gentiles.

And queſtionles this carried great waight and authoritie with the Apoſtles, when they vnderſtoode that they were ordained to doe
1 thoſe things which are here promiſed. Otherwiſe they neuer durſt to haue aduentured
2 the taking of that charge vpon them, they
3 would neuer haue had courage enough to
4 haue finiſhed it. Laſtly, they could neuer haue borne ſo weightie a burthen: eſpecially if you adde, that they had the rage of the whole world inflamed againſt them. But they were ſurely perſwaded that hee which had made this promiſe, and giuen them in charge to beare his meſſage, would eaſilie ouercome all theſe difficulties. We muſt alſo note, that from hence we may gather a great confirmation of our faith, by conſidering that the doctrine of the Goſpell came forth of Zion: for from thence we conclude, that it is
1 not new, nor lately ſprung vp; but that it is the eternall trueth of God, the teſtimonie whereof appeared a long time before it came to light. We alſo gather it was neceſſarie
2 that all the ancient ceremonies ſhould bee aboliſhed, and that a new manner of teaching ſhould be brought in; although the very ſame doctrine in ſubſtance ſhould ſtill remaine. For at the firſt the law came out of mount Sinai: but now it came out of mount Zion, and therefore it tooke a new forme. Exod.19.20
Two things then are to be noted: Firſt, that
1 the word of God is alwaies one, and like vnto it ſelfe: that no man ſhould reproue God of changeablenes, as if he were variable. Alſo, that howſoeuer at this preſent, the law of the Lord, is the ſame which it was; yet notwithſtanding that it came out of Zion, as it were with a new garment put vpon it. Secondly, that the ceremonies and ſhadowes
2 are aboliſhed, becauſe Chriſt is made manifeſt, in whom we finde the trueth and ſubſtance of them.

Verſ. 4. And he ſhall iudge among the nations, and rebuke many people: they ſhall breake their ſwords alſo into mattocks, and their ſpeares into ſithes: nation ſhall not lift vp a ſworde againſt nation, neither ſhall they learne to fight any more.

HIs meaning is, that the doctrine ſhall be as a Royall ſceepter, to the end God may rule and gouerne among all nations. For the word, to iudge, among the Hebrewes, ſignifies to rule, or gouerne by a figure called Synecdoche. Becauſe then, that God had held one people onely vnder his gouernement, the Prophet here teacheth, that the bounds of this kingdome ſhall be enlarged, becauſe it ſhall haue dominion ouer diuers nations. He alſo cloſely notes the difference betweene the kingdome of Dauid, and this other which ſhall become much more excellent: that of Dauid being but a figure of it. For from that time God gouerned his choſen people by the hand of Dauid; but at the comming of Ieſus Chriſt, he began to raigne by himſelfe, to wit, in the perſon of his onely Sonne; who is very God manifeſted in the fleſh. The Pro- 1.Tim.3.16.

the kingdome of Chriſt; and that very fitlie: 23.& 37.
for it is in regard of the humane nature, be- 24.
cauſe the promiſed Redeemer ſhould come out of that familie: but in this place hee exalts the Maieſty of his diuine nature: whereby it appeares how much more excellent the condition of the new Church is aboue the old: becauſe in it God appeares to be King in the perſon of his Sonne. Againe, hee alſo confirmes the vocation of the Gentiles: for Chriſt was not ſent to the Iewes onely to raigne amongſt them, but alſo to haue iuriſdiction ouer the whole world.

Rebuke the people.] The word Iacach doth ſometimes ſignifie to expoſtulate, ſometimes to correct, alſo to prepare, or make readie. But in this place the receiued interpretation doth very well agree, whereas the Prophet doth ſpeake concerning the reformation of the Church. For there is neede of correction, that we may learne to ſubmit our ſelues vnto God. For by reaſon of that rebellious nature which is inbred in vs, wee ſhall neuer profit in the word of God, vnleſſe we be brought vnder by violence. Therefore Chriſt alſo, Ioh. 16.8. from hence takes the beginning of the Goſpell: namely, that the world might be reproued of ſin. Now that the doctrine might not want increaſe, Iſaiah ſhews, that ỹ ſtubburnnes of our fleſh muſt be broken: and therefore hee aſſignes vnto God, the part of a Iudge rebuking, that hee might examine our life; and by condemning our vices, might reforme our manners for the better. And truely we ſee that the Goſpell is of ſmall force, but where the iuriſdiction of the holy Spirit beares rule; which doth bring men vnto repentance.

They ſhall breake their ſwords.] Now hee addes the fruit which ſhould come from thence, when Chriſt ſhall gather the people and nations together vnder his gouernment. There is nothing more deſireable, then peace: but although all ſeeme to deſire it, yet euery one troubleth it by his fooliſh luſt; pride, couetouſnes, and ambition is the cauſe that ſome do cruelly riſe vp againſt others. Becauſe then that men are naturally carried away by their euill affections, to trouble and ouerthrow all things, the Prophet promiſeth here that ſuch a miſchiefe ſhould bee redreſſed. For as the Goſpell is the doctrine of reconciliation, which takes away the diſcord betweene God and man, ſo alſo it pacifies, and brings men to vnitie one with another. The ſumme is, that Chriſt his people ſhall be meeke, and hauing trodden crueltie vnder their feete, ſhall ſtudie to liue peaceablie.

The Goſpell not only ſets God and man at peace together, but man with man alſo.

But they haue done vnfitly, which would reſtraine this to the time wherein Chriſt was borne, becauſe that after the battaile Actiaque, the Temple of Ianus was ſhut vp: as it appeares by the hiſtories. I confeſſe indeed that this peace which was vniuerſall in the Romane Empire, was, as it were, a ſigne of that eternal peace which we enioy in Chriſt. But the Prophet meant to ſay more: to wit, that Chriſt ſo reconcileth men to God, that all deadly warres being thereby appeaſed, there ſhould thereupon follow a healthfull peace among them. For if Ieſus Chriſt bee taken away, we are not onely eſtranged from God, but wee haue open warre continually with him, which will iuſtly returne vpon our owne heads: from whence it is, that all things are out of courſe in the world.

Furthermore, Iſaiah promiſeth, that when the Goſpell ſhall be publiſhed, there ſhall be an excellent remedie in the world to appeaſe all diſſenſions: and not onely that, but all hatreds being aboliſhed, men ſhall be inclined to helpe one another. For he ſaith not ſimplie that the ſwords ſhall be broken; but that they ſhall bee conuerted into mattocks. In which hee ſhewes there ſhall bee ſuch a change, that whereas they were wont before to vexe one another, and did commit manie iniuries to the hurt of their neighbours; afterwards they ſhould entertaine peace and loue amongſt themſelues, and ſhould lend one another the hand, for the common profit of all: for mattocks and ſithes, are inſtruments fit for labour, and are neceſſarie and profitable for the life of man. He ſhews then, that when Ieſus Chriſt ſhal reigne, thoſe who in former time were carried away with a deſire of doing hurt by all meanes whatſoeuer, ſhould now be helpful to others by al meanes poſſible.

Neither ſhal they learne to fight any more.] The word which the Prophet vſeth, ſignifies eyther to accuſtome, or to learne: but the ſenſe is cleare; namely, that they ſhould not exerciſe themſelues any more in thoſe Arts that ſhould doe hurt, neither ſhould they giue themſelues, to the doing of wrongs nor of wicked practiſes, as they had been wont to doe. From hence we gather, that they haue profited very little in the Goſpel, whoſe harts are not brought to meeknes: amongſt whom charitie hath taken ſo little place that they take no delight in ſhewing kindnes one towards another. But this can neuer bee brought about vnleſſe the conſciences of men be firſt appeaſed by God; for there we muſt begin, to the end wee may alſo haue peace with men.

There are ſome brainſicke bedlems which turne this place to the maintaining of a carnall libertie, thereby to take away whollie from the Church the vſe of the ſword: and from this place doe exceedingly condemne all manner of warre. For example, If a prince defend the people committed to him, and ſee that none offer them wrong; it is not lawfull, ſay they, for Chriſtians to vſe the ſword. But the anſwere is eaſie. For the Prophet vnder a ſimilitude ſpeaks of the kingdome of Chriſt, ſhewing that it is a kingdome of peace to reconcile men one with another through a mutuall good will. And it is a ſimilitude much vſed in the Scripture, where the thing ſignified is ſhewed by the ſigne: as in Luk. 22.36. it is ſaid, Let him that hath no ſword buy one. It was not the purpoſe of Ieſus Chriſt to prouoke his ſeruants to fighting: but he ſignified thereby, that the time of war drew neere. So on the other ſide it is ſaid that ſwords ſhall ceaſe, or ſhall be applied to diuers ends, when hatreds and debates ſhall ceaſe: and that thoſe who were enemies before, ſhould be reconciled. But ſome may replie, that in the time of peace and tranquillitie there is no vſe of the ſword. I anſwere, that peace hath ſo much ſtrength amongſt vs; vs; as the kingdome of Chriſt beares ſway and doth flouriſh: and that in theſe two things, there is a mutuall proportion. And would to God that Chriſt might raigne wholly amonſt vs; for then peace alſo ſhould bee in his full ſtrength. But in regard that wee are yet farre off from the perfection of this peaceable kingdome, wee muſt alwaies thinke of the goings forward of it. They are therefore too fond, which conſider not that the kingdome of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt hath but his beginning here. Moreouer, God gathers not his Church together, that is to ſay, a companie of the faithfull, to the end they ſhould bee ſeparated from others, but the good are alwaies mingled with the bad, and which more is; the good are not yet come to the marke, and are farre off from the perfection which is required of them. Wee muſt not ſeeke then the full accompliſhment of this propheſie here on earth: it is enough if we taſt the beginnings of it, and that being reconciled to God in Ieſus Chriſt, we keepe amitie together, and abſtaine from all doing of wrong.

Obiect.

Anſ.

Verſ. 5. O houſe of Iacob, come yee,
* Or, we wil. and * let vs walke in the light of the Lord.

HE ſharpely prickes forward the Iewes by ſetting before them the example of the Gentiles. For ſeeing that in publiſhing the Goſpell God meant to iudge all nations from the mountaine of Zion, that he might ingraft them into the bodie of his choſen people, it was a very ſtrange thing, that the houſe of Iacob ſhould reuolt from him: and that whileſt ſtrangers ſhould draw neere, the houſehold ſeruants ſhould withdraw themſelues, who of right ought to haue held the firſt place, and ſhould haue led others by their example. This exhortation therefore is not onely full of vehemencie, but it is both a graue, and a biting complaint. And therefore he calles them by an honourable name; O ye houſe of Iacob, ſaith he, come: which is the more to amplifie their ingratitude, that being the firſt borne in the Church of God, they ſhould yet notwithſtanding, renounce the right of the heritage which was common to them.

Here is a cloſe compariſon then, as if hee ſhould haue ſaid, Behold the nations which runne to the mountaine of Zion, euery one exhorting, and pricking forward his neighbour; and they ſubiect themſelues to the word of God, and ſuffer it to iudge them: and the whileſt you Iſraelites that are the heritage of God, what meane you to draw backe? Shall the nations ſubmit themſelues vnto God, and doe you refuſe to haue him reigne ouer you? Yea is there ſo great a light ſprung vp thorowout all the parts of the world, and will not you in the meane while bee enlightened? Are there ſo many ſweete waters running forth; and will not you drinke? what a madnes is this? doe the Gentiles runne to them with ſuch haſte, and doe you ſit ſtill? When he addes, and we will walke; hee ſignifies that the light is put before their feete, which with cloſed eyes they reiect; yea they quench it as much in them is: and yet the brightnes thereof notwithſtanding ſhould bee ſuch, as it ſhould draw all nations vnto it.

Verſ. 6. Surely thou haſt forſaken thy people, the houſe of Iacob, becauſe they
* Or, anticquitie. are full of the * Eaſt-manners, and are ſorcerers as the Philiſtines, and * abound
* Or, tooke their delight in. with ſtrange children.

HE openly accuſeth this people of the peruerſitie of their nature; and not only in plaine termes, but as one carried away in an admiratiõ, he ſuddenly breaks off his ſpeech, and turning himſelfe to God hee cries out; Wherfore then ſhould I ſpeake to this ſo deſperate a people, whom thou haſt iuſtly forſaken? For in giuing themſelues to idolatries, they haue moſt diſloyally turned away from thy word. It may be alſo a propheſie of ỹ calamitie which ſhould come vpon them, which the Prophet foreſaw by the Spirit: as if hee ſhould ſay, Wonder not to ſee the mount of Zion laid waſt and ſpoiled for ſo many ſins of the people. Yet is it not made ſuch a lamentable ſpectacle that any ſhould bee brought to deſpaire, but that all thoſe in whom there is any hope of health, being touched with true repentance might conuert vnto God before ſuch a thunderclap come vpon them.

For the Prophets were as Herauldes to publiſh the iudgement and vengeance of God to the wicked, that ſo by all meanes they might endeuour, to bring all that they poſſiblie could to repentance. And the ſeruants of God muſt neuer put off this affection, namely, euen to ſtudy how they may profit the verie reprobate; if by any meanes it could bee brought to paſſe. This place therefore may bring a merueilous conſolation to all faithfull Paſtors: for when it ſeemes to vs that we ſpeake to deafe eares, we ſtagger and begin to forſake all; What ſhall I doe? I doe nothing but beate the aire. And yet notwithſtanding, the Prophet ceaſeth not, to exhort thoſe in whom hee ſaw no hope of amendment. An howſoeuer he be as a man aſtoniſhed at their ruine, yet doth hee not ceaſe for all that to admoniſh them ſtil. Let vs note alſo, that alchough the wicked bee obſtinate, yet the iudgements of God muſt be denounced againſt them; let them recoyle, and gnaw the bit as much as they will, yet muſt they ſtil be ſummoned before the iudgement ſeate of God, to the end they may be left without excuſe.

I take the Hebrew word כי, for ſurely: for this ſignification agrees beſt, becauſe it breakes off the exhortation which he had begun; and now ſpeakes to God. Alſo when he againe calles them the houſe of Iacob, it is added for the greater vehemencie of ſpeech, which men in a matter of great importance are wont to doe: as if he ſhould ſay, This holie nation which God hath choſen, is now left and forſaken.

For they are filled.] Because the word Kedem signifies sometime the East, and sometime antiquitie, we may interpret it, that they were filled with the manners of the ancient, because they had brought the superstitions in vse wherewithall the land of Canaan was in times past infected. For wee know that the Prophets did often reproch the children of Israel, that they were liker to the Cananites, then to Abraham, and the other holy Patriarkes. And questionlesse it was a double vnthankfulnes not to change their peruerse manners, seeing the old inhabitants being driuen out, they were brought in to possesse this land, to the end it being purged from all their filthines, it might afterwards be dedicated to holines. Yet because the other sense is more receiued, I had rather hold that; although the expositors themselues doe not here agree: For some take the letter Mem comparatiuely; as if the Prophet should say, Before, or, Rather then them of the East: others take it more simple, and better also in mine opinion; in saying, that they were full of the East: that is to say, of the vices which they had drawne from thence; imitation being a merueilous contagion: so as nothing is more vsual then to see corruptions glide from one land to another a farre off.

That which by and by followeth opens it yet more cleerely, when he saith, of the forceries of the Philistins. For vnder diuinations by a figure which they call Seneedoche, hee comprehends the deceits of Satan: to which the prophane nations were giuen. The Prophet then meanes that they differ in nothing from the Philistins; from whom God notwithstanding had separated them by the priueledge of his adoption. And this was sufficient to condemne them vtterly, in that hauing forgotten their vocation, they defiled themselues in the corrupt and wicked waies of the Gentiles. Whence it appeares that to sinne by the example of another, doth serue nothing at all to make the fault the lesse.

The latter part of the verse is diuersly expounded: for some draw strange children, by a similitude, to the lawes and customes: others referre it to mariages. Because that in taking of strange wiues without discretion, they had so mingled their seede that there were manie children bastards. The exposition of S. Ierome is more grosse, who thinks that they defiled themselues in wicked lusts contrarie to nature. For mine owne part, I doubt not, but by strange children he meanes strange nations; and not by a figure, the lawes. The Prophet then accuseth them, that in desiring to please the Gentiles, they wrapped themselues together with them in their wickednesses: and thus had not only mortall men but wicked men also in greater account, then God himselfe. Now he saith, that they tooke their delights: because the affection and delectation of a wicked imitation, had raced the true loue of God, and of his holesome doctrine out of their hearts.

Vers. 7. Their land also was ful of siluer and gold, and there was none end of their treasure: and their land was full of horses, and their chariots were infinite.

WE must take good heede to the order which the Prophet keepes here. For he now shewes the causes wherfore the Lord reiected his people. In the former verse hee began with diuinations, and strange manners; now hee descends to the gold and siluer; and afterward he will speake of their horses and chariots. No doubt then but hauing first of all condemned their idolatrie, he here in the second place, reprooues their auarice; and in the third, that wicked confidence which men haue, when by forging vaine succours vnto themselues, they depart farre off from God. It is not a thing to bee condemned as vnlawfull in it selfe to haue abundance of gold and siluer; but because this people burned with an insatiable couetousnes, and trusted in horses, and in Chariots, therefore they are iustly reprooued. 1 2 3

Some take the Hebrew particle by way of opposition, as if the sense were thus; And yet they abounded in siluer: thereby to make the ingratitude of this people the greater; because hauing abundance of all things, yet they ran after their idols and enchantments, as if al things had been in a desperate estate. Which is much lesse excusable then if they had gone after them in aduersitie: whereas they shooke off the yoke of God from their necks, being fed with good things in all abundance. Thus by this sense then he should amplifie the wickednes of this people running voluntarily and for no cause to idols, whilest they ouerflowed in their delights: but yet I receiue not this interpretation, because I thinke it too much constrained. For hee rather reckons vp with one breath, as it were, the vices, wherewith the people had spotted themselues: that is to say, couetousnesse, false confidence, and idolatrie. And howsoeuer their opinion be true which expound it by way of opposition, yet notwithstanding it agrees not with the sense of this place.

A little after Isaiah confirmes the same also more clearely. For howsoeuer it bee not wicked, nor a thing to bee condemned in it selfe (as I said before) for a man to haue gold or siluer, if so be hee vse it as he ought: yet the Prophet iustly sets himselfe against that wicked desire and insatiable greedines in heaping vp siluer; which indeede is a detestable vice. Hee saith, there was no end, because their lust was insatiable and without measure. As much is to be said of horses, and chariots: for in this place he condemnes their peruerse confidence. Now for to preuent this mischiefe, the Lord had forbidden their Kings to gather great multitudes of chariots and horses together, lest by resting vpon such things, they might bring the people backe againe into Egypt. Because then that it is hard for men who haue meanes at command, not to be puffed vp with pride; the Lord would that his people should bee destitute of them, or at least should content themselues with a mediocritie. Deut. 17. 16.

Verſ. 8. Their land alſo was full of idols: * they worſhipped the workes of their owne hands, before that which their owne fingers had made.

* Or, bowed before.

HE repeates y which he earewhile touched concerning idolatrie; but more clearely. And in the firſt place he ſets downe the matter: afterwards the vſe, which in a manner is wont alwaies to follow thereupon. For it is a very rare thing to entertaine idols amongſt vs; but we ſhall by and by abuſe our ſelues with them. Becauſe it is all one, as if a man ſhould pile vp wood, and another ſhould put fire to it: will there not bee a fire by and by? it is vnpoſſible it ſhould bee otherwiſe, the fire is not more readie to burne the wood, then we are inclined to ſuperſtitious, and idolatrie. Therefore the word Elilim, which the Prophet here vſeth, is very fitly impoſed vpon the idols by the Hebrews: becauſe they are things of nothing; and but vanitie. Neither is it to bee doubted, but the holy Ghoſt by this word would reproue the rage of men, who by meanes of ſuch vanities thought to draw the neerer vnto God: as the Papiſts at this day; who to the end they might the more eaſily ſnare men with their idols: brag that they are lay mens bookes. But it is more ſafe for vs to giue credit to that which the holy Ghoſt ſpeakes. The triall it ſelfe alſo ſhewes clearely what fruit the people gather by theſe bookes. For being deceiued by ſuch groſſe imaginations, they frame vnto themſelues earthly and fleſhly gods: of whom Ieremiah iuſtly ſaith, that the idoll is not onely a vaine thing, but alſo a teacher of falſehood and lies: Ier. 10. 8.

Beware of entertaining idols.

We are further to note this deſcription where the Prophet ſaith, that the people bowed downe before the works of their owne hands. For what a blockiſhnes is it that men ſhould not thinke it enough to worſhip wood and ſtone in ſtead of God, but ſhould alſo attribute diuinitie to that which they haue framed; which yet they cannot giue to themſelus! truely it is a monſtrous thing that a ſtocke of baſe and contemptible wood ſhould be by and by worſhipped as ſoone as a mortall man ſhall haue put his hand thereto: as if he had made it a God. But howſoeuer the Prophet ſpeakes to the ancient people; we may notwithſtanding applie the ſame thing to the Papiſts, who acknowledge no maieſtie of God, but in the works of their owne hands.

The repetition he addes, Which their fingers haue made: carries a great ſignification with it: the more plainely to ſhew their beaſtlie liues. Wee are alſo to marke the phraſe of ſpeech by which the outward geſture of adoration is expreſſed, not that it is vnlawfull to bow the knee, or the head by way of ciuilitie, or humilitie: but becauſe hee which bowes himſelfe before an idoll, makes profeſſion thereby of the ſeruice of God: whence it appeares how childiſh a ſhift it is which the Papiſts haue gotten of that adoration, which they call dulia. Seeing here in the matter of Gods ſeruice; the Prophet generally condemnes all ſigne of reuerence whatſoeuer.

Verſ. 9. * And a man bowed himſelfe, and a man humbled himſelfe: therefore * ſpare them not.

* Or, as ſome reade: The common ſort tand, them of the better ſort.
* Or, put not them not.

SOme of the expoſitors do reade this ſentence together with the former, as if the Prophet ſhould ſtill go on in aggrauating of their fault in many words. If we receiue this ſenſe, wee muſt vnderſtand by theſe words perſon and man, all the Iſraelits: as if he ſhould ſay, there is neither one nor other exempt, or innocent from this filthines. But others are of a better iudgement, which thinke the Prophet repeates that in other words, which he had ſaid before; as touching the chaſtiſement: and that hereby he expreſſeth what a deſtruction ſhould come vpon this people forſaken of God. And thus the tenure of the ſpeech ſhould agree very fitly: to wit, that the ruine of all both great and ſmall, which ſhould conſume the whole people, drawes neere: becauſe that in ſuch an ouerflowing of vngodlines there was no hope of any releaſe from Gods reuenging hand to bee looked for. Moreouer in theſe two verbes, To bow, and to humble, there is an elegant alluding to the bowing of themſelues, whereof he ſpake in the eight verſe: as if hee ſhould ſay, They haue bowed downe themſelues to their idols: God will therefore cauſe them to be humbled and bowed downe vnder a verie heauie and great burthen of calamities and ruines. And withall, no doubt but hee alſo corrects their arrogancie: becauſe it was hard for them to beleeue that a people furniſhed in ſuch ſort with ſo much riches, could ſo quickly be ouerwhelmed with miſeries.

The latter part of the verſe is expounded two waies, although in reſpect of the ſubſtance there is no great choice which of them ſoeuer we take. For the meaning of the Prophet is to teach, that God cannot be appeaſed towards ſo obſtinate a people. If we read it in the time to come, Thou wilt not pardon them, the ſenſe will be the more eaſie; yet notwithſtanding, the imprecation wil alwaies hold: to wit, pardon them not. For wee know that as oft as the Prophets (who were inflamed with the zeale of God) did wiſh that ſome iudgement might come, they threatned the iuſt puniſhment which the wicked were to receiue: as being the inſtruments of the holy Ghoſt; and no otherwiſe. And it is no meruaile, if the Prophet being offended with ſo many abominable crimes, was in this manner kindled with zeale, that he appoints out his countrie to deſtruction, becauſe nothing was more precious vnto him, then the ſacred honour of God.

But we muſt alwaies vnderſtand that the remainder and remnant of the Elect is to be excepted: for the Prophet ſpeakes not here of all, one by one; but of the bodie of the people, which was almoſt rotted in their vices, ſo as there was no hope of health to bee looked for: for otherwise it had been to no purpose to haue exhorted desperate and obstinate men to repentance, or to set the hope of pardon before such. The summe then is, that the restauration of a new Church is not to be looked for, till God haue first executed his iudgements, and destroyed the Temple.

Vers. 10. Enter into the rocke, and hide thee in the dust from before the feare of the Lord, and from the glorie of his Maiestie.

BEcause the wicked gaue themselues too much libertie, and were too secure vnder Gods threatnings, it is an vsual custome with the Prophets when they threaten obstinate sinners to adde such lively descriptions, whereby to terrifie them: euen as if they should set the thing in present view before their eies. This is the reason why the Prophet now commands the contemners of God to enter into the rocks, and holes, to hide them vnder the earth. Wherein hee first shewes them that the iudgement of God is more terrible then an hundred deaths: seeing to escape the same, the graue is to bee wished for. But when hee forceth them thus into their holes, he doth with the greater emphasis manifest the heauy waight of the vengance of God. Although then that by the feare of the Lord, he meanes the scourges wherwith God should smite this wicked people; yet notwithstanding it is not in vaine that he by and by speakes of the glorie of his Maiestie: as if he should say, God is terrible to the wicked, according to the measure of his glorie, in whose destruction he will manifest his infinite power. And moreouer, although the wicked cannot bee bowed nor humbled by any chastisement whatsoeuer, yet are they constrained to feare, when they feele Gods wrath to approch. But as touching the Elect, they are taught of God to feare vnder his chastising hand after another sort: for being smitten with the strokes of his rods, they willingly bend themselues to beare the yoke. Isaiah then testifies, that the glory of Gods Maiesty shal shine most clearelie, after hee hath shewed himselfe as a iust Iudge. For whilst he lets men alone, it seemes all is well, and men thinke that hee hath hid himselfe.

How Gods chosen ought to feare his correcting hand.

Let the Pastors of the word then learne from hence how they ought to behaue themselues, when they haue to deale with benummed consciences; to wit, that being well awakened by the iudgements of God, they learne to feare this iudgement seate in good earnest. And howsoeuer it often seemes that we lose our labour in singing thus to deafe eares, yet will this terror of Gods iudgement pearce euen into hearts of iron: at the least to leaue them without excuse. And oft times also it comes to passe that some are healed, and the faithfull in like manner do profit by it, when they vnderstand what shal befall the wicked and reprobate by executing such horrible iudgements vpon them.

Vers. 11. The hie looke of man shall be humbled, and the loftines of men shall bee abased, and the Lord onely shall be exalted in that day.

BEcause whilst the wicked are glutted with present riches, and rest, all things falling out to their wish, they put these threatnings of the Prophet farre off from them, and by this meanes hardned their hearts against God: in this place therefore hee now sets downe a courle (as hath been said) how to pull downe this pride of theirs: as if he should say, The time will come, wherein your great arrogancie, which makes you thus in vaine to set vp your bristles, yea, and that with an incredible rage against the most high, shall cease. For howsoeuer the wicked seeme to be religious, yet you shall perceiue by their pride notwithstanding, that they will not sticke to iustle euen against the Lord himselfe, so as it seemes they are greater then he. In that God thus thundreth against them, it is to the end that he might pul downe their pride and hautines; and himself onely might be knowne to bee the chiefest. And therefore, as we haue said heretofore, the impunitie of sinne is as it were a cloud cast before our eies, which hinders vs that wee cannot see the glorie of the Lord. For when he reuengeth himselfe vpon the rebellions of men, his glorie doth so much the more appeare. And that is the cause also why Salomon saith, That the hearts of the children of men are set in them to doe euill, because in this world they see themselues more happie then the godly, and so blinded more and more. But here hee shewes that after the proud shall be brought vnder in spite of their teeth; then nothing shall hinder, that God should not be knowne to be such a one as he is. Surely there was great reason that the people should willingly haue submitted themselues vnder God, and haue cast their eies vpon his greatnes, in respect that vnder his shadow they were in safetie: and besides the stocke of Abraham was adorned so excellently with such varietie of benefits, to the end they should haue bin as ỹ mirror of the holines, and glorie of the Lord. But because the Iewes are now risen vp in rebellion against this so good a God, Isaiah denounceth against them, that God will deuise a new way how to exalt his glorie; to wit, euen in their destruction. Eccles. 8. 11.

In naming, The hie lookes and loftines, hee notes the inward pride of the mind and hart, by their outward countenance and behauiour. For a wicked conscience will discouer it selfe in the contempt of God and man, euen by the outward gesture and looke. It is in the same sense that Dauid notes out loftie eies, and high lookes: Psalm. 131. 1. &c. 101. 5. Isaiah also doth better confirme this, in the verse following. Now by heaping vp of so many words with such great vehemency, we may easily gather how notorious their rebellion was. Moreouer, we are not to maruaile that he

he inſiſts ſo much vpon the taming of mens arrogancie, if we doe but conſider how hard a thing it is to bow the hearts of thoſe who reſting vpon their riches, are afraid of nothing: imagining that they are aduanced to none other end, but to doe whatſoeuer they liſt without checke or controlement. For we our ſelues haue experience at this day how tender and delicate, yea and how eaſily ſuch take pepper in the noſe, who attribute to themſelues more then there is cauſe why, and in the end how obſtinately they reiect all holſome admonitions. For this cauſe it is that the Prophet doth thus ſitly ſharpen his ſtile againſt ſuch iolly fellowes in particular, rather then to threaten ỹ vengeance of God againſt the whole people in generall. And yet he ſets not himſelfe againſt the Princes onely who were placed in great dignitie aboue others: for not onely they, but thoſe alſo of baſer condition are readie enough to burſt with pride oftentimes; according to the common prouerbe, Euery one hath the heart of a king: ſo as wee ſee euery day, that if wee touch the ſores of wretched and beggerly fellowes but euen with the tip of the finger, you ſhall ſee them vomit forth inſupportable poyſoned ſpeeches. Seeing then that this vice was very common, Iſaiah toucheth as well the ſmall as the great that were tainted therewith, ſignifying, that by how much the more the Lord had dealt gentlie with them, by ſo much the more they were to looke for a greater iudgement: for their hearts were ſwollen with rebellion, becauſe of their too great abundance. Furthermore although the letter Lamed, which is put in the datiue caſe, be ſometime ſuperfluous, yet notwithſtanding in this place it holds his proprietie: becauſe it ſeemes Iſaiah aſſignes out a certaine day, as men are woont to doe, when iudgements or aſſiſes are held. I expound it then, that the day is appointed by God himſelfe, wherein the proud muſt make their appearance before his iudiciall throne to receiue ſentence of condemnation.

Moreouer we may gather by theſe words, that God ſhewes himſelfe an enemie to all the proud; and therefore this day of aſſignation is as much as if God had ſaid; I can no longer endure that men ſhould thus wickedly exalt themſelues againſt me: and therfore all ſuch as lift vp themſelues aboue meaſure, ſhall be broken in peeces with my hand. Now if this were well rooted in our hearts, who is it that would not abhorre and deteſt pride, by which we thus prouoke the wrath of God againſt vs? If any will reade, Proud and loftie, in the Neuter gender, it muſt be referred to the fortreſſes, bulwarkes, and munitions: but the rules of Grammar cannot beare it, that wee ſhould expound it otherwiſe then of mens perſons.

Verſ. 12. For the day of the Lord of hoſts is vpon all the proud and hauty, and vpon all that is exalted, and it ſhall bee made low.

This verſe is expounded together with the eleuenth.

Verſ. 13. Euen vpon all the Cedars of Lebanon, that are high and exalted, and vpon all the Okes of Baſhan,

14. And vpon all the mountaines, and vpon all the hilles that are lifted vp,

15. And vpon euery hie tower, and vpon euery ſtrong wall.

ALl theſe allegories which are here inſerted of Libanus, and of the high mountaines, are ſo far off from darkning the matter, that they do rather giue light vnto it. For let mortall man exalt himſelfe as high as he will, yet ſhal he neuer be able to match ỹ mountaines, and higheſt trees in height: which the Lord will as eaſily beate downe, as it is eaſie for the winde with a puffe to ſcatter the light chaffe here and there. Iſaiah then ſhewes the proud here, as it were in a glaſſe, how vaine and fooliſh they were to think ỹ their hautines could keepe them that God ſhould not ouertop them. There is alſo here an exceſſiue manner of ſpeech, which was of great weight, in reſpect of amplifying the threatning. For it is not like that God was angrie with the mountaines and trees; or as if hauing changed his purpoſe hee ſhould now bring to nought, that which himſelfe had eſtabliſhed and ſetled: but Iſaiah ſets the iudgement of God before their eies in the guiltles creatures, to the end they might the more aſſuredly perſwade themſelues that their preſumptions and bold wickednes ſhould not remaine vnpuniſhed. We ſee then wherfore he intermingles theſe figures of Cedars, Okes and mountaines.

That which is added of the walles, is not ſpoken by way of allegorie or figure. Wee know that whileſt men feele themſelues well fortified they flatter themſelues as if they ſtood in no great neede of Gods helpe. Iſaiah then mentioneth the matter of their falſe confidence vnder the names of towers and walles. For if anyplace ſeeme to be vnable to be vanquiſhed, there will the prophane ones build their neſts; from which they deſpite both heauen and earth, becauſe they thinke they are there ſafe from all dangers. Iſaiah threatens then, that when it ſhall pleaſe the Lord to bring men downe, he can quicklie ouerthrow their fortreſſes vpon which they in a falſe confidence leaned. And howſoeuer they are things, which in themſelues are not to be miſliked; yet notwithſtanding becauſe they do too much occupie our braines, it is for very iuſt cauſe that the Prophet ſharpeneth his ſtile againſt them.

And hereunto belonged that which hee ſpake before as touching the Chariots and horſes, verſe 7. For as it is ſaid in Micheæ: that becauſe men doe reſt themſelues beyond meaſure, vpon the riches of this world, therefore it is neceſſary that they be wholly bereft of them, that ſo they may truſt to be ſaued by the onely hand of God, and not hang their hope vpon the ſonnes of Adam. So hauing a little before reproued them for the multitude of their horſes, now he denounceth the Micheæ. 5. 10 iudgement of God; and withall admoniſheth them that it is vnpoſſible to returne into fauour againe with him, till he hath bereft them wholly of thoſe things, to the end they ſhould not reſt anie more vpon the falſe ſuccours of this world.

Verſ. 16. And vpon all the ſhips of Tarſhiſh, and vpon all pleaſant pictures.

BY Tarſhiſh the Hebrewes do ſurely meane Cilicia: and becauſe the Iewes had great trafficke with this nation, the Scripture often makes mention of the ſhips of Tarſhiſh; which were ſo called, becauſe they frequented that ſea. Nauigation certainly is not to be condemned, becauſe it bringes great profit and commoditie to men: as well to carrie forth as to bring home marchandiſe. This kinde of trafficke alſo cannot be hurtfull; ſeeing it is the will of God that all mankinde ſhould be helpfull one to another by mutuall duties: but becauſe pride and crueltie is aboue al things ingendred by abundãce; therfore Iſaiah reproues this kind of merchandiſe, by which the land had been greatly enriched. Adde hereunto, that oft times it comes to paſſe that the merchandiſe and trafficke which is vſed with nations farre off; is full of deceit and pillage, and there is no meaſure amongſt men in this behalfe touching exceſſiue gaine. Firſt then the Prophets meaning is, that the Iewes ſhall be ſtripped of their riches; to the end they may learne to ſubiect themſelues vnder God. Secondly, he ſets forth their couetouſnes and vnlawfull gaines by ſignes: as if one ſhould deſcribe murther by ſhewing a ſword all bloodie.

The ſecond part of the verſe ſhewes that the Prophet condemnes that nauigation, by which the land was much infected with corruptions. It is a thing too frequent and common, that delicacie, wantonnes, and abundance of voluptuouſneſſe, doe eaſily follow great wealth and riches, which is verie often ſeene in wealthie countries, and cities of merchandiſe. For thoſe that trade into farre countries, contenting themſelues nothing at all with things which are in their houſes, do bring home with them new ſumptuous and rich ſtuffes; which in former time were vtterly vnknown. Now becauſe wealth, is for the moſt part the mother of ſuperfluitie and diſſolution, the Prophet makes mention here of rich furniture; as if he ſhould haue ſaid, The Iewes haue decked their houſes ſo ſumptuouſlie, that they haue drawne the iudgement of God vpon them. For vnder the pleaſant pictures, by a figure called Synecdoche hee comprehends as well rich hangings, as the worke of Phrygia, and the veſſels made by exquiſite Arte.

Wealth the mother of ſuperfluitie and diſſolutions.

Now it is certaine that mens manners are corrupted when they giue their luſts the bridle thus to ſeeke here and there for ſuch vnneceſſarie ſupefluities. And we ſee that ſuch deliciouſnes was the ruine of the Empire of Rome. For before the Romans trauelled into Greece, they were very chaſte, continent and moderate. But in the ende hauing ouercome Aſia, they began to wax delicate, and to become more and more effeminate. But after their eyes were once dazelled with golden pictures, veſſels, pretious ſtones and tapiſtry, and that their noſtrils were perfumed with ointments and odors, by the ſame meanes they became beſotted in all their ſenſes; and in following the diſſolutenes of the Eaſterne partes as a more gentlemanlike faſhion of liuing, they began to ouerflow more and more in all diſordered diſſolutenes.

Note.

Verſ. 17. And the hautines of men ſhall be brought low, and the loftines of man ſhall be abaſed, and the Lord ſhall be onely exalted in that day.

THe Phophet in naming ſo many kindes of heights in the former verſes, declares that he ſpake of men. For the high mountaines and great Cedars diſpleaſed not God, as they were his creatures: but he ſignifies that all the miſchiefe reſts in the hearts and liues of men, who do too much truſt in high and great things. But ſome may obiect; It oft times fals out that the wicked are ſo farre off from comming to amendment or being humbled by the afflictions which they ſuffer, that they rather become the more obſtinate and rebellious: as it appeares in Pharaoh, whoſe hardnes could not be ſoftened by any plagues whatſoeuer. Wherefore it ſeemes that that which the Prophet ſaith heere, comes not alwaies to paſſe. I anſwere, that the effect of the chaſtiſment is not expreſſed: as if God ſhould bow rebels to his obedięce. But the ſenſe of the place is this, to wit, that although the reprobates be hardned, that the Lord will not therefore finiſh his chaſtiſments, wherewith he will chaſtiſe them, till ſuch time as their pride and hautines be brought to the ground. For whileſt they reſt vpon their riches and fortifications, thinking (as they ſay) to be ſafe there; they neither feare nor honour God. But although they be fortified neuer ſo much, the Lord will ſubdue and bring them downe eaſilie; not by a plague or two, but ſo manie waies, that being brought low, and ſhut vp, they ſhall ceaſe to lift vp their hornes againſt him, and ſhall prooue by experience that it is in vaine for them to be obſtinate and rebellious. That which is added, and the Lord onely ſhall be exalted, hath been expounded before.

Exod.8.15. & 9.34.

Anſ.

Verſ. 18. And the Idols will he vtterly deſtroy.

AS heretofore in his reprehenſion hee ioyned idolatrie with ſuperfluities, couetouſnes and other vices; ſo he now ioynes them againe together in denouncing the puniſhment.

Verſ. 19. They ſhall goe into the holes of the rocks, and into the caues of the earth from before the feare of the Lord and and from the glorie of his Maieſty when he ſhall ariſe to deſtroy the earth.

BEfore he vſed other words: to wit, in conſtraining and compelling them, ſaying, Enter into the rocks; to the end hee might the more liuely pricke their conſciences: but now he ſhewes what they ſhall doe: and telles them that they muſt enter. And hereby it appeares that that ſentence was not an exhortation, but a terrible denunciation of the heauie wrath of God, to feare the wicked and obſtinate, who deſperately deſpiſe all admonitions, and threatnings. That which is added of the feare of the Lord, is to be vnderſtood, of the feare which ỹ Chaldeans and Aſſyrians put them in; whoſe hand hee called before (as hee doth here againe) the glorie of God: becauſe hee ſerued himſelfe by them to chaſtiſe his people. Although then that they were diſloyall and wicked, yet they ſerued to the glorie of God: ſeeing euen the diuell himſelfe ſerues ſomewhat to that end in deſpite of his teeth. Thus he ſpeakes of the Chaldeans, and Aſſyrians, becauſe the glorie of God might be perceiued in the chaſtiſements which hee executed vpon the people by their hand.

Hee confirmes the ſame thing by the word Ariſe, which ſignifies as much as to go vp into the iudgement ſeate to giue ſentence. In the particle, which by & by followeth, to ſtrike the earth, there is a goodly alluſion or meeting of words, which can ſcarcely be expreſſed in another language, as if hee ſhould ſay, To ſmite downe to the ground. Now hee ſaith that the Lord will ariſe, becauſe it ſeemes that he ſleepes, when he deferres his iudgements: he ariſeth then, when he goes vp as iudge, to inflict puniſhments vpon the wicked: in ſuch ſort, as men ſhall well perceiue that nothing can ſcape his knowledge, nor be hidden from his eies: from him (I ſay) who leaues not any wickednes vnpuniſhed.

Verſ. 20. And at that day ſhall man caſt away his ſiluer Idols, and his golden Idols (which they had made themſelues to worſhip them) to * the moules, and to the backs.

* Or, Into the holes of the, &c.

IDolaters doe pleaſe themſelues wonderfully in their ſuperſtitions and wicked ſeruice. For although they bee full of crimes, and naughtines, yet behold their refuge, namely, they thinke to appeaſe God by their goodly ſeruices. As if we at this day ſhould ſet forth the wickednes, and villanies wherewith the Papiſts ouerflow, they were not able to denie them: but will flatter themſelues vnder this pretext forſooth, that they performe a goodly ſeruice vnto God, and will thinke that all their vices ſhould bee ſufficiently couered vnder this cloake. The Prophet therefore pluckes away this vizard from Idolaters, and denounceth againſt them that they ſhall no more haue ought wherewith to couer their filthines. For the Lord will conſtraine them to caſt away their idols, to the end they may know it was in vaine for them to haue put their truſt in them. Laſtly, they ſhould be aſhamed of their vanitie. Becauſe in proſperitie they thought that God was fauorable vnto them, as if he had taken delight in their ſeruice: and could not otherwiſe perſwade themſelues, til ſuch time as it was manifeſted vnto them by effect, that he abhorred them. It is in aduerſitie then that they began to acknowledge their filthines as the Prophet Heſeas verie well teacheth, when he compares them to harlots, who perceiue not their vncleannes all the while they gaine well; and inioy their pleaſures. But when they haue loſt theſe things and are forſaken of their louers, then they begin to bethinke themſelues of their pouertie and ſhame, and to enter into the waie of repentance; of the which they would neuer once haue thought, whileſt they were lulled aſleepe in their wantonnes. And ſo falles it out with all idolaters who are neuer ſo aſhamed of their beaſtlines as to caſt awaie their Idoles from them, till being preſſed with extreame calamitie, they thinke themſelues ſomewhat low brought. Hoſ. 2. 7.

Which they had made themſelues &c. That is to ſay, which they had made by the helpe of the workeman. Neither is this added for nothing; becauſe hee ſignifies that the counterfeit and falſe gods are falſely worſhipped. For what good can gods framed by mans hands doe, ſeeing God hath his being of himſelfe, and is without beginning? It is a thing then that goes quite backward, and againſt all reaſon, that men ſhould worſhip that, which themſelues haue deuiſed. By this ſpeech therefore he deſcribes their wickednes; in that although their idols were made of gold or ſiluer, or of other corruptible matter, and that they were framed by men; yet neuertheleſſe that they were worſhipped in ſtead of God: withall, he expreſſeth the cauſe why they are diſpleaſing to God, to wit, for that they were honored. With what pretext now I pray you, will the Papiſts couer their impieties? For they cannot denie but they worſhip Images and puppets. Now where ſuch adoration and honor hath place, there is a manifeſt and plaine ſacriledge, which cannot be diſguiſed. By the holes of the mouks, he here vnderſtands all filthy and vncleane corners whatſoeuer, wherein they ſhould be hid with infamie.

Verſ. 21. To goe into the holes of the rocks, and into the tops of the ragged rocks, from before the feare of the Lord, and from the glorie of his maieſtie, when he ſhall riſe to deſtroy the earth.

THis is no ſuperfluous repetitiõ, although Iſaiah repeates the ſame things whereof hee ſpake but erewhile. For is there any thing more difficult then to pricke, & wound men to the quicke, and to prouoke them to the true feare of God? We perceiue this, not onely in hypocrits, but euen in our ſelues, if we looke narrowly into it. For how many things things are set before vs, by which our minds ought to bee rauished; and yet notwithstanding wee are scarce once mooued therewith? It was chiefly necessary that this iudgement of God should be repeated to the hypocrits, who pleased themselues in their wickednes. Now the seueritie of Gods vengeance is therein manifested, namely, that the wicked chose rather to be swallowed vp into the deepest gulfes that may be, then to come neere into his sight. From this place it seemes that Christ borrowed that wherewith he threatens the Iewes; in that day they shall say to the mountaines couer vs, and to the hills, hide vs. Luk. 23. 30.

Vers. 22. Cease you from the man whose breath is in his nostrilles: for wherein is he to be esteemed?

THese things are conioyned with the former, and haue bin ill diuided from them by some. For after he hath with threatnings proclamed the iudgements of God, he exhortes the wicked to cease from beguiling themselues by a vaine confidence: as if he should say, I see you are blinded and drunke with vaine hope, so as there is no reason at all which can preuaile with you; which coms to passe, because you ascribe too much to your selues; and yet man is nothing: for you haue to doe with God, who with his onely looke is able to bring the whole world to confusion. This place is expounded diuersly: For some interpret it of Christ, & take breath, for consuming; as also the Scripture is wont elsewhere to vse this similitude. They take nostrill for wrath, because the signe of anger appeares in the nostrils: and so gather this sense; Take heede you moue not Christ to wrath against you. But if all be well waighed, we shall find this exposition to be far off from the scope of the text. Others, although they expound it of men in generall, yet notwithstanding they referre it to this sentence; Feare not them that can kill the bodie, Mat. 10. 28. But this opinion is no more fitting with the text then the other. For it should be from the purpose and would not agree to the time: because there was then no occasion to dissuade them from the feare of men. But as I haue said, the coherence of the text, cleares vs easilie from all doubts. For the beginning of the chapter following expounds this plainly, and confirmes it: and he which diuided these things did ill to separate that which should haue beene ioyned together: for he will there adde; The Lord will take from you the things which so much puffes vp your hearts, and begets such high spirits in you: This confidence which you haue is vaine and foolish. And thereupon dependeth that which hee now saith, Cease from man then

But it is necessary first to see what the breath of the nostrill signifies. He thereby sets forth the fragilitie of mankinde: namely, that the life of man is but a breath which forthwith vanisheth away; and as Dauid saith, If the Lord withdraw the spirit, man returnes to his dust: Also, His spirit departs, and he returnes to his earth. Psal. 104. 29. Againe, They are flesh, a breath which passeth away and returnes not. Psal. 146. 4. and 78. 39. Seeing then there is nothing so feeble and weake as our life, what meanes this confidence, forsooth, as if the rootes of our stabilitie were profound and strong? We must then cease from man; that is to say, we must leaue this vaine confidence: for man hath his breath in his nostrils: for if his soule once depart, he vanisheth forthwith away as water. Now we speake here, of that breath by which man liues, which is the weakest of all things.

Moreouer, when the Lord forbids vs to put our trust in man, let vs beginne at our selues; that is to wit, let vs not in any case trust in our wisdome, or industrie. In the second place, let vs depend neither vpon the helpe of men, nor vpon any creature else: but let vs place our whole trust in the Lord. Cursed is he, saith Ieremiah, which trusteth in man, and puts his strength in the arme of flesh, that is to say, in outward meanes and helpes. Ier. 17. 5.

For wherein is he to be esteemed?] Behold here the right way how to beate downe all pride, namely when nothing is left to men wherein they may please themselues. For this is as much as if the Prophet had said, Al the glorie of the flesh is nothing worth. We must also obserue, that this is said by comparison, to the ende wee may learne, that if so be there bee any excellencie in vs, it comes not by nature, but wee hold it all by borrowing the same from without vs. We know that mankind was adorned of God with giftes which ought not to be despised; we know also that some are more excellent then others: but because the most part hauing reiected the Lord, do please themselues in their own forme and shape beyond measure; yea euen prophane men esteeme so much of themselues, as if they were gods: Isaiah therefore wisely separates man from God, as also the Holy ghost doth thorowout y whole Scripture. For when men are considered in themselues, it better appeares how fraile their condition is, yea how transitorie, and inconstant. As soone therefore as men shall once beginne to attribute vnto themselues but the least strength whatsoeuer, then must their vanitie be made knowen, and discouered vnto them, to the ende they may acknowledge themselues to be nothing. By this onely word all the glorious titles of free will and mans merits doe fall to the ground, wherein the Papists glorie against the grace of God: and all that fond and foolish loue, which prophane men haue of themselues, is also plucked away from them. Lastly we are all called home to God, the author of al good things: to the end wee should not think any thing excellent either in heauen or earth, out of him. For his praise is forthwith eclipsed, if so be the whole world be not stripped of all wisedome, strength and iustice; in a word, of all praise, that so it may be giuen to God alone.

THE III. CHAPTER.

Verſ. 1. For loe, the Lord God of hoſts will take away from Ieruſalem and from Iudah the ſtay and the ſtrength, euen all the ſtay of bread and all the ſtay of water.

WE haue ſaid a little before that the Prophet goes on ſtill with the ſame matter which he began in the ende of the former chapter. For hee admoniſheth the Iewes, that how great riches ſoeuer they poſſeſſe; yet notwithſtanding they ſhall not bee able by any meanes whatſoeuer to hinder the wrath of God (being once inflamed againſt them) to conſume all their preparations. Whence it appeares, that they too much ouerſhoote themſelues, who, to put farre away from them all feares, doe heape & gather together weapons, power, ſtrength of warre, counſels, great ſtore of victuals, and ſuch like. The particle demonſtratiue Hinneh, which wee haue tranſlated, Behold, or Loe, is not put here for the more certentie of the matter; but to ſet forth the ſhortnes of the time, as if Iſaiah ſhould euen ſet the thing it ſelfe before the eyes of the wicked. For it often comes to paſſe, that thoſe who dare not openly contemne the iudgements of God, do yet notwithſtanding reiect them, as if they touched them neuer a whit; or elſe as if they were farre off from them. What is that to vs, ſay they? or, if afflictions come, wherefore ſhould wee make our ſelues miſerable before the time? when the calamitie comes vpon vs, will it not then be time enough to thinke vpon it? Becauſe then the wicked digge themſelues ſuch hiding places, and ſecurely take their eaſe in deſpiſing the iudgements of God, the Prophet doth the more neerely preſſe them home, to the end they ſhould not imagine that the hand of God ſhould bee farre off; alſo that all their ſtaies, which they promiſed to themſelues, ſhould be but in vaine. To this appertaines that where he calles God, the Lord God of hoſts, that ſo his Maieſtie might the more daunt their ſleepie and benummed conſciences. For God hath no need of titles: but it is neceſſary that our blockiſhnes and drouſines ſhould be awakened by the ſenſe and feeling of his glorie. Now the Prophet in the firſt place threatens, that the Iewes ſhall be ſtripped of all abundance of victuals, ſo as they ſhall be forced to die for want. And by and by he will adde the ſame thing as touching their ſuccours of warre, and all helps of politicke order and gouernment. From hence we may gather, that the Iewes were ſo lifted vp with the proſperous ſucceſſe which their affaires then had, that they fooliſhly ſecured themſelues, as if they had been vtterly exempt from all damage or decay. But Iſaiah lets them know, that not onely all the region ſhall bee ſmitten with the rods of God, but that Ieruſalem in like manner, which was as it were the inuincible fortreſſe of the whole nation, ſhould be ſmitten alſo: as if he ſhould ſay, The wrath of God ſhall not onebe ſcattered vpon the bodie; but it ſhall pearce alſo euen vnto the very heart. As touching the words, Maſhen and Maſhenah, which he hath put in the maſculin, and in the feminine gender, I doubt not but by this diuerſitie, he would more certainlie expreſſe, that all kinds of ſtaies ſhould bee broken: and therfore I haue tranſlated, ſtrength & ſtay. For I approoue not of their expoſitions who referre this to men: becauſe it is rather to bee vnderſtoode of all helps, of all kinds.

Notwithſtanding ſome doubt whether the Prophet reſtraines this to victuals, or rather whether he referres it to the other helpes and ſtaies which doe follow a little after. But it is very likely that vnder theſe two words he generally comprehends all things whatſoeuer, which are neceſſarie for the ſuſtentation of the eſtate of a citie, or people: and alſo, that by way of explication, hee names ſome ſpecials.

The firſt member then hath this ſcope, to wit, that the Lord will tread vnder feete, all defences and riches, by meanes whereof they thought to continue ſafe; ſo as there ſhould be nothing left to ſuccour them. Secondlie, he addes, what the pouertie and want ſhall be: and as we haue ſaid, he begins with food, which, in the firſt place, is of al other the moſt neceſſarie helpe for ſuſtaining mans life. 1 2

Now the Lord takes the ſtrength of bread and of water away two waies: firſt, when hee takes them from vs altogether; or elſe when he takes away their ſtrength to nouriſh vs. For if God inſpires not a ſecret vertue into thē, they can profit vs nothing at all, though we ſhould haue them in neuer ſo great abundance: and that is the reaſon why it is ſaid elſewhere, that he breakes the ſtaffe of bread: Ezech. 4. 16. That is to ſay, Though the Bakers giue out bread by waight, and though it be eaten, yet it ſhall not ſatisfie them any thing at all. This ſimilitude ought to be diligently obſerued, to the end wee may know, that although the bellie bee filled neuer ſo full, yet we ſhal alwaies bee hungrie, becauſe the ſecret bleſſing of God, which nouriſheth and giueth ſtrength, is wanting. 1 2 God takes away ſtrēgth from bread after two ſorts. Leuit. 26. 26. It is not bread, but God his ſecret bleſſing which nouriſheth.

But although the want wherewith the Prophet threatens the people in this place may be vnderſtood of famine, becauſe God will depriue the Iewes of all kind of reliefe; notwithſtanding, becauſe the Prophets are wont for the moſt part to take theſe manners of ſpeech out of the law; this interpretation agrees very well. For hee might ſimplie haue ſaid, I will take away from you bread and and wine: but he expresseth a thing more secret, in speaking of the stay and staffe of bread and water: as if he should say, Although the people bee not brought to pouertie for want of meate and drinke, yet God can so vse the matter, that they shall famish for hunger, euen whilest they swallow downe their morsels: because his blessing being taken away, all nourishment shall passe away as smoke. To be short, his meaning is, that the people shall haue no food that shall strengthen them, either because they shall haue no bread nor water; or if they haue them, yet they shall be able to get no nourishment out of them.

Vers. 2. The strong man, and the man of warre, the Iudge, and the Prophet, the prudent, and the aged,

3. The Captaine of fiftie, and the Honorable, and the Counseller, and the cunning artificer, and the eloquent man.

HE mentions other helpes, by which the estate of nations or cities are vpheld in their perfection. He threatens that the Iewes shal be wholly depriued thereof, so as they shall be able to doe nothing in the house, by counsell or aduice; nor in the fields abroad by force of armes. Now he standes not to keepe any strict order, but in contenting himselfe with a briefe summe, he mingles one thing with an other. He beginnes with men of warre, by whose hand the countrie was defended. Sometimes God takes them away by death; and sometimes he makes them become faint hearted and effeminate. This last is the most vsuall, so that the successors doe degenerate from the valor of their ancestors: and those who before were stout hearted, in processe of time become fearfull, and are disabled for the warre. We see also that the first often falles out, to wit, that the most valiant haue their courage by and by quailed.

He addes the Iudge, and the Prophet. Wee know that amongst the Hebrewes, Iudges are taken for all gouernors whatsoeuer. Also it is not to be doubted but that all Teachers whatsoeuer, are to be vnderstood by the name of Prophet. He threatens the Iewes then, that after the ciuill gouernment shal be abolished, and teaching extinct, that then they shall be cut off. And to speake the truth, the Magistrates & Teachers haue the same place in the Common-wealth, that the eyes haue in a mans head. To the same ranke also I referre the word ancients, who are the fittest to gouerne: because age obtaines prudence, counsell and grauitie. As touching the name diuine, although it be taken in the euill part in the Scriptures, yet it should seeme to be taken in the good part here; seeing Isaiah reckons vp those things which are necessarie to defend, or conserue the estate of a kingdome or citie. We may well cal this man then, one that knowes wisely how to forecast matters, and who hath a deepe insight into dark & obscure things, which are necessarie; not by diuinations or superstitious Artes, but with a quick and prompt iudgement, and with great dexteritie of wit. Also in regard that God had forbidden them to go to aske counsell of Magicians, Inchaunters, Diuiners; and that Balaam himselfe testifies that there was no soothsaying in Israel; Numb. 23.23. If any had rather vnderstand this place of diuinations made by Inchantments, I do not gainsaie it: neither will there any absurditie follow, to reckon it among the number of their chastisements, to wit, that this people so full of wickednesse shall be also depriued euen of all vnlawfull succours: as in Hosea, the Idols are ioyned with the Altar and the sacrifices. Hosea 3.4.

Hee calles him the Duke or Captaine of fifties, according to the manner of speech then in vse. For the Captaines of fifties were among the Iewes, as they of hundreds were among the Romanes. The Greekes do call them by a name which signifies Princes of hundreds. And because such manner of principalitie was not in vse among the Latins, therefore the name also was vnknowne vnto them. The Hebrew word Ioets, which I haue translated Senatour, may be applied to particular persons, who are excellent in knowledge. But because they attribute it to Counsellors who exercise a publike charge, I would not depart from the common opinion.

Moreouer, because handicrafts men haue their good vse in the conseruation of the common good, and for supporting of an estate, aswell as other Arts, Isaiah saith, that they also being abolished, the downefall of the Iewes approcheth vpon them. The expositours expound that which is said in the last place diuersly; word for word it is, He which vnderstandeth low words, spoken betweene the teeth. Now because the pythonicall spirits do giue their answeres by mumblings and low voices, some thinke that he should speake heere of Inchantments. Others expound it better; who by the word Lachat vnderstand secret counsels. But for as much as by this word, we may vnderstand a graue oration as well as of things secret; I haue not been afraid to translate it Oratours. Notwithstanding if any had rather vnderstand it of those men who are prudent and learned, who being vnfit for oratorie in publike, doe yet giue counsell in secret, which also is a good thing; I do not say against it.

To conclude, we are to obserue this summarie description of a well ordered estate. For first Isaiah hath placed corne and other things necessarie for the maintenance of life in the forefront: secondly, force of warre: thirdly, knowledge how to gouerne ỹ people, and other parts of politicall gouernment: in the fourth place the propheticall function & charge: and lastly handicrafts. The Lord beautifies the people with these helpes whom he minds to keepe safe and sound: and on the contrarie, strippes those of them whom he means to bring to ruine. Let vs know thē, that all things which we finde profitable to maintaine vs in this life, flowes vnto vs from the free fauour of God. Whence it followes that we consider an other point; to wit, that we take diligēt heed that we by our vnthankfulnes fulnes doe not depriue our ſelues of ſo excellent gifts of God.

The Magistrecie and the Ministry that to the Common-wealth which the two eies are to the bodie.

Verſ. 4. And I will appoint children to be their Princes, and babes ſhall rule ouer them.

TO the end the vengeance of God might be the more apparent, he now tels vs how wofull and miſerable this change ſhould be, to wit, when the faithfull & wiſe gouernours ſhould be cut off, and that God ſhould put baſtards & mecoks in their ſtead. By Children we muſt not onely vnderſtand them that are ſo in age; but alſo in vnderſtanding, and manners: ſuch as are delicate and effeminate perſons, who haue no ſtrength in them; neither are able to manage the ſword that is put into their hand. He hath not oppoſed all the members one againſt an other: he thought it enough to ſhew ỹ meane by which a Common-wealth might ſoone be brought to ruine; namely, if ſo be that fooles and ignorant ones do beare rule, who are as children, in whom there is no wiſdome nor grauitie to be found. We may therfore hold it for a ſure principle, that he is vnfit to gouerne a Common-wealth, that is not called thereunto of God, nor furniſhed with ſingular vertues: which thing Plato alſo did well perceiue; for howſoeuer hee were a prophane man, hauing no true knowledge of God, yet he well diſcerned that none was capable nor fit to ſway publike affaires, but he which was indued with diuine vertues. And as the adminiſtration of Common-wealths is of God onely; ſo alſo is it neceſſarie that it be vpheld by himſelfe in euery reſpect; and there remaines no more to thoſe whom the Lord gouerns not, but that they bee like to children, yea that they be twice children, to wit, deſtitute of all counſell, and wiſdome.

Plato.

Now the Lord exerciſeth his vengeance two waies: for ſometimes we thinke we haue men of grauitie and of experience in matters; but when they take it in hand, they ſtumble like blind beetles, and haue no more skill and wiſdome then little children; becauſe the Lord depriues them of this ſingular vertue, with which before they were indued: and puts them out of bias, as if he had ſmitten them with a thunderclap. Sometimes alſo the Lord proceedes more ſlowly and takes away excellent perſonages for iudgement, by little and little, and ſuch as were fit for gouernment: and tranſports the ſwaying of cauſes ouer to them which are not able to gouerne a familie, no not a fillie child. When theſe things come to paſſe, we may hold it for certaine, that deſtruction and ruine is not farre off.

Moreouer, we haue to obſerue (as I touched not long ſince) that the eſtate of a Common-wealth well ordered, is an excellent gift of God: ſeeing all the orders of Iudges, Senators, Souldiers, Captaines, Teachers, and Handicrafts men, doe all of them helpe one another by mutuall community: and doe knit themſelues together for the common ſafetie of the people. For ſeeing the Prophet threatens and denounceth that theſe things ſhall be aboliſhed as a moſt heauie iudgement of God, he ſufficiently ſhewes, that theſe are rare and excellent gifts, which are neceſſarie for the conſeruation of the people.

The eſtate of a Common-wealth well ordered is an excellent gift of God.

The office of Magiſtrates, Captaines, and Souldiers is here commended vnto vs then; as alſo the office of Teachers. Which we are well to note, againſt thoſe franticke fellowes, who ſtriue to cut off from the world, the power of the ſword; and all other good politicke orders. Now the Prophet ſhewes that theſe things are not taken away but when God is diſpleaſed. It followes thereupon then, that ſuch folke who fight againſt ſuch benefits of God, reiecting and quenching all that in them lies the ſame, are wicked ones and enemies to the publike good. Alſo the Miniſtry of the word doth here receiue his commendation, without which a Common-wealth cannot long endure. For where no propheſie is (as Salomon ſaith) there the people periſh: Prou. 29.18. Moreouer, handicrafts, tillage, all occupations of what ſort ſoeuer they be, as Carpenters, Labourers, and ſuch like, which ſerue for the neceſſities and commodities of men, are here praiſed, as the miniſters and ſeruants of the Lord, and haue the ſame end, as the others before mentioned; to wit, to preſerue mankind. We may alſo ſay the ſame as touching them that profeſſe the arte militarie; for although a lawfull warre ought to be nothing elſe but a meanes of peace, yet notwithſtanding, it is neceſſarie ſometimes to come to ſtrokes: ſo as they who haue the adminiſtration of the ſword, doe vſe it in defending themſelues and theirs. Warre therefore muſt not be condemned in it ſelfe, becauſe it is a meanes to conſerue a Common-wealth. Eloquence alſo is a thing not to be deſpiſed: becauſe there is often neede of it, as well in publike, as in priuate, fully and plainely to ſhew a thing, and to make a trueth cleare and euident. For that alſo is reckoned amongſt the gifts and ſpeciall bleſſings of God, when a citie aboundeth with prudent and eloquent perſonages, who can debate with the aduerſaries, in the gate, or in the place where neede ſhall require to defend it ſelfe by counſell and reaſon.

2 Miniſters.

3 Handicrafts men.

4 Souldiers. A lawfull warre, is nothing els but a manner of peace.

5 Rethoriciens.

Pſal. 128. 5.

Now the ſumme of this place is, that when the Lord takes away his gifts from a people, and changeth their eſtate, be it any way howſoeuer, either by altering the forme of gouernment, or that good gouernours be taken away; the wrath of God is to bee acknowledged, who takes away Kings in his wrath, as Hoſea ſaith, and giues others in his anger: Hoſea 13.11. We muſt not therefore attribute ſuch changes to fortune, or to other cauſes.

Note.

Verſ. 5. The people ſhall bee oppreſſed one of another, & euery one by his neighbour: the children ſhall preſume againſt the auncient, and the vile againſt the honorable.

HE here deſcribes an exceeding great perturbation which approched to fall vpon the Iewes; all good order being broken and fallen to the ground, as it happens to all people as soone as good gouernment is ouerthrowne. We know how great the shameles malice of mans minde is where ambition carries euery one away thereunto. Lastly, how furious the lusts of the flesh are, where there is no bridle to restraine them. And therefore it is no maruaile if one doe proudly lift vp himselfe against another, that cruelty hath the swinge there; and that euerie one takes libertie to commit all manner of outrage, when Iustice is ouerthrowne, and laid in the dust. If we wisely consider this, we shall esteeme more highly of the blessings which God bestowes vpon vs, when he maintaines vs in a tolerable and good estate, and suffers vs not to bee miserablie wasted and scattered. Whence it appeares, that those who spend and imploy their wits to ouerthrow politicke gouernments, are the open enemies of mankind: yea, they differ nothing at all from brute beasts.

But this confusion which the Prophet here describes is most odious, to wit, that the child shall presume against the auncient, that the people of vile, and those of base condition, shall rise vp against those that are honorable, and men of reputation. For there is nothing more strange then to see them shamefully intreated, who are worthy to be honoured. And yet notwithstanding these vnseemely and odious examples happen, when the politicke order is ouerthrowne. Whereas I haue translated the verbe Niggesh, To endeuour, or to doe their vtmost, it was by constraint: for otherwise the meaning of the Prophet had been imperfect.

Vers. 6. When euery one shall take hold of his brother of the house of his father, and say, thou hast clothing: thou shalt be our Prince, and let this [a] fall bee vnder thine hand.

FOr as much as this sentence is of affinitie with the former, and still continues to the words following, He shall sweare; it is certaine that the particle Ci, is taken as signifying a certaine time. For the Prophet intending to set forth an extreame miserie into which this people should fal, he saith, There shall be no man which will take the charge of gouernment vpon him, although he shall be entreated so to doe. Surely ambition hath the swinge so for the most part amongst men, that the greater part doe alwaies thirst and long for headship (and that with enuie) one ouer another, yea they aspire many times to get it with hazard of their liues: For euen in all times we shall see that the greedie lust to reigne and rule hath shaken the whole world: and there is not the meanest village in which some are not to bee found who would be right glad to haue power and authoritie giuen them to command the rest; so much is flesh and blood prone by nature to be couetous of honour. Whence wee may perceiue, that all things are brought to an extreame exigent, when such a dignitie is not onely contemned, but also reiected with a disdainefull refusall. For the calamitie is extreame, and past cure, when men begin to flee and auoid that which they were wont naturally to couet.

Things are come to a very low ebbe, when men refuse to beare rule.

But for the fuller amplification of the matter, the Prophet sets other circumstances before vs; to wit, that the Iewes shall rather cast off all sense and feeling of mercie and humanity, then to take vpon them the charge of gouernment. If any should refuse to rule in a strange countrie, it may bee it would not seeme strange at all: but when we speake of the preseruing of our brethren, it is too vncurteous a dealing to refuse so honorable a charge. It is a signe then of an extreame desperatenes, when he vpon whose faithfulnesse his brethren doe rest themselues, and whose aide and succour they wait for, and desire, reiects and casts all desire of rule and authoritie from him.

And therefore also they haue been wont to chuse those for Princes who are rich; or at the least, it is very seldome that gouernment is committed to any, but such as are of a competent sufficiencie, lest their pouerty should expose them to contempt and disdaine, or else draw them to vse vnlawfull shifts.

This circumstance is also added, to wit, that although they bee sufficient to beare the burthen, yet they shall not accept of it; as if hee should say, that not the meane and base people shall refuse the place of gouernment onely, but euen the greatest and best furnished also. Moreouer, the verbe, shall take, hath a great emphasis in it: for it is altogether as much in effect as to lay hands vpon him, to arrest him: as if Isaiah had said, Those who shall seeke a Prince, shall not proceede therein by allurements nor intreaties, but there shall bee a multitude full of tumult, where they shall endeuour to lay hands vpon some one or other by violence, and shall force him to take the charge of gouernment vpon him. And there is no lesse weight in the last circumstance when he addes, This scattering shall be vnder thy hand, that is to say, At the least if there be left in thee any sparke of mercie or humanity, put forth that strength thou hast to helpe vs in this our extreame misery. For when a troup of men are as a scattered flocke, asking succour at the hands of one of their brethren, as at their pastor and shepheard, yea, pitifully bewailing their scattering, their hearts are harder then iron or flint, who will not then lend their helping hand for their helpe. Some translate, Let thy hand be vnder this scattering; to wit, to susteine it: as if there were therein some amplification in the Prophets words.

Vers. 7. In that day he shall sweare, saying, I cannot be an helper: for there is no bread in mine house nor clothing: therefore make me no Prince of the people.

BY the word, To sweare, he expresseth a vehement refusall, and a resolute denial. For often often it falles out, that he, who in the beginning excuſed himſelfe, and made ſhew to bee vnable to doe any thing, yet at the laſt being intreated, doth yeeld to that which is requeſted of him: but he who refuſeth any thing, and that by way of an oath, giues them that haue ſought his helpe no hope, that hee will euer fulfill their deſires: for he hath reſolued to continue his purpoſe. And it may be alſo that the particle, in that day, ſignifies as much as incontinently, that, is without pauſing any thing at all, or making any longer cõſultation about the matter. But becauſe it may alſo be taken to ſignifie a time full of calamitie, I do not gainesay this latter. There is no difficultie as touching the Prophets meaning, onelie he purpoſed to ſay thus much in effect, that there ſhall be no refuge nor fit remedie to reſtore this wofull diſſipation.

Although the expoſitors doe interpret this hebrew word shobesh diuerſly, yet I agree willingly with them, who thinke it ſhould be a ſimilitude taken from Surgeons: becauſe there is nothing more fitting thereunto. And it is all one as if ſome bodie being called to heale a ſicke man, he ſhould anſwere, I am no Phyſitian; or, the nature of the diſeaſe is ſo incurable, that it is impoſſible to heale it. The coniunction copulatiue Vau, which follows afterwards, is put to note out the cauſe of ſuch a deniall, as if he ſhould ſay, I aſſure you I haue no power to do it. His meaning is then, that the eſtate of this people ſhall bee ſo deſperate, that there ſhall not a man bee found, who dares giue order to redreſſe their wants; no not when things ſhall bee driuen to a narrow pinch.

Verſ. 8. Doubtles Ieruſalem is fallen, and Iudah is fallen downe, becauſe their tongue and works, are againſt the Lord, to prouoke the eyes of his glorie.

HEre the Prophet ſhewes the cauſe of this ruine; leſt it might ſeeme that God were cruell in chaſtiſing his people thus ſharply. Now it is as much as if he had ſaid, This people doe periſh moſt iuſtly, ſeeing they haue ſo many waies hardned their harts againſt the wrath of the Lord. And hereby he cuts off all complaints. For we know how audaciouſlie the world rageth when it is chaſtiſed more then ordinarily it is wont to be. Now he ſaith, they were readie both in words and deeds, to commit all ſorts of euils. Hee ſpeakes alſo of the deſtruction of the citie as of a thing preſently acted; albeit the time paſt, may bee taken for the time to come, as oftentimes it is.

To prouoke to wrath.] This manner of ſpeech amplifies the fault: ſhewing that of ſet purpoſe they meant to prouoke the Lord. For the things that are done before our eies doe very much offend vs, eſpecially if they be diſpleaſing vnto vs. Wicked men mocke with God, as if they could beguile him. But becauſe nothing can be hidden from him, be it neuer ſo ſecret, Iſaiah reprocheth them that in his preſence without bluſhing they ouerflowed in committing their wickedneſſes. The epithite glory, is alſo to be marked: for it is a ſigne of more then a furious brutiſhnes, not to be touched with any feare or reuerence, when the Maieſtie of God is preſent. Now God had wonderfully manifeſted his glorie to the people of Iſrael, ſo as they ought to haue been humbled in good earearneſt, if they had had any droppe of ſhame or modeſtie in them. Let the wicked then murmure againſt God as they will, and accuſe him of crueltie, yet ſhall the cauſe of all their calamities be found in their owne hands.

Verſ. 9. *The triall of their countenance * teſtifieth againſt them; yea, they declare their ſinnes as Sodome, they hide them not. Woe be vnto their ſoules: for they haue rewarded euill vnto themſelues.*

* Or, ſhall anſwere for them.

BEcauſe the Prophet had to deale with hypocrits, that were ſhameleſſe and impudent, who yet bragged that they were very holy men: hee ſaith, that their very countenance teſtified againſt them, what they were, and that there was no need to goe ſeeke out witneſſes a farre off to beare witnes againſt them to conuince them of their wickednes. For he takes the word, to anſwer, to beare witnes, or to confeſſe. Howſoeuer then that they diſguiſed their faces and their foreheads, ſo as they were able to deceiue others, yet notwithſtanding God conſtraines them to diſcouer themſelues, and to manifeſt themſelues to be ſuch as they were indeede: ſo as in deſpite of their teeth they bare the markes of their fraudes and diſſimulations in their faces.

Others expound, that their wickedneſſes were ſo apparent that one might perceiue the vilanie which they would couer, as in a glaſſe. But that which by and by followes confirmes the firſt ſenſe, when he ſaith they declared their ſinnes as the Sodomites. By which words he ſignifies, that they ſo let looſe the bridle to wickednes, y they bragged of their filthineſſe without bluſhing; as if it had been ſome excellent thing worthie of praiſe; firſt to haue taken away all difference betweene honeſtie and vilanie, and then to giue ouer themſelues to all prophane licentiouſneſſe. And therefore he compares them to the Sodomites, who were ſo farre blinded with their voluptuouſneſſe that they caſt themſelues headlong with a blockiſh brutiſhnes into all manner of leaudnes. You ſee then what is meant by the teſtifying of their faces, whereof he hath ſpoken before, to wit, that they bare in their faces manifeſt tokens of impietie, which were more then ſufficient to witneſſe their guiltines. Gen. 18 20. & 19. 5.

Woe be vnto them.] He here expreſſeth that which hath been ſaid heretofore alreadie: that all the cauſe of their euils remained in themſelues: becauſe they had prouoked the Lord by their vices and naughtines. And therefore they had no way to wind themſelues ſelues out; and if they did, yet it ſhould bee but in vaine, becauſe the euill was ſo rooted in their bones; as if hee ſhould haue ſaid, Seeke what pretext you can to colour your ſinnes, yet you cannot accuſe God, as if hee ſhould ſmite you wrongfully. Know then, that your ſelues are the cauſe of it; and therefore giue glorie to God, and lay the whole blame vpon your owne heads.

Verſ. 10. Say ye, Surely it ſhall be well with the iuſt: for they ſhall eate the fruites of their works.

BEfore I ſet downe the opinion of others, I will touch ŷ true meaning of the words. Becauſe it is an vſuall thing that the threatnings of ſuch heauy vengeances of God haue been wont to bring a marueilous bitter and ſharpe temptation to the faithfull; and withall becauſe there is ſeldome any ſuch publike calamities, but they are alſo wrapped vp in the ſame with the wicked; for this cauſe the Prophet, as I take it, brings them back to the prouidence of God, which neuer ſo confounds things together, but that in the middeſt of ſuch confuſions he hath skill to diſcerne betweene the euill and the good.

But this place is diuerſly expounded. For ſome tranſlate, Say to the iuſt, becauſe he is good, he ſhall eate the fruite of his hands: and after their opinion, we ſhould gather this ſenſe; I will and commaund that the godly be of good courage: for howſoeuer I doe ſharply puniſh the ſinnes of the people, yet notwithſtanding it ſhall goe well with them. But this ſenſe ſeemes to me more agreeable, Say, that is, hold this for a ſure principle. Becauſe to ſay, is often taken in the Scriptures to think, and to haue been perſwaded: as in Dauid, I ſaid, I will take heed to my waies: and infinite other ſuch places. He commaunds not then that one ſhould tell the iuſt; but that euery godly man ſhould rather be perſwaded of this truth in his owne heart: namely, that his eſtate ſhould be happie and bleſſed, howſoeuer it ſeemed miſerable for the time preſent. And ſo I take the word Ton; for an happie and proſperous eſtate: as in the former verſe he vſed the word Raah, which is of a contrarie ſignification, & againſt which he now oppoſeth Ton. And thus I thinke that Raah ſhould not be taken for wofull, but for a troublous eſtate. Pſalm. 39. 1.

Alſo becauſe word for word, it is, Say, Surely it ſhal be well with the iuſt, it ſeemes that the particle Ci ſhould either be affirmatiue, as in many other places: or rather ſuperfluous. Although it be very likely, it ſhould be put by way of confirmation, as if he had ſaid, Surely it ſhall be well to the iuſt, let all occaſion of doubting therefore betaken away, and let it be held for certaine, that his condition ſhall be moſt bleſſed and happie. Now forasmuch as this is hard to perſwade any of, he addes, that he ſhal eate the fruits of his workes, that is, he ſhall not bee defrauded of the reward of his equitie. Whereas others take To ſay, to admoniſh, and tranſlate theſe words It ſhall be well, Admoniſh the iuſt that he do well; I reiect that expoſitiõ as beeing drawne too farr off.

Verſ. 11. Woe be to the wicked, it ſhall be euill with him: for the reward of his hands ſhall be giuen him.

HE oppoſeth this as a contrarie member to the former: from whence it is eaſie to gather the Prophets meaning: to wit, that his purpoſe was to comfort the good, and to terrifie the wicked by ſetting forth the righteous iudgement of God. For when any great calamitie falles out, by which all are alike afflicted hand ouer head, we begin to call it into queſtion whether the world be guided by the prouidence of God or no, or rather by the turning of the wheele of blind fortũe. Thus the faithfull feare to be wrapped vp in the ſame ruine with ŷ wicked. Others againe think that it is all one whether a man bee godly or wicked, ſeeing aſwell the one as the other are alike afflicted with peſtilence, warre, famine, and other ſuch corrections. And ſo from thence, this peruerſe imagination entreth in the minde of man, that there is no difference betweene the reward of the godly, and the vngodly. Amongſt ſueh an heape of darke cogitations, many by the temptation of the fleſh, are ſolicited to deſpaire. The Prophet therefore ſhewes the vpright iudgement of God; to the end they might perſeuere in his feare; and might alſo know, that thoſe ſhal not eſcape vnpuniſhed, who perſwade themſelues that he will not correct them, though they prouoke him dayly to wrath and indignation.

Alſo he exhorts them to magnifie and extoll Gods iuſtice with high reuerence: as if he ſhould ſay, Do not think that this world is gouerned by chaunce: or that God ſtrikes he cares not how, without keeping meaſure: but reſolue your ſelues aſſuredly that he will deale well with the iuſt: for the Lord will giue him that which he hath promiſed, and will not diſappoint him of his hope. And on the other ſide, be you as verilie perſwaded that the condition of the wicked ſhall bee moſt accurſed: becauſe hee himſelfe ſeekes his owne woe, and therefore ſhall it fall vpon his owne pate. And herewithall the Prophet alſo reprooues the blockiſhnes of the people who felt not the iudgement of God. For they ſuffred the puniſhment of their iniquities; and yet they hardenned themſelues againſt the blowes, as if they had bin altogether ſenſeleſſe. Now there cannot a worſe thing befall vs then when we harden our hearts againſt corrections, and feele not the hand that ſmiteth vs: when we perceaue ſuch a ſenſeleſneſſe in vs, ſurely then we are almoſt paſt hope of amendment.

Verſ. 12. Children are extortioners of my people: and women haue rule ouer them: O my people, they that leade thee, cauſe thee to erre, and deſtroy the way of thy pathes.

The

THe Prophet alſo reprooues the follie and blockiſhneſſe of this people who were ſtarke blind, euen at noone day. There is nothing which men beare more impatiently, then to endure the yoke to be laid vpon their ſhoulders: neither do they verie readilie ſubmit themſelues to the gouernment of any that haue more power then themſelues. We muſt needes ſay that ſuch as obey delicate and effeminate perſons, and ſuffer that ſuch folke ſhould oppreſſe them, are become ſottiſh, impotent, and faint hearted. Neither is it to be doubted alſo, but thoſe who thus willingly did offer their ſhoulders like Aſſes to beare the burthen, were ſmitten from heauen with a ſpirit of amazednes. I graunt that thoſe who are couragious ought to beare the rule of a tyrant: but Iſaiah reproueth the Iewes, who for that they had obſtinately ſhaken off the ſweete yoke of God, were now readie to yeeld themſelues vnder vilanous and baſe ſubiection, & that with moſt ſeruile conditions. They could not complaine that they were conſtrained to it by force, ſeeing they obeyed them freely; to whome notwithſtanding they needed not to haue beene ſubiect vnleſſe they would. Whereby it appeares that they were ſtricken with the hand of God, and daunted with feare, ſo as they had neither ſtrength nor wit left in them.

And it is euen that ſame vengeance wherwith God had threatned the people with before by Moſes. For as we ſaid erewhile, the Prophets had ſtill an eye to this generall doctrine of Moſes in all their Sermons. For how can it bee that men hauing power to reſiſt, ſhould willingly put themſelues into bondage (which notwithſtanding they naturally flee) vnleſſe that God hauing depriued them of all counſell and vnderſtanding, ſhould thus leaue them to themſelues to auenge himſelfe by this meanes of their rebellions? Wherefore as oft as the like befals any of vs, let vs not think it is come to paſſe by chance: no, let vs on the contrarie know, that when witleſſe men, and more feeble then little children, ſhall haue dominion ouer vs, that the wrath of God hath then ceaſſed vpon vs: vnleſſe peraduenture we meane to be reproued by the Prophet, of a much greater blockiſhneſſe.

They that lead thee.] He goes on ſtil with the ſame doctrine, to wit, that God is exceedingly angry with ỹ Iewes, in that he hath let looſe the bridle to the wicked to trouble all. From hence alſo we may coniecture, that the common people fooliſhly ſuffered themſelues to be led hoodwinked by the Gouernours; ſo as they receiued their edicts and courſe of conuerſation as oracles. Now all the corruptions which raigned euery where, came frō thence. To the end that ỹ contagion therfore ſhould not ſpread further by the ignorance of the people, Iſaiah cries to them that they ſhould take heede of the Gouernours themſelues who were carrying them away headlong into deſtruction. Others expound; Thoſe which make thee happy. But becauſe the participle which he vſeth may be deriued from the verb Iaſhar, which ſignifies to gouerne, I had rather follow this interpretation, becauſe me thinks it ſutes beſt with the ſcope of the text. I confeſſe indeede that the falſe Prophets flattered the people: yet I ſee no reaſon why he ſhould mention their flatteries in this place. But it agrees very well to the heads and leaders: namely that they were the cauſe of ruine. For as the Princes are ordained for the common ſafety, ſo alſo is there not a more dangerous plague, then when they be men of no value; ruling all things as they liſt. He ſaith then, that thoſe which gouern are the cauſe of the euill, and corrupt all; ſeeing they ought to correct others, & to ſhew them the way by their examples.

Verſ. 13. The Lord ſtandeth vp to plead, yea, he ſtandeth to iudge the people.

14. The Lord ſhall enter into iudgement with the auncients of his people, and the Princes thereof: for ye haue * eaten vp the vineyard? the ſpoile of the poore is in your houſes.

* Or, conſumed.

WHileſt impiety runnes ouer the countrie with the raines in her neck, and that the Lord ſends no ſuccour from aboue, we either think that he is idle, or that he hath forgotten his charge. Therefore after he hath complained of the princes which did not their office, hee addes now that the Lord will do his; and that he will not ſuffer ſuch wicked ones to goe vnpuniſhed. For there cannot be a greater offence, nor a thing that troubles our mindes more, then when Magiſtrates in the open ſight of all the people ſhall ſhew all manner of leude examples, and yet none muſt dare once to open his mouth: nay by your leaue they muſt be ſoothed and flattered. Then we beginne to aske where is the Lord become? from whom (by this ouer great licentiouſnes) the chiefeſt thing wherein his glorie ought to ſhine, to wit, in good gouernment, is taken away. Iſaiah meetes with this difficultie. As if he ſhould ſay, Albeit I confeſſe indeed that the common people are bad inough; yet becauſe ỹ Princes themſelues are corrupt in the higheſt degree, yea ſo farre as by their euill examples to defile the whole bodie of the cōmon wealth; know ye, that God is gone vp into his heauenly throne, as a iuſt Iudge, who at the laſt wil cal them to account, and will giue euery one of them according to their workes. And yet he exempts not the common people as if they were faultleſſe; but to ỹ end we might know the fountaine whēce all the euils proceeded, he chiefly applies himſelfe to ỹ Gouernours in particular, and threatens them with that puniſhment which they had deſerued. Hee had ſet vp a iudgement ſeate for God before; from whence he ſhould pleade: now he tels them againe that he ſhall come: but how? with the auncients. Now although it were not greatly from the purpoſe, that the Prophet ſhould allude to thoſe lawful aſſemblies, where the ancients are set with God, as being his leiutenants: yet notwithstanding I agree to the most receiued opinion: to wit, that God will euen plead against the Ancients of his people. This place then answeres to that of Dauid; God sits in ỹ assembly of gods: Psal. 82. 2. In a word, his meaning is to say, Although the Princes haue libertie now to doe what they will without punishment, and that no man dares reprooue their disordered appetites; yet know ye that there is a day cõming wherein they shall feele that God hath authoritie aboue them, wherein also they shall render vp an account to him of all their doings.

No doubt but the Iudges of that time were very vnwilling to heare such reprehensions: for they could not endure to be handled so sharpely; neither did they thinke it was lawfull so to doe: because they would haue all in their power; & would haue their fantasies held for law, that all things which please them should be lawfull for them; that euery man should glose and flatter them, by consenting to the things which they had wickedly done: they would bee iudged of none in their actions; no, they would not be subiect to God himself. Being growne to this vnrulines then, so as they could neither beare admonitions nor threatnings, the Prophet euen summons them to appeare before the iudgement seate of God.

We must note also, that they are called honorable Princes of the people; but it is in title onely: for in respect of their great dignities they thought themselues exempt and discharged from all lawes, as by some speciall priuiledge: and thought that howsoeuer prophane Kings and Princes were indeed subiect to the iudgement of God; yet that they notwithstanding were exempt from it by meanes of their holines. They perswaded themselues then that they had nothing to doe with reprehensions, as being a matter needles to proceede against them by threats and terrors, as if they had been prophane persons. And therefore the Prophet expresly telleth them, that the Lord will not onely enter into iudgement with the Princes in generall; but with these proude hypocrites, to whom he had committed the charge of his people.

And you haue consumed vp.] The similitude of the vine is very common, specially when mention is made of the children of Israel. And by this word the Prophet redoubles their fault, because they had dealt no more fauourable with the people of God (whom he had loued with a singular affection) then if they had been some profane nation ouer which they had ruled. This pronoune you, also hath great vehemencie in it: because he speakes euen to the husbandmen themselues, who being set to dresse the vine, did deuoure it like wilde beasts. And therefore he greatly amplifies their crueltie in this behalfe. For what a disloyaltie was that to deuoure that which they should haue conserued and kept? Now the Lord shewes by this similitude, what a care he hath of his; and how affectionately he loues them: not onely in regard that the Church is his vine and heritage; but also when he saith, that hee will not suffer the disloyaltie and wickednesse of them that gouerne by tyrannie.

When he ads, that the spoyles of the poore were in their houses, hee names one particular, by which the other parts of their life might be knowne. Now the Princes houses should rather haue been as the Lords house, in regard they supplied the place of God, which ought to haue been holy to all. It was an extreame sacriledge then, when of a sacred place they made it a theeuish den. Also this word poore, augments their fault. For it is the most barbarous crueltie of all others, to snatch from the poore and needie, who are not able to defend themselues, and therefore ought rather in deed to be succoured.

Vers. 15. What haue you to doe that you beate my people to peeces, and grinde the faces of the poore, saith the Lord, euen the Lord of hosts?

HE reckons vp some particulars, by which it appeares that the poore were proudly dealt withall by them; yea cruelly, and with all oppression and wrong. It was not needfull that the Prophet should recite by peecemeale al things which were to be reprooued in the Princes: because by this little, it sufficiently appeares how vniust and tyrannicall their gouernment was. But where shall the poore finde refuge, if not at the hands of the Magistrate, who ought to be the father of the countrie, and to be an helpe to miserable persons? Therefore hee vseth an interrogation with a kind of vehemencie, What? as if he should say, What boldnes is this? What barbarisme and crueltie is it thus to abuse the wretched estate of the poore, and to spare them nothing at all? So also by the two similitudes, he sets forth their pride, ioyned with crueltie.

Saith the Lord of hosts.] To the end this reprehension might haue such authoritie among them as was meete, he sets the person of God before them: for here is a close opposition: as if hee should say, You must not take these things as from the mouth of man, but it is God himselfe, who is the author of this accusation: it is he that pursues these iniuries, who will also take vengeance of you for them in the end. And therefore because those who are set in any degree of honour do vsually so ouerflow with pride, that they despise the words and admonitions of all men, he opposeth against the pride of such, the Maiestie of God, to the end they may not bee so conceited as to despise the sharpe threatnings which hee hath charged them with in good earnest. And yet let vs remember that wee take not this place as if the Prophet preached nothing but the mercie of God onlie. For hauing denounced vengeance in generall to all, he toucheth the heads especially, to the end that neither the one nor the other might thinke to escape the hand of God.

God. Wherefore hee here vſeth the argument, which we call from the greater to the leſſe: How can it be that the Lord ſhould pardon the common people, ſeeing hee muſt euen puniſh the Princes, becauſe they haue deſtroyed the vine?

Verſ. 16. The Lord alſo ſaith, becauſe the daughters of Zion are hautie, and walke with ſtretched out necks, and with wandring eyes, walking and minſing as they goe, and making a tinkling with their feete.

HEre followes another threatning againſt the ambition, diſſolution, and pride of women. And in this the Prophet hath not followed any preciſe order, but reprooues now one vice, then another, as the matter required: and then hauing finiſhed his ſermon, hee comprehends a briefe ſumme of it in few words, as hee did in the firſt Chapter. Hee ſpeakes then againſt ſumptuous apparrell, and ſuperfluous ornaments, which were euident ſignes of vaine oſtentation. For where there is this exceſſe in apparrell and ornaments, there is alwaies ambition ioyned with it: and ſo by conſequence, many other vices for the moſt part, doe goe hand in hand with it. For, from whence comes the ſuperfluitie both of men and women, but from pride? Firſt then hee iuſtly taxeth this vice as the welſpring of all the abuſe, and ſhewes it by the ſigne thereof, to wit, by their going; becauſe the women walked with ſtretched out necks. Now as it is an euident ſigne of modeſtie to bow the head (as alſo prophane authors doe witnes) ſo to liſt it vp too much, is a ſigne of arrogancie. And for a womans head liſted vp, what can it ſhew elſe but pride? The Prophet therfore did wiſely, in beginning at the fountaine it ſelfe: for if he had begun at the outward ſignes; as at the garments, walking, and ſuch like things, they would haue had their replies at hand, to wit, that their harts were vpright and innocent enough for all that: and that there was no ſuch great neceſſitie to crie ſo bitterly againſt them, and to ſummon them before the iudgement ſeate of God for putting on a little braue or light apparrell. To the end therefore that hee may meete with their vaine obiections, hee firſt diſcouers ỹ inward diſeaſe, which ſhewes it ſelfe euery way in all the outward attire.

That which hee addes of wandring eies, ſhewes a ſhameles luſt, which is oftenеſt ſeene and eſpied (as certaine witneſſes thereof) in the eies: for bold and audacious eies, are the true meſſengers of a diſhoneſt heart. On the contrarie, chaſte women haue their eies ſtedfaſt and drawne in as it were, rather then rouing and wandring abroad. Tinkling. This geſture ſutes wel with an immodeſt and laſciuious countenance. It is vncertaine, whether the women had little belles to their pantables, which tinckled as they went: or rather whether in keeping meaſure they carried their countenances as women dancers do, becauſe the manner of attire is much changed ſince that time. Notwithſtandiug I willingly receiue this expoſition; that in going they made their ſteps to ſound: for the very words doe ſufficiently ſhew it.

Verſ. 17. Therefore ſhall the Lord make the heads of the daughters of Zion bald, and the Lord ſhall diſcouer their ſecret parts.

18. In that day ſhall the Lord take away the ornament of the ſlippers, and the calles, and the round tires,

19. The ſweete balles, and the bracelets, and the bonets,

20. The tires of the head, and the ſloppes, and the head bands, and tablets, and the earings,

21. The rings and the mufflers,

22. The coſtly apparrell and the vailes, and the wimples, and the criſping pinnes,

23. And the glaſſes and the fine linnen, and the hoodes, and the launes.

HEre is a coupling of things together, in ſtead of a particle that renders the cauſe. For he denounceth, that ſeeing they cannot be amended neither by gentle admonitions, nor by any words; that the Lord will proceede otherwiſe with them, becauſe hee will no more vſe ſharpenes and rigor of ſpeech, but will come vpon them in great diſpleaſure and with his arme out ſtrethed to take vengeance vpon them. And therefore euen as they had ſhewed their rebellion from the head vnto the feete, ſo he alſo giues them to vnderſtand, that the Lord wil ſhew the ſignes of his vengeance vpon all the parts of their bodies. Wherefore he begins with the head, where the principall decking is; and afterwards deſcends to the other parts. Now we are to obſerue that the Prophet reprooues not the exceſſiue pompe of theſe women with this ſharpenes & vehemency without cauſe: for aboue all other vices, wherewith they are ſtained, they naturally burne with a fond deſire to decke and trim themſelues brauely. And although they are prone enough by nature to couetouſnes; yet will they ſpare no coſt to make themſelues fine: yea, they wil pinch their bellies, and offer violence to nature it ſelfe, that they may haue wherewith to attire themſelues the more coſtly & ſumptuouſly: ſo greatly are they corrupted with this vice, that it ſurmountes all others.

What vice is moſt predominate in women.

Hiſtories doe ſhew what vprores women haue raiſed at Rome, by reaſon of the law called Oppia, which was ordained concerning apparrell, becauſe one ſide would eſtabliſh it, and the other part would haue it aboliſhed: ſo that there could be no concluſion made hereabout by any graue and moderate courſe, becauſe of their riots. But we neede not goe so farre to seeke examples; for wee may find infinite numbers almost thorowout all nations; so as it is a vice too common in al ages.

Now because we are alwaies sharpe witted to deuise excuses to couer our excessiue superfluities, therefore the Prophet pointes as it were with his finger at the fountaine of all the mischiefe: to wit, this furious pride, before spoken of, wherewith women are carried away when they are to shew themselues, and appeare before others. For to the ende, they may be the better seene and discerned they will shine with deckings of their garments, that so the eies of euery one may be drawne vnto them. The Prophet then hauing touched the inward sore; hee reckons vp many particulars, that so he might bring the sottishnes of women into the open view of all the world to receiue disgrace. And therefore hee makes a long catalogue; because none are more curious then a woman about this matter of piling vp fashion vpon fashion, and tire vpon tire. She will heape ornaments one vpon another without nũber: and therefore it was not without cause that the auncients in times past called a womans cabinet, or chest, A world. For if all the pieces which are here mentioned, should be gathered together, and laid vpon an heape, a man should find as many fashions as there are parts of the world. And therefore it seemes the Prophet here rifles the chests of women to bring forth their paltrie packe of iewels which were laid vp therein; to the ende that by how much the more they gloried in them, and tooke pleasure therein; by so much the more euery one might bee made ẏ better acquainted with their follies. Therefore howsoeuer here bee a long catalogue, yet is nothing superfluous; seeing thereby their insatiable lusts are the better discerned.

A womans cabinate called a world by the Ancians.

As touching the particulars, I meane not to stand dilating vpon euery thing apart, seeing euen the best learned of the Hebrews themselues are doubtfull concerning some of them, neither can they make any true definition of the sundrie formes of these ornaments. It is sufficient for vs to know ẏ summe of the words, and to vnderstand the Prophets drift; to wit, that he gathers together and reckons vp all these apish toyes, to the end the ambition and dissolution, with the great varieties thereof, might be so manifest; that there might no excuse bee brought for defending of them. Also it were too great an impudencie to affirme that whatsoeuer women deuise in their fooliſh braine beyond the bounds of common honestie, should be counted and esteemed as necessarie for couering the bodie. For how many things are they which he here recites, which are neither required for nature, necessitie, nor for honestie? To what purpose serues these bracelets, earings, chaines, and other iewels? whence it appeares, that such a superfluous heape, could not bee excused with any pretence whatsoeuer. It is therefore an immoderate superfluitie which must either bee repressed, or restrained; for that oft times they fall out to bee whorish intisements, whereby to weaken the heart, and to inflame it with wanton lusts. No meruaile therefore, if the Prophet be so earnest against this vice, and denounceth such fearefull iudgements against it.

Vers. 24. And in stead of sweete sauour, there shall be stincke, and in stead of a girdle, a rent, and in stead of a dressing of the haire, baldnes, and in stead of a stomacher, a girding of sackcloth, and burning in stead of beautie.

IT is certaine that this region abounded with sweete smels: and wee neede not doubt, but they were very inordinate in the vse of them, as in other things. We see that euen the nations very farre off from the East, did not abstaine from excesse herein: for there was no cost nor long distance of places which could hinder them from it. How much more did the excesse herein ouerflow then, thinke wee, in the place where such things were in abundance? whereby doubtles one might see lust enflamed, and dissolutions augmented more and more. He signifieth then that they did many waies abuse these ointments and perfumes. For men are ingenious in pursuing their lusts, and yet can neuer be satisfied.

In stead of a girdle, a rent.] Others translate, Ripping, or vnlooſing, that is to say; the Lord will vngird them. Now he meant to oppose two things greatly contrary one to another: to wit, that as the women walked being curiously girt and adorned, so they shall now walke torne and naked. He also opposeth to dressing of the haire baldnes: because they did not weare their heare modestly, but in all dissolutenes. Also against a stomacher, a girding of sackcloth: Now whether it were a belt or some other kind of girdle, it is certaine that the Prophet meant to decipher out some ornament which was in great estimation. Also he opposeth burning, to beautie: For delicate & braue women are afraid to go often into the sunne, for feare of being sunburnt: and yet he saith notwithstanding that this shall happen vnto them. In a word, as well men as women are here admonished how soberly they are to vse all the gifts of God, as well in their diet, and apparell, as in all their other behauiour. For the Lord cannot away with excesse, and it must needes be that he auenge himselfe vpon it by sore and grieuous punishments, when men will not be brought into order by light corrections.

Vers. 25. Thy men also shall fall by thy sword, and thy strength in the battell.

26. Then shall her gates mourne and lament, and shee being desolate shall sit vpon the ground.

NOw he turnes his speech towards Ierusalem, and to all the kingdome of Iudah. Hauing Hauing therefore ſhewed, that the whole bodie is infected and corrupt, and that there is no part free frō contagion, & hath not ſpared ſo much as the very women, he returnes vnto a generall doctrine. Now yee know it were not conuenient that there ſhould bee giuen to euery woman many husbands. Beſides, that which followes in the next place did not appertaine to this people only. Now hee ſets before them the manner of their chaſtiſement, in telling them that al the ſtrength of the people ſhall bee brought downe by warres. And from thence followes the mourning of the gates, which he foretelles ſhall come to paſſe when theſe diſcomfitures ſhall fall out. We know that in that time they kept their aſſemblies in the gates. So then euen as the gates did (as you would ſay) reioyce in the multitude of the Citizens: ſo they are ſaid alſo to mourne when there ſhould be ſuch an horrible waſt and conſumption of them. Notwithſtanding, I denie not but that hee compares Ieruſalem to a deſolate woman bewailing her widowhood. For it was the manner of thoſe that mourned, to ſit vpon the ground: as alſo this people were addicted to many more ceremonies, then our manner of life will beare. The ſumme notwithſtanding of his ſpeech is, that the citie ſhall remaine without inhabitants.

THE IV. CHAPTER.

Verſ. 1. And in that day ſhall ſeuen women take hold of one man, ſaying, Wee will eate our owne bread, and we will weare our owne garments: onely let vs be called by thy name, and take away our reproch.

HEE ſtill followes the ſame matter; and no doubt but this Sermon was made together with the former. And therfore we muſt not ſeparate this verſe in any wiſe from it. By this circumſtance hee more fully expreſſeth what that ruine and deſtruction which he had before threatned againſt the Iewes, ſhould bee. For vnleſſe threatnings be redoubled againſt hypocrits, either they will play the deafe men, or elſe they will extenuate them in ſuch ſort, as the ſeueritie of God ſhall not touch them to the quicke. He here ſhewes then by the effect what horror of imminent deſtruction ſhall come vpon them, to the ende they ſhould not promiſe an eſcaping from it at their pleaſure: as if he ſhould ſay, Thinke not that a little skirmiſh ſhall leſſen your number in ſome part: but it is rather an extreame ruine which threatens you; ſo as there ſhall ſcarſely one husband bee found for ſeuen women. And hereunto appertaines the word, ſhall take. It is a thing contrarie to the modeſtie of a woman, to goe and offer her ſelfe of her owne accord to a man. Now the Prophet ſaith, that they ſhall not onely doe ſo: but that there ſhall be ſeuen women, which ſhall lay hands vpon a man to take hold of him; ſo ſmall ſhall the number of men be.

That which immediatly followes doth yet amplifie this extreame waſt; when they ſay, We will eate our owne bread, &c. For ſeeing it is the proper office of the husband to prouide for his wife and familie, the women doe ſeeke husbands with vnequall and baſe conditions, when they diſcharge them of all care of getting their maintenance. There muſt needs bee a very ſmall number of men left then, when many women hauing caſt off all ſhamefaſtnes are not onely conſtrained to content themſelues with one husband, but doe alſo agree to get their owne liuing, and deſire no more but that the husband will keepe the faith of mariage with them.

Let thy name be called vpon vs.] We may render it in another ſenſe, Let vs beare thy name. For when the woman comes into the family of the husband, ſhee takes his name, and loſeth her own: in as much as ỹ husband is her head: and therefore her vaile is a ſigne of her ſubiection. As Abimelech ſaid to Sara, Abraham thy husband ſhall be the couering of thine head: Geneſ 20.16. But if the woman marrie not, ſhe remaineth couered vnder the name of her family. Now it ſufficiently appeares by the 48. chapter of Geneſis, that this is the true ſenſe of this manner of ſpeech: where Iacob bleſſing his nephewes, ſaith, Let my name, and the name of my fathers, Abraham and Iſaac, bee called vpon them: that is to ſay, Let them be of our ſtocke, & partakers of the couenant, & neuer ſhut out thereof, as it came to paſſe in Eſau and Iſmael. The prophane authors alſo ſpeake after this manner: Martia deſiring to returne againe to Cato, (as it is in the ſecond booke of Lucanus) ſaith, Giue me only the bare title of mariage: let it bee lawfull to write vpon my Tombe; Martia wife of Cato. 1. Cor. 11. 3. Gen. 25. 23. & 21. 10. Cato and Martia.

Now they ſay, Take away our reproch: becauſe it ſeemes that they beare ſome reproch, when they find no husbands: not onely in that it ſeemeth they are deſpiſed as vnworthy, but becauſe it was a ſingular bleſſing of God among the ancient people to haue poſteritie: and therefore the Prophet ſaith, they ſhall not onely haue neede with care to bethinke them how to auoid this reproch; but ſhall vſe all poſſible perſwaſions to attaine thereunto. Laſtly, he ſignifies that the deſtruction ſhall bee ſuch, that almoſt all husbands ſhall die.

Verſ. 2. And in that day ſhall the bud of the Lord be beautifull and glorious, and the fruit of the earth ſhall bee

* excellent

* Or, in excellencie, and renowme.

excellent and pleasant for them that are escaped of Israel.

THis consolation is added in very good season, in regard that the faithfull might haue bene vtterly discomforted with the newes of such an horrible waste, and might doubt in themselues how the couenant of God could stand fast in this so great a ruine of the people. For there is great differēce betweene these two things, that the people shall be as the sand of the sea for multitude, and yet notwithstanding that they shall be so rooted out by an horrible ruine, that there shall be no dignitie nor glorie at all remaining in those that shall escape, no, not so much as a glimpse of any name. Isaiah therefore according to his custome, as also the rest of the Prophets, preuents the mischiefe in due time, and moderates the terror by adding this consolation, to the end that the faithfull should assure themselues, that notwithstanding all these things, the Church shall be saued, and that by this meanes they should fortifie their hearts in good hope. Euen as then in the second Chapter he disputed touching the restoring of mount Zion, so now also he promiseth, that a new Church shall spring vp, euen as a bud or sprig shooteth vp in the field, which was vndressed before. They do commonly expound this place of Christ: and so much the rather is this opinion receiued, as it seemeth to haue some colour by the sentence of Zachary; Behold a man whose name is Branch. Which is also further confirmed, in that our Prophet speakes not barely of this branch, but with addition, of honorable: as if it had been the meaning of the Prophet to speake of the Diuinitie of Christ. And after when the Prophet addes the fruit of the earth, they referre that to his humane nature. But when we shall consider all things aduisedly, I doubt not but he taketh the bud of the Lord, and the fruit of the earth, for an abundance of most ample and vnwonted grace, which abundance shall recreate the affamished: for he speakes euen as if the earth after a waste should be so barren and dry, that it should neuer promise any bud to come out of it, thereby to cause the grace of God to be the more longed for in so sudden a fruitfulnes, as if seared and barren fields should bring forth grasse beyond all hope.

Zach. 6. 12.

This maner of speech also is much vsed in the scriptures, to wit, that the gifts of God shall bud out of the earth, as the Psalmist saith, Truth shall bud out of the earth, and righteousnes shall looke downe from heauen, Psal. 85. 12. Also hereafter in the 45. Chap. The earth shall open, and saluation shal fructifie. It appeares by the course of the text that this is the true meaning of the place: for Isaiah addes in the words following, that the deliuerance of Israel, to wit, this handfull yet remaining, which the Lord will saue from this destruction, shall be the glorie and beautie of this bud. Also the word Pheliath which they commonly turne Deliuerance, is collectiue in this place as in many others. 1 But yet there may be a double exposition, either that those which shall be deliuered shal be a fruit of glorie and a bud of honour: or that the graces of God shall bud amongst them. The first exposition likes me best, because it seemes the Prophet addes the explication in the verse following, when he sayth, That those which shall remayne, shall be called holy. Questionlesse the Prophets meaning is to say, that the glorie of God shall appeare clearely, when a new Church shall be borne, as if hee should create a people of nothing. 2

Those who draw and restraine this place vnto the person of Christ, make themselues a scorne to the Iewes, as if for want of testimonies of scripture they should pull in places by the eares to serue their turne. For there are other places of scripture, by which wee may more clearely prooue that Christ is true God and man, so as it is no neede to coyne proofes thereof from hence. But yet I confesse that the kingdome of Christ is heere spoken of, vpon which the restauration of the Church is grounded. Neuertheless, let vs obserue ỹ this consolation is not sent to all indifferently, but onely to the remnant which should be drawne out of death as it were by wonderfull meanes. Againe, lest the consolation might seeme to bring but cold comfort if it had ben only sayd that a small number should be deliuered; he speakes of an exceeding glorie, and excellent brightnes, to the end the faithfull might assure themselues that they should receiue no hurt by this their diminishing, because the Church of God takes not her dignitie frō the multitude, but from puritie, which is, when God shall gloriously and excellently beautifie his faithfull ones with the gifts of his Spirit. Whence we ought to gather a most profitable doctrine; namely, that howsoeuer the faithfull be small in number, and that they be like brands taken out of the fire, yet notwithstanding that God will be glorified in the midst of them, and will no lesse shew a proofe of his excellent greatnes amongst them, then if he were in the midst of many.

Vers. 3. Then he that shall be left in Zion, and he that shall remaine in Ierusalem, shalbe called holy, and euery one shall be written * among the liuing in Ierusalem.

* Or, to life in Ierusalem.

HE holds on his former speech still, shewing, that when all the filth of the people shal be purged out, then that which remaines shall be called holy. Whereas some thinke that those are called holy which shall be found written in the booke of life, it seemes to me an ouer strict sense. We should rather reade these two members apart: All those which shal be found in Zion, shalbe holy; and all those which shall remaine in Ierusalem, shall be written in the booke of life. And this repetition is very frequent, and much vsed among the Hebrues, namely, when the Prophet sets forth one benefit of God by many titles; as when it is said, There shalbe saluation in Ierusalem, and remission miſſion of ſinnes in Zion; both which are to be referred to one end: yet neuertheleſſe the grace of God is the better manifeſted, when the cauſe of ſaluation is placed in the free pardon.

There is the like reaſon in this place: for he ſaith, that the Church being waſhed from her filthineſſe, ſhall be cleane; and that all thoſe who haue place in her ſhall be truly the elect of God. But yet it is certaine that this appertains not to all the viſible Church, in the which there are oftentimes many mingled, which only cary the name of the faithfull, and yet haue not any true marke of their profeſſion: yea, theſe ſurmount the little flock in number for the moſt part, euen as the chaffe doth the good corne. And howſoeuer the Lord had cleanſed them from the chaffe in their exile in Babylon, as if he had taken the fanne in his hand: yet wee know that the Church was very far off frō her right hewe notwithſtanding. But in regard that the image of this puritie did then ſhine in ſome part, which truly appeared after the ſheepe were ſeparate from the goats, Iſaiah according to his accuſtomed maner, in ſpeaking of theſe beginnings, comprehends the continuall courſe of time euen to the end, whē God ſhould fully accompliſh that which he had then begun.

We ſee the very ſame thing effected euery day: for although the Church be not wholly purged from her ſpots by being exerciſed vnder the rod and correction, yet notwithſtanding ſhe recouers part of her puritie when the ſpots are taken away. So then ſhe ſuſteines no loſſe by her afflictions, becauſe that as ſhe is diminiſhed one way, ſo ſhe is much more comforted another way, by caſting out from her many hypocrites. For example, the health of a ſick body can not be recouered vnleſſe you firſt purge the rotten and corrupt humors away which is in it. From hence we gather a very fruitfull conſolation, for wee are wont to deſire a multitude, and would by that iudge of the good eſtate of the Church: but we ſhould rather deſire to be a ſmall number, that ſo the glory of God, rather then of a multitude, might ſhine in the midſt of vs. But becauſe our owne glorie carries vs away, from thence it comes to paſſe that wee more regard the number of men then the vertues of ſome few. Wee muſt alſo gather what the true glorie of the Church is, for it then truly floriſheth, when the Saincts haue place in her: and although they be few and deſpiſed of the world, yet they neuertheleſſe make the eſtate thereof floriſhing and deſireable. But becauſe it will neuer be in this world that the Saincts ſhould occupie the place alone in the Church, we muſt patiently beare the mingling, and in the meane while hold it for a ſingular benefit as oft as it approcheth any thing nie to this puritie.

The Church ſuſtaines no loſſe by her afflictions.

Note.

The true glory of the Church defined.

Note.

We haue ſayd alreadie, that by thoſe which are written in the booke of life, we muſt vnderſtand the elect of God, as if he ſhould ſay, The prophane multitude ſhal be cut off, who only haue their names written in the earth. Now the Prophet alludes to the place in Moſes in the 32. of Exod. where he deſires rather to be blotted out of the booke of life, then that all the people ſhould periſh. But although God haue none other booke but his eternall Counſell, by which he hath predeſtinated vs to ſaluation, in adopting vs for his children, yet this ſimilitude agrees very well to our weakne, becauſe our vnderſtanding can not otherwiſe comprehend how God ſhould know his flock, in ſuch wiſe as none of the elect ſhould euer be depriued of eternall life. Seeing then that God hath his choſen writen, the decree of adoption, by meanes wherof eternall felicitie is aſſured vnto them, is called the booke of life. As touching the reprobate, although for a time it ſeemes they be equall to the children of God, yet notwithſtanding they are not enrolled in this Catalogue, as we ſee how they are driuen away when he gathers together, and puts his owne apart. Now the accompliſhment hereof ſhall not be, till the laſt day: notwithſtanding vnto Gods children, becauſe they are aſſured of their election, when they perſeuere conſtantly, while the reprobate fall to reuolting, it is a great comfort in calamities, when being ſhaken with temptations, we continue ſtedfaſt in our vocation.

Verſ. 4. When the Lord ſhall waſh the filthineſſe of the daughters of Zion, and purge the blood of Ieruſalem out of the midſt thereof by the ſpirit of iudgement, and by the ſpirit of burning.

HE ſtill goes on with the ſame doctrine: for in as much as we commonly thinke that the Church receiues great hurt through the afflictions by which ſhe is diminiſhed, the Prophet inſiſts more and more vpō the contrary ſentence. And now to beate back this error, he reaſoneth by the contrary, to wit, that God rather waſheth and purgeth out all the corruptions from his Church by meanes of afflictions. By blood, I vnderſtand not only murthers, and ſuch other notorious crimes, but all maner of filthineſſe and vncleanneſſe whatſoeuer. Now there is a redoubling in this ſimilitude, by which he repeates one and the ſame thing twice, becauſe that which before he called filthineſſe in generall, now he calles it blood in particular, as the fluxe of blood, or ſome ſuch like thing. In ſumme, he ſhewes the fruites which theſe corrections bring, to wit, that by them our filthineſſe is cleanſed. For whileſt vngodlineſſe ſpreades it ſelfe hither and thither without puniſhment, then we grow as corrupt as others, for which cauſe it is neceſſarie that the Lord ſhould awaken vs by admonitions, yea, as a good Phyſition, that he purge, launce, and ſometimes that he ſeare, and burne.

He takes iudgement for puritie, to wit, for the effect of iudgement, when the things which were declining are ſet againe in their firſt eſtate. He addes, the ſpirit of burning, by which their filthineſſes are purged and conſumed. Wherein we are to note two things: Firſt, that the purgation of the Church is wrought by the ſpirit. Secondly, that the name is impoſed vpon the ſpirit by the effects; now of iudgement, now of burning. As if he ſhould ſay, The iudgement of the ſpirit, and the burning of the ſpirit. As oft then as theſe manners of ſpeech are met withall in the Scripture, to wit, The Lord will doe theſe things by the ſpirit of truth, power, and righteouſnes, &c. we may turne this phraſe of ſpeech thus; In truth, in power, and in righteouſnes of the ſpirit. For the ſpirit of God, from whom both the beginning and end of the worke of our ſaluation comes, workes thus in vs. From theſe epithites then we muſt obſerue what the principall effects of the ſpirit are: the Lord purgeth out our droſſe by his ſpirit, that he may amend and reforme vs. By the word iudgement, he ſheweth what the chiefe vertue is in the reſtauration of the Church: to wit, when thoſe good things which were confuſed & ouerthrowne are reſtored, and ſet in their right order againe. Burning alſo ſheweth the maner and way which the Lord vſeth to reſtore the Church to her firſt puritie.

Verſ. 5. And the Lord ſhall create vpon euery place of mount Zion, and vpon the aſſemblies thereof, a cloud and ſmoke by day, and the ſhining of a flaming fire by night: for vpon all the glorie ſhall be a defence.*

* Or, habitation.

6. And a couering ſhall be for a ſhadow in the day for the heate, and a place of refuge, and a couert, for the ſtorme and for the raine.

Vpon euery habitation.] As if he ſhould ſay, There ſhall not bee the leaſt corner in the mountaine of Zion, where the grace and fauour of God ſhall not appeare. I take habitation and aſſemblie, for one and the ſame thing. For I take not Aſſemblie for congregation, but for the place where men meete. Now to the end hee might deſcribe and ſet forth a full bleſſing, he alludes to that which Moſes recites; namely, that when the Lord would deliuer his people from the bondage of Egypt, hee ſent a piller of a cloud by day, and a piller of a fire by night, Exod. 13. 21. It is an vſuall thing with the Prophets, that when they would ſet forth any excellent benefit, they then call to remembrance this moſt glorious worke of God, to wit, The deliuerance out of Egypt. Becauſe then did the Lord wonderfully diſplay the infinite treaſures of his grace, to the end hee might eſtabliſh his Church; not omitting in that worke any teſtimonie of his bountie and goodnes, that the felicitie of his choſen people might be famous thorowout the whole world. But aboue all things, this was moſt memorable, that they ſhould be preſerued by day, by the couering of a cloud from the annoyance of too much heate, and that the piller of fire ſhould goe before them in the night, to the end they ſhould not wander or goe aſtray. The ſumme is this; that when God will gather home his Church from out of Babylon, that the manner of it ſhall bee no leſſe admirable, then that by which the people were in times paſt deliuered out of Egypt. Not that they ſhould be accompanied in the midſt of their iournie betweene Babylon and Iudea, with the cloud and the piller of fire, as in the wildernes: but becauſe he ſhewed teſtimonies of his fauour towards them by meanes no way leſſe excellent then they. As if any ſhould ſay at this day, The Lord will illuminate vs by the light of his holy ſpirit; he will giue clouen tongues, by which his Goſpell ſhall be ſpread thorowout the world: No man would take this literally, as if the Holy Ghoſt ſhould be ſent downe from heauen in a viſible forme: but this miracle ſhould bee remembred only, to the end the faithful might learne to reſt at this day vpon ỹ ſame power of God in the reſtauration of the Church, as the Apoſtles had experience of in their time. And withall, that by this manner of ſpeech the Prophet mentioneth a continuall ſucceſſion of bleſſing; as if he ſhould ſay, God will not ſtretch forth his hand to deliuer you for a moment only, but euen as he hath alwaies aſſiſted our fathers in the deſert; ſo after he hath deliuered you, he will defend you vnto the end.

That which he addes, vpon All glorie, depends vpon that which he ſaid before, to wit, that the bud which ſhould againe ſprout forth, ſhould be glorious. It is as much then as if he had ſaid, Vpon thoſe which ſhal beare the ſignes and markes of their deliuerance. It may be alſo that he alludes to that place of Exodus: where it is ſaid, that the houſes which the deſtroying Angell had marked, were not hurt: Exod. 12. 23. For as then the ſprinkling of the blood was a ſafekeeper of their ſaluation; ſo alſo Iſaiah promiſeth that the faithfull ſhal be in ſafetie, when God ſhall haue marked them. And this ought to be diligently obſerued. For wee are admoniſhed, that we cannot otherwiſe bee partakers of the grace of God, vnleſſe wee beare his image, and that his glorie doe ſhine in vs.

And a couering] &c. Although the Prophet confirmes that which wee haue touched alreadie, to wit, that God will leade his choſen perpetually, vntill he haue brought vs to our wiſhed end: yet notwithſtanding we are admoniſhed that the faithfull ſhall bee alwaies ſubiect to many troubles. For heate and cold, and other ſharper euils then thoſe doe ſtill fiercely purſue them: ſo as when they are deliuered out of one danger, they fal againe into another. But behold here a moſt ſweet conſolation, to wit, that againſt all ſtormes, the only ſhadow of the Lord ſhall ſuffice vs: becauſe by it we ſhall be ſo couered, that nothing ſhall hurt vs, or bring vs the leaſt damage. Although then that diuers afflictions and troubles doe enuiron vs on all ſides, yet the Lord promiſeth that hee will aſſiſt vs: as it is ſpoken in the Pſalme: The ſunne ſhal not ſmite thee by day, nor the Moone by night: Pſalm. 121. 6. For the Lord ſhall preſerue thy going out, &c. It onely remaines that wee follow our vocation, and diſcharge our duties faithfully. It befalles alike to faithfull and vnfaithfull, to endure many troubles: but the wicked haue no refuge nor couert vnder which they may ſhroud theſelues; they muſt of neceſſitie be ouerwhelmed. But the condition of the faithfull is bleſſed. For although they be cumbred with heate and cold, yet they haue a ſure refuge vnder the protection of God. Only let vs be mindfull that that glorie whereof wee ſpake before doe ſhine in vs: otherwiſe theſe things doe nothing at all appertaine vnto vs. But if we beare the marke of God, let vs be aſſured that he will bee our helpe as oft as any tempeſt ſhall fall vpon vs.

THE V. CHAPTER.

* Or, for.

Verſ. 1. Now will I ſing * to my beloued, a ſong of my beloued to his vineyard. My beloued had a vineyard in a * very fruitfull hill.

* Heb. Sonne of the oyle, or of the fat.

THe argument of this Chapter differs from the former. For the Prophets purpoſe is to ſet forth the eſtate of the children of Iſrael as it then was: to the ende euerie one might take knowledge of his faults, and that by this meanes, ſhame and diſpleaſure in themſelues for their ſinnes might prouoke them to come to true and earneſt repentance: as alſo that hereby they might behold their miſerable condition as in a glaſſe. For otherwiſe they would haue flattered theſelues too much in their vices, and would not haue borne any admonitions at all. It was needfull therefore that their brutiſhnes ſhould bee painted out before them as in liuely colours. But to the end he might procure himſefe the greater authoritie he vſeth this preface: for they were wont to write excellent and memorable things in verſe; to the end euery one might haue it in their mouth, that ſo there might remaine a perpetuall remembrance of them. Exod. 15. According as wee ſee that ſong which Moſes wrote, Deut. 32. and many others after him who did the like; that as well in publike as in priuate, one might heare all things ſounded forth by ſuch voices. For the doctrine is thereby more highly aduanced, then if it ſhould be taught onely. For this cauſe Iſaiah compoſed this ſong, that ſo the people might take a more cleare view of their filthines. Neither is it to be doubted, but theſe things were handled excellentlie, both for art and voice, as the cuſtome is, wee know, to compoſe verſe with the moſt exquiſite skill that may be.

To my beloued.] It is certaine that he meaneth God; as if he ſhould ſay, I will make a ſong on Gods behalfe, by which hee complaines of the ingratitude of the people: becauſe there was much more vehemencie in it to bring God in ſpeaking. But ſome may aske wherefore Iſaiah calles him his beloued. Some doe anſwer; it was becauſe hee was of the kindred of Chriſt. And the trueth is indeede, that hee deſcended from Dauid: but this ſeemes to bee conſtrained. It ſhall be more plaine and agreeable, if according to the ſentence of S. Iohn, we ſay, that the Church is committed to the friend of the bridegrome: and that we put the Prophets in this number. For no doubt but this title is fitting for them, ſeeing the charge of the auncient people was committed vnto them, to the ende they might be maintained vnder their head. It is no meruaile then, if they were iealous and diſpleaſed, when the people turned away their hearts from him. Iſaiah then puts himſelfe in the perſon of the bridegrome; and as one grieued and perplexed in regard of the Church committed to his charge, hee complaines that ſhe hath broken the couenant of wedlocke: and withall laments and bewailes her diſloyaltie and ingratitude. Iohn 3. 29. 1. Cor. 11. 2.

And hereby wee may ſee that it was not S. Paul alone who was iealous ouer the ſpouſe of God, but alſo all the Prophets and Teachers, as much as in them lay, had the like care; to wit, ſo many as were faithfull to the Lord. And this title of Spouſe ought to touch all the ſeruants of God to the heart; and to quicken vp their ſpirits. For what doth a man hold more deare vnto him then his wife? Surely euery honeſt man will prefer her before all treaſures; and will more readily hazard his goods to other mens cuſtodie, then his wife. And therefore he muſt needes bee eſteemed very faithfull to whoſe keeping a man will commit his beſt beloued. Now the Lord commits this truſt to the Paſtors and Miniſters, and puts his Church which is as his deare wife into their hands. What wickednes were it then to betray her by our ſloth and negligence? Whoſoeuer is not inflamed with the care of her preſeruation, he cannot couer himſelfe vnder any pretence whatſoeuer. Whereas in the ſecond place, he addes the word Dodi, which he vſed before; although he chãgeth the firſt ſyllable, yet notwithſtanding it is of the ſame ſignification with the firſt. Be it then that ſome turne it, Vncle; others Coſine, I am rather of their opinion who take it by way of alluſion. For we muſt giue more liberty to Poets then to other writers. He hath then thus garniſhed theſe words, and come ouer them (as you would ſay) to the end that by ſ rhythme, and tuning of the verſe, he might helpe their memorie, and quicken their vnderſtandings.

My beloued had a vine.] The ſimilitude of the vine is much vſed in the Prophets: and there is no compariſon more fitting his purpoſe then this. For he ſhewes by it two waies how much the Lord eſteemes his Church:

There is no poſſeſſion that a man holds more deare to him then his vine: neither is there any thing that requires more daily and continuall labour and diligence. The Lord then not onely teacheth that we are as a pretious heritage vnto him; but would alſo haue vs take knowledge of the continuall care and 1 thought he takes for vs. In the beginning of the ſong, the Prophet remembers the benefits which the Lord had beſtowed vpon his
2 people the Iewes: then he ſhewes how great
3 the ingratitude of this people was: thirdly,
4 the puniſhment and correction which will follow: laſtly, he makes a catalogue of their ſinnes: becauſe men will not acknowledge their offences, but by maine force.

In a very fruitfull.] In the entrance hee ſhewes that God had ſeated this people in a happie dwelling place, as if a man ſhould plant a vine in a pleaſant and fruitfull hill. For by the word which he vſeth, I vnderſtand an high place, which is exalted aboue the plaine: we commonly call it a hill. Whereas ſome referre it to Ieruſalem, as if he ſhould deſcribe the ſituation thereof, I thinke it to be farre fetched and conſtrained. It ſeemes to me rather, that the Prophet purſues his allegorie. And becauſe God had vouchſafed to take this people into his care and ſafegard, he compares this grace to the planting of a vine. For vines are more eaſily planted in hils and high places, then in vallies. And as one ſaith, The vine loues the high hils, the Weſt, and the ſide of a wood. He alluded then to the common cuſtome of planting vines. Afterwards hee followes the ſimilitude, ſaying, that the ſeate of this place was not common as others were. For in calling it, The ſonne of the oyle, or of the fat, in his language; he meanes a fat and fruitfull place. I approoue not of their expoſition who reſtraine it to the fruitfulnes of Iudeah. For the Prophet meant to deſcribe the happie and bleſſed eſtate of the people by this ſimilitude.

Verſ. 2. And he hedged it, and gathered out the ſtones of it, and he planted it with the beſt plants, and he built a tower in the midſt thereof, and made a winepreſſe therein: then hee looked that it ſhould bring forth grapes: but it brought forth wild grapes.

HE ſhewes the continuall care and diligence of the Lord in dreſſing his vine: as if he ſhould ſay, He omitted nothing of that which is required to be in a good husbandman, who aboue all things watcheth vpon his charge. Notwithſtanding wee are not here curiouſly to examine the text, word by word as many doe, ſaying, That the Church was inuironed with hedges, to wit, with the protection of the holy Ghoſt; to the end it might be ſecured againſt al the aſſaults of the diuel: that the preſſe ſignifies the doctrine: and that the ſtones ſignifie all troubleſome errors. The Prophets meaning, as I haue ſhewed, was more plaine and ſimple; to wit, that God diligently performed the office of an husbandman, ſparing neither paines nor coſt. But in the meane while, the Iewes had great cauſe to conſider in themſelues with how many great and diuers ſorts of benefits the Lord had enriched them. When the Church at this day is ſet forth vnto vs vnder the ſimilitude of a vine, wee ought to referre theſe figuratiue ſpeeches to the benefits of God, by which he aſſures vs of his loue towards vs, and alſo of the care he hath for our ſaluation. It ſeemes that in the word of planting, order ſhould not bee obſerued: for a man ſhould rather plant firſt, and then cloſe it with an hedge afterward. But thus I vnderſtand it, that he no ſooner planted his vine, but he forthwith prouided all things belonging vnto it. And therefore he iuſtly accuſeth them of ingratitude and diſloyaltie, that they brought not forth fruite worthie the coſt and paines beſtowed vpon them.

And we are greatly to feare leſt the Lord take not vp the like complaint againſt vs. For by how much the more the Lord ſhall haue enriched vs with greater benefits then they; ſo much the more abominable ſhall our vnthankfulnes be, if we abuſe them. The Lord neuer beautifies and adornes his Church in vaine; or that ſhe ſhould onely make outward vnprofitable ſhews; but to the end ſhe might bring forth grapes, that is to ſay, good fruits. But if we diſappoint the Lord of his expectation, the puniſhment which the Prophet here foretelles, will certainely follow. Wherefore the remembrance of his benefits ought to mooue and pricke vs forward with all diligence to yeeld him thanks. Moreouer, there is here a cloſe oppoſition in the word vine, thus greatly husbanded: becauſe that by ſo much the more we are bound to make pretious account of God his benefits, as they are more rare and excellent; as being pledges of his particular loue towards vs. That hee cauſeth the ſunne to ſhine as well vpon the wicked as the good, and beſtowes all things neceſſarie vpon them for to feede and cloth them; theſe are common gifts. But how much more ought wee to priſe and eſteeme this couenant of grace, which hee hath contracted with vs? by meanes whereof he illuminates vs by the light of his Goſpell; which grace he only beſtowes vpon his beloued. We are therfore aboue all things to waigh & conſider of this care and diligence, which the Lord beſtowes, in working daily vpon our minds, and in framing vs to his owne Image.

Now he looked.] He heere complaines that the people who had beene indued with ſo great excellencie of gifts, were wickedly and vnthankfully become degenerate; and accuſeth them for contempt of the louing kindneſſe of God. For he ſaith, that in ſtead of good grapes, this Vine brought foorth ſowre and wild grapes. Now, we muſt not imagin ỳ God (before whoſe eyes all things are naked) can be deceiued of his hope, as a mortall man may be: for in the ſong of Moſes he publiſheth with a loud voyce, what the peruerſitie of this people would be, and that it was apparant to him euen from the beginning. My beloued, ſaith he, will kick with the heele againſt me, after ſhe ſhall become fat and luſtie, Deut.32.15. There is then no more vncertentie of hope in God, then of repentance: neither doth Iſaiah ſubtillie diſpute heere what God waited for in himſelfe, but how the people ought to behaue themſelues, leaſt they receiue ſo great fauours in vayne. And thus God commaunds that his Goſpell ſhould be publiſhed for the obedience of faith; not that he lookes that all ſhould yeeld their obedience thereunto; but becauſe the vnbeleeuers might be left without excuſe by the oncly hearing of it. To conclude, there is nothing which ſhould more prouoke vs to liue holily and according to God, then when the Holy Ghoſt compares the obedience which we yeeld vnto God, to ſweet and pleaſant fruit.

Verſ.3. Now therefore O inhabitants of Ieruſalem, and men of Iudah, iudge, I pray you, betweene me, and my Vineyard.

4. What could I haue done any more to my Vineyard, that I haue not done vnto it? Why haue I looked that it ſhould bring foorth grapes, and is brought forth wild grapes?

NOw he appoints euen thoſe to be Iudges of his cauſe, with whom he pleades: as men are wont to do in things ſo plaine and apparant, that the aduerſe partie can haue no euaſion. It is a ſigne then that God hath gotten the better end of the ſtaffe, whē he permits thoſe who are guilty, to ſhew whether the matter be ſo or no. Now he firſt demaunds, What could be more deſired of a huſbandman or good houſholder then that which hee did to his Vine. From thence hee concludes, that they are vtterly without excuſe, in that he ſhould be ſo wickedly defrauded of the frutes of his labours: although it ſeemes in the ſecond member, that he complaines in himſelfe that he waited for any pleaſing or deſireable frute of ſo wicked a people. As it will often come to paſſe that we ſhal complaine by our ſelues, when the euent of a thing doth not anſwere our hope: and we are ſory to haue beſtowed our labour and coſt vpon ſo vnthankfull perſons, whoſe peruerſitie ſhould rather haue kept back ſuch benefits from them. And we wil confeſſe that we were indeed iuſtly deceiued, becauſe we were too eaſie and light of beliefe. Yet notwithſtanding, this ſence wil be more plaine; to wit, ſeeing I haue fully diſcharged my dutie, and haue done aboue all that could haue beene expected in husbanding my Vine, whence comes it that it yeelds me ſo euill recompence? and that in ſtead of the fruit which I looked for, it only brings forth bitter fruit?

If any ſhall obiect now, that the remedie was in God his hand, if he had but only bowed the heart of the people; This is but a friuolous cauill to excuſe them: for their conſciences pricked them in ſuch wiſe, that they could not eſcape by laying the fault vpon an other. For although God doe not pearce with efficacie into the hearts of men by his holy ſpirit, to make them teachable; yet ſhall it be in vaine for any notwithſtanding, to mutter that this was wanting vnto them, ſeeing that their externall vocation doth ſufficiently cut off all pretext and ſhew of ignorance. Alſo, God ſpeakes not heere of his power, but he denies that he was bound to do more for them then he did.

Verſ.5. And now I will tell you what I will do to my Vineyard; I will take away the hedge therof, and it ſhall be eaten vp: I will breake the wall thereof, and it ſhall be troden downe.

6. And I will lay it waſte: it ſhall not be cut, nor digged; but briars and thornes ſhall grow vp: I will alſo command the cloudes that they raine no raine vpon it.

BEcauſe he holds the Iewes as good as condemned perſons by their owne mouth, he by and by addes that he will be the auenger of the contempt of this grace, ſo as they ſhall not eſcape without puniſhment. For this reproch would not haue bin ſufficient to haue moued thē, vnleſſe he had forthwith threatned thē with correction. He giues them now to vnderſtand then, that ſo great wickednes whereby they haue diſloyally mocked him, ſhall not eſcape ſcot-free. Now the ſumme of the vengeance is, that they ſhall be depriued of the gifts which they had abuſed; not only when God ſhall withdraw himſelfe frō them, but alſo that they ſhall be laid open to the ſpoile of the enemies. In the meane while he ſhewes how miſerable their condition ſhall be, when he ſhall once ceaſe to beſtow his liberalitie vpon them. Whence it followes, that it ought to bee attributed to the ſingular goodnes of God, that this Vine continued ſafe and ſound till then: yea he admoniſheth by how many ſundrie waies it was preſerued; and alſo how many meanes God hath in his hand to deſtroy and lay it waſte, both within and without. For his ſuccour being withheld from it, it muſt needs lie open to be deuoured of all that ſhould paſſe by, whether men or beaſts. After (ſaith he) that I ſhall take away my hedge, the beaſts ſhall tread it vnder feete, and it ſhall be eaten vp, and the robbers ſhall rob and ſpoile it, and ſo it ſhall be laid fallow. And further, becauſe the Lord ſhall ceaſe to prune and deck it, it ſhall bring forth no more fruit, in regard it wants huſbanding: but briars and thornes ſhall grow vp, which will choke the plants; yea, God will cauſe ſ very rootes to wither away by withholding raine.

Now we may perceiue by this, with how many weapons God is furniſhed to reuenge himſelfe vpon our ingratitude, when he ſhall ſee that wee deſpiſe his benefits. True it is that the Prophet continues the ſimilitude: and to the end he may win the better audience, he enricheth his speech with figures; notwithstanding it behoues vs simplie to gather, that euen as God dayly bestowes infinite blessings vpon vs, so wee also giue diligent heed, that by taking away now this, and afterward that, he auenge not himselfe vpon our contempt of them. And as touching the gouernment of ỹ Church, by how much the more it hath need of many helps, so much the more shall she be subiect to many chastisements, if she wickedly corrupt the things that God hath ordained for her saluation. And therefore it is no wonder if so many calamities threaten vs at this day, with Note. wast and destruction. For we ought to attribute all the euils that shall befall vs (whether the decay of vision; or that the wicked haue their swinge; or that wolues and foxes doe creepe into the Church) to our owne vnthankfulnes: because wee haue not yeelded such fruit as we should, but haue been slothfull and idle. Let vs acknowledge the wrath of God then as oft as we are iustly depriued of so many benefits as hee doth willingly offer vs.

Vers. 7. Surely the vineyard of the Lord of hosts is the house of Israel, and the men of Iudah are his pleasant * plant: and he looked for iudgement, but behold oppression: for righteousnes, but behold a crying.

* Or, branches.

Hitherto hee hath spoken figuratiuely: now he sets downe the drift of his song. Heretofore he hath only charged the Iewes with iudgement: Now he shewes that they are not only guiltie, but also that hee holds them as conuicted persons. For they could not bee ignorant of the benefits which they had receiued from God. Thou (saith the Psalmist) broughtest a vine out of Egypt, and hauing driuen out the nations, didest plant them in, Psalm. 80. 9. Isaiah followes not all the parts of the similitude neither was it needfull: It was sufficient to haue shewed the scope and drift of it. The whole people were the vine: the particular persons the 1 branches: thus hee first accuseth the whole 2 body in generall; and lastly euery one in particular: so as none could exempt himselfe from this condemnation, as not hauing iustly deserued the same before.

It sufficiently appeares wherefore the people is called a vine. Because God had chosen them, and made the couenant of grace and of eternall saluation with them, and had enriched them with infinite benefits. The beginning is the plant; the labour afterwards followeth. This people was adopted of God, and husbanded by him diuers waies. For their adoption had not been sufficient, if the Lord had not wrought vpon them and framed and inriched them with his graces from day to day. We ought at this day to be much vrged with this doctrine. Christ affirmes, that Ioh. 15. 1. he is the vine, and that being ingrafted into him, the father will purge vs, for as much as God vouchsafeth to performe the office of a husband man in this behalfe, and carefully bestowes all those things vpon vs which hee (in reproach) saith he, bestowed vpon the ancient people. Is it any maruaile then if he be grieuously offended, when he bestowes his labour in vaine, and without profit? From hence comes that threatning; Euery branch Ioh. 15. 2. that beares not fruite in me, shall be hewen downe and cast into the fire.

He looked for iudgement.] He begins plainelie to shew how wickedly the Iewes are degenerate, amongst whom all kind of violence and of iniustice had place, hauing reiected all equitie and righteousnes. In the words, hee vseth a meeting together; which hath great elegancie: and although they sound almost one of them like another: yet they are of contrarie signification. For Mischapt signifieth iudgement: Mispach conspiratie, or oppression: Tsedaca Iustice: and Tseaca the crie and complaint of those which were oppressed by violence: which things were not wont to be heard, when euery man had his due. Moreouer he makes mention of two things which God requires principally of his people, as being indeede the true fruites of the feare of God. Although notwithstanding the seruice of God be first in order: yet it is not inconuenient that it should be described by the duties of the second Table. They are rightly conuinced to haue contemned God; because they exercised crueltie against men: for where inhumanity beares sway; there religion is quenched.

Let vs know that the same is now said vnto vs: for as this people was planted; so also haue we ben. We ought also to call to mind that which S. Paul saith, that we were but Rom. 11. 24. wild Oliues, and they were the true and naturall Oliue. We then which were strangers are grafted into the true Oliue, and are purged and adorned with a continuall care of the Lord. But what fruits bring we forth? truly not onely vnprofitable, but also bitter. And therefore we are guiltie of greater ingratitude, in regard that we are inriched and abound in benefits, much more excellent. And iustly is this complaint commenced against vs, seeing that violence and wrongs doe reigne euery where. But because the general doctrine did not sufficiently prick their hearts; he describes two kinds particularly: to the end hee might shew them as with the finger how far off this people were from the fruite that a good vine should bring forth.

Vers. 8. Woe be vnto them that ioyne house to house, and lay field to field, till there be no place, that ye may be placed by your selues in the midst of the earth.

Now he reprooues their insatiable auarice and couetousnes; from whence frauds, injuries, and violences do commonly arise. For it is not a thing vnlawfull in it selfe to ioyne one field to another, nor one house to another: but he aimes at the heart; which by no meanes whatsoeuer can bee satisfied, when when it is once ſet on fire with deſire of hauing. Hee deſcribes the affection of thoſe then which thinke they haue neuer enough: neither are content, how rich ſoeuer they be. We may ſee that the couetous are poſſeſſed with ſuch a greedy luſting, that they deſire to haue all to theſelues alone; & think that that which others haue, is their want, or is taken frō them. And therefore Chryſoſtome hath an elegant ſpeech to this purpoſe: That the couetous would gladly take away the ſunne from the poore; if it were in their power. For they grutch their brethren, the very elements which yet are common, and would gladly ſwal ow them vp: not to enioy them; but becauſe their luſt depriues them of vnderſtanding in this behalfe. In the meane while they conſider not that themſelues are not able to doe any thing without the helpe of others, & that a man being alone by himſelfe is vnprofitable; they onely carke and care how to gather much together; and therefore they deuoure all by their couetouſneſſe.

Chryſoſtom.

He chargeth the couetous and proud with ſuch a furie, that they would haue all others cut off from the face of the earth, to the end themſelues alone might haue it in poſſeſſion: and therefore there is neither end nor meaſure in their luſt. What folly and madnes is it to driue thoſe from of the earth, whom God hath placed therein with vs, and to whom he giues a dwelling place common with vs? Queſtionleſſe a worſe thing could not befall them then to haue their wish. Neither could they alone till the ground, reape, and performe other neceſſarie duties of this life; nor yet could they adminiſter things neceſſarie to themſelues. Alſo God hath ſo vnited men together; that one hath neede of the helpe and induſtrie of another: and there is no man, vnleſſe he be out of his wits, who will reiect his brethren; as though they were hurtfull or vnprofitable. The proud alſo cannot inioy their glorie, if they ſhould be left alone. How blind are they then who would chaſe and driue men away to reigne by themſelues.

The couetous deſire to dwell alone. But a worſe thing could not befall them, then to haue their wish.

Now as touching the length and greatnes of houſes: the like is to be ſaid of them; as was heretofore ſaid of fields: becauſe the ambition of thoſe is alſo reprooued, who deſire to dwell in goodly palaces and ſpatious houſes. It is not vnlawfull for him who hath a great family to haue alſo a large houſe: but when men (puffed vp with pride) will adde to their houſes without cauſe, onely to be at more libertie, and that one alone takes vp the dwelling places which would ſuffice a great many; then it is meerely ambition and vaine glorie, which ought worthily to be reprooued. For it is all one, as if hauing contemned others; they onely ſhould bee lodged: and that their poore brethren were worthie of no more but the couering of the firmament; or that they ought to goe ſeeke out ſome other habitation.

Verſ. 9. This is in mine eares ſaith the Lord of hoſtes: * ſurely many houſes ſhall be deſolate, euen great and faire without inhabitant.

* Or, if there be not many, &c.

SOmething muſt be heere ſupplied; for his meaning is that the Lord is ſet downe as the Iudge, hauing the knowledge of all theſe things. When the couetous rappe and ſcrape their riches together, they are blinded by their luſt, and thinke not that they muſt one day be called to an account. True it is that men are neuer ſo beſotted, but they attribute ſome kinde of iudgement to God; but they flatter themſelues in ſuch wiſe, as that they thinke ſurely God regardeth not. So they acknowledge a iudgement of God in generall, but when it comes to the particular, there they lay the raines in the neck, and ſuppoſe they ſhould not be kept ſo ſhort. Alſo in this particle, if there be not, wee ſee a forme and maner of oath often vſed in the ſcripture. For to the end he might the more aſtoniſh them, hee ſpeakes doubtfully as it were by ſentence broken off in the mid way. He might haue expreſſed this threatning by a full ſentence; but being imperfect, it holds the hearer more in ſuſpence, and ſo it brings the greater feare with it. Moreouer, by this maner of oath (halfe pronounced as we ſay) the Lord would teach vs to accuſtome our ſelues to modeſtie, to the end we take not libertie in vſing execrations.

What is it then that he threatneth? That many houſes ſhall be deſolate. This is a iuſt puniſhment, whereby the Lord corrects the couetouſnes and ambition of men, which would not be brought to conſider their end, that they might haue contented themſelues with a little. As he, who derided the inſatiable couetouſnes of Alexander, who becauſe he vnderſtood by the philoſophie of Anacharſis that there were many worlds, ſighed in himſelfe, becauſe with ſo much labour he had not yet conquered the gouernment of one. A world (ſaith he) will not ſuffice Alexander, he is as diſcontented as if he were pinnd vp in a very narrow roome; or as if hee were bounded within ſome certaine Iland; and yet when his time comes to be buried, he muſt content himſelfe with a coffin. For it is death only which teacheth and conſtreineth vs to confeſſe how vaine a thing the bodie of man is.

We ſee euery day examples therof, and yet who is inſtructed by it? for ſ Lord ſheweth vs in a glaſſe how ridiculous the vanitie of men is, who lay out an infinite maſſe of money to build pallaces, which yet will one day bee neſts and dens for night crowes, owles, miſe, and ſuch like beaſts. Theſe things are dayly before our eyes, and yet wee take none of them to heart, to grow the wiſer by them. There fall out ſo many and ſodaine changes, ſo many houſes deſolate, ſo many cities waſted and laid on heapes, laſtly, ſo many other and ſo euident ſignes of God his iudgements, and yet notwithſtanding men can not bee withdrawne nor weaned from this inſatiable greedineſſe of coueting. The Lord threatneth by the Prophet Amos, You haue built you houſes of hewen ſtone, but you ſhall not dwell in them. Alſo, he ſhall ſmite the great houſe with breaches, and the little houſe with clefts, Amos 5. 11. and 6. 11. This falls out day by day, and yet the inordinate affections of men can not be aſwaged.

Verſ. 10. For ten acres of vines ſhall yeeld one bath, and the ſeed of an omer ſhall yeeld an epha.

HE teacheth, that the like ſhall befall to the fields and vines, namely, that the couetous ſhal not inioy their reuenues which they deſire, becauſe their luſt is inſatiable; yea ſo as by their rauening they ſhall deſtroy the fruits of the earth, euen as certaine beaſts doe cauſe the buds of the vine, and eares of corne to burne and moulder away by their breath. The fields therefore ſhall be ſo barren, that they ſhall hardly yeeld againe the tenth part of their ſeed. The vines alſo ſhall yeeld very little wine. A bath, is a certaine meaſure of moiſt things, as Ioſephus witneſſeth; now it conteines 72. engliſh halfe pints, which meaſure is very little for ten acres, and principallie in a fat ſoyle. An omer, is a certaine meaſure of drie things, and alſo conteines (as the ſame Author ſaith) 31. buſhels. Epha, is the tenth part thereof, whereby it appeares that it conteines a little more then three buſhels. And yet notwithſtanding in good ground one doth not only gather ten times as much, but thirtie times more then was ſowen, and in ordinarie ground much more then it receiued; when it comes otherwiſe to paſſe, no doubt it is a certain ſigne of the curſe of God, who auengeth himſelfe of the inſatiable couetouſnes of men, and they notwithſtanding lay the fault in the badnes of the ſoyle, as if that were the cauſe; but all in vaine, becauſe we ſhall not want ouerplus, if the Lord do not curſe the earth for the couetouſnes of them that dwell in it. When they gather together, and heape vp ſo careſully, what doe they elſe but ſwallow vp the benefits of God by their greedineſſe? And though this vice be not ſeene in all, becauſe they are not able; yet the affection thereof is not wanting, for the world was neuer more ſet on fire with this coueting. Is it any wonder then if it haue experience of this puniſhment of God?

Verſ. 11. Woe vnto them that riſe vp early to follow drunckenes, and to them that continue vntil the night, til the wine do inflame them.

IT was not the Prophets meaning to recken vp all the ſinnes heere which then raigned, but he only toucheth ſome perticulars vnto the which they were moſt addicted: and hauing handled the generall doctrine, it was neceſſarie to come to application; yea and to touch thoſe things which were chiefeſt, becauſe there would haue been no end if he ſhould haue proſecuted them all, one after another. After that he hath reproued the vice of couetouſnes, he ſpeakes againſt gurmandizing, which was then a very common ſinne among them; for he makes choiſe not only of ſuch perticular vices which were in one or two perſonages, but of ſuch as reigned commonly enery where. And the truth is, that theſe vices are ſo contagious that they infect the whole body. To riſe betimes, ſignifies as much as to do ſome thing carefully, as it is ſayd in Salomon, Woe to the people whoſe Princes eate in the morning, that is to ſay, who place their chiefe care in feeding their belly, and in inioying their voluptuouſnes, Eccle. 10. 16. now this is nothing elſe but to ouerturne the whole order of nature. For as Dauid ſaith, Man ought to riſe in the morning to goe to his worke, and to wait vpon his buſines till the euening, Pſal. 104. 23. But if he riſe to do nothing but to take his pleaſures, and to giue himſelfe to follow drunkennes, it is monſtruous. He addes, that they continue till the euening. As if he ſhould ſay, from morning to night, they continued in their drinkings, and were neuer weary in gouzelling in of wine. Now abundance and exceſſe are ioyned together, becauſe where all things abound, there men abuſe them to exceſſe and intemperancie.

Men muſt not riſe in the morning to be idle, but to labor.

Verſ. 12. And the harp and the viol, timbrill and pipe, and wine are in their feaſts: but they regard not the worke of the Lord, neither conſider the worke of his hands.

HE addes Inſtruments with voluptuouſnes, by which, men giuen to gurmandiſe, prouoked their appetit. It may be theſe Inſtruments were differing from ours, yet notwithſtanding they appertained to Muſick, which Iſaiah condemnes not; for it is an arte in no wiſe to be contemned; but he paintech forth a people ouerflowing in all ſorts of ſuperfluitie, and who gaue themſelues libertie to take all their delights: which ſufficientlie appeares by that which followes, But they regard not. As if he ſhould ſay, they ſo wallowed themſelues in their delights, and were ſo glued to their pleaſures, that it ſeemed they were begotten and brought vp in them; neuer thinking wherefore God gaue them things conuenient. For men were not ſent into the world to eate and drink, & to plunge themſelues in diſſolutions; but to obey God, and to ſerue him in reuerence, to acknowledge his benefits, and to ſtudie how to pleaſe him in all things; but when they ouerflow in exceſſe, daunſing and ſinging, without any other drift then to paſſe their life in iolitie, they are worſe then brute beaſts; for they conſider not to what end God created them, neither how he gouernes the world by his prouidence, vnto which marke all that we do in our life ought to tend.

Muſick in it ſelfe not to be condemned.

We are not put into this world to plunge out ſelues in delights, but rather that we ſhould ſtudie how to pleaſe God.

I thinke it enough that I haue laid forth that ſence which I take to be the moſt plaine: becauſe I cannot receiue other mens accute interpretations: Among others, theirs who by the worke of the Lord, vnderſtand the law. Neither am I purpoſed to recite euery mans opinion, opinion. It ſufficeth to hold that the Prophet laies this reproch vpon ſuch as gaue themſelues to ſurfetting, ſo as they willingly became brutiſh; when they withdrew their minds from God, who was the author of life.

Verſ. 13. Therefore my people is gone into captiuitie, becauſe they had no knowledge, and the glorie thereof are men famiſhed, and the multitude is dried vp with thirſt.

I Allow not the expoſition of ſome interpreters; namely, as if the people fell into many vices through ignorance and error, becauſe the teachers had their mouthes ſhut vp: which in the end was the cauſe of their ruine. No, he rather ſets himſelfe againſt a groſſe and voluntarie ignorance: as if hee ſhould ſay, They drew their deſtruction vpon themſelues by their owne follie. The ſence is then, that the people ſhall periſh becauſe they had deſpiſed inſtruction; whereas they might haue been at their eaſe, if they would haue beleeued good counſell. And therefore the Prophet expreſely ſaith, My people: becauſe they were ſeperate from other nations by a ſingular priuiledge; to the end they being kept and guided vnder God, might hold a right manner of good life. As it is ſaid in Deut. 4. 7. What nation is ſo great that hath ordinances and lawes ſo righteous, or to whom the gods come ſo neere vnto them, as the Lord thy God is neere (at this day) vnto thee? This ſhall be your wiſedome and vnderſtanding in the ſight of all the people to heare your God. Such profanenеſſe therefore greatlie agrauates the crime; that this people ſhould bee ſtarke blind in the midſt of ſo great light. And therfore this accuſation, namely, That the people which God had taken into his charge ſhould bee without knowledge, was very grieuous. For the law was euery way ſufficient for the direction of their whole life: ſeeing it is a ſhining light amiddeſt the common darkenes of this world. And therefore it was a mouſtrous thing that the people would not giue themſelues to walke in the way which was ſet before them, but rather wilfully caſt themſelues headlong into deſtruction. The Prophet now to their reproch telles them that they ought to impute all the calamities which they indured, to their owne default, becauſe they refuſed to bend their eare to God, who would ſo faithfully haue taught them.

Whereas ſome expound the word Captiuitie by a metaphor, it ſeemes too ſtrict: becauſe the Prophet here deſcribes the puniſhment, wherewith God did ſmite this people in part, and wherewith hee determined to ſmite them afterward: to the end hee might plainely ſhew that the people was miſerable by reaſon of their ſin; as if they had in a manner wiſhed the curſe of God to fal vpō them. When the Prophet made this Sermon, there were ſome of the tribes gone into captiuitie alreadie. Alſo the deſtructions of both kingdomes did approch. And therefore the Prophet ſpeakes as if they had been all now preſently in Babilon. Laſtly, he addes another ſcourge, to wit, that not onely the common people, but alſo the moſt excellent among them ſhould be dried vp with famine and want: wherein the vengeance of God would be the more apparant. For it was an horrible ſpectacle to ſee the rich and chiefe men in whom conſiſted the credit of the whole nation to wander vp and downe; dying for hunger. And yet God paſſed not meaſure in executing ſo rigorous a iudgement vpon them: becauſe wee muſt alwaies haue an eie to the roote of their ignorance, to wit, that the Iewes were become wholly deſperate, ſo as they obſtinately reiected the light of the heauenly doctrine. Yea, they ſtopped their eares againſt the Lord, when he was readie to performe the office of a good maſter in teaching them. From hence wee gather a very profitable doctrine: namely, that the fountaine from whence all plagues doe flow, is, becauſe we cannot endure to bee taught by the word of God. And that is the principall thing which the Prophet would haue vs to marke.

But ſome may aske whether ignorance be the cauſe of all euils: For we ſee that many offend not ſo much of ignorance, as of rebellion: and although they ſee what is right, yet notwithſtanding they will not follow it. Whence it followes that they ſinne wittinglie; and not onely of ouerſight. I anſwere that ignorance is ſometime neere, and ſometime further of; that is, This man wants the meanes; and the other hath the meanes, as they ſay. Ignorance is ſaid to bee neere, when men deceiue themſelues vnder ſome pretence; and do wittingly blindfold themſelues. That which is farre off, is when men reiect the principles whereby they ought to take direction for the rule of their life. For they ought to looke directly vnto God and his will. But when they deſpiſe it, they are rebellious and obſtinate: yet notwithſtanding ſuch are ignorant, becauſe they will not learne, but reuolt from the foundation. And yet that ignorance excuſeth them not, which they willingly imbrace, in reiecting ſuch a teacher. Wherefore this ſentence remaines ſure, that the people are diuers waies afflicted; becauſe they knew not God, neither would ſuffer themſelues to bee taught by him.

Obiect.

Anſ.

A ſimple ignorance: and affected ignorance.

Verſ. 14. Therefore hell hath inlarged it ſelfe, and hath opened his mouth without meaſure, and their glorie, and their multitude, and their pompe, and hee that reioyceth among them, ſhall deſcend into it.*

* Or, his ſoule.

BY this verſe the Prophet ment to preſſe thoſe with feare which were growne too ſecure, and were nothing mooued with any threatning whatſoeuer. For although the captiuitie was an horrible thing, and the famine nine also; yet was the stubbernnes and blockishnes of this people so great, that they laid not these fearefull signes of God his anger nigh their hearts in good earnest, as they ought to haue done. And therefore Isaiah threatens some thing yet more fearefull; to wit, that hell had opened his throate to deuour them all. I said erewhile, that this which is here said of the time present, ought partly to be referred to the time to come. The Prophet also speakes not rashly, as of things cleere and manifest. And he would present the thing as it were before the sight of the people, to the end they might behold that with their eies, which they could not bee brought to beleeue. Moreouer, as in comparing hel, or the graue to an insatiable beast; so by the soule he meanes the belly, whereinto the meate descends. The summe is, that the graue is as a large and deepe gulfe, which by the commandement of God, opens her throate to deuoure men adiudged to death. You see then that this prosopopei, or faining of persons, hath much greater vehemencie in it, then if he had said, that all were iudged to die.

The multitude.] He ioyneth the base and noble together, to the end none should flatter himselfe with hope of escape: as if he should say; death shall consume you, with all that you haue, namely, pleasures, riches and pompe, together with all things else, wherein you place your confidence. This then is a confirmation of ỹ former sentence. And this particle Therfore. Or, for this cause, is alwaies to be obserued. For ỹ people imputed the cause of their calamities to fortune; or rather howsoeuer it were, they were hardned vnder the corrections of the Lord. Isaiah giues them to vnderstand therfore that these things fel not out by hap hazzard. Moreouer, men are wont to quarrell with God, yea, they are so proud and shameles, that they feare not to make head against him. Therefore to the end this pride might be beaten downe, hee shewes that the chastisements wherewith they are punished, are most iust: and that they were wholly to blame themselues, for being euery way so miserable.

Vers. 15. And man shall be brought downe, and man shall be humbled, euen the eies of the proud shall be humbled.

THis is as it were in the shutting vp of his speech; in which he shewes to what end and issue these scourges would come vnto: to wit, that all should be humbled; and that the Lord only should be exalted. We haue seene the like sentence heretofore, and haue there declared the Prophets meaning: to wit, the end why we are chastised of God. For aduersities are so odious vnto vs, that for the most part we can conceiue no good thing to proceed from them. When we heare of punishments, wee haue them in horror and detestation, because we consider not that the Lord is iust. But the Prophets call vs to another consideration, to wit, that whilst men sport themselues in their sinnes, they smother as it were the iustice of God, which shineth not clearely, vnlesse when hee takes vengeance vpon our iniquities. Behold indeede an excellent fruite, and such a one as is to bee preferred before the saluation of all men. For we ought to let all things giue place to the glorie of God, which shineth no lesse in his iustice then in his mercie.

Chap. 2. 11. 17.

There is no cause then, why we should so much feare the rods of God wherewithall we are corrected: but ought rather in all humilitie to imbrace whatsoeuer the Prophets pronounce against vs. Although in this kind of speech the Prophet hath also touched the pride of the hypocrits to the quicke; who euer become the more wicked when they escape still vnpunished: as if he should say, do yee thinke it is possible that after God hath forborne you so long, yet at the last you should tread him vnder your feete? no, assure your selues he will arise, and will be exalted in your destruction. Because the Prophet hath put the word Adam in the first place, and after Aisch; some thinke he ment to comprehend as well noble as base; as if he should say, It shall not be the common people only which shall perish, but also all those who are noted for their honour, riches and dignitie. And I willingly receiue this sence, because Aisch is deriued from force; and Adam from earth. If any will expound it more simplie, I leaue him to his owne iudgement. Howsoeuer it be, the Prophet hath here comprehended all mortall men; as well great as small.

Vers. 16. And the Lord of hosts shal be exalted in iudgement, and the holy God shall be sanctified in iustice.

HE shewes the manner of the excellencie; or the formall cause, as they say, of this exaltation, whereof he spake before: and it is as much as if he had said, That the Lord of hosts (whom the wicked doe proudly treade vnder foote) shall be exalted, when he shall shew himselfe the iudge of the world. And thus hee scornes the sottish confidence, wherewith the wicked were swollen. For if iudgement and iustice must haue the vpper hand; there ruine must needes follow: seeing their pride was nothing else but an ouerturning of the whole course of nature. Now we must diligently note, that it is no more possible for the wicked to remaine alwaies in an happie estate, then that God should suffer his glorie to be abolished. Although iudgement and iustice doe differ in nothing one from the other, yet the repetition is not superfluous. The vehemencie also of the speech is further enlarged, when hee addes in the second member, and the holy God shall be sanctified, to the ende the wicked should not through a false imagination promise a lasting felicitie by force, or without cause; which they cannot doe, but that the holines of God shall thereby be abolished. But seeing God is holy of his owne nature, it must needs be that he must be sanctified. Whence it followes that

ruine is prepared for the wicked, that ſo their obſtinacie and rebellion may be brought vnder, becauſe God can not denie himſelfe.

Verſ. 17. Then ſhall the lambs feede after their maner, and the ſtrangers ſhall eate the deſolate places of the fat.

SOme tranſlate, The lambs ſhall feede according to their maner; others, according to their portion; but he meanes, according to their cuſtome. This verſe is diuerſly expounded: but we are to note in the firſt place, that it is the Prophets meaning to giue conſolation to the faithfull which were terrified by the hearing of ſuch fearefull iudgements of God: for looke how much the more a man is of a good and tender conſcience, ſo much the more feeles he the preſent hand of God, and the more neerely is he touched to the quick with his iudgements: laſtly, the feare and reuerence of God cauſeth vs to be touched in good earneſt with whatſoeuer it be that is ſet before vs in his name; wherefore they could not haue bene withheld from diſpaire in hearing ſo terrible threatnings, vnleſſe this conſolation had bin added thereunto as a ſweet ſauce to giue them occaſion to reliſh and take a ſweet taſte in the mercie of God. And this is a thing much vſed in the Prophets, to wit, ſtill to haue an eye alwayes to the faithfull, to furniſh them with comfort. Although then ſaith Iſaiah it ſeemes God is minded to deſtroy all this people, yet notwithſtanding he will ſhew himſelfe a faithfull ſhepheard toward his lambs, and will feed them as he was wont to doe; marke that for one point.

Alſo the meaning of the Prophet was to beate back the pride of the great ones, who in oppreſſing the faithfull and ſimple by an vniuſt tyrany, boaſted notwithſtanding that they were the Church of God ſtill; he tels them therfore that this their boaſting is full of lying and vanitie, thus to adorne themſelues with the title of the flock or ſheepfold of God, becauſe they are goates, and not lambs; and therefore when they ſhall be cut off, God will ſtill haue meanes in his hand to feede his flock; but yet by the way, that the lambs ſhall neuer thriue, nor be in good plight, till they be ſeperated and deliuered from the goats.

The deſolate places.] The expoſitors do yet againe vary vpon this place alſo: but I thinke the true ſence is, that after the children of God haue been driuen away for a time as baniſhed men, they ſhall be reſtored to their right, and ſhall then recouer that which was deſerts, or which was trampled and ſpoyled by the fat beaſts; that is to ſay, by the proud and cruel which had ſpoiled them of their goods. By the deſerts, he meanes the poſſeſſiõs which they had left, and which others had occupied, in as much as he hath regard to the cuſtome which was then well knowne and commonly vſed amongſt them, to wit, that if any poſſeſſed fields or houſes, he had his hand (as it were) in ſuch wiſe ſtretched forth vpõ them, that no man durſt touch ſo much as a clod of earth, but and if he left them, an other occupied them. The people then had ſo left their inheritances, out of which they had bin driuen, that they had no hope euer to recouer the ſame againe; ſo as in regard of them, they might well be called deſerts, yea, deſerts of the fat, becauſe the ſtrong and men of power poſſeſſed them. Now although it may ſimply be taken for fat deſerts, yet notwithſtanding it is more probable that the tyrants are heere called the fat.

Verſ. 18. Woe vnto them that draw iniquitie with cords of vanitie, and ſinne as with cartropes.

HAuing inſerted a briefe conſolation to aſwage the ſharpnes of the puniſhments in regard of the faithfull, he returnes to the threatnings, and goes on to ſtrike them thorow with theſe thundring ſpeeches, which at the leaſt might terrifie them in ſome ſort. By cords, he meanes nothing elſe but the alluremẽts of ſinne, by which men ſuffer themſelues to be deceiued, and thereby to become hardened in their hearts in wickednes, becauſe lightly they either contemne the iudgements of God, or frame vaine excuſes; or elſe pretend they can do no otherwiſe; what vaile then ſoeuer it be which they put before thẽ, that the Prophet calleth cords. For as often as men are led away to ſinning by the concupiſcence of their fleſh, in the beginning therof they conſult in themſelues, and feele ſome bridle which reſtraines them, and which doubteleſſe would hinder them from committing of euill, if that they were not ouercaried by a contrarie tempeſt, which ſhakes off and puts away all remorſe of conſcience. When any man is entiſed or ſtirred vp to euill, his conſcience by a ſecret inſtinct asketh him, What doeſt thou? And ſinne neuer creepeth thus vpon vs, but we feele ſome remorſe. And God hath thus in deed preuented men, to the end all ſhould not giue ouer themſelues with an vnbridled licentiouſnes to commit euill. Whence commeth it then that men are ſo obſtinate in their naughtineſſe? To ſay the truth, they ſuffer themſelues to be beguiled by allurements, and do ſo drench their minds with delighting themſelues therein, that they deſpiſe the iudgements of God, and all to purſue their owne ſinnes with greedines. They flatter themſelues, in beleeuing that which is ſinne, to be no ſinne; or elſe they mince them, making thẽ leſſe then they be; or, excuſe themſelues in them vnder one pretence or other. Theſe are then the cords and wicked bands by which they draw iniquitie to them. Whence it appeares, that God did not threaten them in vaine; for they not only ſinned wittingly, but obſtinatly and rebelliouſly. To conclude, they ſo pulled and halled ſinne vnto them, that they were left without excuſe.

Verſ. 19. Which ſay, let him make ſpeede: let him haſten his worke that we may ſee it: and let the counſell of the holy

one of Israel draw neere, and come, that we may know it.

HE notes out one perticular, by which he shewes how they drew sinne vnto them as with cartropes. There is nothing so dangerous as to reiect all thought of God his iudgment, and not only that, but also to contemne whatsoeuer he saith as a fable. Isaiah meant therefore to expresse an extreme contempt, when as men hauing been forewarned of God his iudgements, shall in scorne say, that they would gladly see them, and deride at them, as at some bug-beare, which these words so full of contempt and presumption do euidently shew: Let him come: let him hasten.

Worke heere (by a kind of excellencie) is taken for iudgement. For it seemes in deede that the Lord regards not when he deferres to take vengeance vpon the iniquities of the vngodly: but when he ariseth to giue iudgement, and to execute punishment, then his worke appeares, and is manifest in deed (as they say) because we perceiue by the effects that the world is gouerned by his power and authoritie. Worke then in this place is specially taken for iudgement, because thereby it something appeares vnto vs that God is not idle, but doth his office. Now the wicked speake of him in derision and scorne, and we haue experience of this frowardnes and obstinacie at this day more then is meete, and wee must wage the like warre against them which the Prophets did. The wicked thinke that God takes his ease in heauen, and cares not for mens matters, as certaine epicures, who placed God his chiefest happines in this, that he had nothing to doe. And although they imagin that there is some God, yet they acknowledge him not in his iudgement, but in the meane while they make good cheere, and neuer pine away themselues with such thoughts. Let the Prophets and Ministers crie, and that with open mouth, let them threaten and terrifie vs whilst they list, we will securely lye still, waiting till that which they threaten come to passe, and in the whilst we will make merie. Thus the Prophet recounts the speeches of the wicked, whereby they shewed in what contempt and disdaine they had his word, not only saying let his worke come: but let it come quickly, and let it draw neere: for in regard it came not suddenly, they concluded, that whatsoeuer he executes not as soone as he hath spoken the word, is but smoke.

2. Pet. 3. 4. In the second Epistle of S. Peter he brings in the wicked speaking thus and saying, that since the world was created all things haue continued alike; there is still one continuall course of nature, and therefore it is but a mockerie to looke for a day of iudgement after so many ages. In the meane while they prouoke God and that of set purpose, to the end he should forthwith shew his power. They adde Counsell, to his worke: as if they should say, how long wil God deliberate vpon it, eare he tell what he will do? let him rather shew vs by effect what he hath decreed. Their fault also is greatly amplified in that they dare to mock so wickedly at the doctrine which was so familiarly taught them: being herein more wicked then the very prophane heathen; because they despised that word whereby God had adopted them as a peculiar people vnto himselfe.

That we may know it.] See heere manifest signes of infidelitie. For the wicked will not acknowledge God, vnlesse they presently feele him: neither wil they beleeue his words. But if the holy Ghost by this marke brandeth them for abominable wicked ones, it behoueth vs by a contrary marke to let our faith and godlines appeare: to wit, that we rest in the bare and naked word of the Lord, although the euent doe not by and by shew it selfe, seeing it is the propertie of faith to hold vs fast glued to the mouth of God. The confirmation is added indeed by the works, but we must not begin at them. For thus stands the difference betweene the elect, and the reprobate: the elect rest simplie vpon the word of God, and yet in the meane while despise it not: but the wicked despise his word though he should speake a thousand times; and are importunate vpon him still to see his works; and when iudgement is threatned, they aske, where is it? and thus they can not indure that one should mention it vnto them, vnlesse it doe by and by appeare by effects. Where there is so litle moderation, it followes that there is no faith, but rather a rebellious obstinacie, which turnes a man out of the way, and estrangeth him more and more from God.

Vers. 20. Woe vnto them that speake good of euill, and euill of good; which put darkenes for light, and light for darkenes; that put bitter for sweet, and sweet for sowre.

ALthough many restraine this sentence to Iudges, yet if we obserue the words a little more narowly, it shall be easie to gather from the whole context, that this is a generall sentence. For hauing before cried out against those who could not endure any admonitions, he still goes on with the same reprehension. Now it appeares that such kind of people haue alwayes some pretence or other wherewithall to deceiue themselues. And therefore they neuer cease to make replies as oft as their vices are set before them: but he expresly reproues the shameles impudencie of those who of set purpose endeuored to ouerthrow all difference betweene good and euill. And the letter Lamed placed before these two words euill, and good, shewes the sence to be thus; namely, those that make euill of good, and of good euill: that is to say, who by craftines full of vanitie couer, excuse, and disguise wicked matters, minding by their subtilties to change the nature of euery thing: but on the contrary by lyes and slanders they ouerthrow that which is good. For whosoeuer hath the feare of God, he is withheld by conscience and shamefastnes from excusing his sinnes, or enterprising to condemne demne that which is iuſt and right. But they who are voyd of this feare, are alſo impudent to commend vices, and make no bones of it at all to condemne vertues, the which in whomſoeuer it be, is an euident ſigne of deſperate wickednes.

We may alſo applie this ſentence to diuers particulars. For if priuate perſons are here accurſed when they ſay, euill is good, and good euill: much more is it true of thoſe, who are aduanced into high place, and haue publike office; whoſe dutie is to vphold and maintaine all that is lawfull and right. But hee rebukes all ſuch in generall who flatter themſelues in euill doing; and for hatred which they beare to vertue, condemne that which is done vprightly: yea, who to couer their filthines, vſe cauilling ſhifts; and become altogether obdurate in themſelues. The Prophet ſaith, that ſuch folke do all one, as if they ſhould turne light into darknes, and ſweete into ſower: For thus they ſhew themſelues to be poſſeſſed with a diabolicall rage; when they ſo mingle and confound all principles of nature.

Verſ. 21. Woe vnto them that are wiſe in their owne eies, and prudent in their owne ſight.

HE goes on ſtill in rebuking ſuch as could not bee reclaimed by any perſwaſion whatſoeuer, who ſhut the gate againſt all good counſell and holy admonitions which are made vnto them. Laſtly, he pronounceth a woe againſt all deſperate contemners, who oppoſe and ſet the luſts of their fleſh, or the peruerſe confidence of their owne wiſedome, againſt God his doctrine, and admonitions. And not onely reprooues thoſe which are ſo puffed vp with a falſe opinion of their wit, that they are aſhamed to learne of others: but he alſo condemnes all ſuch in generall, who being wiſe in their owne conceit, refuſe to heare God ſpeaking, and to obey his holie counſels. This vice hath been too common in all times, and is to be ſeene at this day in many: who although they make conſcience to reiect all the doctrine of godlines openly, yet are ſo farre off from any true teachablenes and obedience, that they proudly reiect whatſoeuer likes them not. They grant there ought to be ſome bridle to hold them in: but on the otherſide, arroguncie ſo blinds them that they quickly murmure againſt God, when he ſhewes them but the way wherein they ſhould walke. And not content with that; but with furious indignation gnaſh their teeth when any reprooueth that which they doe. For where ſhall we finde that man who renouncing all his owne reaſon, will bee readie to learne, from God his mouth onely? Now there is not a more dangerous peſtilence then this lying ſhew of wiſedome, ſeeing teachablenes is the beginning of godlines; when renouncing our owne wiſedome, we goe thither where God calles vs. But this falſe perſwaſion, is not condemned onely, for that it makes men diſobedient to God, and ſo cauſeth their ruine: but alſo becauſe it is intollerable in it ſelfe. For we muſt become fooles, if we will be the diſciples of God. It is alſo certaine, that whereſoeuer this modeſtie and humilitie beares not ſway, by meanes whereof men do voluntarily yeeld their obedience; there reignes a furious rebellion. In their owne eies, is as much as when we ſay in our French tongue, In their owne opinion, or conceit. 1. Cor. 3. 18.

Verſ. 22. Woe be to them which are mightie to drinke Wine, and to them that are ſtrong to powre in ſtrong drinke.

Now the Prophet reprooues another vice: to wit, drunkennes and intemperancie of life, whereof he had ſpoken before. And thus it is very likely this chapter was gathered out of diuers ſermons; and that the heads of them are ſummarily touched onely. For in regard the Prophet ſaw no repẽtance, he was cõſtrained to repeate & beat into their minds one and the ſame thing often. He returnes then to the ſame reprehenſions which he had touched before: and preacheth againe againſt drunkenneſſe, exceſſe, couetouſneſſe and other corruptions. Whence we may gather, that when admonitions profit nothing, we ought to vſe the greater vehemencie againſt the ſtubberne and vnteachable. Neither truelie are we to feare, leſt this importunitie ſhould be wearieſome; but often to repeate the reprehenſions till they bow vnder them; or elſe till they ſhew an incurable malice.

He taunteth them pleaſantly, telling them that they are luſtie and ſtrong to drinke; becauſe they ſpend and conſume their ſtrength in fighting with the pot and glaſſe. But what a brutiſhines is this, for a man being of a good conſtitution of body, to make ſhew of his ſtrength, in drinking exceſſiuely. Alſo becauſe the figure Synecdoche is vſed of the Prophets in all the Scripture; he takes the ſpeciall for the generall, as if he ſhould ſay, Woe to drunkenneſſe, woe to intemperance, &c. But hee hath of purpoſe ſet forth that which was the moſt ſhamefull, that ſo hee might make this vice generally abhorred and deteſted. For there is nothing more vile and baſe (as we haue ſaid) then for a man to proue his force, in deuouring and ſwallowing in meates and drinks, and thus to wreſtle againſt himſelfe by cramming in as much meat as his belly will hold. Such men hold no rules of ſobrietie, neither do they know why God nouriſheth them. We eate and drinke to vphold the body, and not to ouerthrow it. We liue to ſerue God, and to beſtow our ſtrength in the helping of our neighbours turne: but when men endeuor not to preſerue their ſtrength by theſe meanes, but rather ouerturne it by proouing how much they can beare, it is certaine they are become worſe then brute beaſts.

Verſe 23. Which iuſtifie the wicked for a reward, and take away the righ- righteouſneſſe of the righteous from him.

Exod.23 8. Deut.16.19. HE reproues a corruption which was then riſe in iudgement ſeates, and ſhewes the cauſe why there was no iuſtice kept in them, to wit, for that gifts had place and were in account. For auarice blinds the eyes of the wiſe, and peruerts all order of iuſtice and right, yea euen in thoſe who otherwiſe beare ſome good affection thereunto. But ſome may obiect, that iudgements are peruerted by many other meanes then by preſents only, ſeeing that hatred, friendſhip, loue, and other ſiniſter affections doe very often blind the vnderſtanding. This is very true, but the Prophet aimed at that which falls out for the moſt part, & yet notwithſtanding meant not to ſpare the vices which he expreſſed not. By whoſe example good Teachers ought to be wiſe and well aduiſed in conſidering and correcting thoſe vices which carrie the chiefe ſwinge among the people, and aboue all to inſiſt vpon thoſe which they ſee to be moſt in vſe by wicked cuſtome.

Obiect.

Anſ.

Now this corruption whereof mention is made in this place, is the moſt frequent of all others in iudgement ſeates, and therefore the Iudges which would iudge iuſtly, ought to take diligent heed they auoid it. Neither muſt we giue eare to thoſe Iudges who denie that preſents are giuen them to that end: or who ſay, that although they receiue them, yet notwithſtanding they will giue vpright iudgement: for where gifts haue place, there needs muſt all affection of equitie and iuſtice be corrupted, neither can it be poſſible that thine affection ſhould not be moſt inclined to him of whom thou haſt receiued thy reward. To conclude, let vs giue eare vnto the Lord, who ſaith, that rewards blind the eyes of the wiſe, and peruert the words of the iuſt, leſt in doing otherwiſe we will ſeeme to be wiſer then God himſelfe.

Where gifts haue place, there all loue of iuſtice muſt needs be corrupted.

Deut.16.19.

Verſ.24. Therefore as the flame of fire deuoureth the ſtubble, and as the chaffe is conſumed of the flame, ſo their roote ſhall be as rottennes, and their bud ſhall riſe vp like duſt, becauſe they haue caſt off the law of the Lord of hoſtes, and contemned the Word of the holy one of Iſrael.

THat it might not ſeeme he hath cried out ſo oft without cauſe, he ſhewes againe how great and horrible puniſhment is neere to this people, and denounceth an extreme ruine againſt the obſtinate, becauſe they would not be brought into the way, but obſtinately reſiſted againſt the heauenly doctrine: now he vſeth ſuch figures as were fit to expreſſe his meaning. and alſo ſuch as touched them neerer to the quick, then if he had ſpoken plainely without them. He begins with a ſimilitude, and forthwith ends with a metaphor, in attributing a roote and bud to the people, as to a tree: for by theſe two words he comprehends whatſoeuer force was in the people; were it open, or hid: and ſaith, that all of it ſhould periſh. For euen as when the roote which giues ſtrength vnto the tree and ſuſteineth it begins once to rot, then the tree decayeth: ſo he threatens deſtruction to this people, and tels them that all their ſtrength is waſted and conſumed. But he ſhewes not now, as heretofore, the particular kinds of wickedneſſes by which they had prouoked the wrath of God. He only addes the generall cauſe, to wit, the contempt of the law of God, becauſe, as we all know, that is the fountaine of all euils. He alſo amplifies the fault greatly, that in as much as the will of God was manifeſted vnto them in the law, they could not ſay it was by ignorance or error, but of ſet malice, that (in ſhaking off the yoke of God) they gaue themſelues the raines to all licentious libertie, which was all one, as if in reiecting a moſt louing father, they ſhould giue ouer themſelues to be vaſſals and ſlaues to the diuell. Adde withall, that he accuſeth them of a generall reuolt, as if he ſhould ſay, they were not rebellious againſt God in one kind only, but they wholly forſooke the Lord as diſloyall apoſtataes. Moreouer, that they did not only deſpiſe the word of God, but he complaines of a thing more horrible, to wit, that the word was become abominable vnto them, or, that they reiected it with a wicked deſpitefulneſſe. If ſo be then that the contempt of the law of God be the wellſpring, head, and perfection of all euils, there is nothing we are more to feare, then that Satan ſhould ſo preuaile as to turne vs aſide from the reuerence of it. And if we be ſubiect to ſome faults, yet let vs ſuffer at the leaſt that the medicine may be applied vnto them; vnleſſe in reiecting thereof proudly and maliciouſly we meane to draw eternall perdition vpon our owne heads.

Verſ. 25. Therefore is the wrath of the Lord kindled againſt his people, and he hath ſtretched out his hand vpon them, and hath ſmitten them that the mountaines did tremble, and their carkaſes were torne in the midſt of the ſtreets: and for all this his wrath is not turned away, but his hand is ſtretched out ſtill.

IN this verſe the Prophet repeates the former iudgements whereof the Iewes had experience alreadie; and ſhewes, that they be not yet at an end, but that far worſe puniſhments are prepared for them, vnleſſe they returne into the right way. I confeſſe indeed that the time paſt is often changed for that which is to come, but the words of this text will beſt agree ſo; for he propounds two diſtinct things cõcerning ỹ obſtinat rebellió of this people: firſt, how God had alreadie chaſtiſed their iniquities. Secondly, ſeeing there was no ſigne of repentance, that he hath yet other ſcourges readie to correct their wickedneſſes. Thirdly, hee ſhewes what theſe ſcourges are, and tels them that the Aſſyrians ſhall come as ſoone as the Lord ſhall but hold vp his finger, yea that they ſhall come at his only hiſſing. This is the Prophets meaning. Whence we may gather, that as ſoone as a people hath eſcaped one calamitie, they forget their chaſtiſements, and neuer thinke more of the iudgements of God: and although experience ſhould alſo be the miſtris of fooles, yet they harden their hearts vnder the blowes. Iſaiah ſtrikes at this ſenſeleſnes, as if he ſhould ſay, Haue you ſo ſoone forgotten the calamities vnder which you groned not long ſince? Whence came it that the dead bodies were caſt heere and there, but becauſe the Lord had ſtretched forth his hand vpon you? And if God dealt with you as a Iudge, what is the cauſe that the wounds which do yet bleed, do not worke a reuerent feare in you to preſerue you from heaping ſinne vpon ſinne thus freſhly againe on all ſides? And to this end doth he repeate the particle Therfore, wherin he yelds a reaſon of his ſpeech, as if he ſhould ſay, Theſe are not afflictions that come at aduenture, but are manifeſt ſignes of God his diſpleaſure. He alſo ſaith expreſly, that God was angrie with his people: for had not the Iewes fallen from their dignitie, their condition had been more happie then that of all ỹ nations of the world beſides. When God therfore deales ſo ſharply & ſeuerely with his choſen people, no doubt but they had grieuouſly prouoked him by their rebellions. And withall he refutes the falſe brag of the Iewes wherewith they were woont to aduance and boaſt themſelues, as if they forſooth ought to be exempt from all corrections, becauſe they were the peculiar people of God. Alſo when he ſaith that the mountaines trembled: by this compariſon he expreſſeth the weight of the puniſhments vnder which they hardened themſelues, to the end he might yet more ſharply reproue their ſenſleſnes, as being more blockiſh then things without feeling if they felt not the wrath of God, and the horrible vengeance wherewith the kingdome of Iſrael had been chaſtiſed.

And for all theſe things.] Hee threatens more heauie plagues to come, as hath been ſayd. For although the wicked know they are corrected of the Lord, yet they thinke all is paſt, as ſoone as they haue receiued but two or three blowes. And therefore they wrap themſelues vp as it were in a vaine confidence, as though the worſt were paſt, and that the powers of the Almightie were ſpent. This is the cauſe why he cries out, that the wrath of the Lord is not yet appeaſed: and that although they haue ſuffered many calamities, yet notwithſtanding hee is furniſhed with varietie of darts, from whence they were to looke for infinite wounds.

The Conjunction Copulatiue may be reſolued into the Diſiunctiue, as if he would ſay, Be ſure that the hand of God is yet ſtretched out. Now he hath regard to that which he had ſayd before, namely, that the hand of God was lifted vp. He ſaith now, that it is not pulled in, but that he will yet purſue and ſmite them with wounds, yea, yet more feareAs in verſe the 26.

full and terrible. We ought to meditate vpon theſe ſentences diligentlie, to awaken ſuch men who feare not to lie ſnorting, and that after they haue been humbled and chaſtiſed of God.

Verſ. 26. And I will lift vp a ſigne vnto the Nations afarre, and will hiſſe vnto * them from the ends of the earth: and behold, * they ſhall come haſtely with ſpeede.

* Or, a people

* Or, he.

IN this, and in the verſes following, he ſhewes what puniſhment the Lord would inflict vpon this people, to wit, that they ſhall be ſo ſpoyled by the Aſſyrians, as the Iſraelites their brethren had been a little before them, yea much more grieuouſly: for howſoeuer the Aſſyrians in times paſt had much waſted them, the kingdome of Iudah neuertheleſſe was not yet brought to ruine. Adde hereunto, that the deſtruction of the kingdome of Iſrael was as a looking-glaſſe, wherein they might behold the wrath of God, and the iuſt iudgement which hee had brought vpon them: and yet no queſtion but this propheſie ſeemed incredible to them of Iudea, although there were many good likelihoods of it, and all becauſe the ſtate was quiet; and they no ſooner had the leaſt ſhew of truce, but they forthwith grew careleſſe: therefore hee ſayth, that this deſtruction ſhould come from afarre, whereof they did not ſo much as dreame. And thus he ſounds the Alarum as if the enemies had bin alreadie at the gates. For he puts not theſe words from afarre and from the ends of the earth, to put them in any hope, but rather of ſet purpoſe he thus ſpeakes, to the end they ſhould not iudge of the wrath of God by things apparant to the eye.

We are woont to eſteeme of dangers according to the outward appearãce of things; when the enemies are farre off, or that they be hindred by other impediments to moleſt vs, we thinke we are ſafe. Thus the people ſlept, as they ſay, on both ſides, no otherwiſe then as if they had been out of all danger. But Iſaiah declareth, that all this ſhall not hinder the Lord from ſending the Aſſyrians with banners diſplayed to cut them in pieces. This lifting vp a ſigne, is a figuratiue kind of ſpeech, becauſe when the banner is diſplayed and the Captaine giues the ſigne, then the ſouldiers are wont to arme themſelues and to begin the fight.

He ſhall hiſſe.] Although the change of the number be a thing much vſed in the Scripture, yet it is not without reaſon, I take it, that the Prophet of many nations makes but one people, for he ſhewes that when God ſhould aſſemble many peoples & ioine them to one body, that this ſhall be no confuſed multitude, but ſhould be as an intire body, hauing one head which ſhould rule and haue the ſoueraignte ouer them. He rather vſed ỹ word of hiſſing then ſome other that ſounded more terrible, as of ſounding the Trumpet, or ſuch like; to ſhew, that God had no neede of any great noyse to assemble the enemies togither, and that it is no hard matter for him to be reuenged on them which haue offended when the time appointed is come, for he can finish all things by the least signe that may be.

And behold he shall come.] He heere yet further confirmes that which I haue noted, to wit, that the wrath of the Lord must not be esteemed according to outward obiects: for although it seemes that all things do promise peace, yet shall warre come notwithstanding sodainely frō thence whence we looked not for it: yea and although it may seeme we be enuironed with friends round about vs, yet shall God raise vp enemies from the ends of the earth, which shal come easily vpon vs (all lets whatsoeuer to the contrary) as if a plaine and smooth way were prepared for them. Which we ought to beare well in mind, lest we suffer our selues to be blinded by some false trust and confidence.

We are also to obserue, that warres fall not out by chance, nor at mens appointments, but by the commandement of God, euen as if he sounded the Trumpet to assemble the souldiers. Be it by warre then, by famine, or pestilence that we are afflicted, let vs know that all of them do proceede from the hand of God, because all things come at his voyce, and readily obey him. And yet the Chaldeans had not this zeale of obeying God, for they were caried away with their couetous and insatiable lust and desire of dominion, or thought of some such like end, but God serued himselfe of them to execute his iudgements. And herein we clearely see an admirable witnes of the power of God, which is not tied to the will of men, neither depends it vpon their fantasies, but it is free for him to call whom he will to doe him seruice, yea such as are vtterly ignorant of it. And yet the wicked are not hereby excused when they are thus drawne against their purpose, because they serue not God freely, for they propound some other thing vnto themselues, as crueltie, spoile and violence, and God by their crueltie correcteth the sinnes and offences of his people.

Vers. 27. None shall faint nor fall among them: none shall slumber nor sleepe, neither shall the girdle of his loynes be loosed, nor the latchet of his shooes be broken.

His meaning is, that all things shall be so fitted and prepared, that nothing shall let or hinder them to march on forward: as if a Prince hauing inrolled his souldiers, should by and by giue order to prepare the wayes to bring in prouision of victuals, and to administer al things necessarie whatsoeuer. He shews then that they shall be readie and nimble, and that there shall be no impediment to cause them to prolong the time. He also shewes their diligence, affirming, that none of them should so much as slumber. Now in these words, none shall slumber, nor sleepe, the order is a little inuerted: for he should rather haue sayd, none shall sleepe, nor slumber: because it is a lesse matter to slumber then to sleepe. But this maner of speech must be thus resolued, They shall not slumber nor sleepe: that is to say, they shall be so farre off from sleeping, that they shall not slumber at all. We haue the like phrase of speech in the 127. Psalme, He which keepes Israel shall neither slumber nor sleepe. It is an Hebraisme then, which agrees neither to the Greeke, nor Latine.

Vers. 28. Whose arrowes shall be sharp, and all his bowes bent: his horse hoofes shall be thought like flint, and his wheeles like a whirlewind.

His meaning is, that they shall be furnished with fit weapons. Now he retaines the maner of fight vsed among the Assyrians and other Easterne people, who for the most part were accustomed to arme themselues with bowes and arrowes for warre, as we see the Englishmen doe at this day: but vnder these particulars he comprehends all sorts of weapons. But because the way was long, and the voyage difficult, the Iewes might happilie thinke there would be many impediments to turne away the enterprise of the enemy, and that is the cause he saith, why the hooses of the horses should be like flint, so as they should neither faint nor be wearie, but should easily come to Iudea. Hereunto appertaines the other member, when he compares the wheeles to a whirlewinde: for the people of old time were woont to goe to warre with Chariots, and therefore he not only mentions horses, but also wheeles. And all this is to be referred to this great haste and diligence which they should vse, to wit, that the Lord should not be hindred by the long distance of the way to bring in deadly enemies against the Iewes to destroy them.

Vers. 29 His roaring shal be as a Lion, and he shall roare like Lions whelps: they shall roare, and lay hold of the pray: they shall take it away, and none shall deliuer it.

This appertaines to crueltie. He compares the Chaldeans to Lions, whose sight is fearefull, and of nature cruell, as if he should say, They shall not be such mē as are touched with any sense of pitie, mercie, or humanitie, but shall rather shew themselues cruell, and like wilde beasts. He also addes, that they shall be of such strength, as none shall dare to come neere them to pluck the pray out of their teeth, Meaning thereby, that the Iewes shall be vtterly vnable to disappoint their assaults, because that for feare of their crueltie none shall aduenture to approch vnto them: for in regard that God would vse them as his seruants to punish the Iewes, it was requisite they should be furnished with a terrible power and maiestie, that this sottish people people might be made to vnderſtand at the laſt that they had not to doe with men, but with God, into whoſe hands it is a terrible thing to fall. Heb. 10. 31.

Verſ. 30. And in that day they ſhall roare vpon them, as the roaring of the ſea: and if they looke vnto the earth, behold darkenes, and ſorrow, and the light ſhall be darkened in their skie.

THe Prophet addes this, to let the Iewes vnderſtand that the Chaldeans ſhould not come into the field at random, but ſhould be appointed thereunto by God, and prepared by his hand. By the roaring of the ſea, he meaneth ſuch a great hurly burly, as ſhould ſeeme like vnto a deluge, by which all Iudea ſhould be drowned. He alſo cuts off all hopes, in foretelling that there ſhould be neither eaſe nor end in theſe chaſtiſements. The Iewes (ſaith he) ſhall looke vp and downe to finde meanes to eſcape, as men are woont to do in any great perplexitie, but on which ſide ſoeuer they turne them, be it to heauen or to the earth, they ſhall finde no eaſe from either of them, becauſe miſeries and calamities ſhould vtterly ouerwhelme them on all ſides. This maner of ſpeech is very common, yea euen among the rude people, at ſuch time as deſtruction and calamities do threaten on euery ſide, when no iſſue or eaſe can be perceiued. It is neceſſarie then that it ſhould fare thus with vs, when the Lord purſues vs, to the end his high hand may alwayes appeare in our eyes; and that on which ſide ſoeuer we turne our ſelues, we might behold the creatures armed againſt vs for the execution of his iudgements: for we may ſometimes eſcape mens hands, but which way ſhall we be able to flee from the hand of God?

THE VI. CHAPTER.

Verſ. 1. *In the yeere of the death of king Vzziah I ſaw alſo the Lord alſo ſitting vpon an high throne and lifted vp, and * the lower parts thereof filled the Temple.*

*Or, with his lowe parts he

THey haue been woont to begin the 6. Chapter heere, but ſome thinke it is the beginning of this booke; and therfore that the Propheſies of Iſaiah were not well collected and gathered together, alledging this reaſon, that ỹ Prophet refuſeth to take vpō him ỹ office of teaching, which he would not haue done, if he had exerciſed it before: and that he ſeemes altogether a nouice, ſeeing he yet knew not his vocation. Moreouer that heere he declares how he had now ſeene the Lord, and not before. But I thinke theſe reaſons are not of any value, as I haue touched heretofore, and therewithall I anſwere, that it ought to ſeeme no new thing that the Prophet ſhould be caſt as it were into a ſwound, and ſo aſtoniſhed with this ſtrange viſion, that he ſhould vtterly forget he was a Prophet: for there was no part in him which was not abaſhed at the preſence of God; and therefore as one amazed he willingly ran into ſome hole, or rather thinking himſelf but a dead man, he thought verily he ſhould haue giuen vp the ghoſt. And it is very neceſſarie that the children of God ſhould be thus touched, when God letteth them perceiue the ſignes of his preſence, to the end they may be humbled and confounded in themſelues. Adde alſo, that God meant thus to feare the rebellious people in the perſon of his ſeruant, and therefore it is no maruell if he excuſe himſelfe being ſo aſtoniſhed with feare; as alſo in regard that he had not before felt the weight of his charge as now he did, after the maieſtie of God had thus euidently appeared vnto him.

Queſt. Anſ.

But why was not this viſion giuen him in the beginning? I anſwere, it was neceſſarie in regard of the time, to confirme him more and more in the execution of his office. An example whereof we may ſee in the Apoſtles, for in the beginning they were ſent with commandement, not to paſſe the bounds of Iudea, but after Chriſt roſe againe, he eſtabliſheth them anew in a ſolemne maner. He breatheth on them, and tels them that they ſhould receiue the holy Ghoſt; and contents not himſelfe therewith, but ſending downe the holy Ghoſt from heauen vpon them in firie toongs, he put an extraordinarie power vpon them. So according to the diuers mutations which happened in times and kingdomes, it was neceſſarie that Iſaiah ſhould be confirmed and approued againe by a new viſion: as well that he might be encouraged to conſtancie, and might with the more cheerefulnes follow his vocation in time to come, as alſo that his miniſtrie might be authoriſed among the Iewes by the authoritie of God. This reaſon to me ſeemes ſufficient why he had not this viſion at the beginning, but had it rather ſometime after he began to teach.

Mat. 10. 5. Iohn 20. 22. Act. 2. 3.

Now that this booke takes not his beginning here, it ſufficientlie appeares by that we haue ſeene in the former preface, which is much more cleare and proper then this. And becauſe all paſſage might be ſtopped by the deſperate obſtinacie of this people, it was neceſſarie he ſhould begin his ſpeech with this vehemencie here ſet downe: as alſo becauſe it is very likely that he had exerciſed the function of teaching a long time vnder king Vzziah, who was dead as I thinke before this propheſie was publiſhed. Laſtly, the Prophet by theſe words ſignifies, that God appeared peared vnto him after he had alreadie begun to execute his office.

Some by Death vnderstand the Leprosie wherewith this king was smitten, which was 2.King.15.5 indeed a ciuill death, because the king was constrained to forsake the companie of men, and to leaue the gouernment of the kingdome: but I had rather take death in his proper signification. Thus I thinke then, to wit, that Isaiah prophesied the former things frō the time of Vzziah, at that time when he was strucken with Leprosie, and that Isaiah had this vision after his death, at that time when Iotham should succeed him. For we know how the change of kings do bring diuers stirres and hurly burlies, so as it is no wonder if Isaiah were confirmed againe in his calling. Also the prophesie it selfe which followes will declare sufficientlie that he had preached sometime before he had seene the Lord. For the blinding of the people is heere spoken of, whereof the Prophet had such experience, ỳ their stubburnnes might haue caused him to haue giuen ouer that which he had begun, seeing he lost all his labour. The Lord then confirmes him by this vision, to the end all discouragemēts being set apart, he should manfullie continue to do his dutie, and goe on with that which he had begun by the commandement of the Lord.

I saw the Lord.] Some aske how Isaiah could see the Lord, who is a spirit, and therefore can Obiect. not be seene with corporall eyes: and also because the vnderstandings of men are not able to mount vp to his infinit greatnes, how it can be that he should comprehend him vnder a visible forme? But we must note, that Ans. as oft as God shewed himselfe to the fathers he neuer appeared vnto them in his whole essence, but as men were able to comprehend him, according to their capacitie. For it is not inconuenient (albeit men creepe heere as it were vpon the earth, or at the least are very low beneath the heauens) that God should descend downe vnto them, so as the beames of his glorie should appeare vnto them as in a glasse. Such a forme then was represented before Isaiah, whereby he tasted and saw the incomprehensible maiestie of God as farre as his weakenes could beare. And therefore he attributes a seate, a garment, and a bodily sight vnto him. Whence wee may gather a very profitable doctrine, to wit, that as oft as God shewes any signe of his presence, we are to know for certaine that he is present by vs: for he deceiues not in giuing vaine representations, as men wickedly disfigure him by their fooliish inuentions. Because this representation then was a true testimonie of God his presence, Isaiah rightly affirmes that he saw him. As when it is sayd Matth.3.16 that Iohn saw the holy Ghost in the likenes of a Doue, the name of the spirit is transferred to the signe, because he should not doubt but it was the holy Ghost which rested vpō Christ.

It is demanded in the second place who Obiect. this Lord should be. S. Iohn in the twelfth of his Gospel teacheth and that truly, that it Ans. was Christ, because God neuer shewed himselfe to the fathers but in his eternall Word, and only Sonne. And yet some notwithstanding do restraine this amisse to the person of Christ in my iudgement, seeing the Prophet giues him indefinitly the name of God. The name Adonai, which seemes best to appertaine to Christ, fauours their opinion nothing at all, for it is often attributed vnto God simply, and without relation. Mention is made of God in this place then without determining of either end: yet notwithstanding one may properly say, that Isaiah saw the glory of Christ, because he was the image Col.1.15. of the inuisible God from euerlasting.

Sitting vpon a seate.] He could not haue better described the maiestie of God in regard of the circumstance of the place then vnder the person of a iudge, to the end his maiestie might the better awaken the Iewes, and we shall see hereafter the horrible iudgement which the Lord pronounceth from his seate. But to the end we thinke not the Prophet should inuent how he could paint out God, we must note that he faithfullie represents the same shape and forme which was exhibited and shewed vnto him. Now some may Obiect. doubt whether the Prophet was brought into the Temple, or whether these visions were Ans. reuealed vnto him sleeping. Although they are wont to bring many reasons for the one or the other exposition, which leaues it in suspence, notwithstanding the most probable coniecture is, that although he were out of the Temple, in the house, or in the fields, yet that this vision might be giuen him as to the rest of the Prophets.

And with his tower parts.] Almost all the expositors do vnderstand this of the fringes of the garment; although it may be referred to the verges of the iudgement seate: so as his meaning is to shew that the greatnes of God was such, that it spread it selfe throughout all the parts of the Temple. He also meanes to attribute a more excellēt and glorious forme vnto God, then to any humane creature whatsoeuer. And that he thus appeared in the Temple, it doth yet adde greater authoritie to the vision, because he had promised his presence to his people there, and there the people waited for answers, according as Salomon had expressly declared at the dedication of the Temple, 1.King.8.30. To the end then the people might know that these things proceeded from God (vpon whom they called dayly, and vpon whom in a vaine confidence they were puffed vp) this vision was shewed to the Prophet in the Temple. Now this must needs obtein great credit among them, when it was preached aloud that this was no word of any mortall man, but a diuine oracle comming downe frō God, whose name they had wont boldly to vsurp as oft as they would attribute vnto themselues any great matter. For this indeed was a very sharp and an odious prophesie, and therefore had the greater need of sound confirmation. And it is also a thing vsuall among the Prophets of God, namely, that he spake vnto them from his Temple and from his Sanctuarie.

Vers.2. The Seraphims stood vpon it,

euery one had ſixe wings; With twaine he couered his face, and with twaine he couered his feete, and with twaine he did flie.

HAuing teſtified that God had appeared vnto him full of maieſtie and glorie; he addes that the Angels were about him, which he calles Seraphims, in regard of their feruencie. Now although the etymologie of this word is well enough knowne, yet diuers reaſons are brought on both ſides. Some affirme they are called Seraphims, becauſe they burne with the loue of God: others, becauſe they are ſwift as fire: others, becauſe of their brightnes. Howſoeuer it be, the incomprehenſible maieſtie of God is ſet forth vnto vs in this deſcription, as by the ſunne beames, to the end in them we might learne to conſider and adore ſo admirable and excellent a glorie. Many thinke there were two Seraphims, euen as there were two Cherubims, which compaſſed the Arke. I willingly receiue this opinion, and yet I dare not affirme any thing, where the ſcripture is ſilent. Now in regard it is an vſuall thing in the ſcripture to appropriate the deſcriptions which are made of God, to the ſignes, the vſe whereof was ordinarie, and the knowledge thereof familiar among the faithfull; it may be the Prophet ſaw ſuch a figure. In the meane while I ſo continue to hold this as a probable coniecture, that yet notwithſtanding I hinder not any to receiue a contrarie interpretation, if any can bring better warrant, for Daniel ſaw thouſands of Angels, and not two only. Dan. 7. 10.

Exod. 25.

Six wings.] This figure is not without reaſon. For theſe wings thus compoſed, contained ſome myſterie, which ỳ Lord would not haue whollie hidden. The two by which the Angels flie, ſignifie nothing elſe but their readineſſe and nimbleneſſe to execute the commandements of God. And ſeeing the analogie of this thing is certaine and euident, I hope thoſe which are not contentious will eaſily agree thereunto. The other two wherewith they couered their faces, ſufficientlie ſhew, that the Angels themſelues can not beare the brightnes of Gods maieſtie; yea, that they are dazled with his looke, euen as we are when we behold the ſunne in his brightnes. And if the Angels can not beare the maieſtie of God, how great ſhall the raſhnes of men be if they ſtriue to attaine thereunto? Let vs learne then to enquire no further of God then is lawfull and expedient, in ſuch wiſe as our knowledge may ſoberly and modeſtly taſte that which yet is very farre off from our capacitie. Yet notwithſtanding the Angels do not ſo couer their faces as that they ſhould vtterly depriue themſelues of any ſight of God, for they flie not at randon. So we alſo may behold God, but yet ſo farre foorth as the weakenes of our vnderſtanding can endure. There is a little more difficultie as touching the other two wings. For ſome thinke they haue their feete couered, leſt they ſhould touch the earth, and ſo get ſome foile from thence, as wee our ſelues and others haue been wont to doe. For euen as in walking we gather duſt & filth, ſo whileſt we remaine vpon the earth we are infected, as with touching ſome contagious thing. Whence we may learne, that the faithfull ſhall haue no acquaintance with the Angels, vnleſſe they flie aloft, being no longer glued to the earth. This is the expoſition which ſome bring. But I am rather of their opinion who thinke theſe wings had a cõtrarie vſe to thoſe which were aboue rehearſed: for euen as they couered their faces with wings aboue, leſt they ſhould be ouerwhelmed with the exceeding brightnes of God; ſo had they wings beneath, to couer themſelues from our ſight. Now if it be ſo that wee can not behold ſo ſmall beames of the brightnes of God which glimmereth in the Angels but we be by and by dazled; how can we behold that moſt excellent and bright maieſtie of God which is able to ſwallow vp all our reaſon? Let men learne then that they are farre remote from the perfect knowledge of God, ſeeing they are vnable to attaine ſo farre as to the Angels. This expoſition I take to be the beſt, and yet I reiect not the firſt.

Verſ. 3. And one cried to another, and ſaid, Holy, holy, holy, is the Lord of hoſts: the whole world is full of his glorie.

IT was neceſſarie all theſe things ſhould be repreſented to the Prophet in a viſion, to the end that not only the people but euen Iſay himſelfe ſhould be the more moued. For there was no leſſe neede in regard of him, then of all the people, ſeeing he was to ſuſteine very hard and difficult aſſaults; neither could he haue boldly denounced theſe things, vnleſſe he had been firſt confirmed. The people alſo being admoniſhed by this viſion how exceeding great and fearefull the maieſtie of God was, who pronounced this ſentence againſt them, ſhould be terrified therewith in good earneſt. This God (at whoſe only looke the Angels themſelues tremble, and whoſe praiſes they continuallie ſound forth with full voyce; laſtly, whom they ſerue and obey) came forth vpon his throne: but men whom he had vouchſafed to adopt for his children, proudly with obſtinacie reſiſted him. Now when we heare that the Angels are continually buſied in ſounding forth Gods glorie, let vs know that their example is ſet before vs for our imitation. For it is the higheſt ſeruice we can do vnto him to be occupied in celebrating his praiſes. In as much then as he herein makes vs companions with his Angels, it is to the end that whilſt we wander here below, we ſhould notwithſtanding be conioyned and made like to the heauenly inhabitats. Laſtly, to the end the harmonie between vs and the Angels may be perfect in all points, it behoues that the praiſes of God doe not only ſound vpon our tongues, but that all the actions of our life be referred thereunto; which we ſhall then do when we endeuor to doe all things therein to the glory of God.

To be occupied in celebrating Gods praiſes, is the higheſt ſeruice we can do him.

Holy, Holy, Holy.] The Auncients haue vſed this teſtimonie againſt the Arians when they would prooue the three perſons in the one eſſence of God. I miſlike not their iudgement, although if I ſhould haue to deale with heretikes, I had rather vſe ſtronger arguments, for they triumph and become the more hardened when we contend againſt them with ſuch places as are not ſufficientlie plaine and euident, as heere they might readily anſwer, that by the number of Three in this place was ſhewed a perfection (as in many other places of the ſcripture beſides.) Although I doubt not but the Angels doe heere ſet forth one God in three perſons (and to ſay the truth, we can not magnifie God, but we muſt by and by celebrate the praiſes of the Father, of the Son, and of the holy Ghoſt) yet notwithſtanding I take it we ſhould rather vſe more ſolid teſtimonies, to the end that whileſt we go about to prooue the chiefe article of our faith, we expoſe not our ſelues to the ſcoffes of heretikes. So then by this repetition there ſhould be rather ſhewed an vnwearied continuance of praiſing, as if the Prophet had ſayd, The Angels neuer ceaſed their melodie in ſinging the praiſes of God: as indeed his Holineſſe miniſtreth to vs infinite matter thereof.

The whole world is full. Word for word it is, The fulneſſe of whole earth: which we may referre as well to the fruits, liuing things, as to all ſorts of riches wherewith God hath furniſhed the earth; and ſo the ſenſe ſhould be, that in this adorning of the earth, and the diuers furnitures which are in it, we may ſee the glorie of God to ſhine, becauſe they are ſo many teſtimonies of his fatherly loue towards vs. Notwithſtanding the moſt ſimple and naturall ſenſe is, that the glorie of God filles the whole world, and is ſpread abroad throughout all the quarters of the earth. And in mine opinion there is heere a cloſe oppoſition, by which he beates back the fooliſh ouerweening of the Iewes, who imagined the glorie of God was ſhewed no where elſe but vpon them, as if they meant to ſhut it vp in their Temple. Now Iſaiah ſhewes that it is ſo farre off from beeing ſhut vp within ſo narrow bounds, that it fils the whole earth. And this agrees to the propheſie which will afterwards follow touching the blinding of the Iewes, for thereby he hath giuen entrance for the Gentiles into the Church of God, in regard they ſupplied the emptie and forſaken place of the Iewes.

Verſ. 4. And the limtels of the doore cheekes mooued at the voice of him that cried, and the houſe was filled with ſmoke.

THis noyſe of the poſts ſufficiently ſhewes that it was no voyce of man which the Prophet heard; for there is no mortall man that is able to make the poſts and threſhold of an houſe to ſhake with his voyce. Now the Lord meant not only to confirme his voyce to the Prophet, but to men alſo, and that for euer, that ſo it might be knowne throughout all ages. Let vs know then that the voyce of God is confirmed to vs at this day by this ſound, to the end we alſo ſhould tremble as oft as he ſpeaketh: for if the dumb and inſenſible creatures are moued therewith, what ought we to do; we, I ſay, which feele, ſmell, taſte, and only vnderſtand it, to the end we ſhould holily and reuerently obey his holy word?

The houſe was filled with ſmoke.] This was a common and an ordinarie ſigne which the Lord vſed among the auncient people: for as ſoone as Moſes entred into the Tabernacle we reade that the ſmoke was ſpread, ſo as the people could neither ſee Moſes nor the Tabernacle. The ſmoke then which Iſaiah deſcribes was no new thing; but God according to his accuſtomed maner meant thereby to teſtifie that he would manifeſt his power in executing iudgement vpon this people. Exod. 33. 6. 9.

But ſome may aske why the Lord would manifeſt his preſence by this ſigne rather then by an other? A twofold anſwere may be giuen to this queſtion. Firſt, becauſe the Lord hath alwayes been bent to repreſſe the boldnes of men, to the end they ſhould not enquire further into his Maieſtie then was meete, being alwayes prone (euen all of vs) to be prying ouermalepertly and raſhly in this regard. Wee would pearce aboue the clouds and ſearch into the very ſecrets of Gods counſell, and in the meane while neglect that which is before our feete. From thence ariſeth this laberinth of errors, in which after ỹ ſpirits of men are enwrapped, they forthwith fall to ſerue falſe gods: for we no ſooner giue leaue vnto thẽſelues to forge what they liſt of God in their fantaſie, but they by and by therewithall enterpriſe they care not what againſt him. And therefore it is not without cauſe that he hath oppoſed this ſmoke, thereby to admoniſh men of their weakenes. And yet he would not haue them to be either blind, or beſotted with the blockiſhnes and error of the Papiſts, who at this day couer ignorance vnder the name of ſimplicitie: but he forbids to ſearch or prie further into the heauẽly myſteries then that which is manifeſted vnto vs by himſelfe in his word: for that (as S. Auguſtine ſayth) is a very learned ignorance. Wherefore as oft as mention is made of the like ſmoke, let vs know it is as a bridle by which we ought to be kept in awe, that we ſhould not be too curious in ſearching into the counſels of God. Secondly, this ſmoke was to ſtrike a feare into them, as we ſee when Dauid deſcribing God to be terrible and angrie, ſayth, that cloudes and darknes are round about him, Pſal. 97. 2. which alſo agrees very well to this place, becauſe he pronounceth an horrible iudgement, to wit, the blinding of the Iewes. Some would haue this a forerunner of ỹ fire which ſhould burne the Temple: but that which I haue ſet downe is more probable.

Verſ. 5. Then I ſayd, Woe is me, for I am vndone, becauſe I am a man of polluted lips, and I dwell in the midſt of a people of of polluted lips: for mine eyes haue ſeene the King and Lord of hoſtes.

NOw the Prophet telles in what manner he was effectuallie touched with this viſion, to wit, that hee was ſo terrified with the feare of Gods preſence, that he thought himſelfe vndone. And hee addes the reaſon wherefore he thought thus of himſelfe: Becauſe (ſaith he) I am of polluted lips. I wonder why S. Ierome hath turned it, Becauſe I held my peace, ſeeing there is no ambiguitie in the word. It is true that the verb Damah ſignifies to hold ones peace, but in this place there is a certaine note of the verb paſſiue which is added. It may alſo be tranſlated thus, Wo vnto me for I am brought into ſilence: becauſe ſilence is often taken for death in the ſcripture, and it is ſayd, that thoſe which are buried are in ſilence. But ſeeing it is all one as touching the ſenſe, I will not contend much about the tranſlation. His meaning is then, that he was ſo terrified with the ſight of God, that he became as a dead man. And indeede there is no cauſe why we ſhould wonder at this; for man muſt be wholly brought to nothing in regard of his fleſh, to the end he may be renued according to God. Whence is it that men liue, that is, that they thinke they liue, being puffed vp with the knowledge of their owne reaſon and power, but becauſe they are ignorant of God? And ſo before he reueale himſelfe to vs we thinke we are gods rather then men, but when the Lord appeeres, then we begin to feele and perceiue what wee are. Frō thence comes that true humilitie which conſiſts in this, that men attribute nothing to themſelues, but depend wholly vpon God. Wherefore this and ſuch like places vpō this argument, ought to be diligentlie obſerued. Now it was an ordinarie thing with the holy fathers to crie, I ſhall die, I am vndone, as oft as they ſaw God. Wherfore before our minds be well awakened by approching to God in good earneſt, our life is nothing elſe but a vaine imagination: we are in darknes, wherein it is very hard to diſcerne truth from error: but when we are come into the light, it is eaſie to diſcerne the one from the other. So when God comes to vs he brings the light with him, to the end we may ſee that we are nothing, which yet wee can not perceiue whileſt we are puffed vp with a vaine opinion of our ſelues before.

Iudg. 13. 22.

Obiect. Yet mine eyes haue ſeene.] Is it the ſight of God which brings death to men? For it ſeemes ſtrange that the looke or preſence of God ſhould take away the life, whereof he is the fountaine.

Anſ. I anſwere, that this falles out by accident, and in reſpect of our owne default, and not from the nature of the Lord. Death is in our ſelues, and we perceiue it not but when it is compared with the life of God. And without all queſtion this is it that the Prophet here meanes. For he ſaith not ſimplie, I am dead, but he addes the reaſon, namely, becauſe he is of polluted lips.

Queſt. But why reſtraines he pollution to the lips? Was hee pure in his vnderſtanding, in his thoughts, and in the other parts of his body?

Anſ. I anſwere, The Prophet toucheth that which was the principall and moſt precious thing in him, to wit, his tongue, which was dedicate and conſecrated to God, by whom he was inſtituted a Prophet. And although otherwiſe he was a ſinner, yet notwithſtanding in regard of the holy office which he exerciſed, he was ſpecially conſecrated in this part. And yet in as much as he anſwered not to the holines of God, he confeſſeth he is polluted, yea euen in that part which is the moſt holy in him. And this I take to be the ſimple and natiue ſenſe of this place, although the expoſitors haue ſayd nothing touching it hitherto.

In the midſt.] This is added by way of expoſition. For here he puts himſelfe among the people, no otherwiſe then as one who felt himſelfe guiltie of the pollution of the whole body, and forgets the puritie he had receiued of God, becauſe he was vnable to ſtand before him. Hence it appeeres, how ſuch erre as thinke the Prophet feigned as the common people are wont to doe, who forge diuers inuentions of God. For as I haue ſaid, the preſence of God is the confounding of the fleſh, becauſe it ſhewes vs that we are nothing in our ſelues. He which ſeeth God, and is guiltie of his owne miſerie, what can he feele but his owne perdition? becauſe God is the Iudge, from whom nothing can be hidden, or vnknowne; in whoſe preſence all our puritie becoms impuritie. And if this befell the Prophet, what may wee thinke of our ſelues? for what are wee in compariſon of him? Although God hath begun to purge vs, yet muſt wee alwayes acknowledge our vncleanenes, the reliques whereof we ſhall alwayes feele in our fleſh. From this place alſo we are to gather a generall doctrine, to wit, that mens mouthes are polluted and impure if they be not purged of God. Whence it followes, that all humane doctrines do alwayes ſmell of their impuritie: for there is nothing pure, but that which proceeds frō the Lord.

All doctrines of men ſmell of impuritie.

Verſ. 6. Then flew one of the Seraphims vnto me with an hote coale in his hand, which he had taken from the altar with the tongs.

THe Prophet ſhewes what remedie was giuen him after he had been thus terrified, and as he thought to death: and this confirmes that which I haue ſaid alreadie, to wit, that the puritie of the lips comes from God only, for men can bring nothing of their owne which is not vaine and impure. If any obiect, it is abſurd that the Lord ſhould purge him now, as if his toong had been impure and prophane before, which notwithſtanding was the organ of the holy Ghoſt: I haue heretofore ſufficientlie anſwered this obiection. True it is that the Lord had purged him before, but according to his meaſure. The purgation which is now added is greater, becauſe it hath his degrees and increaſings, which no man can whollie obtaine at the firſt. Wherefore we muſt not gather that the Prophets lips were impure before, because they are now purged: but wee are to regard to what end this was done, namely, because the Lord would augment and increase his graces in him, and rayse him vp higher in dignitie, to the end he might haue greater authoritie among the people; and this was requisite by reason of the times, and of the mutation which was then in the state. The fire is taken from the altar, as diuine and heauenly, because the law forbad to take any strange fire from thence: the reason is, in regard that whatsoeuer men doe mingle with sacred things, can not but be a meere profanation. Wherefore Isaiah was taught by this figure, that all puritie floweth from God only.

Vers. 7. And he touched my mouth, and sayd, loe, this hath touched thy lips, and thine iniquitie shall be taken away, and thy sinne shall be purged.

WE see how God stoopes downe to the weakenes of humane sense. He puts the tongs in the hand of one of ỹ Seraphims; to the end he may take a cole from the Altar and applie it to the Prophets mouth. This was done in a vision: yet notwithstanding God raysed vp the vnderstanding of the Prophet by the help of this outward signe. But wee must not thinke that the cole had any vertue in it selfe, as superstitious people imagin hidden vertues in magicall arts: there is nothing of all this heere; for it is one God and none other which can purge vncleannes from any part whatsoeuer. The Angell was heere the minister of the purgation, but he was not the author of it; to the end we post not that ouer to another which belongs to God alone. And this the Angell himselfe expresseth clearely, in that he attributes nothing to himselfe, but taking the holy pledge which he had receiued of God, he applies it as a sacrament to the mouth of the Prophet: not as if he could not haue been clensed without the cole, but because this visible signe was profitable for a witnes and confirmation of such a thing. And this also is the vse of Sacraments, namely, to confirme vs according to our weakenes. For we are not Angels to behold the mysteries of God without any helps; and therefore he lifts vs vp to him by little and little, and as it were by steps.

The vse of Sacraments.

Behold he hath touched.] He shewes how the confirmation which was giuen by the signe was not in vaine, but that the thing which was signified by it was forthwith granted, so as Isaiah well perceiued he was not deceiued. Whence we may gather, that the thing it selfe is giuen vs in the Sacraments with the signe. For the Lord feeds not our eyes in the Sacraments with bare and emptie figures, but he ioynes the truth it selfe with them, to testifie that he works by the signes effectuallie. And wee must note this so much the more diligently, as there are few at this day who are acquainted with the true vse of the Sacraments; as also in regard that commonly there are contentions among many holy and learned personages, euen about this matter. Now in the first place we must hold this article, That ỹ truth can neuer be separate from the signes; although it ought to be distinguished. For we see and feele the signe; as the bread which is giuen vs by the Minister in the Supper: and because Christ must be sought in heauen, it behoues vs that our thoughts be caried thither. Notwithstanding he offreth his body by the hand of the Minister, to the end the faithfull might truly inioy it; prouided that they aspire to heauen by faith where he is. He giues it then to the faithfull who raise vp their minds to him by faith, because he can be no deceiuer.

God giues vs the thing signified in the Sacraments, and feeds not our eies there with emptie shadowes.

The truth neuer separated from the signes, yet they must be distinguished.

Faith.

Now the vnbeleeuers receiue the signe indeed, but because they lie groueling vpon the earth, and ascend not vp into the kingdome of Christ, they are not partakers of the veritie, because that he which hath not faith, can not lift vp his thought to God, and therefore can not be partaker of Christ. It is faith only which opens vs the gate into the kingdome of God: wherefore whosoeuer will liue by the flesh of Christ, it is necessarie that he be lifted vp farre aboue all humane sense into heauen by faith. In a word, there is nothing but the spirit of God only which can make vs partakers of this Communion: yet notwithstanding it followes not thereupon that the truth of the Sacraments should be diminished by the vnbeliefe of men, seeing God alwaies offreth the spirituall thing, but the wicked leaue it behind them; euen as the grace of God by the Gospell is offred to all, but all do not receiue it, although they heare it, and be constreined to consent to the truth of it.

The Spirit.

Moreouer we learne from this place, that the Sacraments are neuer separated from the word, for the Angell representeth not a dumb person in this place; but after he hath giuen the signe, he by and by addes the word, to shew the end of it: for it could haue been no Sacrament, vnlesse the word had also been ioyned vnto it, whereby Isaiah might vnderstand wherefore the cole was put to his mouth. And therefore let vs know that the principall part of the Sacraments consists in the word, which without it are but meere corruptions; as wee see at this day how the Sacraments in the Papacie are commonlie turned into meere may-games. Now the summe is, that there should remaine no impediment why Isaiah should not now susteine the person of God, being perfectlie clensed, and pure from all spot.

The Word and Sacraments must go together.

Vers. 8. * Also I heard the voyce of the Lord, saying, Whom shall I send? and who shall goe for vs? Then I said, Heere am I, send me.

* Or, after.

THe Prophet begins now to declare the end of this vision, and why the Lord appeared in so glorious a maiestie to ordaine him a Prophet againe, to wit, because he was to carrie an incredible ambassage touching the blinding of the Iewes: he is made more

certaine then of his vocation in ſo odious a matter, to the end that treading all feare of man vnder his feete, he may obey the commandement of God, for there is nothing that ſo ſecureth the minds of the faithfull, as whē they know they ſerue God. He had alſo another teſtimonie, to wit, that he was purged of God, and this was ſufficient to make him vndertake the hardeſt burthen which could be impoſed vpon him.

Whom ſhall I ſend?] The Prophet brings in the Lord ſpeaking, as if he could find no man fit to do this meſſage. Some thinke that the blockiſhnes of the Prieſts and Prophets is heere touched, becauſe not one amongſt them was able to teach, although they were many in number. Now although this reaſon hath ſome colour, yet I had rather refer it to the certentie of ỹ vocation of the Propher, to wit, that the Lord called him not forth at random, but with choice. This is then a graue deliberation which the Lord takes as touching him whom he ſhould ſend: not that he doubteth but theſe maners of ſpeech are in regard of vs, euen as when he ſayd, I will goe downe, and ſee, Gen.18.21. For God, to whom all things are manifeſt, needs no inquiſitie: but to the end that men may not thinke he haſtens too much in doing any thing, therefore he applies himſelf to their cōmon maner of ſpeech. So whē he asks, Whom he ſhould ſend, he ſignifies, that he needs not a common perſon, but an excellent Teacher in the execution of ſo great a charge. Hence wee are to gather that the authoritie of Iſaiah was confirmed, to the end he might not only be held for a Prophet, but the chiefe among the Prophets. Who ſhall goe for vs? I am of opinion indeede that this place notes out the three perſons in the Deitie, as elſewhere alſo, Let vs create man after our image, Gen.1.26. For God deliberates with himſelfe, and that in the plurall number. And no doubt but he here conſults with his eternall Wiſdome and Power, that is to ſay, with the Sonne, and the Holy-Ghoſt.

Heere am I.] This ſo prompt an anſwere ſets forth the greatnes of that readines which proceeds of faith. For he who before was like a dead man, feares now no difficulties at all. Whence we ſee, that this terror whereof we haue ſpoken heretofore, proceeded not from rebellion, as if he would flee the preſence of God, and refuſe the charge which was inioyned him: but becauſe he had neede of new grace, that ſo he might feele and know himſelfe ſufficient for the ſuſteining of this office. Whence it is to be obſerued, that we can neuer rightlie enterpriſe any thing, without certaine teſtimonie of our vocation: for without that, we ſhall ſtagger and doubt at euery ſtep.

Hee that doubtes of his vocation, muſt needs ſtagger at euery ſtep.

Beſides, it is a great prop to vphold our infirmitie, when we feele that we are not deſtitute of neceſſarie gifts, but that God furniſheth vs, to the end we may the more eaſily performe our charge. Moreouer it behoues vs to be inſtructed by this excellent example of obedience, that as oft as the Lord calls vs, we be readie and prepared to beare the burthen which he ſhall lay vpon vs, and that we refuſe it not, notwithſtanding all the difficulties which may ſtand in our way. When the Prophet ſaith, Heere I am, it is as much as if he ſhould haue ſaid, I am readie to execute that which God ſhall command me; for by this maner of ſpeech, obedience is often noted forth in the Scripture.

Verſ.9. And he ſaid, goe, and ſay vnto this people, yee ſhall heare indeed, but yee ſhall not vnderſtand: yee ſhall plainly ſee, and not perceiue.

IT appeares againe frō hence more clearly, how neceſſarie this viſion was for Iſaiah, to the end he might not faint in his courſe euen at the firſt puſh. For this was a great offence of mind vnto him, that he muſt be faine to haue experience of ſuch an obſtinacie and rebellion in the people of God; and not for a yeere or two, but euen for more then fortie yeeres together. It was neceſſarie therefore that he ſhould be well armed, and to become euen as a wall of braſſe, that he might be inabled to ſtand againſt ſuch a rebellion. The Lord plainly teſtifies to Iſaiah then, that he ſhall haue to deale with obſtinate people, whom he ſhall do very little good vpon; yet that he muſt not faint by taking offence at ſo ſtrange a thing, neither be diſcouraged by ſuch a ſtubburnnes; but ỹ he is to ouercome all theſe temptations, and to paſſe beyond them with an inuincible courage. For the Lord admoniſheth him before hand touching that which ſhould come to paſſe: and it is as if he ſhould haue ſayd, Thou ſhalt teach, but without fruite, but yet ceaſe thou not for all that to inſtruct ſtill, becauſe I command thee: and though thou perceiue no fruite, yet be not therefore wearie: only obey me, and leaue all the iſſue of thy labour vnto my will. I forewarne thee touching theſe things betime, to the end thou ſhouldſt not faint nor turne aſide by reaſon of thy ill ſucceſſe, as though ſomething vnexpected were befalne thee. Adde withall, that he is commanded to detect their blind obſtinacie openlie, as if of ſet purpoſe he ſhould thunder out againſt them, and ſhould ſay, I know it very well that I ſhall loſe my labour, but I care not, it is enough for me that God approues of my actions, to whom my preaching ſhall be a ſweet ſmelling ſauour, although it bring death vnto you, 2.Cor.1.

Miniſters are to yeeld obedience vnto God: and to commend the ſucceſſe of their labors to the bleſſing of God.

Verſ.10. Make the heart of this people fat, make their eare heauie, and ſhut their eyes, leſt they ſee with their eyes, and heare with their eares, and vnderſtand with their hearts, and conuert, and be heale them.

HEre the former ſentence is better expreſſed. For God not onely admoniſheth Iſaiah that he ſhall loſe his labour in teaching; but alſo that he will cloſe vp the eyes of this people people by his doctrine, thereby giuing them occasion of greater blindnes and obstinacie, which in the end shall worke their perdition. He signifies that the people being depriued of reason and vnderstanding, shall perish, and that there shall be no remedie left: notwithstanding he therewithall aduertiseth ỳ Propher, that his labour shall be an acceptable sacrifice vnto him, howsoeuer it bring ruine and death to the Iewes. And truly this is an excellent sentence, not only because Isaiah foretelles the things which were accomplished in the kingdome of Christ, but because it conteines a very excellent doctrine, the vse whereof is perpetuall in the Church of God. Also those who walke faithfullie in the ministrie of the word, shall be forced to feele the experience of it: and we learne it by effect more then were to be wished: but this hath been common to all the seruants of Christ, and therefore ought we to beare it with the greater courage, howsoeuer it be a great scandall to those that serue God with a pure conscience. Besides, we are not only much offended hereby, but Satan vnder this pretext pricks his instruments forwards to bring their doctrine into the greater disgrace; namely, that is not onely without fruite, but also because it doth hurt, so as it makes men more obstinate, and works their confusion. For many at this day hauing nothing else to reproch the doctrine of the Gospell withall, affirme, that the preaching therof brings no other fruite but this, that it makes men worse then they were before. Now whatsoeuer the euent be, yet notwithstanding God declares that our ministrie pleaseth him, because we do that which he hath commanded.

Besides, albeit our labours seeme vnprofitable, and that men cast themselues headlong into destruction, waxing more obstinate, yet must we goe on still, because we do nothing of our owne will, and therefore to content our selues that we are approued of God. We haue cause to sigh indeed when the euent answereth not our labour: and wee ought to be much in prayer vnto God that he would giue his word efficacie. Yea, we are to lay the fault in part vpon our selues, when we see so little fruite; yet are we not for all that to cast away our weapons, or to forsake our charge. The truth must alwaies sound forth from our mouthes, although there be no eares to heare it, yea, although the world be as blind and as senseles as stones. For it is more then sufficient that we faithfullie serue to the glorie of God, and that our labours are pleasing to him: neither is the sound of our voyce in vaine when it leaues the world without excuse.

The faithfull teachers ought heere to receiue a singular consolation, to fortifie themselues the better alwaies against the offences which fall out euery day by the rebellions of men, lest they be thereby cooled: no, let them continue in their office with inuincible constancie. Now forasmuch as this also is a generall offence, to wit, that the liuely word of God (at the hearing whereof all the world ought to tremble) strikes thus the eares of men without fruit or profit; let the weake in faith learne also to strengthen themselues with this sentence. We are wont to wonder how it can possiblie come to passe that the greatest part of the world should so furiouslie resist against God. And from thence also ariseth this difficultie, to wit, whether that can be the heauenlie truth of God or no which is reiected without punishment; because it is not likely that God would speake to men, to the end they should scorne him. But to the end our faith waier not, we must oppose this stay; namely, that the office of teaching was committed to Isaiah, that in casting abroad the seed of life, it should bring forth nothing but death: as also that mention is not made heere of that which befell once, but it is a prophesie of the kingdome of Christ as shall be said anon. Furthermore the circumstance is to be noted, that Isaiah was not sent to all, but only to the Iewes: wherefore there is very great vehemencie in the particle demonstratiue Hinneh, as if he should say, The people whom the Lord had speciallie chosen, heard me not; but shut their eyes in so manifest a light.

Therefore let vs not maruell, if whilest we speake to those who brag of the name of God, it happens to vs euen as if we told a tale to deafe eares. True it is this is a sharp message that the Prophet should say he is sent of God to stop vp their eares, to shut their eyes, and to make their hearts fat, because it seemes these things are nothing agreeable to the nature of God, and that therefore they are contrarie to his word. But we must not think it strange if God auenge himselfe vpon the malice of the people by such an extreme blinding of them. In the meane while the Prophet hath shewed heeretofore that the cause of this blindnes was in themselues. For in commanding them to hearken, he testifies, that there is a doctrine fit for their instruction, if they would shew themselues teachable; and that the light is offred to enlighten & leade them, if so be they would open their eyes.

All the fault then is imputed vnto the people, because they reiected so wonderfull a blessing of God. Whence the solution of the difficultie which we touched alittle before, is more apparent. I grant it seemes very hard at the first blush, that the Prophets should make the hearts of men more hard; seeing they bring the word of God in their mouth, by which as by a light men should lighten and order their paths, Psal.119.105. And we know that Dauid giues it this title, Psal.19.9. It is not the office of the Prophets then to blind the eyes, but rather to open them. And heereafter this word is called perfect wisedome, Chap.8. How comes it to passe then that it takes away mens vnderstanding, and makes the dullards? Rather the hearts which were before of stone, iron, and steele, should hereby be mollified: how can it be then they should be come the more obdurate? I answere (as I haue touched alreadie) that such blindnes and hardening proceeds not from the nature of the word, but is by way of accident: and it ought to be attributed to the wicked.

wickednes of men. For euen as they who haue ſore eyes can not accuſe the Sunne for hurting them with the light thereof: nor hee which hath a weakenes and fault in his hearing, a cleere and very loud voyce which he can not beare: laſtly, as he that is of a weake capacitie is not to be offended with high and difficult things which he is vnable to comprehend: So likewiſe the wicked can not accuſe the word of God that they become the worſe after the hearing of it. Seeing then that all ſ fault is in themſelues becauſe they do not giue it acceſſe into their hearts, what wonder is it if that which was appointed for their foode, do become their bane? For it muſt needs be, that the diſloyaltie and infidelitie of men ſhould be puniſhed in this maner, to the end they ſhould feele death from that, whence they might haue receiued life; and darknes from thence, whence they might haue receiued light: laſtly, all noyſome and hurtfull things frō thence, where they might haue had the fulnes of all bleſſings to ſaluation. Which is diligentlie to be noted, becauſe there is nothing more common with men, then to abuſe the gifts of God: and whileſt they make theſelues beleeue they are very innocent, anon they deck themſelues with other mēs feathers. But they are doubly wicked, in as much as they applie not thoſe things to their true vſe which the Lord hath giuen them in truſt; but haue alſo prophanely and miſerably corrupted them.

Similies.

The puniſhment of infidelitie.

S. Iohn alledgeth this place to ſet out more plainely the obſtinacie of the Iewes. True it is that he recites it not word by word; but yet he explanes the meaning thereof ſufficientlie. And therefore could they not beleeue (ſaith he) becauſe Iſaiah ſaid, he hath blinded their eyes, and hardened their hearts. Notwithſtanding this propheſie was not ſ cauſe of their vnbeliefe, but the Lord ſo foretold it, becauſe he foreſaw they would be ſuch. Now the Euangeliſt applies that to the Goſpell which was practiſed vnder the law: and teacheth therewithall, that the Iewes of his time were depriued of reaſon and vnderſtanding, becauſe they were rebellious againſt God. Although if any ſhould aske the firſt cauſe, we muſt come to the predeſtination of God. But becauſe this counſell is hidden frō vs, we muſt not be curious in ſearching into it. For the reaſon of God his eternall counſell apperteines not to vs; but we muſt looke to the cauſe which is before our eyes, to wit, their rebellion, by which they made themſelues vnworthie of ſo many and great benefites.

S. Paul alſo ſhewes from this place not once but often, that all the cauſe of their blindnes remained in themſelues, Act. 28. 27. Rom. 11. 8. Thou, ſaith he, haue made their eares heauie, and ſtopped their eyes. So, that which the Prophet attributes heere to doctrine; that the Apoſtle attributes to the wicked affection of this people, who were the cauſe of their owne blinding. S. Paul brings in the holy Ghoſt ſpeaking in this place. S. Iohn ſaith, that Iſaiah ſpake thus of Chriſt, after he ſaw his glorie. Whence it appeeres, as we haue ſaid heretofore, that this God which filled the whole earth with his glorie, was Chriſt. But Chriſt is not ſeparate from his Spirit. It is to very good purpoſe then that S. Paul hath referred this place to the holy Ghoſt: for although God did repreſent himſelfe to the Prophet in the liuely image of his Sonne, yet is it alſo certaine that whatſoeuer he repreſented vnto him, was wholly ſhed into him by the power of the holie Spirit. Now let the wicked barke againſt vs while they will with their blaſphemies, and blame our doctrine, becauſe the world is made the worſe by the preaching of it; yet ſhall they gaine nothing thereby, neither yet be able to diminiſh the leaſt tittle of the authoritie thereof, for they muſt forthwith condemne God himſelf when they condemne his doctrine, but their ſlanders can not let that his iuſtice ſhould not appeere; or that he ſhould not preſerue that and vs alſo blameles.

Act. 28. Ioh. 12. 41.

That they conuert not.] Hee heere cleerely pronounceth, that he ſent not the Prophet to ſaue the people, but rather to deſtroy them. But the word of God in it ſelf is healthfull, and at leaſt neceſſarie it is that there come ſome fruit from the preaching thereof, which may profit ſome, although many loſe the fruit of it by their owne infidelitie. I anſwere, mention is made heere of the whole bodie, which was alreadie deſtinate and vowed to deſtruction, for there are alwayes ſome whom the Lord hath exempt from this generall perdition. The word was powerfull to ſaue thoſe, and did truly bring forth his effect: but the common ſtate being ſunken deepe in rebellion and infidelitie, periſhed. Whereby we alſo ſee that the word of God is neuer ſo hurtfull, that there ſhould not be ſome few which feele ſaluation by it, and haue triall thereof effectuallie.

But wee are to note from the order and courſe of the words, that repentance is the beginning of healing. Firſt of all then let vs ſee what he meanes by this word healing. He referres it to the rods and ſcourges of God wherewith the people had been humbled for their ſinnes. Now the cauſe of all the euils which we endure, is our rebellion againſt God; but when we repent, and that he ſhewes vs the light of his countenance, then the rods wherewith he chaſtiſed vs are caſt into the fire, and thus we are healed. This order ought to be diligentlie obſerued of vs, by which it very well appeeres whereat the Lord aimes in inuiting vs to come vnto him, as alſo what drift the holy doctrine hath, to wit, that we might be conuerted. Behold here then that part of the Goſpell, Do penance, or Repent. Afterwards, by offring vs reconciliation, he promiſeth remedies for all euils, not only againſt the bodie, but alſo againſt the ſoule. But if we receiue not ſo excellent a fruit of the word of God: if we be not reconciled vnto God as ſoone as the word ſounds in our eares, we haue cauſe to blame none but our ſelues, becauſe the fault wholly remaines in vs. And in very truth that which the Prophet recites heere is a ſtrange thing, and as it were againſt nature, to wit, that men should become rebellious and obstinate, yea altogether incurable by ỹ doctrine of Gods word, the propertie whereof is to cure and heale men. It must needs be acknowledged then as a singular grace and mercie of God when we are touched inwardly, seeing the arme of the Lord is not reuealed to all. Notwithstanding the chiefe thing which Isaiah would teach vs by this horrible chastisement of malitious obstinacie, is, that aboue all things wee beware how wee contemne the Lord his voyce when he calles vs. Iohn 6.44.

Vers. 11. Then said I, Lord how long? And he answered, vntill the cities be wasted without inhabitant, and the houses without man, and the land be vtterly desolate.

ALthough the Prophets are seuere in denouncing the wrath of God against men, yet they cast not off humane affection, and therfore it is necessary they susteine a double person; for they ought to pronounce the iudgemẽt of God with a bold and stout courage, so as they should rather see the whole world brought to vtter ruin and destruction, then that the least iot of his glorie should be diminished. And yet in the meane while they are not cruell, as if they were not touched with any compassion of their brethrẽ, whose destructiõ notwithstanding in regard of their office they are forced to foretel. Now although these two affectiõs seeme cõtrarie, yet do they agree very well, as it appeeres by ỹ example of Ieremiah, who at the first refused this hard burthen, in that he was cõmanded to threaten destruction to the people; but by and by after he takes heart againe vnto him, and stoutly follows his office: our Prophets mind was thus composed, for in regard of his obedience to God, he publisheth his iudgements with a loud voyce; and yet notwithstanding he had some respect to the people: as if he should say, O Lord, if it must needs be that they be blinded, yet let it not be for euer. And questionles when he made this prayer he was touched with compassion, desiring that so heauie and fearefull a punishment might be mitigated. Thus then naturall affections ought not to hinder vs from doing our duties. As for example, It is a naturall affection that the husband hath to the wife, the father to his children; and yet notwithstanding they must be so restrained and kept vnder, that we haue a speciall eye to that which agrees with our vocation, and to that which the Lord commands. Simile.

We must note this point diligentlie, for when we once begin to let loose the raines, we often pretend this excuse, to wit, that although our hearts were prompt and readie to do that which God commanded, yet we were ouercome with naturall affection: but wee must so weane our naturall affections that they hinder not our vocation; as we see they hindred not the Prophet that he should not follow his calling; for ỹ Lord must haue such authoritie ouer vs, that when he commands, we must forget our selues, and all that we haue. Furthermore, although the holy care that the Prophet had ouer the people be heere noted, yet the greatnes of the chastisement is by and by expressed, to the end the wicked (according to their custome) should not promise themselues any release. Neither are we to doubt but that the Prophet was stirred vp to aske this by a secret inspiration from God, to the end this sharp and terrible answere (which by and by followes) might be more plainely darted against them. Whence it appeareth what issue the vnbeleeuers shall haue, to wit, that they shall not be chastised superficially or lightly, but shall be cut off with extreme rigor.

He aggreuates this, when he saith, Till the houses be left without man, and the land be vtterly desolate. Because peraduenture the countrie might be spoiled, and yet there might remaine some citie: also some cities might be assailed and destroyed; but yet some houses might remaine still: therefore he declares that there shall be such a discomforture, that not only cities, but houses shall be also rased to the ground, and that there shall be an horrible waste throughout the whole land: howsoeuer notwithstanding that euen in the greatest destructions there is alwayes something left. Now howsoeuer this was but once pronounced by Isaiah, yet let vs know that this appertaines to vs also, for the same iudgment is prepared for all those who with a rebellious spirit shall oppose thẽselues against God, or with a stiffe neck shall resist against his yoke: yea, so much the more fiercely as any shall behaue themselues this way, so much the more sharply shall the Lord handle them vntill he haue vtterly consumed them.

Vers. 12. And the Lord haue remooued men farre away, and there be a great desolation in the mids of the land.

THis verse conteines no new thing, but only expounds the former, and by other words describes ỹ destruction which should happen to the countrie of Iudea, to wit, that God would send the inhabitants of the countrie farre off: for hee leaues no hope that those which escape the sword shall be therefore exempt, because they shall be led into captiuitie. Then he immediatlie addes a generall sentence touching the desolation of the land: as if he should say, It shall be left solitarie, and stripped of inhabitants, be it that they flee, be it that others be caried away into exile, or that others perish by the sword: behold what reward is prepared for the rebellious and obstinate, which heape sinne vpon sinne, vntill the vnquenchable wrath of the Lord be kindled to the heighth.

Vers. 13. *But yet in it shall be a tenth, and shall returne, and shall be * eaten vp as an elme or as an oke which haue a substance in the when they cast* their leaues: so * Or, left bare.

ſo the holy ſeed ſhall be the ſubſtance thereof.

THere is ſome obſcuritie in the words; but let vs firſt ſearch out the ſenſe, and then it ſhall be eaſie for vs to gather the ſignification of ỹ words. This place is expounded two wayes. Some expound the Hebrue word Aſiriiah, the tenth part, others the tenth; and will haue it to be a Noune Collectiue. Truly Aſirith, and not the former word, ſignifies properly Tenth among ỹ Hebrues, although there be no great difference herein. They which turne it Tenth, thinke that truces are promiſed to the people, becauſe there ſhould be ten kings from the reigne of Vzzias vntill the deſtruction of Ieruſalem. And indeed we ſhall finde ſo many from Vzziah to Zedchiah. And thus there ſhould be a great approbation of the Prophets doctrine, to wit, to be able to number ỹ Kings which ſhould reigne euen after his death, and not only to ſhew this, but alſo the time and the day. I know not whither the other ſenſe ſhould be more proper; for it ſeemes the Prophet meant here to comfort the people, becauſe they ſhall yet retaine ſome hidden vigor, which ſhall ſprout forth, howſoeuer for a time it ſeemes they be whollie dead, as the trees which are wont to waxe greene after the winter is paſt.

But becauſe the firſt expoſition is probable enough, therefore I will expound this verſe according to thoſe who thinke that mention is made heere of ten Kings, and that after they ſhall be paſt, the people ſhall be caried into captiuitie, and the land then conſumed as with a deuouring fire. In the meane while the reader ſhall note, that whether we turne it Tenth, or tenth part, yet we may very fitly referre it to the people, and then the ſenſe ſhall be, Vntill the people be brought to the tenth part; becauſe he had ſpoken before of ſome remainders of the people which ſhould be very ſmall, and will ſpeake of it againe hereafter. And indeed there remained a very ſmall number. It ſhould be taken well thus then, as if of a thouſand there ſhould remaine an hundreth, of a hundreth ten, and of ten one.

Chap. 1. 2. Ie Chap. 10. 22.

Shall returne.] That is to ſay, there ſhal come a change for the better, when the Iewes ſhall returne out of exile into their countrie, and that the land ſhall recouer a freſh colour. But it ſeemes there ſhould be ſome contradiction in the hanging together of the text; for the Prophet immediatlie addes, that it ſhall be eaten vp, or left bare: how cold comfort ſhould this be, that the people ſhould be brought home to be deſtroyed againe afterward? Some reſolue this difficultie thus, as if Iſaiah ſhould ſpeake of the laſt and finall deſtruction of the people. But in mine opinion he meaneth that it ſhall not be an vtter ruin, but ſuch an one as we ſee in trees, the leaues whereof fall in winter, and there remaines no appeerãce of any thing but a dead trunck of wood: yet when the Spring comes they will bud afreſh: he ſaith then, that the like ſhall befall to this people. The word Leuer, ſignifies to burne, and therefore it is as much to ſay as to be conſumed with fire. But wee muſt conioine it and reade it with the ſimilitude which is by and by added. For Iſaiah ſaith not ſimplie that it ſhall be conſumed; but as the beech or elme, that is to ſay, with hope of a neere reſtauration.

Whereas S. Ierome tranſlateth Declaration, I know not frõ what other word he thought this took his originall, vnleſſe he interpreted freely as it came in his minde; looking rather to the meaning of the Prophet, then to the etymologie of the word, becauſe when trees flooriſh and bring forth leaues, their life is manifeſted, and comes foorth againe into ſight; and this will be very agreeable. It ſeemes alſo it was not without cauſe that Iſaiah hath put theſe two kinds of trees here, becauſe the one buds ſooner then the other, and floriſheth ſooner alſo; and ſo came it to paſſe to the Tribe of Iudah. For firſt the ten Tribes with halfe the Tribe of Beniamin were caried away into captiuitie: ſo they which had floriſhed firſt, firſt withered. Iudah withered in the latter end with great hope to ſprout againe: and becauſe heere is giuen hope of libertie, it was not like to the captiuitie of the Iſraelites. It ſeemes then that there is ſome proprietie in this ſimilitude of trees, which notwithſtanding I would not preſſe too much. By the word of caſting the leaues, we muſt vnderſtand the falling away of them, as when the trees are ſtripped of their leaues, as of their garment. For in this nakednes it ſeemes the trees be ſeare and dead, although notwithſtanding there is a ſecret vertue remaining within thé, by which at the laſt they are reſtored againe at the Spring.

So ſhall.] This is the application of the Similitude, which hath great force in it, for when we behold the goodnes of God in this order of nature, we are greatlie confirmed therein. Euen as S. Paul propoũds the image of the reſurrection by the ſowing of corne, which is a thing vſuallie done: ſo alſo Iſaiah in this place ſhewes the reſtauration of the Church by taking a Similitude from trees, which after the fall are like dead ſtocks, but aſ ſoone as the Spring is come, they waxe greene, and bring foorth new leaues, which they could not doe, vnleſſe they retained ſome ſappe within them during the winter, howſoeuer in outward appeerance they ſeemed dead. He propheſieth that the like ſhall befall this people, to wit, that although in this grieuous and hard captiuitie they ſhould reſemble drie trees, and therefore might be thought paſt hope of recouerie, yet ſome ſtrength ſhould be conſerued in them, by the which they ſhall be ſuſteined in the midſt of all theſe anguiſhes; and after they haue borne them for a while, at the laſt they ſhall ſpring forth and floriſh.

Wee haue ſaid that this doctrine belongs not to one ſeaſon only, and therefore wee ought to make our benefit of it. For it often happens that the Church is in ſuch diſtreſſed eſtate amids the manifold calamities which ſhe ſuſteines, and is ſo deſtitute of all appeerance of ſtrength, that a man would thinke ſhe were vtterlie periſhed. As often then as this falles out let vs yet be fullie reſolued that there is ſtill a ſap hidden within, which howſoeuer it appeare not by and by to our eyes, will yet ſhew forth his fruit in the end. Now this ſap is hidden in the word of God, by which only the Church is vpheld.

Holy ſeed.] Heere he ſhewes what this ſubſtance is, to wit, the ſmall number of the faithfull, which he calles a holy ſeed. For he meanes the elect, which ſhould be ſaued by the free mercie of God, and ſhould be reſerued from this captiuitie, becauſe that this baniſhment was as it were the purgation of the Church whereby the Lord tooke away the wicked, who being cut off, he gathered vnto himſelfe a very ſmall people, but yet truly ſanctified. Some referre this to Chriſt, but this expoſition ſeemes too farre fetched; it will agree better if wee referre it to all the faithfull, becauſe the holy ſeed is the ſubſtance of the Church.

THE VII. CHAPTER.

Verſ. 1. And in the dayes of Ahaz the ſonne of Iotham the ſonne of Vzziah king of Iudah, Rezin the king of * Aram came vp, and Peka the ſonne of Remaliah king of Iſrael, to Ieruſalē to fight againſt it, but he could not ouercome it.

* Or, Syria.

THere is heere recited an excellent propheſie of the wonderfull deliuerance of Ieruſalem, euen when it might haue ſeemed wholie deſolate. Now the Prophet recounts all circumſtances, to the end by them the miracle might be the more admirable; that it might cleerely appeere how the Citie was preſerued by the meere goodnes of God, and not by any policies or power of men. For this people were ſo vngratefull, that vnleſſe after the deliuerāce, all theſe things had been brought to their remembrance one after another; they could not vnderſtand how they were deliuered by the hand of God. And few there were who in the preſent danger waited vpon that which Iſaiah had promiſed; becauſe they iudged of the publike ſtate of the kingdome and of their own alſo, according to that which they ſaw with their eyes. To the end then hee might lay forth the excellent benefit of God, he ſets all circumſtances before them, that ſo they might acknowledge out of how great danger they were deliuered when God freed them out of their enemies hands. As touching our ſelues, let vs know that this mercie was ſhewed to a people vnthankfull, to the end the Church might be preſerued; and that Chriſt at the laſt might appeare.

We muſt note that the Prophet ſpeakes of the ſecond warre which Rezin & Pekah made: and this we ſhall more eaſilie gather out of the holie hiſtorie, for in the firſt warre Achaz was ouercome, and a great multitude led into captiuitie, who in the end were brought back by the Iſraelites, when the Prophet had
2. King. 16. 5 in the name of God commanded it ſhould be ſo done. And againe the kings of Syria and Iſrael raiſed an armie and aſſailed Achaz, becauſe it was thought they had ſo ſpoiled them by the firſt warre, that they had left them no power to reſiſt. Whereas then he makes mention of the ſecond warre, it is to amplifie the miracle: for Achaz had not a competent power to reſiſt ſo great a multitude, ſeeing all the flower of his ſouldiers were caried away in the firſt warre. And howſoeuer there were now many people remaining, yet they were ſcattered; and beſides, were much affrighted with the remembrance of the diſcomforture which was very freſh in minde. And herein doth the goodnes of God and his power appeare to be ſo much the greater, that hauing compaſſion vpō ſo great a calamitie, he gaue ſuccor to his people, and in a moment drew them out from the gates of death, euen then when they had no hope of ſaluation. Came vp. Here is the propoſition and ſumme of ỹ whole matter. For he ſhewes of what affaires he was to ſpeake: and in few words according to ỹ vſuall maner of ſpeech in the Hebrue toong telles what he meanes to declare anon more at large, and more clearely. For from the very entrance he propounds the iſſue, to wit, that the enterpriſe of theſe two kings tooke none effect: but by and by after he will ſhew the reaſon why Ieruſalem could not be taken; and yet before he toucheth that, he will briefly ſhew what counſell and courage Ahaz had.

Verſ. 2. And it was told the houſe of Dauid, ſaying, * Aram is ioyned with Ephraim: therefore his heart was moued, and the heart of his people, as the trees of the foreſt are moued by the winde.

* Or, Syria.

HIs meaning is not that the newes of this league was brought at that time when the two kings were alreadie neere the citie, for Ahaz could not ſafely haue iſſued forth if the armie of the enemies had been alreadie in the field: but it is ſaid, that king Ahaz trembled for feare before theſe kings had aſſembled their mē of warre together. Whence it followes, that he was terrified more and more as the danger grew neerer him. The houſe of Dauid ſignifies the Palace and Court of the king: as if the Prophet had ſaid, Ahaz and his Counſellors were admoniſhed of the cōſpiracie made againſt ỹ countrie of Iudah.

As touching the words; the verb Nachah is diuerſlie tranſlated by the expoſitors; and becauſe it ſignifies to leade, ſome draw this ſenſe, that the Syrian brought his ſouldiers

to

to the ſuccor of the armie, and therefore they thinke there ſhould be ſome change of the letters in the word Al: others deriue it of Nuach, and tranſlate, He is at reſt. According to otherſome the letters are miſplaced, ſo as Nachab is put in ſtead of Chanah, which ſignifies to pitch the camp, and therefore I haue thought good to turne it, Syria is ioyned, or combined: for ✠ Prophet meant nothing elſe but that the Iſraelites and Syrians had made a league of warre together, to conioine their forces for the aſſailing of Ieruſalem. Alſo in the word Ephraim there is a figure called Synecdoche, much vſed in the Prophets. The whole kingdome of Iſrael is comprehended vnder Ephraim, not only becauſe that Tribe was the richeſt and more populous then the
2. King. 11. 26. reſt; but alſo becauſe Ieroboam the firſt king came out of that Tribe.

His heart was moued.] Here we well diſcerne that by the houſe of Dauid, he meanes nothing elſe but the Palace of the king, from whence ſoone after all the reſt of the people were terrified: neither could it otherwiſe be but the common people muſt needs feare when they heard that the King and his Counſell were alſo in that plight. As ſoone then as theſe newes came, all were ouertaken with ſuch an aſtoniſhment, that none could hold a ioynt ſtill. He expreſſeth this quaking by a very apt ſimilitude, which we alſo are commonly wont to vſe when we ſay, He trembled like the leafe of a tree. And this appertaineth to the ſetting forth of the miracle; for thence it appeeres that they were in a deſperate caſe, not only in other mens iudgements, but euen in their owne alſo. They had been all vndone then if the Lord had not ſpeedilie preuented the miſchiefe. We haue heere a faire looking-glaſſe, wherein we may behold the ſtrength which the wicked take vnto themſelues all the while they feele not the hand of God; and contratiwiſe how they are ſodainly ouertaken with feare, whē the Lord ſhewes them any danger; for they are ſo ſecure when all things fall out to their wiſh, that the Lord can ſcarcely bring them in ſubiection vnder his gouernment, and then they thinke themſelues alſo out of all danger. But if affliction do but a litle touch them, then they are by and by out of heart; yea, are ſo poſſeſſed with terror in their minds, that they behaue themſelues as blockiſh people, depriued of all ſenſe. And this is the puniſhment by which the Lord awakens them out of that deepe ſlumber into which they had caſt themſelues. For before, it ſeemed their eſtate was ſo firme and ſure, that they could neuer be put downe from their greatnes: but now at the leaſt noyſe they heare, they ſtraight fall into a ſwound for feare.

Such a feare is a iuſt vengeance of God, whom they would neuer haue reuerenced vnleſſe it had been drawne from them by force. Let vs learne then, that if we haue but the leaſt dramme of true faith, we muſt not thus diſtruſt God when we are in any danger. I graunt it can not be that we ſhould be free from trouble and feare when we are in danger of enemies: but wee muſt not ſo tremble and feare as being perplexed wee ſhould mooue this way & that way, as though we knew no hauen, nor place where we may ſafely fixe our footing. For this difference will euer be betweene the faithfull and the vnbeleeuers, namely, the latter ſort feele no remedie to quiet their conſciences, but the firſt do by and by flee to God, where they repoſe themſelues with great tranquillitie of minde, although they be vexed with diſquietnes for a time, as knowing that they haue a moſt ſafe refuge and hauen of reſt in him.

Verſ. 3. Then ſaid the Lord vnto Iſaiah, Go forth now to meete Ahaz (thou and Shear-iaſhub thy ſonne) at the end of the conduit of the vpper poole, in the path of the fullers field, FIrſt, we ſee how the Lord remembring his couenant, preuents this wicked king, by ſending his Prophet to meete him. Shear-iaſhub the ſonne of the Prophet is ioyned with him, that he might be a witneſſe of this propheſie. And it is a probable cōiecture that this name was not impoſed vpon him at randon, but by a ſecret inſtinct of the holy Ghoſt, or by expreſſe commandement from God, to declare the future deliuerance of the people. He bare a ſeale then as it were engrauen in his name, as well of the neere exile, as alſo of their returne. It is alſo credible, that this ſigne or witnes of the propheſie was knowne among the people, for he ſhould not haue been ioyned in commiſſion with his father, vnleſſe he had ſuſteined ſome authoritie in his perſon. The place is ſpecified for certeintie of the hiſtorie: and it may well be that the king went carefullie to conſider of the approching of the enemie, to the end he might repulſe him, which appeareth more cleerely by the holie hiſtorie, 2. King. 16. 5. It is called, The path of the fullers field, for it may be the fullers were wont to waſh their clothes thereabouts; or rather it was ſome ancient place called by this name: howſoeuer it be, it was a ſigne that this miſerable hypocrite ran hither and thither with feare and terror, when Iſaiah was comming forth to quiet and ſecure him.

Verſ. 4. *And ſay vnto him, Take heed, and be ſtill: feare not, neither be faint-hearted for the two tailes of theſe ſmoking firebrands, for the furious wrath of Rezin and of Aram, and of Remaliahs ſonne.

* Or, be aſſured.

THe verb Shamar, which ſignifies to keepe, is here put in the coniugation of Hiphil, and many expoſitors take it, to take heed; although they draw it amiſſe, and to a ſenſe both conſtrained and beſides the purpoſe, as if the Prophet had admoniſhed Ahaz to take heed how he made warre. The ſentence is more ſimple, to wit, that he ſhould not wax faint-hearted, nor wauer doubtinglie, but that he ſhould be quiet & ſecure, therefore I haue tranſlated, Be aſſured. The ſenſe is then, that Ahaz should take such heart vnto him, that at no hand hee suffer himselfe to boyle with impacience, neither to torment his minde with restlesse thoughts. For when men are once stricken with terror, their mindes are tossed vp & down, and haue no setled stay.

This exposition is confirmed by the words which follow, Be still: for these two things are
1 ioyned together: first, to stand quietly vpon his watch, to the end he may not be distracted with diuers thoughts, looking this way
2 and that way: secondly, that he be still, and of a calme and quiet spirit within. And behold here the fruites agreeable to a iustifying faith. For as the vnbeleeuers wauer and floate in vncertaintie in diuers assaults, and know not to which end to turne them: so the faithfull on the contrarie are staied, and cast themselues vpon God with quiet mindes. Impietie is neuer at rest: but where faith hath gotten strength, there we may see securitie and quietnes of minde, not trembling beyond measure.

These words then doe expresse the vertue of a true faith. Now hauing shewed the remedie whereby to appease the troublesome passions of the heart, he also forbids him to feare: because nothing is more contrarie to faith (who commits her saluation into the hands of God) then feare. But I confesse indeed that it is impossible for vs to be voyde of feare, when dangers approach. For faith makes vs not senseless. Contrariwise, the
A double feare. children of God are touched with a double feare: the first proceedes from naturall sense;
1 which feare they could not auoyde, although
2 they had a perfect faith: the other, from the weakenes of faith, because there is no man that hath profited so well therein, that there should not still remaine some reliques of distrust, against the which we must continuallie fight. This exhortation of the Prophet therefore must not be vnderstoode as if the Lord forbad all feare; but his meaning is, that the faithfull must arme themselues with such constancie, that they ouercome all their feares. As if he should say, Take heede thou be not cast downe: and if thou meetest with strong and sharpe assaults, be of an inuincible courage, that dangers ouerwhelme thee not: but rather manfully stay thy selfe vpon the power and goodnesse of thy God; to the end thou maiest bee able to ouercome all calamities.

And hereunto he by and by addes, that he be not faint-hearted, which is as much, as to melt away, or be dissolued. Also it is not without Heb. 11. 27. good cause that the Apostle teacheth vs, that our hearts are stablished by faith. For when (in forgetting God) we suffer our selues to moulter away any thing at all, through our owne infidelitie; it proceedes first from a weake and sluggish cowardlinesse. But hee cannot be said to be delicate, or womanish, who resting himselfe vpon the spirit of God, valiantly resistes all aduersities. Whence we gather, that the Prophet meant nothing else, but that Ahaz should waite with an vndaunted minde, for that issue which God had promised him.

For the two Tayles.] Isaiah vseth a very elegant similitude here, to weaken the opinion which the Iewes had conceiued concerning these mightie Kings, whose greatnes had smitten their hearts with such terror: for their crueltie and furie was as it had been a flaming fire; sufficient to haue consumed all Iudea: yea, and it seemed that this fire could neuer haue been quenched. But Isaiah on the contrarie vouchsafeth them not so much as the name of firebrands; because that might haue seemed somewhat: but onely calles them I cannot tell what fragments or ends of firebrands not kindled, but onely smoking: as if a brand being taken out of the fire, should begin to moulder away, and should cast nothing else but a little light smoke. This similitude then containes a singular consolation; by which we are admonished to esteeme farre otherwise of the violence of the wicked, then according to the outward appearance. They seeme to be so mightie, as if they were able to set on fire, destroy, and consume all the world. Now the Lord minding to preuent and take the feare which we haue conceiued from vs, pronounceth that it is but a little weake smoke, of small continuance: although to our seeming it should bee such a fire as neuer could bee quenched.

We must not esteeme the violence of the wicked according to outward appearance.

Vers. 5. Because Aram hath taken wicked counsell against thee, and Ephraim and Remaliahs sonne, saying:

ALthough hee had saide before, that the threates and endeuors of the enemies against the people of God, should bee vaine and turned into smoke; yet hee dissembles not how many cruelties they had deuised, if God withheld them not. For by euill counsell, he meanes a destruction: because these two Kings had both conspired to destroy the countrey of Iudeah. And to the end he might the better expresse the same, and might also let them see it, as it were before their eyes, hee recites their counsell in the verse following.

Vers. 6. *Let vs goe vp against Iudah, and let vs waken them vp, and make a breach therein for vs, and set a King in the middest thereof, euen the sonne of Tabeal.

* Or, an entrance into it.

Let vs goe vp.] That is to say, let vs make ready an armie. Some turne the verbe Nakitsmah, let vs trouble or afflict: the which indeede shewes the originall of the word: but in this coniugation it signifies rather, To awaken. And howsoeuer I reiect not this first interpretation; yet notwithstanding I had rather follow the second, because it agrees best with the Text. By Awakening, I vnderstand, To trouble; and to practise some new stratagem: as we commonly say, raise vp sturres, that this kingdome may no longer be in quiet. As touching that which followes, many many expound Nanquinmah: Let vs enter into it by force: others; Let vs ſo handle the matter, that it ſhall not be able to ſtand before vs. I haue tranſlated, Let vs make an entrance into it. For the verbe Baqua ſignifies that which we commonly ſay, let vs make a breach, or entrance. Now the meane to breake into Iudea, was either to ſtoppe the paſſages by force of armes: or by feares to ſollicit thoſe which ſhould be timerous and wauering, to reuolt: for whileſt ſubiects hold their obedience, all paſſage is ſhut vp; but when all is on a hurly burly, by ſeditions and factions; an eaſie entrance is made to paſſe euen to the ſtrongeſt and beſt fortified places. Thus theſe two Kings hoped as ſoone as they ſhould bee ariſed in Iudea, that they ſhould terrifie all the hearts of the people with their great and mightie armie, ſo as they ſhould haue neither power nor will to reſiſt. For it is not likely that hauing ſo great a multitude of men, they meant to holde any long ſiege. True it is, that Ieruſalem was well fortified: but they thought the citie would be frighted and troubled with this greate armie, and therefore would by and by yeeld it ſelfe to their mercie. Yet notwithſtanding I leaue it to the libertie of euery one, touching the interpretation of theſe words: ſeeing the Prophets meaning is plaine enough. But we cannot eaſily gather from the hiſtories who this Thabeal was. It is very likely that he was ſome Iſraelite; who being an enemie to the houſe of Dauid, theſe Kings would binde and oblige vnto them.

Verſ. 7. Thus ſaith the Lord God, it ſhall not ſtand, neither ſhall it be.

THat which was ſaide before, was to the magnifying of ſo rare and excellent a deliuerance. For when the Lord meanes to ſuccour vs in temptations, he ſets the greatneſſe of the danger before vs, to the end we might perceiue that hee promiſeth no leſſe than the neceſſitie requireth. Hee leſſeneth not, but rather amplifies the euils wherewith we are preſſed: then he offereth his promiſe, and ſhewes that hee is allſufficient to deliuer vs, although it ſeeme wee bee paſt recouerie. The Prophet hath followed this manner of teaching. For he might ſimply haue told them what ſhould come to paſſe, and might haue incouraged the King and the people; to the end they ſhould not bee affrighted nor diſcouraged in regard of theſe great armies: but he diſcouers the counſell and deliberation of theſe Kings; againſt which he now oppoſeth the promiſes and decree of God, that his admirable worke in their deliuerance might the better appeare. Behold then the ſacred anchor which onely holds vs faſt in the middeſt of all tempeſtuous temptations: whereas on the contrarie, if God ſhould take away his word from vs, we were neuer able to hold out in aduerſities. Although the King then was almoſt ouerwhelmed with deſpaire alreadie; Iſaiah tells him that there is nothing ſo terrible which he may not boldly deſpiſe, if ſo be that fortifying himſelfe ſtrongly vpon this promiſe of God, he patiently waite for that which he ſees not, which yet ſeemes almoſt incredible to him. He affirmes then that howſoeuer theſe men haue lifted vp themſelues as giants againſt God, yet they ſhal not bring their practiſes to perfection. And hee vſeth the word, To ariſe vp, as alſo the Latines by this ſimilitude ſignifie a worke with his goings forward. Laſtly, he affirmes that ſuch a boldneſſe ſo full of ſacrilledge, cannot ſtand. There is yet more vehemencie in that which he addes, It ſhall not ſtand: that is to ſay, it ſhall be ſo diſanulled, as if it had neuer been. We muſt note this manner of ſpeech well, by which he oppoſeth the bare and naked word of God, againſt this great haſte, and the deliberation of theſe two Kings.

The ſacred anchor.

Verſ. 8. *For the head of Aram is Damaſcus, and the head of Damaſcus is Rezin: * and within fiue and threeſcore yeere Ephraim ſhall be deſtroyed from being a people.*

* Or, yet 65. yeere, and *Or, broken. *Or, and ſhall be no more a people.

THe head of Syria.] As if he ſhould ſay, Theſe two kingdomes ſhall haue their limits, euen as they haue at this preſent. They aſpire to thy kingdome, but I haue ſet them bounds which they ſhall not paſſe. Damaſcus was the chiefe citie of Syria, as Paris is of France. Hee ſaith then that theſe two Kings muſt be content with their owne greatneſſe, and that looke what eſtate they were now in, the ſame ſhould they continue in hereafter. Now after he hath told them it is in vaine for them to endeuour at this time to amplifie their limits; he foretels the calamitie of the kingdome of Iſrael. For by the word, To breake, hee ſignifies that this kingdome ſhall be brought to nothing, and ſhall be no more. For the Iſraelites were carried away indeed into exile, and brought to another people: as part of Sauoy is now incorporated into the kingdome of France, and hath loſt his name. This is it which the Prophet meanes, when hee ſaith, that they ſhall bee no more a people: becauſe that Iſrael in this exile ſhould be mingled with ſtrange nations, and ſhould euen loſe his proper name.

Yet ſixtie fiue yeeres.] Seeing that the Iſraelites were led into captiuitie in the ſixth yeere of King Hezekias, and that Achaz raigned but ſixteene yeeres: it is certaine that this reckoning of yeeres ſhould not begin from ſ day that Iſaiah was ſent to bring this meſſage. For there was onely twentie yeeres to the time that the ten Tribes were caried into captiuitie. Amos had propheſied of it; and no doubt but as this propheſie of Amos was knowne, ſo alſo the period of time appointed was vnderſtoode of all, euery one knowing the number of yeeres. If we reckon then from the time that Amos foretold theſe things, we ſhall finde it threeſcore and fiue yeeres: for Iotham raigned ſixteene yeeres, Achaz as many. Adde thereunto ſixt of King Hezekias, wherein the ten Tribes were led into exile: and then take twentie ſeuen yeeres wherein Vzziah raigned after this propheſie, and it will make threeſcore and fiue. This coniecture is very probable: neither neede we doubt but Iſaiah meant thus. For we haue the propheſie of Amos, by which the Lord admoniſhed the people, leſt they ſhould haue complained they had been ſuddainely ouerwhelmed without warning. Iſaiah confirmes this propheſie, and propoſeth the ſame time which was already knowne of all. Beſides, by theſe words he ſharpely galles the ſenſeleſneſſe of the people of Iſrael, in that being thus admoniſhed of the deſtruction both of their countrie and name; they not onely deſpiſed (with all boldnes) the name of God, but burned with a deſire to deuoure all Iudea: as if they meant to ſcorne this heauenly reuelation of ſet purpoſe; thinking becauſe a long time was already paſt, that they therefore had now eſcaped. The Prophet derides this their folly; namely, becauſe they imagined the word of God would waxe olde and wither away, in ſo ſmall a number of yeeres. But becauſe the Iſraelites were deafe, Iſaiah giues them of Iudeah a ſet time wherein to looke for the ruine of their enemies. This place alſo teacheth, that the Prophets were faithfull aſſiſters one of another, to the end they might ſerue God with one heart and affection.

Verſ. 9. For the head of Ephraim is Samaria, and the head of Samaria is Remaliahs ſonne. If ye beleeue not, ſurely ye ſhall not be eſtabliſhed.*

* Or, In the meane while.

BEcauſe this is a repetition by which hee would confirme that which hee ſaid before, namely, that God hath limited the boundes of the kingdome of Iſrael for a certaine time; therefore I haue tranſlated, In the meane time: for otherwiſe it would bee abſurd, that the chiefe citie ſhould remaine in hir perfection after the kingdome (as hee erewhile foretold) ſhould bee brought to nought. The ſenſe then is, whileſt the threeſcore and fiue yeeres are running on, and comming to their end, Iſrael hath ſome reſpite. His chiefe citie ſhal be Samaria: let him content himſelfe with his boundes, and aſpire no higher: for ſuch ſhall his eſtate be, till he be wholly cut off, and be no more reputed a people.

Except yee beleeue it.] The particle Ci is put in the middeſt of the ſentence, as yeelding the reaſon of it. And therefore ſome tranſlate thus; If you beleeue not: that is to ſay, becauſe you are not beleeuers. And ſo reſtraine the firſt member to the propheſie of Iſaiah: but the ſecond, to the whole word of God, as if he ſhould ſay, If you giue no credit to my words, then your infidelitie ſhall bee knowne to all. But thus there ſhould be no difference betweene the verbe Thaaminu, and the other verbe Theamenu, which are of diuers coniugations. But the Prophet hath not changed the termination without cauſe: and it appeares by many teſtimonies of the holy Scriptures, that the verbe Amin, in the coniugation of Niphal, is taken for to ſtand, or continue faſt in his degree. I thinke then that this is as much as if he had ſaid, Behold your onely ſtay; waite quietly without being vexed in your ſelues for that which the Lord hath promiſed, to wit, deliuerance: if you waite not for it, what remaines, but that you periſh? The particle Ci ſignifies as much (it being alſo vſually ſo taken in many other places) as ſurely. He affirmes then that they cannot ſtand, vnleſſe they beleeue this promiſe: yea, his words ſound ſomewhat more bitingly; namely, that although they refuſed to giue credit vnto it, and ſhould endeuour to the vttermoſt to ouerthrow the ſtedfaſtneſſe thereof; yet would God for his part continue ſtill to bee firme and ſure: as alſo, that themſelues could not ſtand, vnleſſe they reſted vpon the promiſe here offered them. Whence we haue to gather a generall doctrine: to wit, that our deſtruction then approcheth, when we ſhall depart frō the word of God; howſoeuer we imagine our ſelues to be well and ſufficiently grounded. For our ſaluation is incloſed in the word of God: and when that is reiected, God iuſtly auengeth the wrong that is done to him therein: for hee was neere to haue ſuſtained men by his power, if they had not voluntarily plunged themſelues headlong into deſtruction: we muſt reſt confidently then vpon the promiſes of God, or elſe it is in vaine to looke for ſaluation.

Verſ. 10. And the Lord ſpake againe vnto Ahaz, ſaying:

BEcauſe the Lord knew very well that King Ahaz was ſo wicked, as he would not reſt vpon his promiſe; he therefore ſent Iſaiah to confirme him by adding a ſigne. For when God ſees that his promiſes ſuffice vs not, hee addes fit and conuenient ſignes according to our weakeneſſe: to the end wee ſhould not onely heare him ſpeake; but that alſo in ſeeing his hand reached forth vnto vs, we might be further confirmed by euident teſtimonies. Whereupon we ought diligently to note the vſe of ſignes; namely, to what end God ſhewes miracles: to wit, that wee might bee confirmed by them in the certaintie of the word. For when we ſee his power, if we make ſcruple to beleeue his word, hee corrects our doubting, by making vs ſee euen the thing it ſelfe: and miracles being added to the word, doe become ſeales thereof.

Verſ. 11. Aske a ſigne for thee of the Lord thy God, aske it either in the depth beneath, or in the height aboue.

I Vnderſtand theſe words hic, or hoc, ſimplie. He puts it to his choyce to chooſe a miracle, whether he aske it in heauen, or in earth. It may be this word in the depth, hath ſome greater vehemencie in this place, as if he ſhould ſay, Take thy choice, God will ſhew thee by and by that his dominion is farre a-

boue all the world; yea, that it reacheth euen to the bottome of all depths, ſo as at his will and pleaſure he can raiſe the dead out of their graues. See here then a ſingular goodnes of God towards the King, and towards the people, that not only patientlie beares with their diſtruſt for a time, but thus graciouſlie ſubmits himſelfe ſo far, as to be readie to giue them euen ſuch a ſigne as they themſelues would deſire for a pledge of his power. Indeed he had not ſo much regard herein to the wicked alone, as rather to prouide for the weake which had ſome ſeed of godlines in them, to the end they might be the more aſſured that Iſaiah ſpake not at aduenture, ſeeing he could ſo readily ſhew a ſigne of the power of God for a confirmation of his ſpeech. The ſame goodnes of God is now diſplayed towards ſuch as he beares ſo much withall, although he haue iuſt occaſion to be angrie with them. For how great iniurie do they to him when they doubt of his truth? What is left to God, I pray you, when he is diſpoiled of that? Now although wee doubt, yet he is not only contented to pardon it, but alſo to vnderprop our diſtruſt, not with words only, but which is more, with miracles; and preſents them not only to the faithfull, but euen to the vnfaithfull likewiſe, of which wee may take a view in this king. Now if he be ſo gentle to ſtrangers, what ſhall we thinke he will be to his owne houſhold ſeruants which wait vpon him?

Verſ. 12. But Ahaz ſaid, I will not aske, neither will I tempt the Lord.

HE vnder a faire pretence refuſeth the ſigne which the Lord offred him, ſaying, that he would not tempt him: for he ſeemes as if he beleeued the words of the Prophet, demanding nothing elſe but the word. And truely as impietie is deteſtable before God, ſo doubtleſſe he greatly priſeth faith. Wherefore it ſhould ſeeme that he who reſts vpon the only word of God, deſpiſing all things elſe, is worthie of great praiſe, becauſe there is no greater perfection then to ſubmit our ſelues to God. But will ſome ſay, Do we tempt God when we receiue that which he offreth? Certainely no. Ahaz lied then when he refuſed the ſigne which was offred him, vnder pretence of not tempting God, for there is nothing better or more excellent, then to obey God. It is a great vertue in deed to aske nonothing but the word; but if God be pleaſed to adde ſomewhat more vnto it, it is then no vertue but a vice to reiect ſuch an help as a thing ſuperfluous. Yea, there is great iniurie offred vnto God in deſpiſing his liberalitie; as if that which he doth for our ſakes were vnprofitable, or as if he were ignorant what things were good and neceſſarie for vs. Wee know that faith receiues her chiefe praiſe, becauſe ſhe holds her ſelfe in obedience: but when we will be wiſe in our owne conceits, and deſpiſe the leaſt thing which is of God, we are abominable before him, what pretence ſoeuer we make before men. We muſt ſo ioyne faith to the word then, that we deſpiſe not the helps which he offreth and giueth vs for the ſtrengthening of our faith.

Obiect.

Anſ.

As for example, the Lord in the Goſpell offreth vs all things neceſſarie for our ſaluation: for ſeeing by it we be ioyned to Chriſt, the ſumme of all good things is conteined in it. But to what end ſerueth Baptiſme and the holy Supper then; ſhould we eſteeme them as things ſuperfluous? No ſurely, becauſe whoſo without flattering of himſelfe ſhall take knowledge of his infirmitie, which all from the leaſt to the greateſt ought to feele, ſuch an one will be willing to ſtrengthen his faith by theſe helps. True it is we ought to mourne and weepe that the holy truth of God (which can not lie) ſhould haue need of any prop for the infirmities ſake of our fleſh. But in regard we can not caſt off this corruption from vs at the firſt chop, whoſoeuer according to his abilitie ſhall adde faith to the word, he ſhall forthwith render perfect obedience to God. Let vs learne then to imbrace the ſignes with the word, ſeeing it is not in the power of man to ſeparate them.

The ſignes and word muſt not be ſeparated, where God hath coupled them together.

Now in that Ahaz refuſeth the ſigne which was offred him, he therein ſhewed his rebellion & vnthankfulnes; for he deſpiſeth that which God had preſented him for his exceeding profit. Heereby alſo it appeares after what maner we ought to require ſignes, to wit, when they are offred vs of God: he then which refuſeth them, muſt needs reiect the grace of God therewithall. Some franticke ones there are at this day who make no reckning of Baptiſme, nor of the Lords Supper, thinking them abces for little children: which yet they can not do, but they muſt therewithall reiect the whole Goſpell: for thoſe things muſt not be ſeparate which God hath ioyned together. But ſome wil aske notwithſtanding, whether it be not lawfull to aske ſome ſignes of God, for we haue an example thereof in Gedeon, who deſired that his vocation might bee confirmed with ſome ſigne: the Lord granted his requeſt, and diſliked not ſuch a deſire: Iudg. 6.17. To this I anſwere, that although Gedeon had no expreſſe commandement of God to aske a ſigne, yet notwithſtanding he was ſtirred vp to doe it by the holy Ghoſt, and did it not of his owne proper motion. Wherefore we muſt not take the like libertie to our ſelues by abuſing his example, eſpeciallie ſeeing the importunitie of men is ſo great, that they make no bones to aske ſignes of God without end or meaſure. Such a boldnes therefore is to be ſuppreſſed, to the end wee may content our ſelues with thoſe which God offereth vs. Now there are two ſorts of ſignes: ſome extraordinarie; which we may call ſupernaturall: as that whereof the Prophet wil ſpeake anon, and that which was giuen to Hezekiah, as we ſhal ſee God willing hereafter, Iſay 38.7. Others are ordinarie, and in daily vſe, as Baptiſme, and the holy Supper, which conteine no miracle, at the leaſt which can be ſeene to the eye, or by any other outward ſenſe. For that which the Lord miraculouſly works therein by the holy Ghoſt, can not be ſeene; but in the extraor-dinarie, the miracle is visible to the eye. Now all other signes haue the same end and vse, because that euen as Gedeon was confirmed by that maruelous signe, so also are we confirmed by Baptisme and the holy Supper, although we see no miracle before our eyes.

Vers. 13. Then he sayd, heare you now O house of Dauid, is it a small thing for you to grieue men, that ye will also grieue my God?

BEcause it was an intolerable wickednes to shut the gate against the power of God which should confirme the truth of the promise vnder colour of honestie and modestie; the Prophet is iustlie offended, and sharplie rebukes these wicked hypocrites. Now howsoeuer it were an honorable thing for them to be held for the race of Dauid (which had been so indeed if they had walked in ỹ steps of Dauid) yet notwithstanding he now calles them ỹ successors of the house of Dauid rather by way of reproach, then otherwise. And in very deed, the ingratitude was so much the more heinous, because this fauour was reiected by that house, out of which the saluation of the whole world should come. Their originall therefore from whom they had so shamefullie degenerated, was a great dishonor vnto them. And wee must obserue this order heere: for we ought not to begin with sharp reprehensions, but with doctrine, to the end men may be gentlie drawen, rather then enforced by it. When the bare & simple doctrine will not serue, then we must adde confirmations: but if they will profit by neither of these, then it is needfull to vse greater vehemencie. In this maner it is that Isaiah thundreth here, for hauing offred doctrine and signes to the king without fruit, he now vseth the last remedie, sharplie and grieuouslie chiding this obstinate man, and not him alone, but also all the house royall, which was defiled with this impietie.

Doctrine.

Confirmations.

Reprehensions.

Is it a small thing?] He vseth comparisons betweene God and men; not that those of whom hee speakes, to wit, the Prophets and faithfull Teachers, can in deed be separated from God, for they are nothing else but the instruments of the Lord, hauing one common cause with him, as long as they discharge their duties. And the Lord testifies of them, who so despiseth you, despiseth me: and he that heareth you, heareth me, Math. 10. 40. The Prophet then shapes his speech according to the impietie of Ahaz and his fellowes, because they thought they had to do only with men. And no question but we may heare the like voyce which the wicked belch out euen amongst vs at this day: Are they not men that speake vnto vs? and by this meanes they thinke to make voyd the doctrine of God.

It being then an ordinarie thing amongst the prophane contemners of holie doctrine to speake thus, the Prophet acknowledgeth indeed that they were men which had this charge committed vnto them, to teach the word of God. As if he should say, be it that I am a mortall man, as you say I am, and that you haue such an opinion of the Prophets of God; yet is it a small thing for you to grieue vs, but that you will also grieue God himselfe? But in reiecting the signe of his admirable power which hee is readie to giue you, you reiect him. It is in vaine then for you to brag that you make no account of it, because you haue to do with men, and not with him. This then is the cause why the Prophet is so moued with anger: whence we perceiue the thing which I touched erewhile, to wit, that it is time to vse seuere reprehensions after we haue vsed all the good meanes which God hath giuen vs, and haue omitted nothing of that which was our dutie: then we must rush vpon them with greater vehemencie, and lay open that impietie which lay hid vnder these cloakes of hypocrisie.

My God.] He said before, Aske for thee a signe of the Lord thy God, to wit, whilest his peruersitie and rebellion was hidden: now he takes it as proper to himselfe, because Ahaz and those that were with him were vnworthie of the honour of so excellent a title. He shewes then that God is of his side, and not with these hypocrites, and thus testifies what his confidence is. For he shewes with what conscience he promised deliuerance to the king, as if he should say, I came not of my selfe, but was sent of God, and haue told thee nothing but out of the mouth of my God. All Ministers should haue the same boldnes, not in appearance only, but effectuallie rooted in their hearts. The false Prophets will brag too much of this; but it is only a vaine and impudent iangling which they keepe, with a blind confidence proceeding from presumption.

AHaz had alreadie refused a signe which the Lord had offred him when the Prophet protested against his obstinacie and vnthankfulnes. Isaiah notwithstanding testifies that this shall not let nor hinder the Lord from giuing the Iewes the signe which he had promised and appointed. But what signe? That a Virgin should be with child. This place is obscure: but the Iewes themselues are partlie the cause of it, who as much as in them is haue depraued the true exposition by diuers cauils. For this testimonie toucheth them neere, in regard it conteines an excellent prophesie of the Messiah, who is heere called Immanuel: and therefore haue they studied by all meanes to wrest the Prophets meaning to another sense. Some of them pretend that mention is made here of king Hezekias, others of the sonne of Isaiah. Those which draw this place to Hezekias, are too shameleese, seeing it must needs be that he was of yeeres when Ierusalem was besieged, shewing thereby that they are altogether ignorant of the historie. But behold the iust reward of the froward, namely, namely, that God ſo blinds them, that they are depriued of all iudgement. The like befalles the Papiſts at this day, who oftentimes make themſelues laughingſtocks when they are caried away with the ſpirit of giddines to depraue the ſcriptures. The pretence of thoſe who thinke it was the ſonne of Iſaiah, is altogether friuolous, becauſe we reade not that a deliuerer ſhould be raiſed vp of the ſeed of Iſaiah which might deſerue the title of Immanuel: for this title is ſo high and excellent, that it can appertaine to no man.

Others thinke, or at the leaſt confeſſe (becauſe they will not contend ouermuch with the Iewes) that the Prophet ſpeakes of ſome child which ſhould be borne then, by which Chriſt notwithſtanding was figured darkely. But they bring no reaſons of any weight, neither do they ſhew who this child ſhould be, nor yet prooue it by any teſtimonies. Now it is certaine (as hath been ſaid) that this name of Immanuel can propetlie agree to none that is man only, and therfore we need not doubt but the Prophet ſpeakes heere of Chriſt. But all both Greeks and Latins which haue written vpon this text are too confident in the expounding of it: for they ſimplie affirme, that Chriſt is heere promiſed of the virgin Marie, as though there were no difficultie in this place. Now the knot which the Iewes would haue vs vntie is not eaſily done, to wit, that mention is made of Chriſt heere without any cauſe. Thus they deale with vs, willing vs to cõſider well the circumſtance of the place. Ieruſalem was beſieged, the Prophet was to giue them a ſigne of their deliuerance: to what purpoſe is the Meſſiah promiſed them now, who ſhould be borne fiue hundred yeeres after? By this argument they thinke they haue woon the gole, affirming, that the promiſe touching Chriſt could ſtand Ahaz in no ſtead for aſſuring him of the deliuerance of Ieruſalem. And heere they crie victorie, chiefely indeed becauſe none haue anſwered them. And therefore I ſaid that the expoſitors hitherunto haue been too confident in this reſpect, for it is not a thing of ſmall importance to ſhew the cauſe why mention is made heere of the redeemer. Let vs ſee then how we may reſolue it.

King Ahaz refuſing the ſigne which was offred him of God, is brought at the laſt by the Prophet to the foundation of the couenant, which euen the moſt wicked durſt not reiect. The Meſſiah muſt be borne, and all looked for him, becauſe the ſaluation of all the people depended vpon him. The Prophet then hauing rebuked the king, proceeds with him againe in this maner, Thou wouldeſt faine ouerthrow the decree of God in reiecting his promiſe; but this decree notwithſtanding ſhal remaine inuiolable: thy diſloyaltie and ingratitude ſhall not hinder God from being the deliuerer of his people, becauſe at the laſt he will raiſe vp his anointed. And for the more full declaration of theſe things, we muſt obſerue the cuſtome of the Prophets, who in confirming particular promiſes, do lay this foundation, to wit, that God wil ſend the Redeemer. By this general prop the Lord euery where confirmes that which he ſpecially promiſeth to his people. And queſtionleſſe it muſt needs be that he which lookes for help and ſuccor from God, muſt therewithall bee alſo perſwaded of his fatherlie loue. But how ſhould he be fauorable without Chriſt, in whom he hath freelie adopted vs for his choſen, and alwaies receiueth vs vnto mercie? According to which S. Paul ſaith, That in Chriſt all the promiſes of God are yea and Amen, 2. Cor. 1. 20. As oft then as God ſent any ſuccor to his people in old time, he by and by reconciled them to himſelfe in Chriſt. And therefore when hee threatens famin, peſtilence, or ſword, he ſets the Meſſiah before their eies to giue them hope of deliuerance. Seeing this is ſo apparãt, the Iewes haue no cauſe to ſtorme heere as if the Prophet ſhould ſpeake without cauſe of a thing ſo farre remote. For whereupon did the deliuerance of Ieruſalem depend? was it not vpon the manifeſtation of Chriſt? vpon which foundation the ſaluation of the Church hath euermore been builded and vpheld.

Iſaiah then ſpeakes properlie, ſaying, Thou receiueſt not the promiſes of God; but yet will he fulfill them: yea, he will ſend his Chriſt, for whoſe ſake it is his pleaſure to preſerue this Citie: and howſoeuer thou beeſt vnworthie of it, yet God will haue regard of his owne glorie. King Ahaz then is ſhut out from the ſigne which he had before reiected, and is depriued of the benefit of which he made himſelfe vnworthie: yet is the inuiolable promiſe of God offred againe vnto him, which is ſufficientlie ſhewed by the particle Laken, which ſignifies Therefore, as if he ſhould ſay, Becauſe thou reiecteſt this particular ſigne which God offred thee; the ſame God which was ſo liberall as to offer thee a ſigne freely, will not ceaſe to giue it, although it be irkſome and cumberſome to thee. But whereas I haue ſaid, that the euent of this promiſe is made euen to Ahaz, my meaning is not as if God did therein comprehend him within the number of his choſen, for whoſe ſaluation God had ordeined his Sonne: but as in reſpect that the word was directed to the whole bodie of the people. For they which expound the word Lakem, which ſignifies your ſonnes, is conſtreined. Moreouer, the Prophet leaues this prophane king in regard of the accompliſhment of the promiſe, and hath reſpect to the people who were adopted of God. He will giue it you then, not to thee, ô curſed king, nor to thy companions, but to you whom he hath adopted. For the couenant which God had made with Abraham remaineth ſure and vnmoueable. And the Lord hath alwaies had a remnant to whom the fruits of it do appertain, although hypocrites rule and beare ſway ouer the people who are partakers thereof. So then there is no inconuenience to propound this promiſe to the viſible Church, and to ſet it in full view before their eies.

Behold a virgin.] The word behold hath great weight, and it is put to ſet forth the greatnes of the matter. And ſo is the Scripture wont to ſpeake of excellent and memorable things, to the end mens minds may be lifted vp aboue all earthlie things. The Prophet commands then ỳ thoſe which heare him ſhould be attentiue, and conſider this extraordinarie worke of God; as if he ſhould ſay, Be not ſluggiſh, but wey this great grace of God, which you ought cheerefullie to receiue; but it is hidden from you, becauſe of your dulnes. Now although the word Alma which ſignifies virgin, be deriued from Alam, which ſignifies to hide, becauſe ſhamefaſt and modeſt virgins preſſe not into publike meetings: and although the Iewes contend very much about this word, denying that it is taken for virgin, becauſe Solomon vſeth it for a yong maid which is beloued; we need not ſtand long in deciding this queſtion. Let vs grant them that Alma ſignifies a yong Damſell betrothed, and that this word is to be referred rather to the age as they will haue it (which the ſcripture notwithſtanding vſeth often when it ſpeakes of a virgin) the thing it ſelfe ſufficientlie refiſtes all their ſlanders. For what matter of admiration had the Prophet ſpoken of, if he had ſaid, that a maid ſhould conceiue by the companie of man? Truly it had been a rediculous thing to ſet this forth for a matter of wonder or miracle. But put the caſe it ſhould be ſpoké of a woman which ſhould conceiue by the helpe of man, yet all may ſee it to be a fond and ſenſeleſſe thing, that the Prophet ſpeaking to the Iewes of a new and extraordinarie matter, ſhould adde that a betrothed maid ſhould conceiue. It appeares ſufficientlie then that he ſpeakes of a virgin which ſhould conceiue by the power of the holy Ghoſt, and not according to the common order of nature. And this is that myſterie which S. Paul ſo highlie magnifies, to wit, that God was manifeſted in the fleſh, 1. Tim. 3. 16.

And ſhe ſhall call.] The verbe is of the feminine gender among the Hebrues. For I know not whence they haue taken it which reade it in the maſculin, ſeeing the copies which we vſe differ not one from another in this reſpect: ſo that being referred to the mother, it is certaine that ſome extraordinarie thing is expreſſed. We know that the charge is alwaies giuen to the father to impoſe the name vpon the child, in regard it is a ſigne of that authoritie and power which fathers haue ouer their children, neither belongs it to the women. But here it is transferred to the mother. Whence it follows then that he is ſo conceiued of his mother that he had no father on earth, for otherwiſe the Prophet ſhould peruert the common vſe of the Scripture, which attributes this office to mé only. Although it is to be noted, that this name was not impoſed vpō Chriſt by the wil of his mother, neither had there been any weight therein; but the Prophet meanes that the virgin ſhall be as it were the Herault which ſhall publiſh this name, becauſe there ſhould be no earthlie father to performe this office.

Beſides, this name was attributed to Ieſus Chriſt euen in regard of the effect, becauſe the only ſonne of God clothed himſelfe with our fleſh, and vnited himſelfe vnto vs in taking one ſelfeſame nature with vs. He is called then God with vs, or conioined with vs, which can not agree to the man that is not God. The Iewes in their cauilings ſay, that this name was impoſed vpon Hezekias, becauſe God deliuered his people by his hand. He (ſay they) who is Gods miniſter, repreſents his perſon. But neither Moſes nor Ioſhua, which deliuered the people, were ſo called: it followes then that this name Immanuel, is preferred farre before that of Moſes, Ioſhua, or any other; for by this name he ſurmounts all thoſe that either were before, or ſhall be after him: it being a teſtimonie of an high and excellent dignitie and authoritie wherewith hee is adorned aboue all creatures. Wherefore it appeares that not only the vertue of God is heere ſet forth vnto vs as it was wont to be by ſuch miniſters, but the vnion of the perſon, in which Chriſt appeared God and man together. Whence we ſtill perceiue, that Iſaiah telles vs no common matter, but ſhewes an incomparable ſecret, which the Iewes labour with tooth and naile to obſcure and darken.

Verſ. 15. Butter and hony ſhall he eate, till he haue knowledge to refuſe the euill, and to chooſe the good.

HEre the Prophet confirmes the true humanitie of Chriſt; for it was a thing altogether incredible, that he which was God, ſhould be borne of a virgin. So ſtrange a thing agreed nothing at all to humane reaſon. To the end we ſhould not thinke then that hee imagineth ſome ghoſt, hee declares the ſignes of this humanitie, by which he ſhewes that Chriſt ſhall appeare in the very true nature or fleſh of men, to wit, becauſe he ſhall be nouriſhed after the ſame maner that other little children be. Now the Iewes had another maner of nouriſhing their children then we haue, for they vſed hony, which we commonlie vſe not, and they retaine this faſhion among them yet to this day, ſo as they cauſe the Infant new borne to taſte of butter and hony before they giue it ſuck.

Till he know.] That is to ſay, till he be come to thoſe yeeres wherein he can diſcerne euill from good, and as we commonlie ſay, till he be of diſcretion: for the letter Lamed, ſignifies the time and terme, namely, how long he ſhall be nouriſhed after the maner of children: and this ſerues to proue his humane nature ſo much the more. By knowledge hee meanes that vnderſtanding and iudgement which comes after Infancie is paſt. Whereby we ſee how farre it pleaſed the ſonne of God to abaſe himſelfe for our ſakes; that he would not only be fed with ordinarie foode, but was alſo content to be depriued of vnderſtanding for a time, and to ſuſteine all our infirmities according to his humane nature; for this can not appertaine to the diuine nature. S. Luke ſpeakes of this time of Chriſtes ignorance, when he ſaith, he profited in wiſdome, and in ſtature, and in fauour with God and men. Luk. 3. 35. If S. Luke had ſaid ſimplie that Chriſt profited, profited, one might haue replied, that was in regard of men; but he expreſly addes toward God. It was needfull that he ſhould be like to all other little children for a time, that hee might be deſtitute of vnderſtanding as touching his humanitie.

*Or, Truely. Verſ.16. * For before the Child ſhall haue knowledge to eſchue the euill and to chooſe the good, the land that thou abhorreſt, ſhall be forſaken of both her kings.

MAny are heere deceiued when they will conioine this preſent ſentence with the former, as if it were ſpoken of the ſame child, and ſo make it an expoſition of the former, as if the particle Ci were rationall. But if we more narrowlie wey the Prophets meaning it will ſufficientlie appeare, that hauing left the generall doctrine, from which hee had made ſome digreſſion, he now returnes to the matter againe; for hauing grounded the hope of Ieruſalems deliuerance vpon the promiſed Meſſiah, now he teacheth how it ſhall be deliuered. I expound not this verſe then of Chriſt, but of all children in generall; and herein I differ in opinion from all others which thinke it ſhould be ſpoken here of ſome certaine child. But for mine owne part I take the word Hannar generallie, ſo as the letter He ſhould be added for the better vnderſtanding, rather to ſhew the age, then ſome ſpeciall child, as we commonlie ſay, The child, adding this article The, for the clearer vnderſtanding of the matter; which alſo is very vſuall in the Scripture. Now if the word the had marked out ſome particular child, he would rather haue ſaid, this child, as in other places. Neither is it likely that this promiſe touching the ruin of the kingdomes of Syria and Samaria (which followed not long after) ſhould be deferred fiue hundred yeeres, that is, to the comming of Chriſt: we know this were too great an abſurditie. The ſenſe then is, Before the children which ſhall be borne hereafter ſhall know to diſcerne euill from good, the land which thou abhorreſt ſhall be forſaken.

By land I vnderſtand the land of Iſrael & Syria: for although they were two Countries, yet notwithſtanding they were eſteemed but one, by reaſon of ỹ couenant which the two kings had made one with another. Some take the land for Iudea; but that can not agree, becauſe of the relatiue that followes. Now it is eaſie to gather from the holie hiſtorie, that theſe things came ſo to paſſe according as they are heere written. For after Ahaz had called the Aſſyrians to help him, Rezin was ſlaine by them, 2.King.16.9. Pekah king of Iſrael died ſoone after, that is to wit, in the twelfth yeere of king Ahaz: and Hoſhea the ſonne of Ela reigned in his ſtead, 2.King. 17.1. Before the children then which ſhould be borne ſoone after ſhould come to yeeres of diſcretion, both the kingdomes were deſtitute of both their kings, becauſe Rezin and Pekah died before that time. The word indeed is directed to Ahaz; and to the end he might be the more reuiued, God promiſeth him to take vengeance of his enemies; yet only to the end he might be left the more without excuſe. As touching the words, it is ſaid, that king Ahaz abhorred or deteſted the land of Syria and Iſrael, becauſe from thence he was aſſailed. God promiſeth then that theſe kings ſhall quicklie periſh. Some turne the word Mipne, Becauſe; and I confeſſe it is often taken in this ſenſe: but I expound it more ſimplie heere, as if he ſhould ſay, the land ſhall be forſaken and left deſtitute of the preſence of her two kings, ſo as they ſhall appeare therein no more. And by theſe words of the Prophet it ſufficiẽtlie appeares, that theſe things are to be vnderſtood of both kingdomes.

2.King.15. 30.

Verſ.17. The Lord ſhall bring vpon thee, and vpon thy people, and vpon thy fathers houſe (the dayes that haue not come from the day that Ephraim departed frõ Iudah) euen the king of Aſhur.

HEre the Prophet on the other ſide threatens this wicked hypocrite, who ſeemed afraid (forſooth) to tempt God, and yet in the meane while ſought help frõ thoſe whom God had forbidden him to meddle withall. *Exod.*23.32. To the end then he ſhould not lift vp his creſt too high in regard of this promiſe heere made vnto him, he denounceth his deſtruction, and teſtifies, that the help which he expected, to wit, from the Aſſyrians, ſhould be altogether for his ouerthrow. As if he ſhould ſay, Thou promiſeſt thy ſelfe wonders from the king of Aſhur, and thinkeſt that he will ſtick cloſe to thee, becauſe that (againſt the commandement of God) thou haſt made a league and peace with him; but thou ſhalt ſhortlie feele what commoditie will then redound vnto thee by tempting of the Lord. Thou mighteſt haue reſted quietlie at home, and ſo would God haue been mercifull vnto thee; but thou loueſt rather to haue help of Aſhur: well, thou ſhalt learne by experience, that their crueltie ſhall farre exceed the crueltie of all other enemies. This ſpeech of the Prophet then ſutes very well with the former; for he preſſeth the diſloyaltie and vnthankfulnes of the king the more neere, who in reiecting both the word of God and the ſigne, had made himſelfe vtterlie vnworthie of any promiſe at all. Alſo becauſe that as ſoone as hypocrites haue eſcaped any feare or danger they turne by and by to their old bias againe, he affirmes that the Iewes can by no meanes eſcape but they muſt be chaſtiſed, according as they had well deſerued. For this cauſe he ſaith expreſly, that the houſe of Dauid (which by a ſpeciall priuiledge ought to be exempted) ſhall be wrapped euen vnder the like calamities. For God ſo moderates his iudgemẽts, that whileſt he ſpares his Church and prouides for the ſafetie thereof, he yet in the end cauſeth the wicked (who are mingled with the good) to feele the rigor of his vengeance.

See 2.King. 16.7. and 2.Chro.28. 16.

From the day that Ephraim.] The Scripture vſeth this phraſe of ſpeech when it notes ou: 1.Kin.12.16

any ſpeciall calamitie. The Iewes could no way be more deeplie wounded, then to ſee the kingdome not only miſerablie waſted, but alſo the bodie of this people to be rent and torne in pieces; the ten Tribes being led away captiues: and therefore the reuolt of Ephraim from Iudah, is a forewarning of an extreame ruine: for ſeeing the kingdome of Iudaes magnificence was more abaſed by this diuiſion then by any other calamitie which could haue befalne it, the Prophet ſaith that to this time they had not receiued a greater loſſe. Wee ſee heere (as I was about to ſay ere-while) how God opens a way to his mercie, by remembring the faithfull, and in chaſtening the hypocrites.

Wherefore we ought to conſider this his admirable counſell, namely, that the Church ſhould then remaine ſafe and ſound in the midſt of the dangers of death. Who would euer haue thought that Ieruſalem ſhould haue been deliuered from the great armie of theſe two kings? And that the kingdome of Syria then in her floriſhing eſtate ſhould afterward be brought ſo ſoone to nought? Or that the deſtruction of Samaria ſhould immediatlie approach? And in the meane while who would haue imagined that ſ Aſſyrians, vpon whom the Iewes repoſed themſelues, ſhould be more hurtfull vnto them then euer the Syrians or Iſraelites were? The Lord did all this for the conſeruation of his Church, ſo as yet notwithſtanding hee tooke vengeance vpon the impietie of king Ahaz.

Verſ. 18. And in that day ſhall the Lord hiſſe for the Flie that is at the vttermoſt part of the flood of Egypt, and for the Bee which is in the land of Aſſur.

BEcauſe the Iewes imagined to hold the Aſſyrians at their deuotion in regard of the couenant, the Prophet deriding ſuch a follie, declares, that the Aſſyrians ſhal be readie, as ſoone as God ſhall but make a ſigne, and ſhall driue them whither ſoeuer he thinketh good. This word hiſſe, is put in ſtead of commandement, as hauing reſpect to the nature of the kingdomes wherof he makes mention: for Egypt abounded with Flies, in regard that the region is hot and myrie. There muſt needs breed many Flies then where the ayre is hote and moyſt. Aſſyria, that had honie-Bees in great plentie. But howſoeuer hee declares that hee will bring the enemies with his whiſtle, alluding to the nature of the Flies, and of the Bees: his meaning is, that he wil make them come eaſilie, as if he ſhould ſay, There ſhal be no great need of much trauaile, for they ſhall flie as it were hither as ſoone as I ſhall haue giuen them a ſigne. And thus he ſhewes how readilie his counſell and ſecret inſtinct ſhall haue force and efficacie, when with his only whiſtle he ſhal conſtreine the moſt warlike people to execute his commandement.

Verſ. 19. And they ſhall come and ſhall light all in deſolat valleys, and in the holes of the rocks, and vpon all thornie places, and vpon all buſhie places.

HE followes the Similitude; for Bees vſuallie deſire to make their neſts in caues or valleies, buſhes, or ſuch like places: as if he ſhould ſay, There ſhall not be ſo much as the leaſt corner which the enemies ſhall not fill to make their neſts therein. We neede not trouble our ſelues much in ſearching out the reaſon why he rather ſpeakes of thornes and buſhes then of other things, ſeeing the maner of ſpeech is figuratiue; & yet notwithſtanding I make no queſtion but his meaning is to ſhew, that there ſhould be no place of refuge at all left vnto them, whether they ſought to dig caues, or to hide them in the deſolate valleyes, becauſe the enemies will fill vp all the roomes in the countrie. From hence we gather once againe, as we haue alreadie noted, that nothing comes to paſſe raſhly, or by chance, but that all things are gouerned by the immediate hand of God. Secondly, that albeit the wicked beſtir them, and are caried with a blind furie to do miſchiefe, yet God notwithſtanding holds them ſhort, in making them ſeruie to his glorie. Therefore when we ſee the wicked ſet all at ſixe and ſeuen, let vs not thinke that God hath giuen them libertie to wander at their pleaſure, but let vs be moſt aſſured that he will calme and moderate their reſtleſſe boilings. This may exceedinglie comfort vs amidſt theſe tourmoiles wherein Chriſtendome is now enwrapped, and by the violence thereof ſo toſſed vp and downe, ſo that all things ſeeme to fall on heapes: for wee muſt remember that the Lord hath a ſecret reine or bridle in his hand wherewith he keepes in theſe furious beaſts, leſt they ſhould ſwallow vp all, by ranging whitherſoeuer their rage caries them: and that they can not paſſe the bounds which he hath aſſigned them.

Verſ. 20. In that day ſhall the Lord ſhaue with a raſor that is hired, euen by them beyond the riuer, by the king of Aſſur, the head, and the haire of the feete, and it ſhall conſume the feete.

NOw he vſeth another Similitude, and compares the enemies by whom God had determined to afflict Iudah (in his time) to a raſor, wherewith the beard and haires are ſhaued, and wherewith they vſe to take away the like excrements. The particle Beth is ſuperfluous heere, and ſignifies only (after the maner of the Hebrues) that an inſtrument is ſpoken of, and therefore I haue ſimplie tranſlated, ſhall ſhaue with a raſor. Now the Prophet himſelfe will by and by expreſſe his owne meaning, to wit, that the Aſſyrians ſhall be as a raſor in the hand of God, and that they ſhall come from farre. For which cauſe he addes, that they are beyond the flood: giuing thereby to vnderſtand, that the riuer Euphrates ſhall not hinder them from paſſing ouer to fulfil the commandements of God. Moreouer he ſaith, that not ſome portion of this people only ſhall of his owne proper motion ruſh into an other mans land, tracing vp and downe without any certaine direction; but that the King himſelfe ſhall be their leader, to the end that Iudea may be deſtroyed by the people and King together, that ſo they may fall, and be ouerwhelmed vnder ſo heauie a burthen.

It is not without cauſe that he ſaith, this Raſor ſhall be hired: for hereby he ſets forth the crueltie of the warre which the Aſſyrians ſhould make: as if one hauing hired an horſe or a ſword, ſhould boldlie ſerue his turne therewith, making no more ſpare of it then if it were his owne. For we know that ſuch as take things vpon hire, will haue the ſeruice of the thing, according to the price they hired it for. So the Lord tels them that he will not ſpare this raſor, although the edge of it ſhould be blunted: which is as much to ſay, as he will ſend the Aſſyrians with a boiſterous and furious rage. Now if the Lord auenged himſelfe ſo ſharplie for the cauſes heretofore mentioned by the Prophet, let vs feare leſt we feele the like puniſhment; or rather let vs tremble at the raſor wherewith the Lord hath begun to ſhaue vs alreadie.

The head, and the haires of the feet.] By the haires of the feete, hee meanes the lower parts: for whatſoeuer is below the bellie is attributed to the feete by the figure Synecdoche, by reaſon whereof the Hebrues call vrin, the water of the feet; and couering of the feet, for eaſing the bellie. His meaning is then that the whole bodie ſhall be ſhauen all ouer, and the beard alſo. Now if wee take away theſe figures of each, and would haue a more plaine and ſimple ſenſe of theſe words, he ſignifies an vtter and vniuerſall ruin: as if he ſhould ſay, This raſor ſhall deſcend from the crowne of the head euen to the feet, and the kings and princes ſhall not eſcape this diſcomfiture, but they themſelues ſhall feele the cutting of this Raſor.

2. King. 16. 17.
2. Sam. 24. 4

Verſ. 21. And in the ſame day ſhall a man nouriſh a yong Cow, and two Sheepe.

IN theſe verſes to the end of the Chapter the Prophet layes forth the eſtate of a Countrie waſted and ſpoiled: for his meaning is to paint out as in liuely colours, and to ſet in full view before this people ſo great a calamitie, that nothing ſhall be diſcerned on which ſide ſoeuer a man turnes his eye, but the marks of an horrible waſte and deſolation. And whereas ſome thinke the Prophet promiſeth heere a mitigation of the chaſtiſements, we ſhall by and by ſee that this ſutes not with the text. And although alſo he makes mention of a man indefinitlie, yet notwithſtanding he ſpeakes properlie of the richeſt of them: for he giues not to euery one ſo much, but that thoſe who in times paſt had wont to nouriſh many Oxen and Sheepe, ſhould now content themſelues with a few. His meaning is then, that they ſhall all be brought to great penurie. And therefore becauſe the Prophet in his language ſaith a man ſhall reuiue, or quicken, ſome thinke it is as much as if he had ſaid, To deliuer from death: notwithſtanding I haue followed that which was the moſt ſimple and approued.

Verſ. 22. And for the abundance of milke that they ſhal giue, he ſhall eate butter; for honey and butter ſhall euery one eate, which is left within the land.

SOme expound, that they ſhal hardlie draw ſo much nouriſhment from one Cow as will be ſufficiēt to ſerue for one familie: for thoſe who bring vp Cattell, liue not only of the Milke, but make Cheeſes alſo, and reſerue Butter to ſell. When he ſaith then that of all the abundance which ſhall be left, one ſhall not be able to get ſo much as will be neceſſarie to ſuffice the familie; he thereby notes out (as theſe expoſitors affirme) neceſſitie and want. Others thinke that he here promiſeth increaſe, ſo that although they ſhould haue but few Sheepe and Kine, yet notwithſtanding they ſhould haue enough to maintaine themſelues. But the third expoſition agrees beſt, for it ſeemes the Prophet meane to ſay, The number of men ſhall be ſo ſmall, that they ſhall not need much milke to ſuffice them all. Iſaiah then hath declared in the former verſe that Iudea ſhould be ſo pilled, that there ſhould not remaine many beaſts; but now he addes, that there ſhall be yet a leſſe number of men, becauſe a little milke ſhall ſuffice for foode to the inhabitants that remaine in the land. This expoſition I rather receiue, becauſe a promiſe ſhould not well ſute to this place. And as for the firſt ſenſe, it is vnapt, becauſe he ſpeakes not only of thoſe that haue Cattell, but of all the inhabitants; for he expreſſly ſaith, whoſoeuer ſhall be left: by the which ſpeech, he ſignifies yet againe a ſmall number. His meaning then (in a word) is to ſay, that the land ſhall be ſo ruinate and diſpeopled, that they ſhall noe neede much milke nor butter, becauſe few men ſhall be left in this deſolation.

Verſ. 23. *And at the ſame day euery place wherein ſhall be a thouſand vines, ſhall be a thouſand pieces of ſiluer: * ſo it ſhall be for the briars and for the thornes.*

* Or, Becauſe

I Will not ſtand to refute the opinion of thoſe who thinke that Iſaiah here comforts the faithfull, becauſe the veine of the text doth ſufficientlie ſhew the contrarie, ſo as the very words cleerely ſhew, that the Prophet goes on ſtill to deſcribe the waſte and ruin of the land. Others thinke this ſhould be the ſenſe, namely, that there ſhould be buſhes and thornes in the places where the vines were, which were ſold for a thouſand pieces of ſiluer. But we ſee that this ſhould be too baſe a price, if the Prophet ſhould ſpeake of all the land in generall: For what thing were it to prize a vine at a ſuckle, which is the moſt precious poſſeſſion that one can haue? That were all one as if it ſhould be giuen for a piece of bread, as we commonlie say when a thing is sold extremely vnderfoote. There is no field so barren and vnfruitefull that is not worth more, if so bee a man bee able to husband it, as they doe when a land is well peopled. Hee addes the reason of the changing of the price, whereby it appeares that he speakes of a wast and destruction. There shall be no labourers, saith he, because of the bushes and briars, which we see comes to passe in an extreme calamitie. I thinke also that the letter Lamed, which some haue expressed by the word To, signifies Because. For the enemies hauing pilled and made hauock of all, and no husbandmen nor vinedressers being left, the best husbanded places must of necessitie be couered with thick bushes and brambles. His meaning is therefore, that there shall be so few inhabitants, that scarcely one should be found that would bestow the least piece of siluer to buy the faireſt Lordships.

Vers. 24. With arrowes and with bow shall one come thither, because all the land shall be briars and thornes.

THe verb is in the singular number, yet notwithstanding we may expound it by the plurall, to wit, that the Archers shall goe through Iudea. Some thinke Isaiah speakes of Bowes and arrowes, because the enemies should be so fearefull to behold, that no man should dare to approch neere his possessions without armour. But I thinke it more probable that men shall go a hunting where the land was well manured and dressed before, because there should be caues and dennes for wilde beasts. Now this is a miserable change, to wit, when fields which in times past were husbanded and fruitfull, are conuerted into forests and bushes. And therefore by bowes and arrowes in this place I vnderstand hunting; and the sense is, that the Farmers shall not come neere their Vineyards, but the hunters: and that they shall not meddle either with planting or pruning of vines there, but others shall hunt wilde beasts in those places. So that for conclusion, he notes nothing else but an vtter desolation, by meanes whereof the whole land shall be turned topsie turuie.

Vers. 25. But on all the mountaines which shall be digged with the mattock, there * shall not come thither the feare of briars and thornes: but they shall be for the sending out of Bullocks, and for the treading of sheepe.

* Or, there shall be no feare.

IT seemes heere that the Prophet contradicts himselfe, for hitherunto he hath spoken of the consumption of the land: but now when he saith that oxen shall feed in the places where were thornes and briars, he describes as it were a new estate. This hath caused some to applie these words to ỹ consolation of the people. But the Prophets meaning is nothing lesse, because hee declares that the mountaines which were farre remote from the places where men dwelt, and whither men went with great difficultie, should be now fit pasture for Cattell by reason of the multitude of folks which should retire thither. And because euery one would flee to ỹ mountaines, which in former times were desert and inaccessible, they should not feare to be scratched with thornes, because there should bee inhabitants enow to suppresse them. Now this is a miserable thing, when men can no otherwise escape from death, but by running amongst the thornes and brambles. His meaning is then, that men shall seeke shelter and habitation in the mountaines, which were desert and vnhabited: because there shall be no roome left for safetie in the plaine. And thus hee portraites out the ruinous and pitifull estate of all the countrie; namely, such an horrible destruction, that the face of the land shall be vtterly changed from that it was before. When the Prophet foretold these things to King Ahaz, no doubt but hee contemned them. For this wicked King resting vpon his forces, and vpon the league with the Assyrians; staied himselfe thereupon, and setled himselfe againe vpon his lees: as soone as the siege (which threatned the Citie) was raised and gone. But Isaiah notwithstanding ceased not constantly to discharge his dutie; shewing still, that there was no succour but in God; testifying to this wicked hypocrite also, that his ruine would come from that place whence he looked for safetie and deliuerance.

THE VIII. CHAPTER.

Vers. 1. Moreouer, the Lord said vnto mee; Take thee a great roll, and write in it with a * mans pen; Make speede to the spoile, haste to the pray.

* Or, a common stile.

THis Prophecie containes no new matter: but is a cõfirmation of the former; wherin Isaiah had prophecied the destruction of ỹ two kingdomes of Israel and Syria, which was at hand. Hee had also foretold, that both Countries should lose their Kings, before the children which should be borne soone after, were able to discerne betweene good and euill; that is to say, before they should bee of discretion. But because the wicked take no warning by any threatnings, it was needefull that this prophecie should bee repeated, and confirmed by some signe: First, that be might awaken the people; God commandeth this Prophecie to bee published and written, to the end all might take knowledge of it. We haue ſaid heretofore, that the Prophets were wont after they had receiued commandement to publiſh any thing to the people, to comprehend the ſumme of it in few wordes; and then fixed it to the gates of the Temple: as we may gather from the booke of Habacuk; wherewith if wee conferre this place, the thing ſhall bee manifeſt enough. But here is a more particular thing: for hee not onely commands the prophecie to bee written; but hee requireth a great and large roll, to the end it might bee read a farre off. For by how much ſmaller the letter is, ſo much the more difficult and obſcure it is to reade. Heereunto appertaines that which immediately followeth, touching the Stile of a common perſon. The word Enoſh. is taken for a man of any trade; to the end all, yea the ſimpleſt ideots might reade that which ſhould be written.

Hab. 2. 2.

Make haſte.] This ſhort and cutted manner of ſpeech hath much more vehemencie in it, then if hee had ſtood to dilate the matter at large. For euery one was able to carry home foure words to his houſe; and in them to take knowledge of the ſwiftneſſe of Gods wrath; as alſo to bee the more neere, and in good earneſt touched with his iudgement, no leſſe then if hee had felt it with his finger. Laſtly, the Lord would not ſtriue with words, becauſe it was now no time to pleade; but rather to repreſent the matter by an outward ſigne. By an example then he ſets the vengeance of God before their eyes; whereof the Prophets had ſo often told them in vaine before: to the end it ſhould pierce the more deepely into their hearts, and ſhould remaine engrauen in their memories. So that as oft as one ſhould but mention theſe words, haſte to the ſpoile; they ſhould alſo call to mind the deſtruction of Iſrael and Syria, and be further certified of it. Now becauſe the Prophet prophecied in the former chapter of the comming of Chriſt; many vnaptly expound this of him: to wit, that being furniſhed with an heauenly vertue, hee came to diſpoile the prince of the world; and therefore haſteneth to the pray. Although this hath ſome ſhew of wit, yet it can by no means agree to the text. For the true and plaine ſenſe declares, that the Prophet ſaith not any new thing, but confirmeth that which hee had ſaide before.

Chap. 9. 14.

Verſ. 2. Then I tooke vnto mee faithfull witneſſes, to record, Vriah the Prieſt, and Zechariah the ſonne of Iebereehiah.

THe Prophet vſeth a noune and verbe deriued from one roote, and the meeting together of the words hath elegancie: as if we ſhould ſay, I haue witneſſed my ſelfe with witneſſes. Now becauſe this matter was of great importance, he tooke witneſſes with him, as men were wont to doe in things of conſequence. Hee calles them faithfull; that is to ſay, true and meete: and yet notwithſtanding one of them was a curſed and wicked apoſtata, who to flatter the King, built an Altar like vnto that at Damaſcus; and openly conſented to all horrible impietie and abomination. I know there are others who are indeed of a contrarie opinion: but if wee conſider the circumſtance of the time well, we ſhall finde it to be euen that ſame Vriah, who like a trencher-chaplaine, conformed himſelfe to the vngodly humour of the King; as the holy hiſtorie witneſſeth. Whereas they thinke it was ſome other, becauſe Iſaiah calleth him faithfull: it is too weake a reaſon; for the Prophet did not ſo much looke to the man, as to the office which he exerciſed; in regard whereof, hee was ſufficient to be a witneſſe in this caſe. He meant not to ſay then, that Vriah was a good man; but that his perſon was not to be reiected, in regard of the authoritie of his office; but was in reſpect thereof, a witnes free from all exception; as they ſay. Moreouer, I thinke this prophecie was fixed to the doores of the Temple, in the preſence of Vriah and Zechariah, who were taken to be witneſſes to it. For hee ſpeakes of no viſion, but of a commandement of God, which hee indeed did and performed: to the end theſe words might be as a common prouerbe in the mouthes of all the people.

2. Kin. 16. 11

Verſ. 3. After I came vnto the Prophteſſe, which conceiued and bare a ſon: Then ſaid the Lord to me; call his name Maher-ſhalal-chaſh-baz.

I Make no queſtion but this which followes happened to the Prophet in viſion, to ſeale vp the former prophecie. It ſeemed then to Iſaiah, that he had the company of his wife; and that by this copulation he begat a ſon vpon whom this name is impoſed. There were no abſurditie if we ſhould confeſſe that the Prophet had the company of his wife; and that hee did indeed beget a child, to whom this name was giuen: neither would I much contend with him which ſhould be of ſuch an opinion. But becauſe it is not very likely that this name was impoſed vpon any man, there being no teſtimony of it: I rather incline this way, to think that this viſiõ was offred to the Prophet, as a confirmation of the former prophecie. He calles not his wife a Propheteſſe, as the wiues of Kings are called Queenes, by way of honour: but becauſe ſhe was a publike perſon in this viſion. Iſaiah therefore out of doubt, doth of ſet purpoſe turne away the mindes of the faithfull from thought of any carnall copulation; that they might ſo much the more attend to this ſacred myſtery. For howſoeuer it be a thing lawfull in it ſelfe to beget children in mariage; yet notwithſtanding nature it ſelfe teacheth, that the act is a matter of bluſhing, or ſhamefaſtnes, which ſeeketh to do it ſecretly.

Verſ. 4. For before the child ſhall haue knowledge to crie My father, and my mother, hee ſhall take away the riches of Damaſcus, maſcles, and the ſpoile of Samaria, before the King of Aſsur.

HEre followes both the expoſition of the obſcure words of Iſaiah, as alſo of the viſion adioyned vnto it. For ſeeing God meant to ſpeake briefly, it was needefull it ſhould bee intelligible. I referre not the word child to the ſonne of the Prophet, but to all thoſe that ſhould bee borne ſoone after; as I haue
Chap. 7.14. ſaid heretofore. He threatens then, that the two kings of Iſrael and Samaria, ſhal be cut off before thoſe children ſhall be of any growth. In the preſence of the King of Aſsur. That is to ſay, according to his deſire and will. Wherein it may bee hee meetes with the ancient manner of thoſe which triumphed: before whoſe chariot they vſed to carrie the ſpoiles of the enemies. Thus the ſpoiles of Damaſcus and Samaria ſhall bee borne before the King of Aſsur. From hence it appeares yet better that the Prophet meant
1 nothing elſe but to foretell the ruine of the 2 kingdome of Iſrael and Syria: Firſt, for the comfort of the faithfull, and ſecondly, to ſcorne at the fooliſh feare of this curſed King, which could not endure that the Lord ſhould ſuccour him. He had not onely reiected the promiſes; but alſo the ſigne which was offered him. This is the cauſe why the Prophet doth ſo much the more reproue the impiety of this king, and of al the people: as if he ſhould ſay, I ſee that thou art reſolued to beleeue nothing: but yet is the Lord determined to aſſiſt his choſen. For thou ſhalt ſhortly ſee ſudden and vnexpected changes, by which God will deliuer his people. And yet it is certaine that theſe things are not directed ſo much to the King, as to the faithfull. Whence we are to note, that the ſeruants of God doe not alwaies ſpeake ſo that the hearers doe by and by beleeue their ſayings. Iſaiah ſpeakes heer to the wicked, whom he profited nothing at all. Why then doth he direct his ſpeech vnto them? To the end hee may conuince them more and more, and to lay their infidelity in their diſh: as alſo that the goodnes of God might be the better knowne. For who would not haue thought but ſuch an impietie would haue ſhut vp the gate of all Gods mercies from them? yet notwithſtanding the Lord by his goodnes ouercomes both the peruerſitie of the King, and of the people. Now yee ſee the Prophets drift, to wit, that whileſt he reprocheth the wicked with their pride, he ſhewes them notwithſtanding that God is alwaies like himſelfe.

Verſ. 5. And the Lord ſpake yet againe vnto me, ſaying,

6. Becauſe this people hath refuſed the waters of Shiloah which runne ſofily, and reioyce with Rezin, and the ſonne of Remaliah.

TO the end Achaz ſhould not waxe ſecure, nor reſt himſelfe vpon a vaine hope, the Prophet ſuddenly breakes off his ſpeech touching the common ſaluation of the faithfull, and doth againe ſet the threatnings and chaſtiſements before the vnbeleeuers. Some thinke that hee ſpeakes here againſt thoſe which onely ſought after newes: as indeede it comes to paſſe, that the common people for the moſt part are not contented with the preſent ſtate, but deſire to heare of a new King. And that often happens to manie, which wee ſee befall thoſe that are ſicke; namely, they hope to be better, when they haue changed their place. The wills of men are ſo peruerſe, that when things fall not out as they would, they looke after nothing but a change in the ſtate, greedily purſuing after tidings therof, thinking to receiue ſome reliefe by it. But I thinke the meaning of the Prophet is to be ſtretched further, and is not to be referred only to thoſe who asked after a change: but that it is rather a generall ſpeech comprehending all eſtates: for impietie, and the contempt of God had almoſt ouergrowne the whole land.

He ſpeakes not then of any ſmall number or of a particular faction; but of the whole aſſemblie of the people: and ſeeing they were almoſt all of them degenerate, he very iuſtlie reprooues them all. I confeſſe indeede that he excepts a little remnant of the faithfull, of whom he will make mention by and by. Now the offence is, that the people diſtruſting their owne weakeneſſe, deſired greater riches and forces. He ſaith then, that they deſpiſed the waters of Shiloah, becauſe the Iewes made no reckoning thereof, and were diſcontented with their owne eſtate. He adds, that they delighted to looke to Rezin. Others tranſlate, with Rezin: but the particle, ת, expreſſeth their peruerſe deſire better. His meaning then is to ſay, that the Iewes ſeeing themſelues deſtitute of great gariſons, looked vnto others, and longed for the riches of the kingdome of Iſrael. For when they conſidered their pouertie and weake eſtate they trembled, and truſted not in God at all; but only in outward helpes. They thought they ſhould be in great ſafetie, if they could obtaine a Prince equall in power to the King of Iſrael. Thus they reioyced in other mens riches; and deſired them.

Verſ. 7. Now therefore, behold the Lord bringeth vpon them the waters of the riuer, mightie and great; euen the King of Aſsur with all his glorie, and he ſhall come vp vpon all their Riuers, and goe ouer all their bankes.

HE ſpeakes in the preſent tence, to the end all ſhould lay it the neerer to heart. Behold, the Lord brings vpon you violent waters. We muſt note the ſimilitudes which the Prophet vſeth: for the ſpeech is much more elegant, then if he had ſpoken barely and nakedly without them: and it is as if hee had ſaid, Becauſe the people are not contented with their condition, but are euer luſting after the riches and wealth of another, I will

ſhew them what it is to haue a mightie King. As for example, if ſome few people ſubiect to a poore and obſcure Prince, hauing mightie neighbours that were ſubiects to a King of great renowne ſhould ſay, Oh, what a goodly thing were it to bee the ſubiects of ſuch a puiſſant King, to be vnder the gouernment of the Emperor, or of ỹ King of France, who haue an inuincible power! Should not God haue iuſt occaſion to chaſtice ſuch a wicked deſire? For by how much the more mightie Kings are; ſo much the more doe they oppreſſe their people: they will be vnder no controll, but will do whatſoeuer they liſt: adde alſo, ỹ they know not the meaſure of their power, but according to their ſtrẽgth they giue themſelues licence to doe what them liketh. The Lord reprooues this vnbridled deſire of the Iewes, that in diſtruſting their owne ſtrength, they looked not to the Lord, but to the riches of mightie Kings. Now this reprehenſion hath much more grace vnder theſe figures, then if he had ſpoken without them.

Shilo, as S. Ierom ſaith, was a little fountaine, whence proceeded a riuer running ſoftly thorow the middeſt of Ieruſalem. And becauſe this little riuer was inſufficient to defend them, they deſired and asked after thoſe great riuers which inuironed, and greatly inriched the cities. For there is nothing which brings more renowne and riches to a countrie, then theſe great nauigable riuers, by which one may fetch in and carrie out all ſorts of merchandize, the more eaſily. He compares Euphrates then, (which is ỹ moſt renowned riuer in the East) with Shiloah; and followes the ſame ſimilitude: vnderſtanding by violent waters, the Aſſyrians, which ſhould waſte Iudah, and ſpoile it wholely, as it were with a deluge. I wil ſhew you, ſaith the Lord, what it is to wiſh for theſe mightie and violent waters. 2. King. 18.

And ſhall come vp.] This place ought to be dilligently obſerued. For wee haue all of vs a diſtruſtfulneſſe naturally rooted in vs, ſo as when the helpe of man failes, wee are out of heart. Let God make what promiſe hee will, we cannot be reſolued of the truth of it: but haue our eies fixed vpon our owne feebleneſſe, and being beſotted, we lie like blocks in our feares. And therefore haue we neede to ſeeke a remedie for this vice. Shiloah then; that is to ſay, the vocation or condition to which God hath called vs, with promiſe of bleſſing; ſhould be vnto vs a ſtrong defence, although we ſee it not before our eyes; and that we ſhould preferre the ſame our eſtate before the power of the greateſt Kings of the world. For if wee relie vpon the ſuccour of men, and place our confidence in riches and abundance of ſiluer; we muſt looke for the chaſtiſement which the Prophet threatneth in this place. The holy hiſtorie witneſſeth that theſe things came to paſſe; ſo as he which ſhall reade therein, ſhall haue no great need of an expoſition of this place. The Aſſyrians whom the Iewes called to their ſuccour, deſtroyed them: and this was a iuſt puniſhment of their diſtruſt. Wherein wee haue a faire looking glaſſe to behold the ende of ſuch luſtfull people, who could not content themſelues with the promiſe of Gods aide and ſuccour. Let vs then looke to our ſelues, and let vs bee warned by this deſtruction of the Iewes.

The Church for the moſt part is in ſuch caſe, that ſhe is alwaies deſtitute of the helpe of men, leſt whileſt we be too well ſtabliſhed in our outward eſtate, wee ſhould haue our eies dazled with our riches and ſtrength, and ſo ſhould fall to forget God. We muſt learne to reioyce in our weakeneſſe, and to content our ſelues therewith; to the end we may depend vpon the Lord for ſuccour: ſo as the ſmall and low waters be better pleaſing vnto vs then all the great and boyſterous riuers of the Heathen: let vs not therfore enuie the greatneſſe and power of the wicked. To this purpoſe it is ſaid in the 46. Pſal. The ſtreames of the riuer ſhal reioyce ỹ city of God; the ſanctuary of the moſt high is in the midſt therof, therefore it ſhall not mooue: God wil helpe it right early, the Heathen make a noiſe, the kingdoms ſhaked, and the earth trembled: The Lord of hoſtes is with vs, &c. If any ſhall obiect that the helpe and ſuccour of men is not to be deſpiſed: the anſwere is very eaſie: to wit, that the Prophet condemnes not ſuch helps here; but that curſed feare which driues vs into deſpaire: as when we are ſo affrighted, that no promiſe of God whatſoeuer can hold vs in our places. Now we muſt yeeld God this honour to content our ſelues with him alone, although all things elſe ſhould faile vs; ſeeing we are aſſured that he is alwaies redy to relieue vs. And then it is all one whether we haue outward helps, or whether we haue them not. For if we haue them, it is in our liberty to vſe them; if wee haue them not, let vs be content: and let one God onely ſuffice vs for all neceſſities. For hee is ſufficientlie able to fulfill his promiſes of himſelfe, and needeth none of mans helpe: therefore wee may boldlie commit our ſelues ouer into his onely cuſtodie and ſafegard. Obiect. Anſ. Let this be wel obſerued.

The Verbe Kalaq, which ſometimes ſignifies to paſſe; is as much in this place, as to ſpoile and cut off: as if the Prophet ſhould haue ſaid; Hee ſhall not onely ſlightly paſſe thorow Iudah, but ſhall alſo ouer-flow it; ſo as he will drowne and deſtroy it wholly. For he will ſpread himſelfe all ouer the land in all places. He addes, Verſ. 8. And ſhall breake into Iudah, and ſhall ouerflow and paſſe thorow, and ſhall come vp to the necke; and the ſtretching out of his wings ſhall fill the the breadth of thy land, O Immanuel.

THis ſimilitude is taken frõ a mã, who entering into a riuer, goes forward by degrees til at lẽgth he come vp to the neck. So ſhal Iudah be inuironed with this boiſterous flood; to wit, with the Aſſyrian: in ſuch ſort, as he ſhall wade into it vp to the necke. Now he ſpeakes this of Ieruſalem, which was the chiefe and capitall Citie in the kingdome: for when the Assyrian arriued there, it was no hard matter to destroy all Iudah. The breadth of thy land. That is to say, ouer all the parts of it. The Prophet goes on still with the similitude of his prophesie, and shewes how great the violence of the Assyrian will be, and he amplifies his fiercenes and turbulencie by the same similitude, to wit, of a raging streame, which hauing broken all ramparts that could be set before it, ouerflowes and spreads euery way, ouercaries and beares all downe before it. For he followes his denunciation against the Iewes, as he began to do in the two former verses. And as he had threatned the Israelites and Syrians with destruction, so now he likewise threatens the Iewes with the same. For the better vnderstanding whereof, we must consider the context which Isaiah disposeth very fitlie. He had directed his speech before to others, because Ahaz was vnworthie of it. The Lord shall giue you a signe, and this we haue handled in the former Chapter. He therewithall addes the meanes whereby to preserue Ierusalem, to wit, by the sodaine mutations which should happen to Israel and Syria. This was confirmed in the beginning of this Chapter as well by expresse commandement, as by vision. Now hee comes to the Iewes, who should not thinke to escape without punishment; as also that they should not be too much lifted vp with the fall of their enemies: for he shewes that their reward is very neere, and that they shall be chastised for their impietie and disloyaltie, because they despised the Lord, and would not be satisfied with his promises, signes, and benefits which were offred them in all fulnes and abundance.

Quest. Immanuel.] Some aske why the Prophet rather turnes his speech to Christ, then to call it Gods holy land: for no doubt but by the name of Immanuel he meanes Christ. It should seeme that this was said to expresse the indignitie of the offence so much the more: because Iudah was not only consecrated vnto God, but also had the pledge of his saluation in the person of the Mediator; and therefore should be a great indignitie vnto them to be Ans. destroyed by an Infidell king. But I thinke rather the Prophet addes this word, to giue some hope againe to the faithfull, and to comfort them in so great a calamitie, for they might haue been out of heart, seeing the countrie so cruellie wasted and spoiled. His meaning is to say then, that this destruction shall not hinder the comming of the Redeemer (of whom he had made mention before,) As if he had said, The land shall be thine, O Immanuel, thou must dwell and remaine in it. This then is added in stead of a consolation, giuing them to vnderstand that the land being pilled and destroyed, shall yet notwithstanding be rather Gods then mans. And this turning and applying of the speech to the second person, hath great vehemencie; because by this meanes he hath recourse to the promised redemption: to the end the Lord may moderate his anger in the midst of these horrible calamities.

Vers. 9. *Gather together on heapes ô ye people, and ye shall be broken in pieces, and hearken all yee of far countries: gird your selues, and you shall be broken in pieces: gird your selues, and you shall be broken in pieces. *Or, peoples.

THe Verb Raaf signifieth to bruise, or to breake, whether it descends from the word Raa, or from Raah. But because Raah signifies to conioyne or assemble, some had rather take it in this sense; which also agrees best with the argument and context of the Prophet. For whereas some translate, Breake you, to wit, either the kingdome of Iudah, or the Assyrians; it seemes too cõstrained, & too farre fetched. But it appeeres that ỹ Prophet describes the counsels and enterprises by which they thought to cut off the Church of God, because he by and by addes, Gird your selues. Also in the beginning of ỹ next verse, Take counsell. The word then of Assembling, propetlie agrees to this place, vnlesse any had rather take the word to Breake by a figure; to which I willinglie yeeld, and so the word amounts to as much as to heape vp, or (as we commonlie say) to pack vp hard together, because things which are pressed, are also consequẽtlie pressed with violence and thrust together. He meanes then not only an heape, but an heape well pressed together: as if he should say, Gather your selues close together, as if you were some very thick heape. This signification as it seemes agrees very well to the circumstance of this place; and that which is added afterward tends also hereunto, Arme you, Gird your selues. But the Prophet incourageth himselfe with trust and confidence, after he had made mention of Immanuel, that is to say, God, who was to assist his people. And by the selfesame meanes conceiued a new hope against the enemies, who although they might seeme to haue obteined all their desires when they had spoiled the countrie: yet should the Lord be conqueror, and would maintaine his owne against the crueltie of their aduersaries. And thus withdrawing his mind from the contemplation of this calamitie, he turnes it to Christ, and in beholding of him, he so fortifies himselfe, that he is bold to triumph ouer his enemies, as if he had alreadie ouercome them. We are to place the Prophet then as it were in the watch-tower, from whence on the one side 1 he beholds the discomfiture of the people, and from the other the Assyrians conquering 2 and ouerflowing in all pride. Then being 3 comforted by the sight and name of Christ, he forgets all his afflictions, as if he ailed nothing; and being deliuered out of all miserie, he turnes himselfe against the enemies which God should destroy soone after. And this we ought diligentlie to obserue, that hauing now to wrastle against the same temptations in these afflictions which the Church indureth, and with ỹ burthen wherof she is almost ouerwhelmed: that we forthwith cast our eies vpon Christ, by beholding of whom we may triumph ouer Satan, and all sorts of enemies.

Queſt. Anſ.

O yee peoples.] Wherefore makes he mention of peoples, ſeeing the Aſſyrian only ſhould deſtroy the land of Iudea? I anſwere, that the Armie of the Aſſyrian was compoſed of diuers nations, for he had ſubiected the Chaldeans; together with many others: and therefore this Monarchie comprehended diuers countries, notwithſtanding, he hath alſo an eye to the Iſraelites, Syrians, and Egyptians, and to all other enemies whomſoeuer which had ſet themſelues againſt the Church of God. Neither ſpeakes he of one plague wherewith the Church was afflicted only, but of the perpetuall combates which the choſen people ſhould ſuſteine from time to time. For the better vnderſtanding whereof we muſt ioyne the verſe following: where in the latter end it is added, becauſe the Lord is with vs. For behold the foundation of our deliuerance, to wit, God with vs. Let men conſpire, let them plot, conſult, and determine, all ſhall be in vaine, becauſe there is no counſell againſt the Lord. Let vs begin then at this foundation, if we meane to be ſtrong in deede.

The ground of comforting our ſelues in the daies of trial. Prou.21.30.

But we are to examin whether it be lawfull for all to reioyce on this maner; the wicked bragge in deed that God is with them: neither make they any bones to triumph and glorie in his name, and yet is their glorie vaine and to no purpoſe. As touching the faithfull, their valiant mind is grounded vpon the word of God, and proceeds from a true faith, liuely ingrauen in our hearts: by meanes whereof we dare boldly triumph ouer all our aduerſaries. As alſo S. Paul teacheth, who incourageth all the faithfull by this doctrine, If God be with vs, who ſhall be againſt vs? Rom.8.30. Let vs then in the firſt place looke that we haue the Lord with vs; which can not be done, but we muſt imbrace the promiſes by faith: which if we haue, then ſhall not our reioycing be in vaine. Whereas he ſpeakes to a nation ſo farre off, to which this voyce could not reach, the reaſon thereof is euident enough, to wit, that the faithfull might know the efficacie of the word, and might vnderſtand that the Aſſyrians with all their preparations ſhould be gouerned by it, although they were very farre remote: as if he ſhould ſay, It is true that you deſpiſe God, but he can eaſily keepe you back a farre off, and beate downe all your rage.

Gird you &c.] The repetition is not ſuperfluous, for it is much more hard to looke for the ſuccor of God againe after we haue once been deliuered; then to imbrace the promiſe of one only deliuerance. And further, although the firſt aſſaults of the enemies do not much aſtoniſh vs, yet notwithſtanding whē we ſee them obſtinate in their malice; their hardnes of heart weakens vs, of the which we haue dayly experience. For if any danger preſents it ſelfe, we can looke for ſuccor from God for a brunt, but if we fall thereinto the ſecond time, we quaile: and ſuch is our wofull vnthankfulnes, that we can hardlie be brought to beleeue that God will aſſiſt vs once more. So then, we are out of heart if happely we fall into dāger oft times, thinking ſurely that God will be wearie at the laſt, if he do vs good and ſuccor vs euery day. Iſaiah therefore would preuent this weakenes of men, that when we haue been aſſailed once or twice by enemies well prouided and furniſhed: yet notwithſtanding to remaine couragious and inuincible ſtill. And if it fall out that being once circumuented they yet double their forces, neuer ceaſſing to weary vs, yet let vs not therefore wax faint or out of heart, becauſe God is able to deſtroy and cut them off to day and to morrow, euen as oft as they imagin our ouerthrow.

We muſt not content our ſelues to haue put our confidence in God for once or twice, but we muſt hold out for euer, as it is in Chap.26.4.

And in this place alſo we are aduertiſed of our eſtate & condition, to the end we might learne to be alwaies vpon our watch, and readie to ſuſteine new aſſaults: and not to thinke we are therefore diſcharged when we haue reſiſted once, becauſe Satan is neuer idle, but is euer buſie in his charge, not ceaſſing day nor night to procure our ruin. He ſolicits and ſtirres vp his ſouldiers, and ſets them on fire with new luſts. But albeit we muſt of neceſſitie enter into the combat often, yet let vs be aſſured to obteine the victorie. Let vs fight then with cheerefulnes; and keepe our ſtanding firme in the battell.

1.Pet.5.8.

Verſ.10. Take counſell together, yet it ſhall be brought to nought: pronounce a decree, yet it ſhall not ſtand: for God is with vs. *

*Hebr. Immanuel.

HAuing ſpoken of the force of the enemies, he comes now to their counſels; as if he ſhould ſay, Howſoeuer the enemies are mightie not only in weapons and ſtrength, but alſo in counſell and wiſdome, yet ſhall they loſe all their labour. This aduertiſement therefore was very neceſſarie. For it often happens that we contemne our enemies, how mightie or well armed ſoeuer they be, becauſe they want counſell, and are rather caried with blind furie, then led by reaſon: he aduertiſeth therefore that all the craft and ſubtilties whereby the enemies ſhall indeuor to ſnare the people of God, ſhall in the end turne all into ſmoke, and therefore that they ſhall bring nothing to paſſe, although they haue all meanes readie, and that nothing be wanting in their power, counſels, and policies.

He addes, Pronounce a decree, that the ſenſe might be the more cleere. I haue tranſlated Appoint, or Decree a decree. This appertains either to the inſolencie of the enemies, or elſe it is the concluſion of their counſell: for after a thing is determined, the Decree followes. He affirmes, that all this ſhall vaniſh into ſmoke. Thus it appeares what the Prophet meanes, and what vſe we are to make of this place. Now this may ſerue vs as a ſhield wherewith we may beate back all the darts of the enemies, whether they be furniſhed with weapons, riches, power, credit, authoritie: or whether they be indued with wiſdome, counſell, policie, wit, foreſight, aptnes of inuention, or boldnes: for if ſo be we haue God with vs, we are then moſt ſtrong, and very well appointed; and conſequentlie, all that the enemies shall plot and deuise, shall forthwith vanish away into nothing. We haue in the former verse at large explained the reason which he addes, namely, That God is with vs: yet I doubt not but in saying Chi Immanu-el, he respects the name which he imposed vpon Christ before: and although he shewes that God assists his people, yet notwithstanding because the Maiestie of God in it selfe would not suffice for our comfort and consolation, he considers God himselfe, in the person of the Mediator, for whose sake alone he hath promised to assist and helpe vs.

Vers. 11. For the Lord spake thus to me in taking of mine hand, and taught me that I should not walke in the way of this people, saying, HEere the Prophet wrastleth against another kinde of temptation, to wit, against the infidelitie of the people. And to speake more plainely, we are to note that he had two temptations, one without, the other within. 1 The outward came in regard of open enemies, as the Assyrian, who hauing almost consumed all, so astonished the people by spoiles and cruelties, that he saw nothing but vtter 2 subuersion. The inward was, because this holy people who bragged they were the chosen people of God, did put their confidence in the help of man, rather then in the Lord: this was a very dangerous temptation. For hereby it seemed that all passage for the promises of God was wholly shut vp, which were dayly offred them, and alwaies whetted vpon their memories. What could the Prophet imagine in such a perplexitie, but the vtter subuersion of this froward people, who ceased not maliciously to reiect the grace of God which was so neere vnto him? The Lord therefore hereby armes the Prophet and his disciples against such a temptation.

As if he had taken me by the hand.] See heere an elegant similitude, which the expositers haue not vnderstood as I thinke. He alludes to fathers, or masters, who vsually put their hand vpon their children or schollers to hold them in, and to constraine them to obey, when they profit nothing by words. Thus the Lord holds in his Ministers, who are readie sometime to leaue al, because they think their labor is but lost: he then holds the back I say, in laying his hand vpon the, to the end they may continue to execute their office. They who faithfullie serue the Lord haue sufficient experience how needfull this is for them, and haue a proofe of it euery day. There is no temptation more burdensome, then when 2 they who ought to shew themselues faithfull, reuolt: in a word, when it seemes that faith is banished out of the world. It is very necessarie then that God should take vs by the hand; for wee are not only vnstable, and subiect to lightnes, but also naturallie inclined to euill more then we ought, although we be not drawne thereunto by any whomsoeuer. But if any naughtie custome be ioined herewithall, then can wee hardlie bee masters of our selues. It is certaine that wee should fall downe backward at euery push, were we not vpheld by an admirable power of God, to fixe our constancie in an assured hauen. Let euery one of vs exercise himselfe diligentlie with the consideration hereof. For although we are well perswaded of the truth of all this, yet notwithstanding when we should put it in practise we faile, and cast our eies rather vpon men then vpon God. In regard whereof we ought to be so much the more carefull to profit in this doctrine, and to pray vnto God, that he will hold vs in, not only with his word, but also with his hand. And herewithall let vs consider how prone we are to follow an euill course, for when we see wicked examples we run after them with might and maine, and of an example make a law: so that if so be some march afore, we thinke we are permitted to follow after, and to do as they do, especiallie when a wicked custome hath gotten the vpper hand, and that the matter rests vpon the constancie of one or two only. Euery one also couers himselfe with this faire vizard of a generall consent; the which all will confesse to be wicked and naught in it selfe. And which more is, where is he to be found that is not pushed forward as with a whirlewind to follow custome? euen as if it were in the power of a people to bring in their corruptions, in stead of good lawes. This hath not been the fault of one age alone, but it hath the swinge as much or more euen at this day then euer heretofore. Yea, this corruption is ingrauen in all men by nature, namely, to hold an error as a law. From thence haue proceeded all the superstitions that euer were, and those which are now in the Papacie, so as if one would seeke the originall, we shall finde they came from no other spring, but from that which one of them hath drawne in after another, by one and the same error. And thus are all intangled in the nets of Satan, so as euen at this present the common consent of men is the chiefe corner stone of such inuentions. Behold the weapons wherewith each one of them defends himselfe: We are not alone (say they) we follow an infinite multitude.

A common consent, the chiefe corner stone of humane inuentions.

Vers. 12. Say ye not a confederacie to all them to whom this people saith a confederacie, neither feare you their feare, nor be afraid of them.

FIrst, we must consider what the state of this people then was: they saw themselues destitute of great forces, and too weake to susteine warre against so mightie enemies. See what it was which made them set their eye and affections so stronglie vpon strangers, for they thought themselues vtterlie vndone, vnlesse some aid came vnto them frō other places. It is in this sense that I take the word Conspiracie, because they thought they stood in neede of their Confederates. But because the word Conspiracie is taken both in the good and euill part, and sometimes in Hebrue ſignifies as much as Band, I take it in the better ſignification. Others are of a contrarie opinion, and expound, Behold thine enemies the kings of Iſrael and Syria, who haue conſpired among themſelues. But I rather agree with thoſe who referre theſe words to the couenant and aſſociation which many vnbeleeuers would contract with the Aſſyrians. The Lord then admoniſheth Iſaiah not to regard the counſels of the wicked, although all the people ſhould approue of it, and that euery one of them ſhould yeeld to the deſire of his companion. Wee may alſo giue a double interpretation: for ſome reade it apart, as if the Prophet in the ſecond member ſhould condemne the corrupt maners of the people. But wee muſt reade and conioine theſe two members, Be not aſtonied if your fellow citizens plot together from day to day to make vnlawfull couenants, agree not you with them. Moreouer, although God ſhould haue ſpoke but to the Prophet alone, and not to the multitude of thoſe who profited by inſtruction to turne their mindes leſt they ſhould become vnfaithfull in aduenturing raſhlie after others; yet notwithſtanding the plurall number Say yee not, ſhewes, that all ſ faithfull were taught in his perſon.

Hebrue

Feare not.] Here we ſee from what fountaine the giddie counſels whereby men skirmiſh among themſelues proceede; to wit, from this, that their minds are ſo foreſtalled with feare, that they are caried hither and thither without any diſcretion at all. The chiefe cauſe why the Iewes deſired ſo much to be confederate with the Aſſyrians, is diſcouered in this place, that is to wit, being terrified aboue meaſure, they thought they could ſaue themſelues by no other meanes; and ſo this blinde feare hindred them from expecting help and ſuccor from the Lord: this is the cauſe which made them thus to long for this confederacie. True it is there was like occaſion of feare as well to the faithfull, as to the vnfaithfull, but they feared not all after one maner. For the faithfull tooke heart of grace becauſe they knew God had the care of their ſaluation, and being armed with the promiſe of God, comforted themſelues as oft as the name of Immanuel came into their minds. But the wicked ſurprized with feare, thought of nothing but of refuge from the Aſſyrians: they cared not for Gods helpe, neither yet retired themſelues vnto him. The Lord forbids not the faithfull to feare, for they are vnable to abſteine from it; but he commands them to ouercome this faithleſſe feare which ouerwhelmes the wicked. Let vs not gaze here and there then after their example: and leſt wee plunge our ſelues headlong into deſperation in ſeeking vnlawfull helps, let vs aboue all things take heed that feare depriue vs not of true iudgement.

The difference betweene the feare that is in the faithfull and that of the wicked.

Now the remedie of this miſchiefe is this, that we be reſtrained by the word of God, from whence proceeds all peace and tranquillitie of minde. And in conferring the eſtate of this people with our owne, let vs learne to runne for refuge to the name of God, which ſhall be as an inuincible fortreſſe and tower vnto vs. It alſo appeares againe by theſe words, feare yee not &c. put in the plurall number, that the Lord ſpake not to the Prophet alone. Likewiſe S. Peter drawes a generall doctrine from this place, 1. Pet. 3. 14. admoniſhing vs not to feare the feare of the wicked; but to put our confidence in God, and to haue our eies alwaies fixed vpon him, thereby to remaine conſtant, although heauen and earth ſhould be mingled together. And if euer the admonition of the Apoſtle Peter were neceſſarie, it is now in our great neede: for wee ſee all things ouerthrowne, turned as it were topſie turuie, and mingled together with an horrible confuſion: to the end then that we be not troubled, the Lord puls vs from fixing our eies vpon men, that being attentiue to the voyce of his word, we might continue immoueable. True it is that Saint Peter takes this word of feare in the paſſiue ſignification, and Iſaiah in the actiue. The Apoſtle exhorts the faithfull to be conſtant, and not to tremble at the threats and terrors of wicked men: and the Prophet condemnes this feare which moued the Iewes to ſeeke confederacies with the prophane. But becauſe it was not ſ Apoſtles meaning to expound this place, or to alleage it word for word, but only to allude to the ſenſe of the Prophet, there is no abſurditie in this diuerſitie.

Prou. 18. 10.

Verſe 13. Sanctifie the Lord of hoſts, and let him be your feare, and let him be your dread.

WE haue ſaid alreadie that the cauſe of ouer great feare in dangers comes frō hence, that men lift not vp their eies nor affections to God, and therefore the Prophet now applies a ſouraigne remedie to aſſwage ſuch immoderate feares, to the end ſuch as feare imminent and preſent dangers might learne to yeeld that honour vnto God which vnto him belongeth. Sanctifie the Lord of hoſts, ſignifies as much as to magnifie and exalt his power, to the end we ſhould call to mind how he gouernes the world; and that the beginnings and iſſues as well of good things as of euill, are in his power. Whence it followes, that God is robbed as it were of his honour and holines if we goe not directlie vnto him when we are in any perplexitie. This maner of ſpeech therefore hath great weight, for we are taught that God can not be more contemptuouſlie deſpiſed, then when we are ouercome of feare: as if he were not exalted high aboue all creatures, to order and diſpoſe of the euents of things. Contrariwiſe, after that by his ſuccor we haue ouerpaſſed and ouercome the dangers by a conſtant faith, then is he adorned rightlie with that ſoueraigne authoritie which is due vnto him, becauſe vnleſſe we be moſt aſſured that he hath infinit meanes readie in his hands which we are ignorant of for our deliuerance, it is all one, as if wee eſteemed him ſome dead idoll.

It is to very good purpoſe alſo where he addes, That God himſelfe ought to be the feare and dread of the people; to the end they might know that they should receiue a iust and due recompence of their wickednesse and contempt of his Maiestie, when they trembled like cowards, and were so amazed for the present dangers. Now, although hee ioyne dread and feare together; yet his meaning is not that the Iewes should so tremble at the mention of Gods name, as to flee from his presence: but he placeth these two words together, onely because he requires a sonne-like reuerence of his Maiestie: as also to note a constant perseuerance therein. His meaning is then, that they shall be free and dispatched from trouble of minde, if so bee his feare bee so liuely engrauen in their hearts, that they neuer depart from it. And truely, whosoeuer hee be that subiecteth himselfe willingly vnto God, setting his feare onely before his eyes, to hold himselfe by meanes of this bridle, in his duties; such a one shall feele by experience, that there is no place of refuge more safe, then vnder the shadowe of his wings. But in regard that the wicked cease not to prouoke his wrath against them by their outragious libertie; hee auengeth himselfe worthily vpon such a careleſſe securitie, vexing their mindes with a continuall vnquietnesse.

and

God would not haue vs so to feare him, that we should flee his presence.

Vers. 14. And hee shall be as a sanctuarie: but as a stumbling stone, and as a rocke to fall vpon to both the houses of Israel; and as a snare and as a net to the inhabitants of Ierusalem.

HE promiseth a secure and quiet conscience vnto the true seruants of God; because the Lord will easily appease all terrors, in keeping them vnder the shadow of his wings. Now he alludes to the word Sanctifie, which hee vsed heretofore: for the word which signifies Sanctuarie, Tower, or fortresse, is deriued of that which signifies, to sanctifie. He meanes to affirme then, that God askes nothing whereof he offereth not a like mutuall recompence. For whosoeuer they are that doe sanctifie him in their hearts; shall also proue by experience, that he is a most certaine Sanctuarie, and hauen of safetie for them. But howsoeuer there bee some correspondencie betweene God and vs in this sanctification; yet notwithstanding it is in a diuers respect; because wee are said to sanctifie him, when wee attribute vnto him all praise and glorie, and depend altogether vpon him: but he on his part is said to sanctifie vs, when hee deliuers and keepes vs in all dangers. Now because very few are found who obey him, resting themselues wholly vpon his promises, the Prophet meant to arme the faithfull against all such temptations. For they were in danger to be carried away by such and so wicked examples as by a kinde of whirlewinde. Behold now the Prophets meaning; as if he should say; The Lord will bee a most safe and faithfull gardian vnto you: and howsoeuer others spurne against him, yet be not you afraid; but continue you constant in your places.

There is also in this place a secret opposition: because the Sanctuarie is as a Tower situated in an high place, for the defence of the faithfull; and for the destruction and ruine of the vnfaithfull, in regard they rashed vpon God with a foolehardinesse. But wee shall hereafter see more cleerely how this was accomplished; partly vnder Hezekias, partly also from the time of the captiuitie of Babylon: and yet notwithstanding, Christ was therewithall prefigured, who was to bee a rocke of falling, and not a fortresse of defence to the Israelites. Isaiah aduertiseth the faithfull of this fall, to the end they should conforme themselues to this warning.

To the two houses.] The Iewes doe fondly and senselesly rent this sentence, instead of diuiding it aright. For they say, that God shall be partly a sanctification; and partly an offence to the Israelites: as if by the two houses, he should distinguish betweene the faithfull and the vnfaithfull. But hee rather commands the faithfull not to bee discouraged, although almost all the multitude of both the kingdomes, do hinder them from following of God; but that in forsaking all impediments, they should goe on with cheerefulnesse through the thickest of them. The Prophet might haue said in a word, hee shall be a stumbling stone to Israel: but hee meant to expresse it more fully: for hee comprehends the whole people, and saith, that God shall be their ouerthrowe. The people were diuided into two Kingdomes; to wit, Ephraim and Iudah; and therefore hee names both the one and the other. I grant that some were excepted out of this number: but he speakes heere of the whole body in generall.

This is an excellent place, and cannot bee too oft called to minde; especially in this time wherein we now liue, wherein wee see the estate of religion almost quite abolished in Christendome. Many boast that they are Christians, who yet are farre off from God, and to whom also Christ is a stone of offence.

The Papists proudly brag of his name, although they prophane his whole seruice by their superstitions, and despightfully dishonour him. As touching those who haue the pure worship of God established in the midst of them, there are very few who imbrace the doctrine of the gospel with a sincere affectiō.

On which side then soeuer wee turne our eyes, wee can see nothing but wofull temptations euery where. And therefore let vs set this most profitable aduertisement before vs; to wit, that it is no new thing to see the greater part, yea, almost all those who boast themselues to be the seruants of the Church, yet to spurne against God. And in the meane while, albeit we be but as a little handfull of people in respect of them; yet must wee rest our selues constantly notwithstanding vpon the Lord.

To the inhabitants of Ierusalem.] This is the second amplification. For hauing made mention of both the kingdomes, hee names the principall principall or head place of them both. Now howſoeuer the whole Country was degenerate; yet notwithſtanding it ſeemed that the Lord had his chiefe reſidence there. Hee ſhewes then that God is a ſtone of offence, and a rocke to fall vpon; not onely to the common people, who were diſperſed abroad in the Countrie and villages; but alſo to the greateſt; as to the Magiſtrates and Miniſters who were in Ieruſalem: yea euen in this holy place (I ſay) where God intended that the remembrance of his name ſhould eſpecially be honoured. The which Dauid alſo witneſſeth when he ſaith; that the maſter builders whom God had ſet on worke, reiected the chiefe corner ſtone: Pſal.118.22. Ieſus Chriſt alleadging this place againſt the Iewes, ſhewes that Mat.21.42. theſe words were ſpoken of him. I deny not but this fell out in Iſaiah his time; but much more in the time of Chriſt: for impietie & rebellion increaſed by little & little, euen till it came to the height. So then as wel the great, as the ſmall, who had alwaies obſtinately reſiſted God, did yet more licentiouſly ouerflow at that time; ſo as being come to the top, in the day of their deſtruction, they were wholly forſaken of God, whoſe Sonne they had wilfully reiected. And from hence we gather a teſtimonie of the eternall Godhead of Chriſt: Saint Paul ſhewing that it is God himſelfe of whom the Prophet heere ſpeakes: Rom.9.33. Now hee mentions no new God; but him who created heauen and earth, and who manifeſted himſelfe to Moſes. It is God himſelfe then, by whom the Church hath been alwaies gouerned.

A teſtimonie proouing the Godhead of Chriſt.

Verſ.15. And many among them ſhall ſtumble, and ſhall fall, and ſhall bee broken, and ſhall be ſnared, and ſhall bee taken.

HE continues to threate the wicked as he did heretofore; and denounceth, that all thoſe which would not reſt vpon God, ſhould not eſcape vnpuniſhed. Now the threatning is this; After they haue ſtumbled, they ſhall fall; and in the end, ſhall be broken. This agrees with the former Similitude, in which he compares God vnto a ſtone. Chriſt alludes thereunto, comprehending both the members: Whoſoeuer falles vpon this ſtone, ſhall bee broken; and vpon whomſoeuer it ſhall fall, it ſhall grinde him to powder: Matthew 21.44. That which followes afterwards, They ſhall bee ſnared and taken, agrees to the Similitude following; wherein he compares God to a net and ſnare. Let not the wicked thinke themſelues then ſtronger then God, or wiſer then hee: for they ſhall feele in the end, both to their coſt and ruine, that he is the ſtrongeſt and wiſeſt. Therefore it muſt needes follow, that they bee brought to nought; becauſe they ſhall be broken to powder in an inſtant: or elſe ſo enwrapped, that they ſhall neuer winde themſelues out. Now theſe things are not proper vnto God otherwiſe the accidentally, if we may ſo ſpeake: for his proper office is rather to draw men vnto him, and to giue them aſſured ground of their ſaluation; which was very well knowne and ſeene moſt cleerely in Chriſt. In regard whereof, Saint Peter ſaith, that howſoeuer many vnbeleeuers ſtumble at him, yet that their falles ought not to hinder our faith, that it ſhould not alwaies march on; becauſe to vs Chriſt is a choſen and pretious ſtone: 1.Pet.2.4.

Verſ.16. Binde vp the teſtimonie, ſeale vp the law among my Diſciples.

THE Lord now turnes his ſpeech to the Prophet, and incourageth him againſt he ſhould fight againſt Apoſtates and rebels; to the end he might execute his office boldly and conſtantly; which was not a little needefull. For Iſaiah had tried the great rebellion which was in the people: ſo as if he had looked onely vpon the preſent eſtate, to wit, the infidelitie of the people, and the labor which hee beſtowed in vaine, hee might forthwith haue been vtterly out of heart. For this cauſe the Lord purpoſed to confirme and ratifie his vocation afreſh vnto him: and not for his ſake alone, but for all their ſakes alſo which ſhould obey his doctrine. And howſoeuer few ſhould giue credit to the ſame; yet doth the Lord witneſſe notwithſtanding, that his doctrine is ſtaled vp to thoſe few: and that for their ſakes Iſaiah was not to giue ouer teaching, neither yet that the others ſhould ceaſe their walking in the obedience of faith. Now he compares the doctrine of the word to Sealed letters, which many might hold and handle; but yet notwithſtanding could not bee read nor vnderſtood but of a ſmall number; that is to ſay, of thoſe to whom they were directed. And thus there are very few who vnderſtand the word of God, (for they are the elect onely) howſoeuer it be offered to all in generall. The word of God then is ſealed vp to thoſe that profit not by it; and yet ſo ſealed, as that the Lord opens the ſame notwithſtanding to his choſen by his holie Spirit.

Some deriue the verbe Tſur, which ſignifies to Binde, of the verbe Natſar; and tranſlates, Keepe. Now although this bee of no great importance; yet notwithſtanding it appeares by the other word Seale, that the expoſitiõ which I haue followed is the beſt: for the ancients were wont to binde a threed about their letters, and then to ſet the ſeale vpon it. Now from hence wee gather a moſt profitable doctrine: to wit, that the Paſtours and Miniſters of the word, ought to continue conſtant in their office, although it ſeemes that all reuolt, and that nothing is to be ſeen in men but outrage and rebellion: becauſe the Lord will euer reſerue vnto himſelfe, ſome diſciples which will profit in the reading of his letters; howſoeuer they be cloſed and ſhut vp to others. The Prophet will vſe the ſame Similitude, Chap.29.11. where hee ſaith, that the word is like to a cloſed booke: but there mentions the wicked onely: but heere hee ſpeakes of the Diſciples, amongſt whom whom his doctrine should not be vnfruitfull.

Quest. But some will demand; whether the Prophet should leaue the people so, as to withdraw and shut vp himselfe apart with his disciples, who made some benefit of his warnings? Ans. I answere: This was not the Prophets intent; for it was the will of the Lord that he should preach publikely and manifest his message vnto all. And because he spake as to deafe eares, & might therfore lose his labor, and so bee discouraged in seeing no fruit to come thereof; the Lord heereby incourageth and strengtheneth him, to the end he should go on forward still, although all things were in a manner desperate: that so, contenting himselfe with the small number of his disciples, he might be more couragious in his ministerie then euer before.

Vers. 17. Therefore I will waite vpon the Lord, that hath hid his face from the house of Iaakob; and I will looke for him.*

*Or, So.

So I will wait.] I had rather translate the Hebrew particle Vau, in this sense; because the Prophet retires himselfe apart as it were, hauing receiued consolation from the Lord: as wee haue seene heretofore. It is as much then as if hee had said; Seeing the Lord is pleased to haue some Disciples, amongst whom his doctrine should bee sealed, I will wait, although hee hath hid his face from Iaakob. That is to say, although hee hath reiected and cast off his people. This place is worthy our obseruation; in the meditation whereof, wee ought continually to be much encouraged: yea, if so be the Lord proceede so farre, as that he hath turned his face away from his people, and should reiect those who make profession of his name: yet for all this, must wee wait vpon him with inuincible patience. This is the only remedie wee haue. The word waiting, hath great emphasis in it, as if hee should say; Yet notwithstanding will not I turne away from the Lord; I will still persеuere in faith. He yet augments the matter when he addes, So I will wait. Seeing our faith is wont to stagger and faint when offences doe happen. It is greeuously shaken when we see our selues forsaken of our companions, and that the sworne enemies of the Church doe proudly vsurpe the title of it: for offences for the most part doe cause vs to turne away from God, filling vs with such perplexed thoughts, that we are ready to call the truth of his word into question. This consolation then is very necessary, as well in the calamities wherewith the Church is oppressed, as in the troubles wherewith shee is tossed by the disloyaltie of others.

Vers. 18. Behold, I and the children whom the Lord hath giuen mee, are as signes and wonders in Israel, by the Lord of hostes which dwelleth in Mount Zion.

HEere the Prophet not onely testifies, that hee will wait in patience; but also shewes what his constancie is; proposing himselfe, with his disciples and those which remained with him, to open view. As though hee should say, Although others recoile, yet Lord behold I am readie to doe thee seruice; and I also bring those with mee, whom thou hast vouchsafed to saue miraculously by my labours. Hee shewes an inuincible manfulnesse then, and protests that he will continue in the faith and obedience of the Lord, although all should reuolt.

By Children, hee vnderstands seruants and ministers; following therin the vsual custome as well of the Hebrew tongue as of the Latine. Now he speakes of the Disciples whom he mentioned before. Whence it appeareth, what their dutie is, who would bee reputed the true disciples of the Lord; to wit, that they protest with Isaiah, to be teachable, and readie to hearken, and that they be readie to obey, as soone as the Lord shall speake. The teachers also ought to bring their disciples with them, and not to send them alone before them: they ought to march in the first ranke, and to shew them the way by their example; as was said in the second Chapter, verse 3. otherwise they should haue no authoritie in teaching. The Apostle in the Epistle to the Hebrewes, applies this place to Iesus Christ, and from thence drawes an admonition, which ought to serue vs as a sharpe spurre; to the end wee should not thinke to follow Isaiah alone for our leader and Doctor, but Christ himselfe; and to bee so much the more encouraged to run our course with greater alacritie. Heb. 2. 13.

Which the Lord hath giuen me.] The Prophet shewes heere of whom it is that we hold our faith; to wit, of God and of his free election. For Isaiah preached to all publikely, admonishing euery one, and soliciting all without exception, to draw neere vnto the Lord: but the word profited those onely which God had giuen him. By the word Giuen, hee meaneth those whom God drew inwardly by the secret instinct of his holie Spirit; for otherwise the externall voyce should haue sounded in the eares of the people in vaine: and thus it is said that the elect are giuen to Christ of God his Father: Ioh. 6. 37. Whereby we perceiue, that the promptnesse of faith depends not vpon the will of man; but that some few among many doe beleeue, because (as S. Luke saith) they were ordained before vnto life: Act. 13. 48. Now God is wont to call them whom he hath predestinate; and sealeth vp the testimonie of their adoption effectually in them, to the end they may giue themselues to teachableneſse and obedience. Such a thing is the gift then whereof Isaiah speakes in this place. But this agrees fitly vnto Christ, to whom the Father offereth and giueth Disciples; as it is said in Iohn; No man commeth vnto me except my Father draw him: Iohn 6. 44. Whence it followes, that he is appointed our gardian to preserue vs vnder his protection vnto the end: and therefore he saith; That none of those whom the Father hath giuen him, shall perish: Ioh. 17. 12. Ioh. 10. 29.

Signes and wonders.] Some referre this to miracles miracles amiſſe: for the ſenſe is farre otherwiſe, namely; That all the faithfull ſhall not onely be hated, but alſo bee had in execration; ſo as they ſhall be eſteemed monſters; and that not amongſt ſtrangers and open enemies, but euen in Iſrael it ſelfe; whereof wee haue experience at this day. The Papiſts on the one ſide abhorre vs more then Turkes or Iewes; nay, more then dogges and ſwine. Now although this be odious, yet muſt wee not be much aſtonied thereat; for this propheſie of neceſſitie muſt euen now bee fulfilled. The Prophet found it by experience amongſt his owne people: as all thoſe haue likewiſe done, which haue followed his doctrine. But wee finde not onely this hatred towards vs in the Papiſts alone, but euen in thoſe who would ſeeme to haue profited moſt in the Church: and the greater part of theſe abhor vs, mocke vs, and eſteeme vs as very monſters; onely becauſe we trouble our ſelues ſo much, and are ſo carefull for the ſaluation of the Church, of Gods honour, and of life eternall. But yet let vs not bee afraid to put our ſelues into dangers, to incurre hatreds, enuies, taunts, baniſhments, want, hunger, nakedneſſe; and laſt of all, death it ſelfe for all this. To them indeede they are monſtrous things; for how cã they taſte of theſe ſoueraign good things with any reliſh, whileſt they pamper themſelues, and are ſo carefull for their quiet and eaſe? But to the end their flouts may not aſtoniſh vs, we muſt arme our ſelues with this exhortation of the Prophet.

Now to the end hee might ſhew how vaine and friuolous the conſpiracie of the wicked is, hee ſtoutly triumphs ouer the pride of the whole world, by placing the Lord of hoſts as oppoſite againſt them: as if he ſhould ſay; I paſſe nothing at all that men abhorre and deteſt me, ſeeing I am aſſured that God is on my ſide. When hee alſo addes, that the Lord dwelleth in mount Zion; theſe words carry great weight. For though the people were couered vnder an infinite heape of vices and wickedneſſe, yet they gloried as if they onely were holy to the Lord; and in abuſing his promiſes, they condemned the true ſeruants of God, which reproued them. On the contrarie, that the Prophets might pluck this pride & vain confidence away frõ them, they teſtified that they were the Miniſters of the onely true God; whom this people notwithſtanding falſly bragged to worſhip in Mount Zion. Now God did not ſo chuſe his dwelling place there, as if being tied to that, he would therefore allow a baſtard and newfound ſeruice: but would be ſought and ſerued there, according to the rule of his word. And therefore Iſaiah taking the God which dwelled in Mount Zion, on his ſide, taxeth and ſharpely galleth the hypocrits, who fooliſhly and proudly bragged as oft as they cried, The Temple of the Lord: because it was rather an idoll wherein they gloried; contrary to Gods word. Now although they ſnatched the promiſes to themſelues, yet they falſly alleadged them againſt the true ſeruants of God; as the Papiſts at this day doe againſt vs. The Prophet then adorneth God with this title, to the end hee may vnmaske thoſe hypocrits, which made no conſcience vainely to oppoſe the name of the Temple againſt the expreſſe word of God. And in this regard Iſaiah now ſaith; Take vs for monſters as it pleaſeth you, yet notwithſtanding God will approue of his owne: you cannot abhor them, but you alſo therewithall reiect the God of Abraham and Dauid, whoſe ſeruants we are.

Ier. 7. 4.

Verſ. 19. And when they ſhall ſay vnto you, Enquire at them that haue a Spirit of diuination, and at the Soothſayers, which whiſper and murmur; ſhould not a people enquire of their God, from the liuing to the dead?

BVt if they ſay.] The Prophet goes on with his ſpeech; to wit, that all the faithfull being armed with the authoritie of God, ſhould not onely as with a buckler, but as with a wall of braſſe, conſtantly reſiſt all impietie. He admoniſheth them then to continue ſtedfaſt, and not to be ſhaken, if any ſhould offer to ſolicite them to ſuperſtition and idolatrie. Hee vſeth the plurall number, to ſhew that it was a vice common among all eſtates, which had ouerflowed euery where: as if he ſhould ſay, I ſee very well what will come to paſſe, you ſhall be in great danger: for thoſe which remaine amongſt you, will indeuour to turne you aſide from the true God, becauſe themſelues being wicked, will alſo deſire to haue you become like them. Herewithall he ſheweth how wickedly they were reuolted from the law and couenant of God, in that they were not aſhamed to ſolicite others to ſeeke vnto Sorcerers and Enchanters, whoſe verie names ought to haue been abominable and accurſed vnto them.

A people.] Some reade this altogether in the perſon of the wicked; as if vnder pretence hereof, they would deceiue the ſimple: to wit, that there is no nation whatſoeuer, without oracles & reuelations, but euery one aſketh counſell at his gods, or at leaſt, of the Magicians and Soothſayers. Yet notwithſtanding, mee thinks the opinion of others is more ſound, who thinke that Iſaiah teacheth his diſciples how they ſhould anſwere, if ſo be any ſhould ſolicite them to idolatrie. And yet this doth not ſufficiently open the meaning of this place: for commonly it is expounded as if it were a compariſon, from the leſſe to the greater; What? doe the Gentiles aske counſell at their gods, which notwithſtanding are falſly ſo called; and ſhall wee not make more account of him whom wee know to be the true God, eſpecially ſeeing he hath manifeſted himſelfe ſo to be vnto vs, and that by ſo infinite teſtimonies? Is it not a foule ſhame that the heathen ſhould make more reckoning of their gods, then we doe of our God? But I rather expound this of the Iewes themſelues, who are called People, by way of excellencie; becauſe they were adopted of God. Neither is it materiall that the Prophet vſeth ỹ word Elohim, Gods, in the plural number,

This text is a buckler wherewith we ought to beate backe all thoſe ſuperſtitions which glide ſo ſmoothly thorowout the world. And if others doubt and ſtand in a mammering whether they ſhould aske counſell at dead idols, or at Saints departed; yet let vs alwaies haue this anſwere readie at hand; That wee ought to aske counſell of God onely. Now the Prophet alludes to the place in Deuteronomie; where the the Lord forbids that they ſhould goe to Enchanters or Sorcerers: Deut. 18. 10. And leſt they ſhould alleadge the examples of the heathen, who had their Soothſayers and expounders of dreames, and obſerued the flying of the fowles, hee addes in 15. verſe, that they ſhould not want a Prophet, neither ſhould they be left deſtitute of neceſſarie doctrine. It was the will and pleaſure of God then, that they ſhould wholly depend vpon his word, and onely learne from thence whatſoeuer was expedient for them to know, and ſo to yeeld him loyal obedience.

As touching that which followes, from the liuing to the dead, ſome expound it otherwiſe, and interpret for in ſtead of from: and then the ſenſe is this; Will yee aske counſell at the dead for the matters of the liuing? But in regard this ſenſe is conſtrained, it ſhould bee more proper it may bee, to expound it thus, The Lord will be our maſter, and for this end hath ordained his Prophets, that wee ſhould learne his will of them: for the Prophet is the mouth of the Lord. It is not lawfull then to goe vnto the dead, to whom this office was not giuen: and adde hereunto alſo, that the Lord mindes not to vſe the ſeruice of the dead to teach vs. But yet, when I haue well conſidered the text ſomewhat more narrowly, I had rather tranſlate the Hebrew word Bead, From; to wit, frō the liuing to the dead: as if he ſhould ſay; that one onely God ought to ſuffice vs, as well for the liuing as for the dead. Whether thou conſidereſt the heauen, the earth, or the loweſt parts thereof, thou ſhalt finde that one God onely ſufficeth vs. Me thinks this ſenſe is moſt proper, and eaſie. The Prophet then armes the faithfull againſt the deuiſes and plots of the wicked, which otherwiſe might haue cauſed them to reuolt; to the end they might content themſelues to haue God onely for their Maſter; and that they ſhould not doe him that iniurie, as in forſaking his doctrine, to giue themſelues to other teachers; but rather caſting off all other things, they ſhould onely depend vpon the truth; the which hee repeates and confirmes immediately.

Verſ. 20. To the Law, and to the Teſtimonie, if they ſpeake not according to this Word, it is becauſe there is no light in them.

THis place is diuerſly expounded. For ſome take it to be a forme of an oath, as if the Prophet ſhould Sweare by the law, that thoſe were apoſtataes, which drew others to the like apoſtaſie with them. But I take it otherwiſe; namely, that we are rather brought to the Law, and to the Teſtimonie; becauſe the particle Lamed, ſhewes that this is the true ſenſe. The Teſtimony is conioyned with the Law; not as if they were diuers things, but for the plainer vnderſtanding. As if hee ſhould ſay; To the Law, which containes the Teſtimonie of Gods will toward you. Laſtly, we muſt take the word Teſtimony, for an epithite; to the end wee may know what the vſe of the Law is; namely, that God manifeſts himſelfe therein, and ſhewes what a one he will be towards vs: and laſtly, hee there ordaines all things which are needefull for vs to know. This then is an excellent commendation of the Law, which containes the doctrine of ſaluation, and the rule of a right and happy life. And this is the reaſon why hee iuſtly forbids vs to turne from it in the leaſt iot; as if hee ſhould ſay, Forſake all your ſuperſtitions, after which theſe runne ſo violently. They were not content with God alone, but ſought a thouſand inuentions: for what will ſatisfie him that forſakes the Lord? Chriſt ſpeakes alſo in this ſort; They haue Moſes and the Prophets, let them heare them: Luke 16. 29. For although Abraham bee brought in ſpeaking there, yet is it a perpetuall oracle which proceedes out of the mouth of God.

Wee are inioyned then to heare the Law and the Prophets, to the end we ſhould not be carried vp and downe after the curioſities of mans braine; neither to deſire the knowledge of any thing by meanes of the dead. For if the Law and the Prophets ſufficed not, the Lord would not forbid vs to vſe other meanes. And hereby we learne, that whatſoeuer is added to the word of God, ought to be condemned and reiected. Why ſo? Becauſe it is the Lords wil that we ſhould wholly depend vpon his word, and that all our wiſdome ſhould bee limited within the bounds thereof. If we then liſten vnto others, we ſnatch vnto our ſelues a libertie which he hath forbidden vs; and in ſo doing, wee offer him great outrage. Now whatſoeuer it is which men ſhall bee bold to ſet vp of themſelues, will bee found nothing elſe but a corrupting of this word. Let vs therefore reiect all other teachers, if we minde to obey God. And he alſo ſhewes further, that we ſhall then be well armed againſt all idolatries and ſuperſtitions, when wee relie vpon the Law of the Lord. For as S. Paul calles the word, The ſword of the Spirit: Epheſ. 6. 17. ſo alſo by it ought we to bring Satan and all his inuentions to nought. Retire we thither then, when the enemies ſhall aſſault vs; that being armed therewith, wee may fight valiantly, and at the laſt, ouercome and put them to flight.

All our wiſdome ſhould be limited within the bounds of Gods word.

If they ſpeake not, &c.] I will not recite all the diuers expoſitions of this place, becauſe it would be too tedious. And indeede, the true expoſition ſeemes to mee ſo ſure, that it may eaſilie refute all others. The common interpretation is, that the wicked doe therefore aduance their lies, and ſet their wiles to ſale, becauſe there is no light in them: that is to ſay, becauſe they are depriued of common ſenſe. But for mine owne part, I expound it, that the faithfull are heereby exhorted to be of good incourage: ſo as if the vnfaithfull agree not to the true doctrine, they doe nothing elſe herein but ſhew their blindneſſe. And therfore muſt we contemne their blockiſhneſſe, to the end it may bee no let nor impediment vnto vs: as alſo Chriſt admoniſheth that we ſhould boldly let ſuch blinde guides alone, leſt we be moued with their blinde obſtinacie. They are blinde, ſaith he, and leaders of the blinde. Will you wittingly periſh together with them? Matth. 15.14. For this cauſe the Prophet commands that ſuch authoritie be giuen to the word of God, to the end wee may boldly deſpiſe the whole world, if they ſhould gainſay it: for by the authoritie thereof, wee may condemne the Angels themſelues, if they ſhould fall into ſuch a ſinne. If an Angell from heauen ſhould preach any other doctrine, let him be accurſed; ſaith Paul, Gal. 1.8. How much more boldly then may wee condemne men which reſiſt God? And this maner of ſpeech alſo which the Prophet vſeth, hath great waight, if they ſpeake not according to this word: becauſe ſuch a one is iudged blind, who readily and without reſiſtance imbraceth not this ſentence; namely, That wee muſt not bee wiſe beyond the Law of God.

We muſt not be wiſe beyond the law of God.

Verſ. 21. *Then hee that is afflicted and famiſhed, ſhall goe to and fro in it: and when he ſhall be hungry, he ſhall euen fret himſelfe, and curſe his King and his gods, and ſhall looke vpward.

*Or, ſhall paſſe by this Country.

LEſt the faithfull ſhould ſuffer themſelues to be enwrapped in the common errors, hee addes how horrible the puniſhment is which threatneth the wicked when they ſhall be once reuolted from God, and alſo ſhall inforce themſelues to draw others to the ſame reuolt with them. The place is ſomewhat obſcure, but the cauſe thereof proceeds of this, that ſome haue not weighed ỹ words as they ought to haue done. Now the verb Abar hath great weight: for by this word To paſſe, he ſignifies the giddineſſe which cauſeth men to wander, ſo as they are altogether diſquieted, not being able to ſtay lõg in any place whatſoeuer. We muſt ſupplie a noune to the verb indefinit, to wit, The Iewes ſhall paſſe. By the pronoune in it, he vnderſtands the countrie of Iudea, which the Lord had preferred aboue all other regions: and therefore this may be well inough vnderſtood, albeit the Prophet hath not expreſſed it. As if he ſhould ſay, I haue promiſed indeed that this region ſhould be the perpetuall heritage of my people, but they ſhall be as reſtles vagabonds; and it ſhall fare with them as with thoſe who being driuen out of their countrie, being afflicted with peſtilence, famine, and all maner of miſeries, do ſeeke euery where for ſome place of abode better then their owne, but can no where finde it. Thus theſe words are oppoſed to that ſingular benefit of God, whereof Moſes makes mention ſo often, to wit, that they ſhould dwell perpetuallie in Iudea: for he foretelles here that they ſhall be vvanderers and vagabonds not in their countrie, but in a ſtrange region, ſo as in whatſoeuer place they ſhould ariue, they ſhould be aſſailed and vexed with infinite calamities.

Gen. 12.15. & 17.8.

Aſſamiſhed.] It ſeemes the Prophet ſpeakes of the Iewes conuerſion, as if he ſhould ſay, After they haue bin thorowly humbled with Gods iudgements, they will come to repentance: and queſtionleſſe this is the true remedie whereby God for the moſt part heales the obſtinacie of men. Notwithſtanding if any thinke that by the word hunger the Prophet deſcribes the wrath and ſtubborne yelling of the wicked, it muſt be obſerued that he not only comprehends hunger and thirſt, but (by the figure called Synecdoche) all other calamities alſo. By the word To fret, he ſignifies that which we haue in our common ſpeech, they fret, or chafe. The meaning is, that they ſhall begin to be diſpleaſed in themſelues, and ſhall alſo deteſt all thoſe ſuccors in which they truſted before: and this in deed is the beginning of conuerſion; for in proſperitie we flatter our ſelues, but being oppreſſed, we abhorre whatſoeuer is about vs. Now if any had rather referre this to the reprobate, then this word fret ſhall note out that gall and bitternes which rather pricks them forward to a furious raging, then to a calme and quiet humbling of themſelues.

They ſhall curſe their king.] By king, ſome vnderſtand God. And Zophonie takes Malchom in this ſenſe, Zoph. 1.5. that is to ſay, their king. But I here put a diſtinction between king and God, for the wicked are firſt blinded with the falſe truſt which they put in Idols, and by and by after they ground and eſtabliſh their ſtrength vpon earthlie things. The Iewes hauing a king, were puffed vp with his glorie and power: and when Iſaiah preached, the wicked exaſperated the king againſt him, and they moued all the people to imitate their king, who was as it were the ſtandard-bearer. In as much then as they were puffed vp as wel in regard of their idols as of their king, he ſhewes that they ſhall be oppreſſed with ſo many calamities, that they ſhall be conſtreined to curſe their gods, and their king. And behold heere the beginning of repentance, namely, to deteſt and put farre away all impediments which turne vs away from God.

Lifting vp their face on high.] He heere deſcribes an affrighted and perplexed conſcience, which vexeth the afflicted ſo long till they haue learned to lift vp their eyes boldly on high. It is ſome beginning of repentance, as I haue touched a little before, to endeuor to ſeeke true remedies, hauing been inſtructed and awakened by calamities and chaſtiſements. But we muſt goe a ſtep further, to wit, that reſting our ſelues vpon God only we gaze not here and there, neither yet be toſſed to and fro with all winds. To be ſhort, Iſaiah threatneth the Iewes with an vtter ruine, becauſe they were become ſo deſperate, that a light and eaſie ſtroke of Gods hand had not ſufficientlie tamed their rebellion. Yet notwithſtanding we may expound this in the good part, to wit, that the Iewes ſhould lift vp their eies at the laſt vnto heauen:

Verſ. 22. And when he ſhall looke to the earth, behold trouble, and darkenes, vexation and anguiſh, and he is driuen into darkenes.

BVt then we muſt reade this 22. verſe apart, and ſo the ſenſe will be, that the Iewes ſhall conuert vnto God, becauſe they ſhall be deſtitute of all meanes on earth, and ſhall perceiue nothing but horrible calamities on which ſide ſoeuer they turne their eyes. Now theſe ſpeeches are partlie ſimple, and partlie figuratiue: for by darknes and obſcuritie he meanes nothing elſe but aduerſitie, after the maner of the ſcripture phraſe: but he addes driuen, amplifying it greatlie by this word affliction: for if one puſh him forwards which is in darknes, he ſtumbleth and hurts himſelfe very greatly. His meaning is then, that to one ſore affliction the Lord wil adde another more grieuous, to humble them more and more. For his intent is nothing elſe but to ſhew that the iudgements of God ſhall be ſo horrible, that they ſhall be conſtreined in deſpite of their teeth to caſt vp their eyes to heauen.

THE IX. CHAPTER.

Verſ. 1. Yet the darkenes ſhall not be according to the affliction that it had whē at the firſt he touched lightly the land of Zebulon, and the land of Nepthaly; nor afterward when he was more grieuous by the way of the ſea beyond Iordan in Galile of the Gentiles.

HE begins to comfort ỹ afflicted with hope of a mitigation of the chaſtiſements, leaſt they ſhould be ſwallowed vp with ſo great an heape of calamities. Many draw theſe words to a cleane cōtrarie ſenſe, ſaying, that it is a threatning which preſageth a more heauie affliction to the Iewes, then that wherewith they were chaſtiſed by Tiglath-pelezer, or by Salmanazar. The firſt did them much euill, and the ſecond more then the former: for he caried the ten tribes away captiue, and aboliſhed the name of Iſrael. Some thinke then that the Prophet in this place foretels of a more heauie calamitie then euer they yet taſted of, which being compared to the two former, ſhould much ſurpaſſe them. Although I am not minded to reiect this expoſition becauſe it is ſomething probable; yet notwithſtanding I am of a contrarie opinion, albeit this firſt hath the fairer ſhew: the Prophet meant to take all pleaſures from the hypocrites, leſt they ſhould imagine that this deſtruction which was to ouerflow all, ſhould be like ſome little ſpoile which might paſſe away by and by as the former afflictions had done; and ſo ſhall we take the particle Ci in his proper ſignification. But me thinks the naturall ſenſe of the place will agree better if we ſay, that it is a conſolation, wherein the Prophet begins to moderate that which he had formerlie ſpoken of theſe horrible darknes, and driuing forward: and in mitigating the bitternes of theſe chaſtiſements, he comforts and drawes them to hope that God will ſhew them mercie; as if he ſhould ſay, And yet, euen in this cruell deſtruction which the Iewes ſhall vndergoe, the darknes ſhall not be ſuch as it was when the land of Iſrael was firſt afflicted by Tiglath-pelezer, and then a little more ſeuerely by Salmanazer: for the faithfull might haue growne out of heart in ſuch diſtreſſes, if they had not had ſome conſolations to haue cheered and comforted them. The Prophet then ſpeakes vnto them, to the end they ſhould not thinke themſelues vndone, and declares vnto them that the rods wherewith God meant to beate them ſhould be more eaſie then the firſt. We ſhall eaſily diſcerne hereafter by the context how proper and naturall this expoſition is.

2. King. 15. 29. & 17. 6.

But why ſaith the Prophet that this deſtruction which will lay all things waſte, ſhall yet notwithſtanding be more gentle and ſupportable? for Ieruſalem ſhould be razed, the Temple broken downe, the Sacrifices aboliſhed, which notwithſtāding in former warres remained wholie vntouched? this then ſhould ſeeme the cruelleſt, and the others but light in compariſon. We muſt obſerue that there is a certaine promiſe added to this, which was not to the others; now it is by this promiſe only that temptations may be ouercome, and the iudgements made more light: this (I ſay) is the only remedie which ſweetneth our euils, ſo that thoſe who are deſtitute thereof muſt needs fall into deſpaire. If the Lord confirme vs by this meanes, giuing vs hope of his helpe, there is not the greateſt affliction which we ſhall not eſteeme very light. This may be illuſtrated by a ſimilitude: It may fall out that a man ſhall drowne himſelfe in a little riuer, if he fall thereinto with his head downward; the which notwithſtanding in the midſt of the ſea might haue been ſaued, if he had had ſome planck or boord which might haue brought him to the ſhore. So alſo the little calamities will ouerwhelme vs if we be deſtitute of the grace of God; whereas being grounded grounded vpon the word of God, we can eſcape and come forth out of an extreme ruine ſafe and ſound.

Queſt.

As touching the words, ſome take Muaph for an adiectiue, as if the Prophet ſhould ſay, It ſhall not be darkened: but the relatiue of the femenin gender which followes a little after, hindreth from referring this vnto men. The opinion of thoſe who ſay it is a noune ſubſtantiue is better, & therefore I haue thought good to tranſlate word for word: There ſhall be no darkenes in Iudea according to the time, &c. Whereas ſome expound the verbe Hekal, as if the earth had been oppreſſed and burdened with people led into captiuitie; this is vtterlie wide from the Prophets meaning, neither agrees it to the ſcope of the Text: for it is ſaid, by and by after, that the neighbor region was burdened with a ſecond warre: no doubt then but this verbe anſwers to the former, Hariſhon. Becauſe then that Tiglath-pelzer aſſailed but a little portion of the kingdome, it is ſaid that the warre which he made is but light in compariſon of that of Salmanazar. He alſo ſaith by the way of the ſea, becauſe Galile was neere the riuer of the Mediterraneum ſea, on the other ſide it was inuironed with the flood Iordan. It is called Galile of the Gentiles, not onely becauſe it was neighbour to Tyre and Sidon, but alſo in regard many nations were mingled there amongſt the Iewes; for after Dauid gaue this countrie to king Hiram, it could neuer be ſo quiet but the Gentiles would alwayes occupie ſome part of it. 1. King. 9. 12.

Verſ. 2. The people that walked in darknes haue ſeene a great light: they that dwelled in the land of the ſhadow of death, vpon them hath the light ſhined.

HE ſpeakes of things to come, and yet notwithſtanding vſeth the time preſent, that in this deſtruction of the Citie, and in the captiuitie and ruin thereof, the people might behold the light of God. The ſumme is then, that euen in the midſt of darknes, yea of death it ſelfe, they were neuertheleſſe to hope, ſeeing God is able ſufficientlie to giue life to his people when they ſhall be thought as good as dead. It ſeemes that S. Matthew in alledging this place turnes it to an other purpoſe: for he ſaith this propheſie was fulfilled when Ieſus Chriſt preached by the ſea ſide, Math. 4. 15. But if we rightlie conſider the Similitude, S. Matthew hath iuſtlie applied this place vnto Chriſt, and hath obſerued the true ſenſe. Although it ſeemes our expoſitors can not tell how to make it hang together: for whereas they ſimplie affirme, that this appertaines to the kingdome of Chriſt, they yeeld no ſufficient reaſon of it, neither doe they ſhew how this agrees to this place. If we will haue the true ſenſe then, we muſt call to mind what hath been ſaid heretofore, namely, that the Prophet in ſpeaking of the returne of this people from the captiuitie of Babylon, preſented not one age or ſeaſon before his view, but comprehended all others, euen to the comming of Chriſt, who brought a full and perfect libertie with him to his people. For the deliuerance from Babylon was as an entrance and beginning of the reſtauration of the Church, not to eſtabliſh it for ſome few yeeres, but till ſuch time as the Meſſiah ſhould come, who brought ſaluation, not to mens bodies only, but alſo to their ſoules. We ſhal finde this maner of ſpeech to be very familiar with Iſaiah, after we haue proceeded further, and ſhall be a little better exerciſed in reading of his propheſie.

The Prophet then hauing ſpoken of the captiuitie of Babylon, which ſhewed a very great calamitie to come, declares that it ſhall yet be more light then that which Iſrael had ſuſteined at the firſt, becauſe the Lord had moderated and limited a certaine end to this calamitie, to wit, the ſpace of 70. yeares, which being paſt, the light of the Lord ſhould ſhine againe vpon them. By this hope of deliuerance then he cheares vp the hearts of ſuch as were caſt downe with feare, to the end they ſhould not be diſcouraged. And thus he hath put a difference betweene the Iewes and the Iſraelites, who had not any certaine hope of ſo neere a deliuerance. For howſoeuer the Prophets had giuen a certaine taſte of the mercie of God to a ſmall number of the faithfull amongſt the people of Iſrael, yet notwithſtanding becauſe the deliuerance of this people was as an ouerplus, and depended vpon the deliuerance of Iudah, the Prophet iuſtlie affirmes that a new light is offred, in as much as God hath determined to redeeme his people. Saint Matthew alſo rightlie ſpreads the beames of this light ouer Galile, and the land of Zabulon. Ierem. 25. 11. 12. and 29. 10.

Darknes and the ſhadow of death.] Heere he compares their exile in Babylon to darknes and death, becauſe thoſe which were deteined therein were poore and miſerable, and were altogether like dead men: as alſo Ezechiel out of their mouth declares, namely, that the dead ſhould riſe out of their graues, Ezech. 37. 11. 12. Their condition then was ſuch, as if no brightnes or ſparkle of light had ſhined vpon them. Yet notwithſtanding he ſhewes that this ſhall be no hinderance at all, that they ſhould enioy the light, and recouer their firſt libertie againe: which libertie he ſtretcheth not to a little ſpace, but euen vnto Chriſt his time, as hath been alreadie ſaid.

And hence we obſerue how ỹ Apoſtles were wont to alledge ỹ teſtimonies of ỹ Prophets, and to ſhew the end and true vſe of them. As S. Paul alledgeth the teſtimonie of Hoſea, I will call them my people which were not my people, Rom. 9. 26. Hoſea 1. 10. Where he appropriates this to the calling of the Gentiles, although it be properlie ſpoken of the Iewes: and ſhewes that it was fulfilled when the Lord did incorporate the Gentiles into his Church. Thus when this people were in this baniſhment and incloſed therein as in a ſepulcher, they differed nothing from the heathen. And in regard they were in one and the ſame condition, it is good reaſon that this teſtimonie ſhould appertaine to the Gentiles as well as to the Iewes. Neither muſt it be re- How the Apoſtles are wont to alledge teſtimonies out of the Prophets.

ferred to an externall miſerie only, but to the ſhadow of eternall death, vntill Chriſt ſhine vpon vs by the doctrine of his word, which is the cauſe why Paul ſaith, Awake thou that ſleepeſt and ſtand vp from the dead, and Chriſt ſhall giue thee light, Epheſ. 5.14. If then we extend the beginning of the deliuerance from the returne out of Babylon vntill the comming of Chriſt, from whom proceeds all bountie and libertie of good things, we ſhall haue the true ſenſe of this place, which otherwiſe hath not been expounded clearely enough by the expoſitours.

Verſ. 3. Thou haſt multiplied the nation and increaſed their ioy: they haue reioyced before thee according to the ioy in harueſt, and as men reioice when they diuide a ſpoile.

THis place is ſomewhat obſcure, as well in regard of it ſelfe, as alſo becauſe of the diuerſities of interpretations: for it ſeemes abſurd to ſay that the ioy was not increaſed, ſeeing he by and by addes, They reioiced. For this cauſe the Iewes ſay that the particle Lo is not negatiue here, as if one letter were put in ſtead of another, to wit Aliph for Kaui as alſo that this is found in the ſcripture, albeit very ſeldome: and this they publiſh, becauſe they can not make the text hang together as they would. Some referre this to Sennacherib, becauſe his ſo great an armie brought him no matter of ioy, but rather of ſorow. Others not amiſſe expound it of the Church: but they giue no reaſon for it, for they thinke the Prophet ſpeakes this becauſe the faithfull are ſubiect to many miſeries and troubles thorowe out their whole life. Others drawe out a ſenſe further from the purpoſe, to wit, that the Gentiles which ſhould increaſe the Church, ſhould not bring any ioy to the Iewes, nor to the auncient Synagogue. But I cannot approue any one of theſe interpretations. And therefore I expound it thus: that euen as in the beginning of the Chapter the Prophet ſaid, the benefit of this redemption ſhould be greater then all the reſt, although it ſeemed not ſo in regard of the ſmall number of thoſe which ſhould returne home into their countrie: ſo now alſo he repeates the ſame compariſon againe: or at the leaſt, another euery way like vnto it: namely, that the grace of God ſhould ſhine much more then it did when he multiplied the people. For if we compare the eſtate of the kingdome of Iudah, before the captiuitie of Babylon, with that which followed after the returne; wee ſhall well perceiue that it gained at that time more than it loſt before.

Exod. 23. 8.

2. King. 19. 35.

There returned but a ſmall handfull of people indeede, in compariſon of the great multitude which had been led captiue thither. Moreouer, they inhabited not freely in their owne countrey, but by way of lone: and they were to pay tribute to the Perſians, ſo as they held not any appearance in a manner of their firſt dignitie. Who would not then haue preferred the flouriſhing eſtate which was in the houſe of Dauid before this? Yet notwithſtanding the Prophet affirmes, that this laſt eſtate, howſoeuer it appeared much leſſe, and more miſerable, is yet neuertheleſſe to bee preferred before the firſt flouriſhing eſtate and glorie of it. Hee ſhewes alſo that there ſhall bee greater ioy then, than when there was abundance of all ſorts of riches and good things: which Aggæ likewiſe witneſſed, to wit, that the beautie of the laſt Temple ſhould be greater than the firſt; although to outward view it ſhould ſeeme farre otherwiſe. It is as much then as if Iſaiah ſhould haue ſaid, There was neuer greater ioy, no not when the multitude of people was much more: for howſoeuer we be few, and a ſmall number, yet notwithſtanding thou haſt ſo reuiued vs by the light wherewith thou haſt ſhined vnto vs, that there was no ioy in the former eſtate comparable to this. For this deliuerance was as an entrance of the true and perfect ſaluation, which was at the laſt brought and offered by Chriſt.

Hagg. 2. 10

Before thee.] His meaning is, that the ioy ſhall not be light nor momentanie. For men often reioyce; but it is with a vaine and a falſe ioy which brings nothing in the end but ſorrow and teares. Now he declares that the roote of this ioy ſhall be ſo ſtedfaſt, as it ſhall neuer periſh nor be mooued. And hereunto appertaines the particle before thee, becauſe there is nothing that glads the hearts of the faithfull more, then when God cauſeth the light of his countenance ſweetely to ſhine vpon them. They are not caried hither and thither with a franticke and blinde ioy, after the manner of the children of this world, but their full and perfect ioy is to repoſe themſelues in the louing fauour of God. It may be alſo that the Prophet alludes to that ſentence which is ſo often found in the bookes of Moſes: Thou ſhalt reioyce before the Lord thy God, Deut. 12. 12. For although hee there ſpeakes of the Tabernacle, yet may this manner of ſpeech be fitly applied to the preſent purpoſe, namely, that the ioy of the godly ſhall not bee prophane, but ſhall ariſe from hence that they know God, and by faith behold him to bee the author of their ſaluation.

The faithfull are not caried away with a blind ioy, as the children of this world are.

Leuit. 23. 40

Others expound it ſomewhat more ſtrictly, as if the faithfull ſhould reioyce before God in their conſciences, becauſe in the world they finde nothing but ſorrow and continuall cauſe of griefe. Now although this be true, yet notwithſtanding wee may gather a leſſe conſtrained ſenſe from the circumſtance of the place, to wit, that the faithfull which ſhould be miraculouſly deliuered, ſhould reioyce with true gladneſſe, becauſe they were aſſured by this deliuerance that God was their father, and therefore might boldly reioyce, as being for euer exempt from all euill, when they ſhall be receiued into his protection. This ſets forth a perpetuall ioy then, as I ſaid ere while.

The ſimilitudes which he addes of the harueſt, and ſpoyles, whereby he amplifies the greatneſſe of this ioye, are cleare enough of themſelues. To conclude, it appeares by this this place, what profit Chriſt brings vnto vs; to wit, a ſtedfaſt & perfect ioy, which can by no meanes whatſoeuer, bee plucked away from vs; no, not although we be aſſailed with waues and ſtormes, yea and preſſed with all manner of anguiſhes. For howſoeuer we be weake and feeble, yet muſt we reioyce and be of good courage: for our ioy conſiſts not in multitudes, neither in riches nor outward appearances; but in a ſpirituall felicitie which wee obtaine by the preaching of the Goſpell.

Ioh. 16.10. What maner of ioy it is which Chriſt brings vs.

Verſ. 4. For the yoke of their burthen, and the ſtaffe of their ſhoulder, and the rod of their oppreſſion haſt thou broken as in the day of Midian.

HE ſhewes the cauſe of this ioy; to wit, that the faithfull being deliuered from an horrible and cruell tyrannie, ſhould eſteeme of this benefit euen as much as if they had been drawne out of the iawes of death. Now to the end this fauour might bee the better illuſtrated, Iſaiah ſets forth the vile and inſupportable ſlauery wherewith the Iewes were oppreſſed: and hereunto belongs this heaping vp of wordes, heauie yoke, rod of the ſhoulder, ſtaffe of the oppreſſor, or, exactor. For although wee bee ouertender and delicate when afflictions preſſe vs; yet notwithſtanding as ſoone as the bitterneſſe is paſt, we by and by forget them. To the end then that this redeemed people might keepe the ſingular benefit of God in remembrance, and in a reuerend regard, the Prophet would haue them to conſider how hard and lamentable this ſeruitude was, wherein they groned and bowed vnderneath heauy burthens, when as the ſtaffe neuer moued from off their ſhoulders, being preſſed by a Tyrant which inſulted ouer them: for which cauſe they might well reioyce and bee glad of their deliuerance.

And hee yet extolles the excellency of this fauour by another circumſtance, in regard that God did openly diſplay his arme and power in their deliuerance, euen as it were from heauen it ſelfe. And therefore he brings in an antient and memorable example: that as God had in times paſt diſcomforted the hoſt of the Midianites, by a wonderfull and incredible meanes, without the ſtrength and ſuccours of men: ſo now alſo he would diſplay euen the very ſame power; to wit, that he will deliuer his people from vnder that tyrannie which ſhall oppreſſe them, without the helpe of any man: euen then, when none of the poore Iewes ſhall dare to lift vp their finger (as they ſay.) We muſt alſo obſerue, that God ſo ſuccours his, that ſometimes hee ſerues himſelfe of ordinary meanes: but when hee ſees that theſe meanes will bee hurtfull vnto men, and hinder them from looking to the hand of their deliuerer; he then works alone and by miracles, leſt any thing ſhould ouer ſhadow or hinder men from the manifeſt beholding and knowledge of his power. Thus the arme of the Lord appeared from heauen in this victorie of Gedeon, where the enemies were cut off without any helpe of mans hand at all. For what had Gedeon but a noiſe of broken pitchers, with which hee ſhould very hardly haue ſcarred a ſort of poore miſe: hee had a little handfulof mé againſt a great hoſt: and in ſtead of all ſorts of weapons, they had vaine and ridiculous ſcarcrowes.

Why God deferres ſometimes to ſuccour vs by meanes.

Iudg. 7.16. 19.21.

For this cauſe he compares the future deliuerance of the people to this other deliuerance, and ſheweth that the manifeſt power and vertue of God ſhall bee knowne vnto all in this laſt, as well as in the victorie of Gedeon. Some expound this place ſimply of the Law; which may well be called a heauie yoke & a ſtaffe burthening the ſhoulder. But this expoſition agrees not with the text; For ſo it might ſeeme that the Prophet ſpake from the purpoſe, which were as much as to offer violence (as it were) to this place. Let vs hold the meane then whereof I haue ſpoken before; to wit, that God hauing brought his people out of Babylon, cõtinued on this benefit ſtil euen vnto the comming of Chriſt. This is the ſenſe then; Thou haſt taken off theſe burthens, vnder which thy people was vniuſtly and cruelly oppreſſed. 1

Others apply this to the deſtruction of Ieruſalem, which was vnder Veſpaſian. But they haue no ground for it. Almoſt all the Iewes referre this to Hezechies, when the Lord deliuered the Citie from the ſiege of Senacherib, and did cut off his hoſt. But this interpretation cannot agree, becauſe Hezechias raigned not tyrannically ouer the Iewes. Moreouer, the Lord deliuered his people then out of the danger, and from the feare wherein they were, and not out of any ſeruitude. Whence it appeares, that the Prophet looked further off; and that our expoſition is both true, and ſutes beſt with the text. 2 3 2. Kin. 19. 35. Chap. 38.36

Verſ. 5. Surely euery battell of the warriour is with noiſe, and with tumbling of garments in blood: but this ſhall bee with burning and deuouring with fire.

* Or, Although. * Yea.

ALmoſt all the expoſitours agree in this, that Iſaiah meant to oppoſe all other victories to that which God ſhould giue vnto his people. For other conquerours obtaine victorie in ouerthrowing their enemies: but here the Lord ſhall ouercome by his immediate hand. He expounds this ſpeech then, As in the day of Madian, more fully. The Lord ſaith, hee ſhall not vſe many mens helpe in this worke: but ſhall winne the victory from heauen. Now when God workes thus himſelfe alone, hauing reiected all impediments, wee can cleerely diſcerne that he is the author of our life and ſaluation. Seeing alſo there is an oppoſition which ſhewes the difference betweene the common manner of warfare, and the miracle of deliuerance, the coniunction vau, which is in the midſt of the verſe, ſhould be reſolued into a particle aduerſatiue: as if he ſhould ſay; Enemies are wont to bee put to flight by a furious fight: but God will worke otherwiſe, becauſe hee will cut off the Verſe 4.

enemies of his Church, as if he shot forth his lightnings, and should send downe fire from heauen vpon them. Wee may well receiue their opinion who expound it, With a breath; namely, that all warriours shal be astonished, and, In burning of fire. But the first sense agrees best, and is confirmed euen by the Prophets owne words. It appeares also that the Prophet speakes not here onely of that deliuerance which the people receiued vnder Cyrus, who gaue them libertie to returne into their Country; but wee must apply these things also to the kingdome of Christ.

Vers. 6. For vnto vs a childe is borne, and vnto vs a sonne is giuen, and the gouernment is vpon his shoulder: and hee shall call his name Wonderfull, Counseller, The mighty God, The euerlasting father, The Prince of peace.

*...ncy. Or, his name shall be called. *Or, of the world.

ISaiah shewes now the finall cause, wherefore this deliuerance was to bee preferred before all other benefits of God; because hee will not onely bring his people out of captiuitie, but will also establish Christ in his royall throne; vnder whose Kingdome there shall be seene a soueraigne and an eternall felicitie. And thus he shewes that this deliuerance shall be no temporary or perishable benefit, seeing hee comprehends the whole time wherein the Church should be preserued vntill the comming of Christ. Neither is it any meruaile if the Prophet passeth forthwith from the returne of the antient people, to the full & whole restauration of the Church, which notwithstanding should not come to passe many ages after. For we haue said heretofore in the seuenth Chapter, verse 14. that all the promises of saluation are grounded vpon the Mediator, for whose sake onely God is mercifull vnto vs: and therefore the Prophets were often wont to propound this pledge and earnest penny, as oft as they would encourage the faithfull, and raise them vp to a comfortable expectation of deliuerance. And thus it came to passe, that the returne from the captiuity of Babylon, was a beginning of that restauratiõ of the Church, which in conclusion happened in the perfection thereof; to wit, when Christ appeared: in regard whereof, there is no absurditie in this so continuall a progresse of time. And therefore Isaiah teacheth, that they were not to stay their mindes in the beholding of the present benefit, but to consider the end, and thereunto to referre all these things: as if they should haue said; Our happinesse consists in our deliuerance from death; not to leade our liues onely in the land of Canaan; but rather that we should aspire to the kingdome of heauen.

2. Cor. 1. 20. All the promises of saluation grounded vpon the Mediator.

This place admonisheth vs, that we should not swallow vp the benefits which wee receiue from God, so as wee should forthwith put them to forgetfulnesse; but ought rather to lift vp our mindes vnto Christ: for otherwise it will bee but a flashing and vaine ioy; because such benefits will not make vs taste the sweetenesse of the loue which God our Father beares vs, vnlesse his free election ratified in Iesus Christ goes before. Lastly, the Prophet would not haue this people to rest in the pleasure of that one outward and transitory deliuerance, which they obtained; but that they should consider the end thereof; to wit, the conseruation of the Church vntill such time as Christ the onely Sauiour and redeemer should appeare. For hee it is who ought to bee the matter and end of all our ioy.

To rest in the enioying of outward benefits, without hauing an eye vnto Christ, will proue but a vanishing ioy in the end.

A childe is borne to vs.] The Iewes doe impudently wrest this place: for they expound it of Hezekias; who was born notwithstanding before this prophesie was published. But hee here speakes as of a new and rare matter; yea, which more is, it is a promise to confirme the faithfull in the hope of a thing to come; whence wee may truely gather, that such a child is here spoken of as should be borne afterward. He is also called the Sonne of God. I deny not but the name of Sonne stretcheth very far in the Hebrue tongue, but it is when some other word is ioyned therewithall. Euery man is the sonne of his Father: those who haue attained to the age of an hundreth yeeres, are called Sonnes of an hundreth yeeres: the wicked are called Sonnes of iniquitie: those which are blessed, Sonnes of blessing. Heretofore in the fifth chapter, verse 1. Isaiah called the fruitfull hill, the Sonne of the Oliue. But this word Sonne by it selfe, can be vnderstoode of none but of the Sonne of God. And here it is attributed vnto Christ by way of excellencie, to the end we might know that by this marke he is separated from all other men. Neither is there any doubt but the Prophet had respect to that famous Propheſie which was so often in the mouthes of all; I will be his Father, and he shall be my Sonne, Psalm. 86. 27. as it is said in the second Psalme, Thou art my Sonne, this day haue I begotten thee. For had it not been a thing commonly knowne, that the Messias should be the sonne of God, the Prophet had vnaptly and to little or no purpose mentioned the name of Sonne barely and simplie. This title therefore depends vpon the Propheſie before going: from whence the Apostle concludes, that Christ is more excellent then all the Angels, and is exalted farre aboue them, Heb. 1. 5.

2. Sam. 7. 14.

Moreouer, although Christ should be contemptible in the person of a little child, yet notwithstanding his dignitie is adorned with the title of Sonne. I confesse indeede that he might also haue been called the Sonne of Dauid: but it is better referred vnto God. Now the other titles following (we know) doe in no sort belong to Hezekias. And I will hereafter refute at large the cauils wherewith the Iewes arme themselues to corrupt this place. Let them barke as long as they will, yet is the thing cleare and most apparent vnto all such as will iudge thereof peaceably, and with sound iudgement. There is also great weight in this which he addes, that this sonne is giuen to the people: to the end the Iewes might know their their ſaluation, and alſo the ſaluation of the whole Church was incloſed in the perſon of Chriſt. And this gift is one of the principall articles of our faith, for the birth of Ieſus Chriſt ſhould little auaile vs vnleſſe hee were giuen vnto vs. Now in the verſes following, Iſaiah ſhewes what this child, and his condition ſhall be.

Chriſts birth ſhould little auaile vs vnleſſe the Father had giuen him vnto vs.

His gouernment is laid vpon his ſhoulders.] It is vtterlie friuolous to thinke (as many do) that the Prophet alludes to the Croſſe of Chriſt. He bare his Croſſe vpon his ſhoulders, and thereon triumphed gloriouſlie ouer ỹ prince of the world. But ſeeing it is heere ſaid, That the gouernment is laid vpon his ſhoulders, in the ſame ſenſe as it is ſaid, that the key of the houſe of Dauid is laid vpon the ſhoulders of Eliakim, as we ſhall ſee in the 22. Chapter, we haue no need to coine new inuentions without a foundation. Me thinks heere is rather a cloſe oppoſition betweene the gouernment which the redeemer ſhould beare vpon his ſhoulders, and the yoke which was mentioned before, verſe 4. wherewith the tyrants oppreſſed the poore captiues. This expoſition agrees well, and is not ſubiect to any cauill whatſoeuer. The Prophet ſhewes then that the Meſſiah ſhall in nothing reſemble thoſe fooliſh kings who giue themſelues to laſciuiouſnes, neuer taking thought for the diſcharge of their duties, for he ſhall be ſtrong and mightie to vndergoe the burthen impoſed vpon him. Thus he extolles the maieſtie and excellencie of Chriſt, becauſe he ſhall obteine honor and authoritie by his owne power, and ſhall not execute his office with his fingers ends only, but with his whole ſtrength.

Iohn 19. 17. 18.

His name ſhall be.] Although the verbe be of the actiue ſignification, yet notwithſtanding becauſe it is taken indefinitlie, I haue been bold to render it in the neuter gender: for it is as much as if the Prophet ſhould haue ſaid in the plurall number, They ſhall call. This maner of ſpeech is in vſe amongſt vs Frenchmen, ſaying, * They ſhall call. For whereas the Iewes referre this vnto God, and reade it thus, Wonderfull, Counſeller, The mightie God, The eternal father, and Prince of peace, ſhall giue him his name; wee ſee eaſily that they do this of ſet purpoſe, and with an affectation of darkning the glorie of Chriſt: for were they not ſo obſtinate as to deſire to ſpoile him of his Deitie, the text would run exceeding well as our men haue turned it. Beſides, what need was there to adorne God with theſe epithites, if the Prophet had only meant to ſay that he ſhould giue the name to Meſſiah? For the epithites which are wont to be giuen to God are either perpetuall, or applied to the matter which ſhall be handled, which we ſee is not ſo in this place. Furthermore, it were a peruerting of order, to put the name of God in the middeſt of diuers epithites, but it ſhould rather be put before the verb Shall call, to wit, The mightie God ſhall call, &c. Moreouer, I ſee not how the name of Counſeller, can ſimplie agree vnto God: for it muſt be referred to thoſe which are aſſiſtants or counſellers to kings, or ſome others.

* On appellera.

If any cauiller will yet reſt himſelfe too obſtinately in this wrangling of the Rabbins, he ſhall do nothing elſe but manifeſt his impudencie. Let vs follow that which is plaine and cleare.

Wonderfull.] We muſt note, that theſe titles be no vaine things, but fitlie applied to the preſent occaſion: for the Prophet teacheth what a one Chriſt ſhall ſhew himſelfe to be towards the faithfull. Now he diſputes not of his incomprehenſible eſſence, but extols his vertues, whereof we ſhal haue experience by faith. Which we ought ſo much ỹ more to keepe in mind, becauſe men for the moſt part content themſelues with the bare name of Chriſt, without conſideration of his vertue and efficacie; the which indeed we ought euermore chiefly & principallie to weigh and conſider. In the firſt epithite he prepares the minds of the faithfull to the conſideration of a very rare thing, to wit, that they ſhould expect ſome more excellent and greater matter from Chriſt, then that which we ſee in the courſe of Gods ordinarie workes. As if he ſhould ſay, There are ineſtimable treaſures, & wonderfull things hidden in Chriſt. And the very truth is, that his redemption farre ſurpaſſeth the worke of the creation of heauen and earth. So then the ſumme is, that the grace which God hath manifeſted in Chriſt is more excellent then all other miracles.

1. Wonderfull. These titles giuen to Chriſt be no vaine things.

Men are wont to content themſelues with the bare name of Chriſt, without conſideration of his power.

The ſecond epithite ſignifies, that the redeemer ſhall come adorned and decked with all wiſedome. But heere we muſt call that to mind which I haue touched before, namely, that the Prophet diſputes not in this place of the hidden and ſecret eſſence of Chriſt, but of that vertue which he manifeſted towards vs. He calles him not Counſeller then becauſe he knowes and vnderſtands all his Fathers ſecrets, but rather in regard he iſſued out of his Fathers boſome, and therefore performed all the parts of the office of a ſoueraigne and perfect Teacher: ſo as it is not lawfull for vs now to be wiſe further then his Goſpell; to the praiſe whereof alſo this appertaines, for therein the wiſedome of God is fullie contained, as Saint Paul alſo often ſhewes; and therein alſo Ieſus Chriſt manifeſts and declares whatſoeuer is neceſſarie for our ſaluation; and that ſo familiarly, that he ſpeakes no more to his diſciples as vnto ſeruants, but as vnto friends, Iohn 15. 14. 15.

1. Cor. 1. 24. 30. Epheſ. 1. 17. Col. 1. 9.

The mightie God.] El is one of the names of God, which notwithſtanding is deriued from might or power, ſo as ſometimes it is added in ſtead of an epithite. But here we may perceiue it is a proper name, becauſe Iſaiah contents not himſelfe therewith, but hath added the epithite Gibbor, which ſignifies ſtrong. And truly if Chriſt were not God, it were ill done to reioyce in him; for it is written, Curſed is he that truſteth in man, Iere. 17. 5. The maieſtie of God then muſt of neceſſitie ſhine in him, that in him we may place our confidence, becauſe we can not reſt vpon any creature without high ſacriledge. He is called the Mightie God then, for the ſame reaſon that he was heretofore called Immanuel, Chap. 7. 14. For if in Chriſt we only find fleſh,

3. The mightie God.

and

and the nature of man, our reioycing ſhould be friuolous and peruerſe, and the ſtay of our hope ſhould be grounded amiſſe, and without any ſtedfaſtneſſe. But if ſo be he ſhew himſelfe to be a God to vs; yea a mighty God, then may wee boldly and ſecurely repoſe our confidence in him. There is alſo very great reaſon why the Prophet calles him the Mighty and Strong: for we haue to fight againſt the diuel, death, and ſinne; enemies that are farre too mighty and ſtrong for vs to deale withall, who would quickly maſter vs, if wee were not clothed with the inuincible ſtrength of Chriſt. By this epithite then wee are taught that Chriſt is ſtrong enough to vphold our ſaluation, to the end wee ſhould deſire none but him: for he is God, and wil ſhew himſelfe ſtrong for vs. This application is the key of this place, and of others like vnto it; to wit, that we diſtinguiſh betweene the incomprehenſible eſſence of Chriſt, and that power by which he manifeſteth himſelfe vnto vs.

If Chriſt bee God, yea a mighty God, then wee may boldly repoſe our confidence in him. Eph.6.12.

Chriſt is a ſtrong God for vs.

Eternall Father.] The Greeke Tranſlator hath added, To come: and in my iudgement hath rightly expounded it; for it ſets forth the Eternitie: vnleſſe wee had rather ſay, that a perpetuall and continuall order of times and ſeaſons ſhould agree better, leſt the heauenly life, which is yet hidden from vs, ſhould needleſly bee reſtrained to this place. It is true that the Prophet alſo comprehends that; yea, and admoniſheth vs that Chriſt ſhall come to make his elect immortall: but becauſe the faithfull being yet in this world, muſt paſſe from death to life, this time to come, is referred to the eternall eſtate of the Church. The name Father, is taken for Author; becauſe Chriſt maintaines his Church in all ages, and giues immortalitie as to the whole body thereof in generall, ſo to euerie member in particular. Whence wee learne, how fraile and brittle wee are, being out of him. For be it that wee liue very long, according to the manner of men, what ſhall become of this old age at the laſt? Let vs therefore lift vp our mindes to that eternall and bleſſed life, which wee poſſeſſe by faith and hope, although wee ſee it not viſibly with our bodily eyes.

4. Eternall Father.

The Prince of peace.] Behold the laſt epithite; whereby the Prophet declares, that Chriſt ſhall bring full and perfect felicitie with him at his comming; or rather a quiet and bleſſed ſecuritie. For the word peace ſignifies as much oftentimes amongſt the Hebrewes, as proſperitie, in regard that among all bleſſings, none are found better or more deſireable then peace. The ſumme is, that all thoſe who will ſubiect themſelues vnder the gouernement of Chriſt, ſhall leade a quiet & a happy life vnder his obedience. Whence it followes, that where this King raignes not, mens liues are moſt miſerable and full of troubles. But herewithall wee muſt obſerue, that the nature of this peace, and of this kingdome are both alike. For it hath his principall ſeate in the conſciences of men: otherwiſe it muſt needes be that wee ſhould be alwaies in conflicts, and exerciſed through continuall aſſaults. And therefore Iſaiah doth not promiſe an external peace only, but ſuch a peace whereby wee may enter againe into fauour with God, from whom we were vtterly eſtranged and enemies before. Being iuſtified by faith, we haue peace with God, ſaith S. Paul, Rom. 5.1 Now after Chriſt hath quieted our conſciences, this very peace ſhall haue the chiefe place in our hearts, ſo as we ſhall carry our ſelues patiently vnder all afflictions: and beſides, from this fountaine we ſhall ſee outward proſperity to ſtreame downe vnto vs, which is nothing elſe but an effect of the bleſſing of God.

5. Prince of peace.

Phil.4.7. Col.3.15.

Now to the end we may apply this doctrine to our vſe; as oft as wee are vexed with any diffidence, and that all meanes doe faile vs, yea when all things ſeemes in a confuſion before vs, let vs remember that Chriſt is called wonderfull; becauſe hee hath incredible meanes in his hands to aide his withall, and is able by his power to ſurmount farre aboue all that we can imagine. And when we ſhall be deſtitute of counſell, let vs remember that hee is that Counſeller. And if our power and ſtrength doe faile vs, yet let vs remember that he is the mighty God. And when we ſhall ſee new feares euer and anon to terrifie vs, and that many deaths doe enuiron vs on all ſides, let vs reſt and relie vpon his eternitie; whereof hee is not called the Father for nothing. And let vs learne to ſweeten all the miſeries of this world euen by this remedie. And if it fall out that wee bee toſſed vp and downe with diuers tempeſts, and that Satan labours to diſquiet our conſciences, let vs remember that Chriſt is the Prince of peace, who can eaſily quiet all our troubles. And thus theſe epithites ſhall confirme vs more and more in the faith of Chriſt, and ſhall fortifie vs againſt Satan and hell it ſelfe.

1. Wonderfull.
2. Counſeller.
3. The mighty God.
4. The eternall Father.
5. Prince of peace.

Verſ. 7. The increaſe of his gouernment and peace ſhall haue none end: hee ſhall ſit vpon the throne of Dauid, and vpon his kingdome, to order it and to eſtabliſh it with iudgement and with iuſtice, from hence forth euen for euer: the zeale of the Lord of hoſts will performe this.

HE here begins to expound and confirme that which he had ſaid before, where he called Chriſt The Prince of peace; to wit, that his gouernment muſt endure for euer, and that there ſhall be no end of his dominion, nor of his peace; which alſo was repeated by Daniel. The Angell Gabriel in like manner had reſpect hereunto when he brought the meſſage to the Virgin; or rather hee expounded this place, becauſe it can bee vnderſtood of none but of Chriſt. He ſhall raigne, ſaith he, ouer the houſe of Iacob for euer, and of his Kingdome there ſhall be none end. Luke 1.33. Now wee ſee by experience, that the greateſt dominions in the world, doe quickly fall to the ground through ſudden mutations, no leſſe then if they were built vpon yce. We may alſo know both by hiſtories and examples of things which fall out euery day, how variable and vnſtable vnſtable earthly kingdomes are. There is none but this gouernment onely then, which is immutable and eternall.

Earthly kingdomes vnſtable, Chriſts kingdome eternall.

Now this ſpreading and perpetuitie whereof Iſaiah here ſpeakes, containes two members: for it referres it ſelfe as well to the time, as to the ſtate thereof. Now albeit the ſtate of Chriſts Kingdome be ſuch, as it ſeemes euer & anon likely to periſh: yet notwithſtanding God contents not himſelfe onely to defend and keepe it, but doth alſo enlarge the bounds thereof farre and wide; and then vpholds it, and cauſeth it to ſtand faſt for euer and euer. Which we are diligently to note, to the end the continual aſſaults wherewith the Church is aſſailed, doe not ſhake our faith; becauſe we are here aſſured, that amidſt theſe furious threats, yea amidſt the very ſwords of the enemies, the Kingdome of Chriſt ſhall ſtand ſtedfaſt by the inuincible power of God: ſo as in deſpite of the whole world, it ſhall flouriſh for euer. Indeede we muſt not iudge of the ſtedfaſtneſſe thereof by the appearance of worldly things, but by the promiſe; which makes vs certaine of the eternity and continuall increaſings of this kingdome.

We muſt not iudge of the ſtedfaſtneſſe of Chriſts Kingdome by worldly things.

The eternitie of peace is added to the gouernment, and not without cauſe, ſeeing the one cannot be ſeparate from the other: adde alſo that it ſhould be impoſſible for Chriſt to be a King, but by meanes thereof hee muſt hold his ſubiects in a happy and quiet peace vnder him, and alſo inrich them with all manner of bleſſings. But in regard they are ſubiect daily to infinite ſorts of troubles, bearing many hard brunts, yea tremble and are preſſed with feares and perplexities; therefore they ought to apprehend this peace of Chriſt, which hath the chiefe ſeat in the heart: to the end they may continue ſafe and ſound, yea and may ſtand faſt in the midſt of the ſhakings of this whole world.

Whereas the letter mem, placed in the word Lemarbeh, is cloſe, contrary to the common maner of the writing of the Hebrewes; ſome thinke it ſignifies the bondage wherein the Iewes ſhould bee till the comming of Chriſt. Others thinke that by this ſigne, this people were excluded out of the fellowſhip of the kingdome, becauſe of their diſloyaltie: and for mine owne part I reiect none of theſe expoſitions. But yet can wee ſcarcely affirme that the Prophet wrote thus; notwithſtanding becauſe it hath been giuen vs from hand to hand, and that the Rabbines are ſuch diligent obſeruers euen of the leaſt pricke or point, wee cannot thinke that this was done vnaduiſedly.

If we grant that the Prophet wrote thus of ſet purpoſe, mee thinks it is an aduertiſement very profitable to the faithful, leſt they ſhould imagine that the Kingdome of Chriſt was to flouriſh in outward pompe; alſo leſt hereupon they ſhould forge any carnall triumphs through a vaine hope; but might rather bee aſſured onely amidſt ſo many afflictions, that the Kingdome of Chriſt ſhould grow, no man perceiuing how; becauſe they had a promiſe thereof made vnto them.

Vpon the throne of Dauid.] Becauſe the Lord had promiſed Dauid that the redeemer ſhould be borne of his ſeede, and that the kingdome of Dauid was nothing but a little ſhadow of a more perfect and happy eſtate which God had determined to eſtabliſh by the hand of his Sonne, the Prophets are accuſtomed to call Chriſt the Sonne of Dauid; to the end they might bring the people backe to the remembrance of this ſo memorable a miracle. For howſoeuer the name of ſo holy and renowned a King was for iuſt cauſe pretious and honourable; yet notwithſtanding the faithfull much more eſteemed the promiſe touching the reſtoring of ſaluation which was promiſed vnto Dauid; yea and the very remembrance of this propheeie was famous amongſt all; ſo as there was none, no not the ſimpleſt which did not reuerence it, being aſſuredly perſwaded of the truth of it. I will not heape vp together all the teſtimonies wherein the Prophets promiſe the afflicted that they ſhall be reſtored in the perſon of Dauid, or of his Sonne. For they ſometimes ſay, that Dauid ſhould be King, who yet notwithſtanding was dead long time before. So Iſaiah in this place ſhewes that hee propounds nothing of his owne head, but onely refreſheth their memories with the conſideration of that which God had in times paſt promiſed touching the eternitie of this Kingdome. By the way then, hee toucheth that which Amos had handled more fully; to wit, that the throne of Chriſt which had been ouerthrowne for a time, ſhould be ſet vp againe, Amos 9.11.

2. Sam. 7.12, 13.

Ier. 23.5. & 33.15.

Ier. 30.9. Ezech 34. 23, 24. & 37.24. Hoſea 3.5.

Iſaiah alſo deſcribes the eſtate of this kingdome, but it is vnder a ſimilitude taken from earthly kingdomes. For he ſaith; that Chriſt ſhall be a King, who ſhall order and eſtabliſh his kingdome by iudgement and by iuſtice. Theſe indeede are the two meanes whereby worldly gouernments doe flouriſh and ſtand ſtedfaſt; which on the contrary doe by and by fall to ruine, when they are gouerned by violence and tyranny. Therefore in regard that iuſtice is an excellent defence and fortreſſe of kingdomes and gouernments, and that the felicitie of the whole people depends thereupon; the Prophet by this particular teacheth, that the Kingdome of Chriſt ſhall bee an example and paterne of an excellent gouernement.

Iuſtice the fortreſſe of Kingdomes.

But this iudgement and iuſtice whereof hee heere ſpeakes, appertaines not to outward policie; becauſe wee muſt hold the proportion which is between the kingdome of Chriſt and the conditions of it. Now it being ſpirituall, it is eſtabliſhed by the power of the holy Ghoſt. Laſtly, all this ought to be referred to the inward man; to wit, when we are regenerate of God to be made truely righteous. The outward iuſtice indeede followes forthwith: but it is neceſſary that this renouation of the ſpirit and heart doe goe before. We are none of Chriſts then vnleſſe wee bee giuen to vprightneſſe and equitie, bearing that righteouſneſſe in our hearts, which he hath engraued and fixed there, by his holy Spirit.

Chriſts Kingdome ſpirituall.

We are none of Chriſts vnleſſe we be giuen to vprightneſſe.

Where it is added, from hence forth, it ſeemes it ſhould rather be referred to the perpetuity of iuſtice and doctrine, then to the eternitie of the Kingdome; to the end wee ſhould not thinke his lawes reſemble thoſe of Kings and Princes, which continue in compariſon but three daies, or a very ſmall time, and are ſometimes renued, that a little while after they ſhould come to nothing; but that wee might know how the vertue and power thereof endures for euer. For they are eſtabliſhed as Zachariah ſaith (in his ſong) that wee might ſerue God in holineſſe and righteouſneſſe before him all the daies of our life. For as Chriſts Kingdome is perpetuall, becauſe himſelfe dieth not; ſo alſo iuſtice and iudgement endures for euer, and cannot be changed by any time.

Luke.1 75.
Rom.6.9.

The zeale of the Lord.] By zeale, I vnderſtand a burning affection and care which God will manifeſt in the conſeruation of his Church, by remouing all difficulties and impediments which otherwiſe might hinder the deliuerance of it. For euen as when wee enterpriſe ſome difficult and hard matter, our affection, vehemencie, and ardent deſire ſurmounts all the hinderances which lie in our way to breake off or let our indeuours: ſo Iſaiah ſhewes that God will be inflamed with a rare and ſingular deſire to ſaue his Church, that if the faithfull in their vnderſtandings cannot comprehend the promiſe which hee erewhile made them, yet they ſhould not ceaſe therefore to be of good comfort, becauſe the way and courſe which God holds, is wonderfull and incomprehenſible. Laſtly, hee ſignifies that the Lord will not come with a light and ſlowe arme to deliuer his Church, for hee will alwaies be inflamed with an ineſtimable loue which hee beares to his faithfull ones, and with the care of their ſaluation.

Verſ. 8. The Lord hath ſent a word into Iacob, and it hath lighted vpon Iſrael.

*Or, is fallen.

HEere followes a new prophecie. And as I thinke, this Sermon is diuided from the former, becauſe the Prophet ſpeakes now of the future eſtate of the Kingdome of Iſrael, which was then aduerſarie to the Iewes. Now wee know that the Iewes were terrified with the forces and power of this Kingdome, and not without cauſe: eſpecially when the Iſraelites made a league with the Syrians, becauſe the Iewes were too weake to reſiſt their power. Wherefore for the comfort of the faithfull, hee ſhewes what the eſtate of the Kingdome of Iſrael ſhall be. He takes Iacob and Iſrael for one and the ſame: but this variety hath his elegancie; when hee ſhewes that the wicked ſhall gaine nothing by their deuices, in ſeeking to winde themſelues out of Gods iudgements, and to blot out the remembrance thereof. He alludes to the ſpeech of thoſe, who thinke to eſcape by ſcoffes and taunts, turning whatſoeuer the Prophets doe threaten, vnto ſport and matter of merriment: as if ſome wiſe man would ſtriue to beate backe a tempeſt, by blowing againſt it with his mouth. It is a yeelding of the thing vnto them then by way of derision; as if hee ſhould ſay, You are of opinion that God will bring euery thing to paſſe which hee hath threatned, vpon others: but all the menaces which he pronounceth againſt Iacob, ſhall alſo fall vpon Iſrael.

The verbe To ſend, is taken, To appoint, or ordaine. The particle Beth, ſignifies, into Iacob himſelfe. For the word of God muſt abide and reſt there; becauſe it cannot be, that the ſame ſhould vaniſh away without his fruit. So then he teacheth that in this place, which he will repeate hereafter in other tearmes, My word ſhall not returne to me in vaine: Chap. 55.11. becauſe looke what hee hath once decreed, is neuer publiſhed but it fructifieth. For by the word to fall, he ſhewes the certaine effect and euent of the thing: as if he ſhould ſay, I imagine not, neither doe I foreſhew theſe things out of mine own braine; but it is God which hath ſpoken, who can neither change, nor be deceiued.

Verſ. 9. And all the people ſhall know, euen Ephraim and the inhabitants of Samaria, that ſay in the pride and preſumption of their heart.

BY the word people, I vnderſtand not the Iewes, but rather the Iſraelites: as alſo that herewithall the Prophet looſeth this knot, by naming Ephraim expreſly. He addes Samaria thereunto, which was the capitall citie of this people, or of ỹ ten Tribes; becauſe the ſtrong and beſt furniſhed Cities, which think themſelues out of all danger, are for the moſt part much more proud then others. For they thinke by agreeing with the enemie, to bee alwaies able to eſcape out of danger, although all the reſt of the Country villages be deſtroyed. And therfore Iſaiah threatens, that it alſo ſhall bee enwrapped in the very ſame deſtruction with others. Hee ſaith alſo, that all ſhall feele, that the propheſies which are come out of the mouth of God, ſhal not bee pronounced in vaine. And by the word To know, which is to bee referred to experience it ſelfe, hee priuily taxeth their infidelitie; as if hee ſhould ſay, Becauſe I ſpeake but to deafe eares, and to ſuch as make none account of my admonitions, experience ſhall make you wiſe; but yet too late.

Which ſay.] Heere the Prophet inueighes againſt the obſtinacie and rebellion of this people; who hauing been chaſtiſed many times with the rods of God, and that very ſharpely, were yet notwithſtanding ſo farre off from repentance, that they hardened their hearts more and more, as if they had been made fat with blowes. Truely thoſe who mocke thus proudly at the Lord, cannot bee brought within compaſſe, till they be wholly ouerwhelmed. Now ſuch a conſpiracie doth manifeſtly prouoke God to anger, and that of ſet purpoſe. This is the cauſe why the Prophet ſaith, that this proceeds from pride and preſumption: whence it followes, that it is iuſt with God to apply to hard and knottie wood, hatchets harder then it.

Verſ. 10.

Verſ. 10. The brickes are fallen, but we will build it with hewen ſtones: the wilde figtrees are cut downe, but we will change them into Cedars.

THeſe were the words of the rebellious, and deſpiſers of the calamitie which was befallen them, as though it had bin for their profit; becauſe they take occaſion thereby to decke their houſes and fields the more richly. We will build more ſtately ones (ſay they.) The houſes of bricke are fallen, that we may dwell in excellent palaces. The trees are cut downe; but we will plant them with more fruitfull ones. This vice hath not raigned in one age alone; for wee ſee the like obſtinacie euen now in the world. With how many calamities hath Europe been afflicted within theſe foure hundred yeares? with how many ſcourges hath it been called to repentance? and yet notwithſtanding wee perceiue not that any one of them hath done it any good: but exceſſe contrariwiſe increaſeth day by day, the voluptuous inflame themſelues, mē perſeuere in their vices and wickednesſe with greater boldneſſe then euer before. In a word, it ſeemes that afflictions are euen prouocations to pride and exceſſe: what muſt we looke for then, but to be broken with harder blowes then any of the former?

The ſtate of Europe.

Verſ. 11. Neuertheleſſe, the Lord will raiſe vp the aduerſaries of Reſin againſt him, and ioyne his enemies together.

*Or, gather his, &c.

BEcauſe the Iſraelites were puffed vp with the confederacie which they had with Syria, and thought that all things ſhould fall out according to their wiſh, Iſaiah threatens a ſudden change which ſhould cut off all their hope, and ſhould wholly ouerthrow all their plots. For the Aſſyrians roſe vp ſoone after, and made warre with the Syrians. And Rezin being ſlaine, the eſtate of that kingdome was wholly ouerthrowne. He amplifies the matter when hee addes, he will gather together. For his meaning is, that the Lord will aſſemble and mingle diuers enemies together, whom he will ſend to deſtroy the King of Syria; as indeed the army of that great Monarch of the Aſſyrians was compoſed of diuers nations.

*Or, Syria.

Verſ. 12. Aram before, and the Philiſtims behind, and they ſhall deuoure Iſrael with open mouth: yet for all this his wrath is not turned away, but his hand is ſtretched out ſtill.

*Or, with all the mouth.

2. King. 16. 9 THe Prophet ſhewes what this change ſhall be, and what ſhall come to paſſe after the death of Rezin, who banded himſelfe with Iſrael againſt Iudah: to wit, that whereas 2. King. 17. 3 the Syrians were friends to the Iſraelites before, they ſhould preſently after the death of their King, become their enemies, and make warre vpon them, which alſo came to paſſe. And this is his meaning when he ſaith that Syria ſhall be before. For their expoſition who by Syria, vnderſtand them of the Eaſt; and by the Philiſtims them of the Weſt, is not agreeablee. The plaineſt ſenſe is, that the enemies ſhall nuiron and aſſaile them on all ſides, becau e thoſe whom they thought to enioy as faithfull friends, ſhould riſe vp round about them to ouerthrow them. Where he ſaith before, and behind, it anſwers to the common maner of ſpeech, ſo as we need not ſeeke a new or ſtrange expoſition. Let vs learne by this example what it is to put confidence in the power of men, and in confederacies with Princes, and eſpeciallie when we wax ſecure, being ſnared with vnlawfull bands: for whē the Lord will, thoſe who before were on our ſide, in an inſtant ſhall band themſelues together for our deſtruction: and the remedies which we ſhall take to be profitable, ſhal be hurtfull vnto vs, and ſhall compaſſe vs round before, and behind. We muſt alſo obſerue, ỳ God manifeſts not his plagues all at once, but when we ruſh againſt him obſtinately, and prouoke him more and more, then he augments and redoubles alſo his blowes, and ſends new chaſtiſements, to the end he may tame and breake our rebellion and ſtubbornes. With all the mouth, ſignifies the ſame which wee haue in our common phraſe of ſpeech, With full mouth, as if he ſhould ſay, Iſrael ſhall be expoſed as an open pray vnto his enemies, ſo as he ſhall be deuoured with open mouth, as of the Syrians; ſo of the Philiſtims.

What it is to put confidēce in confederacies.

Yet for all this.] This is a harder ſentence then all the reſt, and ought to haue terrified the vnbeleeuers more then any thing whatſoeuer. For although they haue ſuffred many puniſhments, yet are they not at an end: he hath ſtill new rods readie prepared againe for them, becauſe by going on in their rebellion they draw the wrath of God more and more downe vpon them. For men take occaſion to become vtterlie obſtinate and to ouerflow in all euill whilſt they ſuffer but ſome light puniſhment, thinking they ſhall ſuffer no more, and ſo become the more ſtiffenecked. They alſo perſwade themſelues they ſhall be deliuered from the iudgement of God, imagining that all his rods are ſpent or worne, ſo as they giue themſelues the bridle, and ſhake off the yoke, as if they were whollie eſcaped out of his hands. For this cauſe Iſaiah threatens that the hand of the Lord is ſtretched forth ſtill, that they ſhould not ſuppoſe they were able to eſcape the ſame.

Now he rather vſeth accuſation, then doctrine, although the threatnings tend alſo to this end that the doctrine may be the better vnderſtood. But becauſe he had to deale with deſperate people who had profited nothing at all for any blowes they had receiued, therfore it is that he ſhewes the end of their calamities is not yet accompliſhed: ſo that although God ſeemed to ceaſe ſtriking for a time, yet notwithſtanding he had not ſpent all his ſcourges, but had his hand ſtill ſtretched out to afflict them with a new plague.

Vers. 13. * For the people turneth not vnto him that smiteth them, neither do they seeke the Lord of hostes.

* Or, but yet.

THey expound this as if the Prophet yeelded a reason why God ceased not to strike them blow vpon blow with new chastisements, to wit, because the people are so obstinate and stifnecked, that they will not come to an acknowledgment of their faults, nor to amendment. For wherefore should God giue place to the obstinate, in whom he sees no repentance? so it might seeme they were stronger then he. This is the cause then why he continues to smite them more sharply. And seeing Israel amended not for any correction whatsoeuer, his destruction was iust: such was their extreme obstinacie, that not so much as any one of them were moued, or turned any whit, although they had been chastised and beaten so often. This forme of chiding is terrible. For when the Lord not only admonisheth vs with words, but pricks vs forward, and constreines vs by his works, namely, by diuers chastisements, and yet we remaine obstinate, not enduring that hee should pluck vs from our wicked delights: is it not a signe of a desperate malice; and can one thinke or speake of a thing more horrible? It is too much when men submit not themselues to his doctrine as soone as it is propounded vnto them: but the sinne is yet greater when they are not moued by any reprehensions; but greatest of all is their sinne when they harden themselues against the rods of God, yea kick and wince, or by their brutishnes inflame the wrath of their Iudge more and more against them: neuer calling themselues to account wherefore they are smitten, nor what it is to which the Lord thereby calles them. When the remedies then profit nothing, what should we thinke, but that the malice of such is become incureable and past all hope of amendment?

Now this reprehension appertaines not to the Israelites only, but to vs also. For the Lord hath alreadie chastised all the world in such wise by diuers plagues and calamities, that there is almost no part thereof free. And yet notwithstanding it seemes that all haue obstinately cõspired against God, in so much that albeit he do his vtmost, yet they are alwaies like themselues, neuer ceasing to goe on still in their leaudnes. The Lord then may iustly take vp this complaint against vs. And the truth is, that he speakes now to vs by his Prophet Isaiah: neither ought we to looke for another Prophet which should threaten new chastisements, seeing our case differeth in nothing from that of the Israelites, being guiltie of the same iniquities with them.

When he saith, that they haue not sought the Lord, he therein expounds the first member of the verse; for God smites, to draw such vnto him as recoile back from him. And yet it seemes notwithstanding that by this meanes he driues men farre off from his presence: but because his propertie is to draw those out of their graues whom we thinke he hath ouerwhelmed with his chastisemẽts, he humbleth poore sinners by fearing them only, to the end they should returne vnto him. And truly the beginning of our conuersion, yea the only rule of good life is, to seeke God. If we seeke any other way, we goe vtterlie awrie. But let vs now see what it is to seeke God, or how we ought to do it. For hypocrites will alwaies alledge this for themselues, that they carefullie humble thẽselues before the Lord to obteine remission of sinnes by prayer, fasting, teares, and other outward shewes of sorrow. But God will be sought farre otherwise, to wit, The Sinner being humbled before him in good earnest, must willinglie receiue the yoke of obedience which before he had shaken off, and whollie imploy himselfe in his seruice, whom he before despised.

How the Lord will be sought.

Vers. 14. Therefore will the Lord cut off from Israel head and taile, branch, and rush in one day.

15. The ancient and the honorable man, he is the head: and the prophet that teacheth lies, he is the taile.

HIs meaning is, that the vengeance of God shall be vniuersall, and that it shall wrap all estates in it: for the whole people was corrupt, and the contagion thereof had so inuaded the whole countrie, that there was nothing whole nor sound amongst them. Now then when impietie hath thus gotten the swinge, men begin to flatter themselues, and euery one thinks to frame goodly excuses when they haue many to beare them companie; and imagine that they haue sufficient reasons to defend themselues withall, when they make comparison of themselues with others. This is the cause then why he denounceth this vengeance against all in generall, because they were all alike infected with a common disease. By branch he vnderstands the mightie and strong: by rush, or reede, the weakest; that is, the people of base estate, who in a maner had no wealth at all. He shewes then, that the wrath of God is readie prepared, which shall spare neither weake nor strong, neither small nor great, because there was none which were pure and cleane from the common contagion of filthinesse.

But in the next verse hee expounds that which he spake allegorically of head and taile, plainely and without figure; and saith, that the ancient and honourable which swayed the common affaires, and had the managing of the Commonwealth, are the heads: to whom he ioynes the false Prophets, which he comprehends vnder the word taile. Now he explaines both the first part of the former verse, making no mention at all of branch and rush. But wee may yeelde a good reason why hee omitted this. For his meaning was to presse them chiefely which sinned most, and thereby drew others to sin also by their example, because they were respected in regard of their estates. Hee brands the Prophets with this name of taile, not that they were abiects and contemptible, as some thinke: but his meaning is to expresse the lowest part of the body.

dy. The magiſtrates and Iudges are in the head or higheſt ranke, becauſe they are promoted to the chiefeſt place: he puts the falſe Prophets in the taile, becauſe they abuſed the people by their cunning and hypocriſie: as if hee compared the one to lyons or beares, and the others to foxes. We are heere admoniſhed not to ſleepe in our vices, although iniquitie raigne in all eſtates; yea although there ſhould not be a man left that were pure and vpright. For by how much the more wickedneſſe increaſeth, ſo much the more will the wrath of God bee kindled both againſt ſmall and great. Which wee ought to take good heede of in this deluge of all miſchiefes which wee ſee at this day; namely, leſt when the wrath of God ſhall once beginne to burne, that all things bee not vtterly conſumed by it.

Verſ. 16. For the leaders of the people cauſe them to erre: and they that are led by them are deuoured.

OThers tranſlate, They which bleſſe thee, or ſpeake bleſſedly: as if hee ſhould ſay, There is no greater peſtilence amongſt people then flatteries, which nouriſh al licentiouſnes of diſſolutions. But yet I will follow that reading which I haue approued of before; where wee met with the very ſame word: Chap. 3. 12. Now his meaning is, that the gouernours and magiſtrates, whoſe office it was to leade and hold the people in good order, and in an honeſt courſe of life, gaue liberty and licence to all to doe what them liſted, ſuffering them to follow vice and wickednesſe; and that in regard thereof, they were worthily eſteemed ſeducers and corrupters: for the corruption flowed from them vpon all the people, as from the head into the members. Magiſtrates and Paſtors are choſen to repreſſe the diſſolutions of people; to ordaine that which is good and right; and eſpecially to maintaine the honour of God. If they contemne theſe things, they are rather to bee eſteemed impoſtors then Paſtors: becauſe they bring in horrible confuſion. And when euery one gouernes as he liſts without any order; what is to be expected but ſome woful euent? Whereas the people bee ſo chaſtiſed for their offences, wee muſt not therefore ſay, that the gouernours ſhould looke for leſſe puniſhment: for they made none account of the charge which was committed vnto them, and in ſo doing, were the cauſe of all thoſe euils.

The duty of Magiſtrates or Miniſters.

When hee addes, that thoſe which are led, are deuoured: although by this particle his meaning is to ſay, that wicked Princes, and thoſe who rule as they liſt, cannot but bring all things to ruine: as alſo becauſe the teachers deceiue and abuſe the people, in ſtead of ſhewing them the right way, becauſe the people periſh through their owne default: yet notwithſtanding he therewithall ſhewes, that neither the one nor the other is to be excuſed: as if the wicked gouernours ſhould ſerue as a couert for their faults, as commonly men are wont to imagine. For if the blind leade the blind, as Ieſus Chriſt ſaith, they ſhall both fall into the ditch, Matth. 15. 14. It being certaine that there was none of them all who was not willingly miſled. And therfore thoſe onely who tooke delight to bee deceiued, were deuoured by the wicked and diſloyall leaders.

Verſ. 17. *Therefore ſhall the Lord haue no pleaſure in their young men, neither will hee haue compaſſion on their fatherleſſe, and of their widowes; for euery one is an hypocrit, and wicked, and euery mouth ſpeaketh folly: yet for all this his wrath is not turned away, but his hand is ſtretched out.

*Or, ſhall not be, &c.

HEere Iſaiah ſhewes more plainely how horrible this vengeance of God ſhall be againſt all eſtates. So farre off is it that the guilty ſhould ſaue themſelues, that euen children, young men and widowes, ſhall not eſcape; although they haue been wont to ſpare ſuch, and that in the cruelleſt warres. Which mercy, hiſtories doe ſhew hath been practiſed euen by the very heathen at the ſacking of Cities. But the Lord ſhewes heere, that he will haue neither reſpect to age nor ſexe. Although yet another ſenſe will not bee amiſſe; to wit, that though the battels depriue many women of their husbands, and children of their fathers; yet that God will not ceaſe for all that to chaſtiſe both widowes, children, and fatherleſſe. But becauſe this ſenſe concernes the principall point very little, I therefore ſtay not my ſelfe in it. Now to the end they ſhould not accuſe God of crueltie, hee therewithall ſhewes good cauſe why hee ought to be thus ſeuere towards them; becauſe they ſhall bee found wicked, and therefore worthy to bee equally caſt headlong into deſtruction, and that by a moſt iuſt ſentence.

Hypocrites.] I minde not to differ from the common opinion touching this word, although Chanaph, ſignifies a wicked one, diſloyall, & corrupt. For it ſeemes he toucheth the chiefe ſpring and fountaine of all euils; ſaying, that there was no ſparke of the true feare of God amongſt them. Hee ſpeakes not of ſome light diſſimulation then, but of an inward contempt which benummes mens conſciences, ſo as they cannot be moued by any admonitions at all: as if hee ſhould ſay, They are wholly ſunke deepe in their rebellion. But for as much as iniquitie drawes the hands, feete, and other parts of the bodie with it, after it hath once gotten poſſeſſion of the vnderſtanding: therefore the Prophet addes, that they are all wicked. In the third place hee affirmes they ouerflowed ſo farre, as without bluſhing to boaſt of their ſins. The word Nebalah, which ſome tranſlate folly, hath oftentimes a larger ſignification among the Hebrewes: for it is taken for villanie, wickednesſe, and frenſie. The Prophet therefore as I thinke, meant to ſay, that they are ſo giuen to iniquitie, that there need none other witnes to be take againſt thé, then their own togues.

Gen. 34. 7. Ioſh. 7. 15.

Yet for all this &c.] He againe repeates this sentence, which indeed ought often to be repeated, because it sufficeth not to be once instructed how grieuous the iudgemẽts of God are against the vngodlie, seeing we easily and quicklie forget them; and thereof it comes that we soone cast off all care and feare. And besides, a false opinion beguiles and blindfolds vs, which is, that after God hath chastised vs only once, we think his power is spent. Wherfore as oft as God corrects vs, it is good we hold vs to this principle, namely, that by ỹ first, God threatens vs with a greater calamitie, vnlesse we repent betimes. And seeing the Lord reiterateth this admonition so oft, let vs learne thereby to set it alwaies before our eies; to wit, that the wrath of God is not yet appeased, although it seemes he hath sharplie corrected mens iniquities. What are we to iudge then when hee giues vs but a fillip and away? as at this day indeed we haue been afflicted; but what is it in regard of these extreme calamities wherewith this people were oppressed; and yet the Prophet threatneth that the Lord prepareth new rods for them? What will become of vs then? Truelie the Lord will doe his office, and will alwaies bee like himselfe. If this terror do not awaken vs, our blockishnesse is intollerable. I haue translated the verbe To turne, in the time to come; to the end the sense might bee the more cleere: for although he speakes as of a thing past, yet notwithstanding he threatens a cõtinual succession of punishments to ỹ rebellious.

The first stroke God giues vs is a forerunner of a greater, vnlesse we preuent the same by timely repentance. See Leuit. 26.18.21. 24.28.

Vers. 18. *For wickednesse burneth as a fire; it deuoureth the briars and the thornes, and will kindle in the thicke places of the forrest: and they shall mount vp like the lifting vp of smoke.

*Or, vnbelicfe.

THe Prophet taxeth the wicked, who make a trade of discharging themselues of their faults to lay them vpon God. For either they seeke starting holes by perswading themselues that they are innocent, or they extenuate their sinnes, if they be conuinced; as if God were too rigorous. And the truth is, that they will neuer confesse God to bee iust in correcting them, vnlesse it bee by constraint: and albeit they dare not excuse themselues openly, yet they fret and grumble inwardly. The Prophet minding to represse such a stubburnnes, compares the calamities to a fire; but he addes, that the impietie of men is the wood and fewell which kindles Gods wrath: as if he should say, They all of them cry out and complaine that the wrath of God burnes fiercely, and yet they consider not in the meane while, that they kindle and enflame the same by their sinnes, as with bellowes, and that these sinnes doe adde new matter daily to this fire: yea euen they themselues burne and consume inwardly in the fire of their iniquities.

That which he saith of the briars and thornes, is as much as if hee had said; that this flame should spread it selfe throughout all the quarters of Iudea. Now he expresseth two things 1 together; to wit, that the chastisements of the wicked did proceede from the iudgement of God; and yet that the fault is wholly in the sinners; to the end they might not mutter as if God had dealt cruelly with them. But his manner of speaking hath an elegant degradation: for experience shewes, that when the fire is kindled in any low place, it increaseth by little and little, and then spreads it selfe more and more, euen till it hath attained the top. Isaiah shewes that in such wise shall the wrath of God be; because it should not inuade the wicked at the very first, but should kindle by little and little, so as at length it should ouerspread farre and wide. In the beginning, the Lord proceeds moderately: if he gaine nothing by touching and going, then he doubles his blowes. But if he see vs altogether indurate, then hee sets his wrath on fire, vtterly to destroy and consume vs, euen as the fire burnes vp a thicke forrest. Lastly, as the other Prophets say; Wee shall finde our selues to be but straw and stubble, when the wrath of God is once kindled. 2 1 2 3 Chap. 33. 11 Chap. 5. 24. Psal. 83. 14. Chap. 40. 24. & 41. 2. & 47. 14

Vers. 19. By the wrath of the Lord of hosts shall the land be darkened, and the people shall be as the meate of the fire: no man shall spare his brother.

HAuing shewed that the cause of all euils proceeds from our selues, to whom they therefore ought to be imputed; hee teacheth by consequence, that God reuengeth himselfe iustly. For seeing men draw miseries and calamities vpon themselues, God permits them not to escape his hands. Not that hee is inclined to crueltie, (for hee is louing and gentle) but because he is iust, and cannot indure the wicked. Hee expresseth the vengeance of God by the similitude of smoke and darkenesse, then which nothing is more heauie and dolefull; because so fearefull a iudgement could not well be expressed, but vnder borrowed speeches. Although it seemes hee alludes to the smoke whereof hee had spoken before. For when a fire is growne to such greatnesse, and burnes so on euery side, the brightnesse must needees be obscured by the darknesse of the smoke.

No man shall spare his brother.] In this last particle, and in the verse following, the Prophet describes by what meanes the Lord will execute his wrath after it shall bee so inflamed. For though wee discerne no enemies which might astonish vs, God can arme one of vs against another to destroy our selues. As if he should haue said, that God will not be much to seeke in bringing his vengeance vpon you which he hath threatned; because although others should let you alone, & not molest you, ye the can ouerthrow you euẽ by ciuill warres. Now it is an horrible thing and monstrous to say, that none should spare his brother: and that euery one shall deuoure his flesh. For a man neuer hated his owne flesh: Ephes. 5. 29. But when God hath blinded vs, what letteth that wee should not destroy one another? And although this bee odious, yet it comes to paſſe euery day. There is neither coniunction of blood, nor of religion, nor of the image of God, which we all beare, that can hold vs in, although euen the very heathen ſometimes deferred to do euill, being bound with nothing elſe but the common band of naturall ſocietie, becauſe they knew that the beaſts themſelues agree together, taking knowledge of one another, not exerciſing crueltie to any of their owne kinde: for one Wolfe will not eate another, neither one Beare another. It is much againſt nature then that men, from whom the name of humanitie proceeds, ſhould be ſo cruell, as to eate one an other; therein ſurpaſſing the rage of wilde beaſts. This euill then can not fall out but by reaſon that God hath blinded them, and giuen them vp vnto a reprobate ſenſe: for when as men are in peace, they thinke themſelues free from all dangers, and feare nothing. But the Lord derides ſuch ſecuritie, and ſhewes, that he will execute his wrath vpon them, euen by their owne hands, which he wil arme and prouoke againſt them.

Gen. 1.27. & 9.6.

Verſ. 20. And he ſhall ſnatch at the right hand, and be hungrie; and he ſhall eate on the left hand, and ſhall not be ſatisfied: euery one ſhall eate the fleſh of his owne arme.

THis is a common ſpeech, To pull and hale on all ſides: and this phraſe ſets forth an inſatiable or cruell auarice. Alſo this deſire of ſnatching pricks men forwards vnto crueltie. Now he expreſſeth their inſatiable deſire with greater vehemencie, in that being prouoked by a blinde crueltie, & poſſeſſed with more then a brutiſh furie, their teeth alſo ſhall be ſet on edge with no leſſe appetite to ſuck the blood of their brethren, then to eate the fleſh that is bought in the ſhambles. This circumſtance greatly aggrauates the ſharpnes of the vengeance, to wit, that the children of Abraham, and the holie poſteritie of the choſen people ſhould ouerflow into ſo horrible a rage. Let vs remember then that it is a token of a fearefull puniſhment of God when brethren band themſelues one againſt an other, with a furious deſire or luſt to teare one another in pieces.

A ſigne of ſome fearfull puniſhment enſuing, whē brethren bite and teare one another.

Verſ. 21. Manaſſeh Ephraim, and Ephraim Manaſſeh, and they both ſhall be againſt Iudah: yet for all this his wrath is not turned away, but his hand is ſtretched out ſtill.

THeſe two Tribes were ſpeciallie linked together, for beſides that they deſcended of one father Abraham; there was yet a neerer coniunction, in that they tooke their originall of one Patriarke Ioſeph, Abrahams great grand-child. Now although they were ſo neere allied, yet notwithſtanding God ſhewes that he will cauſe them to haue ſuch conflicts together, that they ſhall deſtroy each other, euen as if they ſhould deuoure the fleſh of their owne arme; in regard whereof, they ſhould neede no forreine enemies. He addes alſo, that when Manaſſeh and Ephraim haue wearied themſelues in fight, both of them ſhall ioine together and ſet vpon Iuda to deſtroy them alſo. Gen. 41.52.

Yet his wrath.] If any man ſhall ponder in his mind what calamities Iſaiah hath ſet forth; he will, I doubt not, be aſtoniſhed, and wonder very much in himſelfe to ſee that he yet denounceth ſharper puniſhments then the former. But the Lord deales thus with the wicked, neuer ceaſing to afflict them, till he hath whollie ouerwhelmed and rooted them out, becauſe they hauing been often ſummoned to repentance haue refuſed, and ſtill refuſe to be reconciled vnto him. We are not therefore to maruell if plagues after plagues be heaped vpon them, as is alſo declared by Moſes, namely, that he wil yet ſend ſeuen times more puniſhments vpon thoſe which would not come to repētance, leſt they ſhould imagin that after they had been chaſtiſed once or twiſe, all their puniſhments were then at an end. Now when he ſaith, that the hand of God is ſtretched forth ſtill, he meanes, that new rods are ſtill in making, which he hath in a readineſſe to ſmite them withall: for the Lords anger is not like to that of women; but his corrections and wrath go both together, Leuit. 26.18. 21.

THE X. CHAPTER.

ISaiah now preſſeth ỹ people ſomewhat neerer to the quick, as he hath done in the firſt and ſecond Chapters, to the end they might perceiue ỹ they were iuſtlie afflicted. For men will neuer confeſſe they haue deſerued the paines which they indure, vnleſſe they be conſtreined thereunto, and manifeſtlie conuinced. Now although they were ſufficientlie conuinced euen by the former teſtimonies, yet was it needfull to ſpecifie thoſe things againe, by which their hypocriſie might be diſcouered. For men are ſo impudent, that they thinke themſelues ſafe if they can frame ſome excuſe, and in the meane while blaſpheme God wittinglie. He handled them not too ſharplie, neither did he exceed meaſure in accuſing them, no, though in deſpight of them he ſtopped their mouthes, ſeeing they were come to ſuch an impudencie.

Auen and Amal are oftentimes conioined together in the scriptures. Auen signifies vanitie, and iniquitie; but the latter signification agrees best to this place. Amal is as much to say as vexation; and oftentimes that which is the very cause of it, to wit, the wrong or oppression which the rich and mightie oppresse the poore and weake withall, abusing them by their power and authoritie. For euen as he hath heretofore shewed that the welspring of an euill life proceeds from the gouerners themselues, so he now placeth their ill example in the first ranke, to the end they might receiue due punishment for the wickednesses wherof themselues were the cause. Which we ought diligentlie to obserue, because such as are promoted vnto the highest roomes, thinke they are then freed from the common condition of men, so as they ought to yeeld none account of their doings vnto God. Therefore hee shewes that they shall haue this priuiledge before others, euen to be first chastised. Whereas some establish here two orders; and distinguish betweene makers of decrees, and those that write them: I approue not of it. For in generall, without any distinction at all, he taxeth such Princes and magistrates as oppressed the people in such wise, by their vniust and tyrannicall decrees, that their gouernement tended wholly to plaine theeuery. He therefore comprehends all sorts of gouernours and superiours.

Psal.7.14.

Chap.1.10. 22.33.

Vers.2. To keepe backe the poore from iudgement, and to take away the iudgement of the poore of my people, that widdowes may bee their pray, and that they may spoile the fatherlesse.

To keepe backe.] Others translate, To cause them to turne from: but the true sense is, To keepe backe the poore from defending their quarrell: or, To make them lose their suite. This is the iniquitie and oppression which hee mentioned in the former verse; to wit, that they plucked from the poore that right which belonged vnto them. They were defrauded that the rich might be gratified; and being vtterly spoiled of their liuings, they carried nothing away with them from the seate of iustice, but taunts and reproches. Now hee names the poore chiefly, because they are lightly destitute both of mony and other helpes. Whereas the Iudges and Magistrates then ought to haue aided them before the rest; they on the contrary tooke the greater liberty to oppresse and tread them vnder foote with greater ignominie. For those who haue most riches, friends, credit, and fauour, are not so liable to oppression; because they haue weapons in their fists wherewith they may both defend and reuenge themselues. But the Lord saith, hee hath a singular respect vnto the poore, which yet notwithstanding are for the most part despised: yea hee so regards them, that hee will not suffer the wrongs and iniuries which haue been done vnto them to remaine vnpunished. For he hath not taken vp, on him the title of the protecter and defender of the poore for nothing. In him it is then that the poore and weake ought to seek consolation; and therefore to endure their troubles and miseries patiently, because God hath care ouer them, and will not suffer the harme that is done them to goe vnreuenged.

The weakest goes alway to the wall.

The Lord hath taken the protectiō of the poore into his own hands. Exod.22.23 Deut.15.9. & 24.15. Psal.68.6.

The rich and mightie are heere also admonished, that they therefore laugh not in their sleeue, although God deferre their punishment: for bee it that the poore be left destitute of their right through iniustice; yet the Lord will iudge their cause, and take the maintenance of their right into his hands, who were thought to bee destitute of all helpe.

Vers.3. *What will yee doe now in the day of visitation, and of destruction, which shall come from farre? to whom will ye flee for helpe? and where will ye leaue your glory.?

*Or, where will yee be safe.

THe Prophet doth heere sharpely threaten the Princes that slept securely in their sinne. For it is the common custome of such, who are drunken with their greatnesse, proudly to despise al danger. He shewes then, that although God seeme for a while to deferre and winke at their doings; yet notwithstanding the time of his iudgement is prescribed, and shall speedily knocke at their doores ere they be aware. And because they were growne secure by reason of the victorie ouer their enemies; as also because they were backed by the league which they had made with a most puissant nation; therefore the Prophet expresly telles them, that their destruction shall come from farre.

In what sense this word visitation is taken generally.

The word visitation is taken here for iudgement; because God also visits vs two waies: in mercy and iudgement. For he reueales and manifests himselfe and his power vnto vs in them both. First, when in taking pitie vpon vs, he deliuers vs out of the dangers wherein we are plunged. And secondly, when he roots out the wicked, and contemners of his word. The two significations tend to one end; because God manifests not himselfe vnto vs, but by his workes: and we thinke hee hath forsaken vs, vnlesse hee giues vs some signe of his presence. The Scripture applies this word visitation then to our capacitie, because when wee are pressed with afflictions, and the wicked in the meane while let loose the bridle to all dissolutions, it seemes to vs that God is farre off from vs, and that he takes no care of our matters.

And how it is taken in this place.

Visitation therefore in this place must bee taken for iudgement; by which God will take the wicked by the necke, so as they shall not escape him: also that he will oppose himselfe against their boldnesse and rebellion.

Now if there be such horrible iudgements of God heere in this world, how fearefull and terrible will he be when he shall come at the last to iudge all men? For all the examples of chastisements, which now astonish and amaze vs, are but small beginnings of that last vengeance, wherein hee will thunder vpon the the reprobate: and hee alſo reſerues and deferres many things which hee ſeemes to paſſe ouer in ſilence, euen of ſet purpoſe vntil that day. And if the wicked be not able to beare the blowes wherewith he ſmiteth them here below; how much leſſe well they be able to ſuſtaine his fearefull and incomprehenſible Maieſtie, when they muſt come before his tribunall ſeate of glory, at whoſe preſence euen the very Angels are aſtonied?

When he ſaith, from farre; note that wee ought not to waxe ſenſeleſſe whē proſperitie abounds: for all ſuch as extenuate the power of God by a falſe ſecuritie, which rockes them aſleepe in their vices, ſhall feele, that in an inſtant he can, and alſo when he will, ſhake both heauen and earth, euen from the one end thereof to the other.

To whom will ye flee?] He ſhewes how they ſhall reſt vpon their forces in vaine, becauſe they ſhall auaile them nothing at all to reſiſt the hand of God. He alſo ſhewes, that as they haue been cruell towards others, ſo it ſhould be a moſt iuſt recompence, that in their need they ſhould finde ſuccor neither from God nor man: for there ſhall be iudgement without mercie vnto thoſe that ſhew no mercie, Iam. 2. 13. This ſhall happen eſpeciallie to the Iudges, who ought to haue been a refuge for the whole people, becauſe it is their office to defend and maintaine the poore and afflicted: but if in ſtead therof they deſpiſe, betray, or ſpoile thē; is it not good reaſon they ſhould feele how much their crueltie diſpleaſeth God, & that euē in their own deſtructiō?

As touching that which followes, Where will ye leaue your glorie? The expoſitors take it as if Iſaiah ſhould ſay, that they ſhall be depriued of their dignitie. And they thinke the Prophet in deriſion aſks what ſhall become of this their high preheminence, wherewith the great ones haue no leſſe proudly then fooliſhlie aduanced themſelues, when God ſuffered them to take their pleaſure? But becauſe this would be too much conſtrained, I rather thinke that Iſaiah inquires where they will finde hiding places to ſecure their glory. And in this ſenſe I take the word, To leaue, namely, To put in ſafetie: and the two particles anſwers thereunto, To whom will you flee for ſuccor? Where will you finde refuge that you may hide your excellencie? Vnleſſe any had rather retaine the expoſition which I haue put in the margin, becauſe the verbe Azab ſignifies, To aſſure, as well as To leaue. To conclude, if God confound and ouerthrow Princes in this wiſe, that are ſo high exalted, what ſhall become of thoſe that are of baſe condition? There is none then that hath any cauſe to flatter himſelfe: for wee must needs become all as ſtubble, when the wrath of God ſhall be kindled againſt vs.

Pſal. 83. 14. 15.

Verſ. 4. Without me they ſhal fal amōg the bound, they ſhall fall among the ſlaine: yet for all this his wrath is not turned away, but his hand is ſtretched out ſtill.*

* Or, if they fall not.

BEcauſe the ſignification of the Hebrew particle is ambiguous, the expoſitors bring many interpretations. Some take it excluſiuely, as in many other texts of the ſcripture, euen as if he ſhould ſay, They ſhall only fall among the priſoners and ſlaine, becauſe they ſhall be led captiue, or put to death. Others tranſlate, Without me: and if this reading agree, the Prophet ſhewes what the cauſe of their deſtruction is, to wit, they are reuolted from God: and this is the cauſe indeed of all euils, namely, to leaue the fountaine of life, of ſaluation, and ſo conſequently, of all good things. And thus he toucheth the ſottiſhnes of the wicked to the quick, who thought themſelues iolly fellowes when they had forſaken the Lord; euen as if there could not haue befalne them a more deſireable and pleaſant thing, then to be ſeparate farre enough from him: and thus it ſhould be a kind of bitter reproch in regard their calamitie ſhould proceed from no other cauſe then from the abſence of God, whereof they fondlie reioyced. Others thinke this ſhould be a broken or an abrupt maner of ſpeech, to wit, that they ſhould haue no refuge but in hiding themſelues vnder them that were fallen and ſlaine. And alſo it may be a forme of an oth. Now this ſenſe will agree well, that God ſhould ſweare with indignation that he would not pardon one of them, but would deliuer ſome ouer to their enemies, who ſhould cut their throtes; and would cauſe others to be led into captiuitie. This ſentence then ſheweth what deſtruction ſhall befall all thoſe who being admoniſhed by the word of God, repent not. We alſo gather from the text following, that the Prophet threatens them with a fearefull deſtruction; for he repeates that which he hath ſaid alreadie, to wit, that the wrath of God is not yet appeaſed, and that he will finde out greater chaſtiſements then the former, to auenge himſelfe vpon them. This teacheth vs, that there is nothing better then to be touched with true repentance, and in good earneſt to acknowledge our faults betimes, to the end the Lord may ſhew vs mercie.

Verſ. 5. O Aſſur the rod of my wrath! the ſtaffe alſo in their hands is mine indignation.

THat which now followes hath ſuch reference to the denunciation of puniſhment, that yet there is alſo mingled therewithall ſome conſolation to ſweeten the troubles of the faithfull: yea, the ſpeciall drift of the ſpeech is to ſhew, that all the euil which the Aſſyrians ſhall do them is but a ſcourge ſent of God for a time only: and yet after the wicked ſhall haue triumphed with ioy aboue meaſure, it muſt needs come to paſſe that they ſhall be tamed in the end. The Hebrew word Hoi, ſometimes ſignifies a bitter exclamation. Sometimes it is taken as an aduerb of calling; and ſometimes alſo it ſignifies a woe, as indeed the old tranſlator hath turned it: yet it may not be otherwiſe expounded heere, but as if the Lord called the Aſſyrians; or ſpeakes as a man ſighing in himselfe, that he is constrained to chastise his people by them.

And yet whilest I consider better of euerie circumstance, I rather condiscend to this opinion; namely, that the Lord calles the Assyrians heere, as if hee armed them by his edict to make warre. He told the Iewes before that they should come: but hypocrits are so senseless, that they are neuer touched with any feare of God, but when they see his plagues; or rather indeed till they feele them. This is the cause therefore why he now saith, Come: as if the Iudge should call for the executioner, and command him to binde the malefactor; or rather to cut off his head. Thus the Lord calles the Assyrians, to the end he might execute his vengeance by their hands.

Also the staffe. This may bee referred to the Assyrians, and we may resolue it as if it should be a repetition of the same speech, the words onely being a little changed. And yet I so distinguish them; that the Assyrians are called the staffe of Gods wrath; moreouer, that the swords and weapons wherewith they were furnished, are nothing else but the wrath of God himselfe: as if the Prophet should say, God serues himselfe (as it pleaseth him) of the Assyrians, euen as of swords to execute his vengeance withall. Lastly, that they are no otherwise to be feared, but so far forth as God shal display his wrath by their meanes towards the Iewes, although they be furnished with munition. In a word, he shewes that all the force of the enemies shall proceede from the wrath of God, who by a secret instinct shall driue them forward to ouerthrowe this people: for otherwise they could not haue moued so much as one of their fingers. God also pronounceth, that the staffe which the Assyrian beareth, is his indignation; to the end the Iewes might know that the assaults and indeauours of the enemies were gouerned by his prouidence. For I approue not that which others trãslate, In the place, or, In their region: both are too much constrained. To be short, the Lord calles the Assyrians as executioners of his vengeance, to the end hee may punish the sinnes of his people by their hand; and protests, that whatsoeuer they hold in their hands, is his indignation.

1 Now this doctrine hath two vses. First, to terrifie the wicked, and that they might know how God threatens not to roote them out in vaine: as also he shewes how hee will punish them. Which serues much for the awaking of

2 the vnfaithfull, who mocked at all these Sermons and threatnings of the Prophet. Moreouer, this doctrine was not a little profitable, when the people beganne to be afflicted by the Assyrians. For then they easily perceiued that that which the Prophets had foretold, was not spoken in vaine, neither came it to

Obiect. passe at aduenture. But some wil here ask, why he now cals him the staffe of his indignation, seeing he said before, that the Assyrian was the rod of his wrath? For one would thinke hee should speake thus, The Assyrian is my wrath, and the staffe which he beares is mine indig-

Ans. nation. But we are not curiously to stand vpon the word, seeing wee vnderstand the Prophets meaning. Now he calles men the staffe of Gods wrath, because he serues himselfe of them as of a staffe: he saith, that the weapons of men are the wrath of God, because they are not handled at the pleasure of those which beare them, but are testimonies of Gods wrath.

The Prophet then hath spoken aptly, to the end we should not thinke the wicked are carried away with the raines in their necke, whither their appetite shall leade them: but are staied and held short, so as they can doe nothing at all without the will of God. From hence we may gather, that God works by the hands euen of the wicked. But wee must bee wise according to sobrietie, and speake modestly herein: for we ought wisely and iudicially to distinguish betweene the worke of God, and the actions of men. God then works and serues his turne of men three waies. First, in respect that all of vs haue our being and doe moue by him: whence it followes, that all our actions proceed from his power. Secondly, he driues forward, and bowes the wicked by a particular meane, whither it pleaseth him: and although they thinke nothing at all thereon, yet doth hee serue himselfe of them, to the end they may kill and destroy one another; or to the end hee may chastise his people by their hand: and of this kinde doth the Prophet speake in this place. Thirdly, when hee gouernes his elect by the spirit of sanctification, which is peculiar to his chosen onely. Wherefore, bee it that tyrants, spoilers, or others molest vs, bee it that strangers lift themselues vp against vs; yet in the midst of all these confused garboiles, full of all vexations, wee must lift vp our eyes to the hand of God, neuer imagining that any thing falles out by chance.

How God is said to worke by men.

Vers. 6. I will send him to a dissembling nation, and I will giue him a charge against the people of my wrath to take the spoile, and to take the pray, and to tread them vnder feete, like the mire in the streetes.

HE goes on still with the former sentence, wherein he called Ashur the rod of Gods wrath. For euen as a father takes not the rod in hand for nothing, but determines to correct his childe: so the Prophet shewes that the rod of the Lord shall not walke at randon; but is ordained and appointed to chastise this wicked and vnthankfull people. He calles them a dissembling or froward nation; because there was no vprightnesse nor sincerity in them: so then, dissimulation is opposed to integritie, which is the beginning of all vertues: as contrariwise, hypocrisie is the mother of all vices. Moreouer, hee accuseth not the Israelites lightly heere, but reprocheth them with a thing more execrable then any other. And therefore he presently after calles them the people of his indignation. As elsewhere hee saith that the Idumeans are the people of his curse, Chap. 34. 5. But albeit hee hee declares that hee is angrie againſt the Iewes, yet the maner of the Hebrew phraſe hath a farre greater weight; for it imports as much as if the Prophet ſhould ſay, that this people is deſtinate to perdition, becauſe there is nothing elſe in them but matter of wrath. It is certaine that God is neuer angrie, vnleſſe he be prouoked thereunto by our wickednes; but when impietie is come to the higheſt degree, then his vnappeaſable wrath and indignation burneth. Thus he takes away all hope of reconciliation from the hypocrites and contemners, who ceaſed not to heape ſinne vpon ſinne.

Afterwards it is ſaid, he gaue the reines to the rage of the enemies, that they ſhould deuoure and ouerflow into all kinds of pilling and extortions. And yet we muſt not take this as if becauſe the Aſſyrians had commandement from God, they might therefore excuſe themſelues: for God commands after two ſorts, to wit, by his ſecret counſell, whereof men haue no knowledge: ſecondly, he commands by his law, which we ought chiefly to haue regard vnto; that ſo we may anſwere a companie of fantaſticall ſpirits, who diſpute prophanely of the counſell of God, whē they will excuſe their owne and others impietie. Wee muſt then wiſely diſtinguiſh betweene theſe two ſorts of commandements: for ſeeing the Lord declares his will in his law, I ought not to mount vp to his ſecret counſell which he hath hidden from me, but ought rather to bring my ſelfe ſimplie vnder his obedience. If any ſhall alledge that he obeyes God when he plungeth himſelfe into diſſolutions, he is a lyar, and accuſeth God in vaine to be the author of his wickedneſſes, whereof his owne heart knowes himſelfe to be guiltie, for in this reſpect there needs none other witneſſe, but euery mans owne conſcience. I grant that God ſerues his turne of the wicked, but ỹ wicked haue no purpoſe therein to ſerue God. Therefore when he works by the wicked and reprobate, it is a thing accidentall in regard of men: for they haue no intent of ſeruing his will, neither haue they any will thereunto. If therefore they take this pretext, they may be eaſily conuinced as vtter rebels againſt God, ſeeing they only do that which pleaſeth themſelues: for they haue the expreſſe will of God in his law, ſo as they ſeeke it in vaine any where elſe. In regard of them then, they do not the worke of God, but the diuels, becauſe they ſerue their owne luſts. It is certaine that the Aſſyrians did not ſo much as looke for any reward for their paines at Gods hands, but were caried away with their luſts, ambition, and auarice: in the meane while the Lord ordered their endeuors and counſels to another end, which was to them vtterlie vnknowne. Now the ſumme of this place is, that a rare and extraordinarie teſtimonie of Gods vengeance ſhould be manifeſted, when the Aſſyrians ſhould ouerflow with a furious licentiouſnes, becauſe they ſhould be ſent of God not to deale mildlie or moderatelie with his people, but to pill and ſack them as in open warre. He addeth alſo To be trod vnder feete, which is the vttermoſt of all rage, for what can men do more then with ſhame and contempt to ſtamp them vnder feete whom they haue vanquiſhed?

We muſt diſtinguiſh betweene Gods ſecret, and reuealed will.

Anſ.

The wicked do Gods wil, yet it is not with a minde to ſerue him, but their owne luſts.

Verſ. 7. But he thinketh not ſo, neither doth his heart eſteeme it ſo: but he imagineth to cut off and deſtroy not a few nations.

BEcauſe the wicked doe trouble the conſciences of the weake by caſting out the ſome of their rage, as if God had not the power to hold their fierceneſſe and furie ſhort; the Prophet preuents this betimes, and exhorts the faithfull to know, that they are iuſtlie afflicted by a ſecret iudgement of God, although the wicked ouerflow into all diſſolution. So then he ſhewes that which we touched erewhile, namely, that the Aſſyrians ſhall minde nothing leſſe then to ſerue God, and to be executioners of his vengeance: but we ſhall ſee by and by to what end they did it. For ſome might obiect thus: Thou art the Ambaſſador of God, why doeſt thou menace vs with the Aſſyrians? As if belike this furious beaſt would yeeld obedience to the commandement of God. To this he anſwereth, that God is ſuch a wonderfull workeman, that he knoweth how to draw thoſe to do him ſeruice who thinke nothing at all thereon, or which otherwiſe would not obey him. Although (ſaith he) that their endeuors and counſels tend wholie to another end, yet nothing ſhall hinder God, that euen by them he ſhould not execute and fulfill that which he hath ordeined. For many might replie: What a prepoſterous courſe is this? Will God ſubiect his choſen people to profane nations? There is no equitie at all in it, that our eſtate (be we ſinners as we are, in the higheſt degree) ſhould be made worſe then ỹ condition of theeues, who by their wickednes and impietie had deſerued a moſt ſeuere puniſhment. The Prophet declareth then that the Aſſyrians ſhould haue their turne alſo, and ſhould be iuſtlie puniſhed in their time: and yet ought no man to thinke it ſtrange if they afflict, pill, deuoure, & maſſacre others, ſeeing they ſhould not want their recompence.

Beſides, the Prophet comforts the faithfull, and aſſwageth their trouble and perplexitie; ſhewing that God holds the pride of theſe wicked ones ſhort, leſt they ſhould exerciſe whatſoeuer pleaſed them. He teacheth then, that howſoeuer the wicked furiouſlie rage, that God notwithſtanding moderates his owne iudgements from heauen, ſo as he takes a ſpeciall charge of the ſaluation of his Church. And therefore although that Aſſur be inflamed as a cruell beaſt after his pray, yet he commands the faithfull to lift vp their eies vnto God, whoſe counſell is farre remote from this blind furie of the enemie.

Verſ. 8. For hee ſaith, Are not my Princes altogether Kings?

THe Prophet ſhewes the cauſe why the Aſſyrian will not thinke himſelfe to bee the rod rod of God; namely, because hee was so blinded with pride, that he acknowledged not any power aboue his owne. Neither can it otherwise be, that those should in any sort submit themselues vnder the prouidence of God, who resting vpon their greatnesse, attribute this and that vnto their owne forces. For then are wee said to giue the chiefe dominion vnto God, when we beleeue that it is vnpossible to moue the least finger without his will. Contrariwise, whosoeuer thinks himselfe to haue any power of his owne, hee vsurpes Gods power vnto himselfe, with a pride full of sacrilege: as in this place the Prophet describes the insolencie of a profane King in liuely colours, who proudly vaunted as one hauing all things. This especially happens to great Princes; for they are so blinded with abundance of riches, munition, and power, that they hardly can bee brought to thinke themselues men. Of which wee haue too much experience: for what Prince shall we see at this day, who thinks or remembers that he is a man, and subiect to the miseries of this present life? They are so carried away with giddinesse of spirit, that they thinke to attaine to the top of whatsoeuer they haue determined by and by, and that in despite of all impediments whatsoeuer.

Vers. 9. Is not Calno as Carchemish? Is not Hamath like Arpad? Is not Samaria as Damascus?

HEere hee names certaine Cities, although others affirme that they are regions. Notwithstanding it is more probable that they were Cities, or some strong places. Shall is not happen (saith he) alike to the places which I haue not yet subdued, as to these which haue resisted me? He compares Calno, Arpad, and Samaria (which he vanquished afterward) to Carchemish, Hamath, and Damascus, which hee had vanquished before, and saith, that these should not bee stronger then they. Thus haue the wicked been wont to boast and glory in their deeds past; so as they thinke to breake thorow all impediments, as if nothing were able to hinder their counsels and enterprises: and which is yet worse, they thinke to come to the end of all things in despite of God himselfe, and without his knowledge. When we reade this historie, let vs learne not to be proud if wee haue been strong at some time, or if al things haue fallen out according to our wish. For he who hath exalted vs, can quickely also abase and cast vs downe. And if hee reprocheth the Assyrian for his ouer weening, how much more ought they to be reproued, who attribute the praise of holinesse and righteousnesse vnto themselues, as if they could regenerate themselues by their owne proper vertue? For wee need not doubt but such do rob God of his honor, and take that to themselues which is proper vnto him.

We must beware how we waxe proud of our good successes.

For he that hath exalted vs, can soone deiect vs.

Vers. 10. Like as mine hand hath found the kingdomes of the idols, seeing their idols were aboue Ierusalem, and aboue Samaria:

11. Shall not I, as I haue done to Samaria, and to the idols thereof; so doe to Ierusalem, and to the idols thereof?

HEere pride ouerflowes his bankes yet further: for the Assyrian not onely exalts himselfe against men, but euen against God also: yea, against the gods which he worshipped. He boasteth that the gods vnder whose protection other nations were; could not let him that he should not subdue them, and that the God of Ierusalem and Samaria should resist him no more then the former. For infidels are so full of pride, that attributing the victories which they get, to their own forces, they make no bones to exalt themselues against God and all diuine power. They make faire shewes indeed, as if they stood in some awe of their gods; that is to say, of the idols which themselues haue forged; to whom they bow and offer sacrifice; wherby they seeme to confesse, that they hold all their victories of these treen gods: but by and by they offer incense and sacrifice to their owne nets, (as Habacuck saith, speaking of Nebuchadnezzar) Abac. 1. 16. when they brag and glory themselues in their goodly acts, counsels, prudence and industrie. For then they discouer their hypocrisie, then they lay open their secret thoughts, which were hidden before vnder these close fainings: which wee may easily discerne, when they suddenly take that to themselues, which before they seemed to attribute to their god. Wee neede not wonder then if Senacherib exalted himselfe aboue all that is called God; for such is the fruite of impietie.

Idolaters reuerence their owne idols but in shew onely.

Now there is heere a double blasphemie. First, in that hee aduanceth himselfe aboue God, thinking himselfe stronger then he. Besides, in that hee matcheth the true God with the false. Hee shewed his impietie more then enough, when he exalted himself aboue idols: for although idols be nothing; yet in regard that the worshippers of them attribute a certaine vertue and diuinitie vnto them; if they lift vp themselues against such forged gods, they shew themselues contemners of all diuine power. Their own conscience then witnesseth against them, that they bid open defiance to God; neither is there any ignorance which can excuse them, because they perswade themselues that God is inclosed in their images. For be it that this tyrant derided Apollo, or Iupiter; it is certaine that he despised them not simply as idols; but as hauing some diuinitie in them. The other blasphemie of this tyrant was, that hee placed the liuing God in the ranke of the counterfeit gods of the heathen; and was so bold and presumptuous to exalt himselfe against him, as well as against other gods, and to despise the confidence of Israel, as if the vertue and power of God ought not to be esteemed greater then that of the idols.

Idolaters shew themselues contemners of all diuine power, in contemning the gods which themselues haue forged.

Vers. 12.

Verſ. 12. But when the Lord hath accompliſhed all his worke vpon Mount Zion and Ieruſalem, I will viſit the fruit of the proud heart of the King of Aſſur, and his glorious and proud lookes.

HItherto the Prophet hath ſhewed vs what the pride of the Aſſyrian ſhould be, after he had ouercome Iſrael: but now he declares what ſhould befall the Aſſyrian himſelfe, and what the counſell of the Lord ſhall be againſt him. The vnbeleeuers doe all things as if God were not in heauen, or were not able to breake all their enterpriſes. For what meane theſe hauty and proud wordes elſe; My hand hath found the kingdomes of the idols; but that he thought to exalt himſelfe aboue all gods? But God oppoſeth himſelfe here againſt his indeuours; ſo that hauing once ſerued his turne of him, hee will alſo puniſh him. This ſentence containes two members: firſt, Iſaiah ſhewes that God will frame a puniſhment for this wicked and infidell King. Secondly, he ſhewes that the time thereof is not yet come; to the end the faithfull might wait for it with patience.

Now hee teſtifies, that the fit time to bring this to paſſe is, after God ſhall haue chaſtiſed the ſinnes of his Church: as if the Father of a familie would firſt quiet the ſturres which are bred in his owne houſe. This is the drift of this counſell; to wit, that the faithfull ſhould 1 not waxe out of heart, though they ſaw this curſed tyrant to triumph in this ſort, neither yet to deſpaire of their deliuerãce, as if there were no meanes at all to bridle his furie. In a word, God promiſeth, that after he ſhall haue permitted the Aſſyrian to exalt himſelfe beyond meaſure, yet that he will execute iuſtice 2 in the end. Secondly, that it is his office to abate the pride of fleſh, which is ioyned with ſuch an execrable ſacrilege. And therefore the particle Sur, hath great weight; as if hee ſhould ſay, that the haughtineſſe whereinto the Aſſyrian is exalted, ſhall bee no let why the Lord ſhould not pull it downe well enough.

He takes the fruit by way of ſimilitude, becauſe the wicked thinke themſelues bleſſed when they are ſwollen with pride and outrage, euen as if they gathered ſome fruit. He placeth the heart firſt, which is the ſeate of pride, which being ſtuffed with arrogancie, vomits nothing but iniuries and crueltie. Afterwards hee addes the eyes, wherein the inward affection of the heart manifeſts it ſelfe, which by the eye-lids lifted vp, are meſſengers of the vice which is ſecret. Although then that the Aſſyrian lifts vp his creſts, yet God declares, that hee hath meanes in his hand ſuddenly to conuert the glorie of this King into diſhonour and ſhame. Wherefore hee heere comprehends the contempt, diſdaine, pride, and other arrogant behauiours and ſignes of vaine glory; all which are to be ſeene in the proud. Now he brings in God ſpeaking: for that which God pronounceth with his mouth, hath greater vehemencie then if hee ſhould haue ſpoken by the voyce of the Prophet. From hence we are to draw a generall doctrine; namely, that God cannot indure the inſolencie of the proud, but hee muſt needes downe with it; becauſe hee is at perpetuall warre againſt them: Iam. 4. 6. 1. Pet. 5. 5.

Let vs alſo note that this ſentence comes in by way of reſtraint, to the end the Prophet might preuent the ouer great haſtineſſe of men, ſaying, that this ſhall come to paſſe after that the Lord ſhall haue accompliſhed his worke. For as ſoone as we ſee a man proud, wee meruaile how the Lord can ſuffer him. But Iſaiah ſhewes heere that God indeede ſuffereth this tyrant, although hee proudly and fiercely exalts himſelfe, becauſe hee is minded to ſerue his turne of him: and that the time is not yet ſeaſonable wherein the Lord ſhould ſhatter the wicked too pieces; but that they muſt wait with patience. For after he hath afflicted the kingdome of Iudah, as bringing his owne houſhold firſt into order, he will not then be ſlowe nor ſlothfull to puniſh the enemie ſtranger: as fathers who are wont either to caſt away, or breake the rods wherewith they haue beaten their children.

Hee takes the mountaine of Zion, for the Church, by a figure called Synecdoche; to the end that by the Temple and royall Citie, hee might decipher out the whole body, as by the head or principall part.

He expreſly ſaith, all the worke, becauſe wee willingly hold backe the Lord from his worke by our inconſiderate haſtineſſe: yea many times when he hath but euen new begunne. For we are wont to make ſuch wiſhes againſt the reprobate, as it is hard to reſtraine our impatience; vnleſſe God apply himſelfe to our affections in puniſhing them by and by. To abate ſuch heate, the Prophet commands that wee ſhould let God alone, and leaue the fit time free vnto himſelfe when to exerciſe his fatherly chaſtiſements.

We oft times hinder the Lords working by our inconſiderate haſtineſſe.

All the worke then, is taken for a iuſt meaſure. Behold here a very profitable doctrine, and of great conſolation. We ſee the wicked are wonderfull proud, and how they liſt vp themſelues audaciouſly againſt God, as if they were ſtronger then he: alſo how they purſue his doctrine with iniuries and ſlanders; ſo as we can hardly expreſſe the fiercenes of their arrogancie with words. If the Lord ſhould agree to our will, hee ſhould runne by and by and thunder from heauen againſt them, and vtterly roote them out. But his purpoſe is before hee doth this, to correct his Church by them. For he ſpeakes not heere of Egyptians, or Aſſyrians; but of the Iewes, of Zion, of the Temple, his dwelling place, which it pleaſed him to dedicate and conſecrate to his honour.

This word All, hath great emphaſis heere.

Note.

God begins firſt with his owne.

So at this day there are diuers diſeaſes in the Church which the Lord will purge and heale. True it is that he hath alreadie begun: but wee deceiue our ſelues if wee thinke his worke to be now perfect. Hee will not ceaſe then, till he hath ſo tamed vs, that being touched

Note. ched with a true feare of his name, we ſubmit our ſelues vnto him with ſuch modeſtie and teachablenes as is fit. Wherefore wee muſt not maruell if he lets looſe the bridle to Tyrants, and ſuffreth them ſtill to exerciſe their crueltie againſt his Church: for the conſolation is readie, to wit, hauing vſed them as his vaſſals to correct his people, he will viſit their pride and arrogancie. And it is no wonder if God in ſmiting his choſen firſt, do therein declare that he hath a ſpeciall care of their ſaluation.

1. Pet. 4. 17. Iudgement then muſt begin at the houſe of God firſt: and afterwards he proceeds on in judgement againſt ſtrangers, who ſhall be yet more grieuouſlie puniſhed.

Verſ. 13. Becauſe he ſaid, by the power of mine owne hand haue I done it, and by my wiſdome, becauſe I am wiſe, therefore I haue remoued the borders of the people, and haue ſpoiled their treaſures, and haue pulled downe the inhabitants like a valiant man.

THe Prophet doth againe repeat the open blaſphemies which the Aſſyrian would diſgorge; for he attributes all the victories which he obteined to his wiſdome and power. By the ſtrength of his hand, he meanes his armed ſouldiers gathered out of diuers nations; but withall he brags alſo, to haue beene a valiant king: and this is the cuſtome of theſe vaine braggers, to attribute all that to themſelues which is done in their name; although they in the meane while giue themſelues to feaſting and eaſe vnder the ſhadow. Afterwards he boaſts of his wiſdome and warineſſe, as we commonly ſay, I haue been very diſcreet and expert. And no doubt but he adornes his fraudes and deceits with the title of honeſtie, wherewith yet hee had circumuented his neighbours. For behold the craft and cunning of Kings and Princes, euen to trouble and vex the Countrie by indirect meanes, to ſeeke pretence of lawes, to ſow diſcords, and laſtlie, to mingle heauen and earth together (as they ſpeake) by their practiſes.

Fay eſté bien entendu & expert.

When he ſaith, I haue remoued the borders of the people, it is as much to ſay, I haue ſtretched out the bounds of my gouernment, and haue added other countries to mine owne, ſo as there is no bound nor diſtinction. As if we ſhould ſay, that the French King hath taken away the limits of Brittanie, Burgonie, Aquitaine, Prouence, and other regions, in ioyning them to his kingdome. He addes alſo, that no treaſures lay ſo ſecret and hidden which he diſcouered not, & got to himſelfe: as if he ſhould ſay, By my wiſdome I haue drawne all nations round about into my nets; I haue emptied their treaſures; and griped all that was hid into mine hands.

Verſ. 14. And mine hand hath found as a neſt the riches of the people, and as one gathereth egges that are left, ſo haue I gathered all the earth, and there was none to moone the wing, nor to open the mouth, or to whiſper.

HE further addes, that it was no hard matter with him to ouercome Kings, and lay their riches on an heape: and he makes this ỹ more plaine by a ſimilitude; as if he ſhould ſay, If a man ſhould ſeeke a neſt and finde the birds gone, he may take the egges away without any difficultie. For if the birds ſit vpon their egges (as they haue a naturall affection to keepe their neſts) either they wil flie vpon him that would take them away, and peck at him with their billes, or elſe they would indeuour to driue him away by hiſſings and ſhrill cryings. But this Tyrant boaſts that there was no bodie durſt ſo much as open his mouth againſt him, and that by meanes thereof he conquered all kingdomes without any great adoe; and therefore he attributes all theſe things to his wiſdome, acknowledging no prouidence of God at all. Now the Prophet hath ſet forth theſe brags of ſet purpoſe, and that euen by the mouth of the Tyrant himſelfe, to the end he might ſhew that theſe boaſtings of his were ſo many bellowes (as it were) to kindle the wrath of God. For if ſuch a proud caytiue were not to be borne with among men, how much leſſe can the Lord ſuffer or endure ſuch an one?

Simile.

Verſ. 15. Shall the axe boaſt it ſelfe againſt him that heweth therewith? or ſhall the ſaw exalt it ſelfe againſt him that moueth it? as if the rod ſhould lift vp it ſelfe againſt him that taketh it vp, or the ſtaffe ſhould exalt it ſelfe, as if it were no wood.

HEre the Lord doth more apparantlie deride the follie of this outragious Aſſyrian, by which hee promiſeth vnto himſelfe mountaines and wonders. For ſaith the Lord, it is all one, as if the axe or hammer ſhould deſpiſe the hand that holds it, and ſhould brag of their nimblenes: whereas it appeares well enough that theſe are but dead inſtruments, without any proper mouing. But before wee further expound the ſentence at large, I will touch ſomething briefly as concerning the Prophets words. The ſecond member of the verſe is ſomewhat obſcure. True it is that the ſentence is plaine, but there is ſome ambiguitie in the maner of ſpeech, which alſo cauſeth great diuerſitie among the expoſitors. All things being well weyed then, me thinks the ſenſe which I haue giuen ſorts beſt with the text. What? Were it not a monſtrous ſpectacle, if ỹ ſtaffe ſhould exalt it ſelfe againſt him that takes it vp, as if it were no wood? For the particle Eth often ſignifies as much as Againſt; and the Copulatiue Vau is alſo often ſuperfluous. And thus we ſhall haue a cleare expoſition, and ſuch a one as agrees with the Prophets meaning. Heretofore he reproched the king of Aſſur becauſe he attributed the victories which he obteined to his counſels and forces: but now he ſaith, that herein this Tyrant exalted himſelfe againſt God, neither more nor leſſe then if the axe deſpiſing the hand that ruled it, ſhould appropriate the praiſe due to the workeman vnto it ſelfe: or that a ſtaffe ſhould riſe vp againſt him that handleth it, as if it were ſome other thing then wood, which yet is dead and without ſtrength. Whence wee may know that men exalt themſelues againſt God, when they attribute vnto themſelues more then is meete, and that they war not ſo much with men like themſelues, as with the Lord himſelfe. Let vs then reiect theſe proud ſpeeches ſo full of blaſphemies, as; I haue done this by my power; I haue directed this by my wiſedome; I haue brought ſuch a thing to paſſe by my induſtrie. For the Lord is a iealous God, Exod. 20. 5. and cannot abide to giue his glory to another: Iſaiah 42. 8.

Now let vs obſerue theſe compariſons, whereby he likeneth men to inſtruments. But firſt of all we muſt not referre this to the prouidence of God in general, by which all creatures are ordered and gouerned, as ſome doe: who confeſſe indeede, that all are moued of God becauſe they can neither will nor chuſe: but they adde, that euery creature is moued according to his naturall inſtinct, as the Sun, the Moone, the heauens, and ſuch like things. Thus they imagine that man is carried hither and thither by his owne will and free choice; becauſe God doth nothing elſe but continue the power which hee gaue at the beginning. Now their errour tends hereunto, that the frame of the whole world is indeed ſuſtained by the hand of God; yet ſo, that it is not needfully particular mouings ſhold be ordered by his prouidence. And thus they attribute vnto God the office to ſend raine and faire weather, in as much as hee is the creator of nature: and yet neuertheleſſe, that God commands nothing; but the raine is ingendred of the vapors; and faire weather proceedes from ſome other naturall cauſes. Now this confuſed gouernement which they leaue vnto God, is ſcarcely the one thouſand part of the dominion which he attributes to himſelfe. Iſaiah therefore rightly eſtabliſheth him as preſident ouer all actions, ſo as hee diſpoſeth of men according as it pleaſeth him beſt, no leſſe then if they were rods in his hand. He bowes their counſels, ordereth their enterpriſes, and moderates their actions; to the end wee might know that all things depend vpon his prouidence, and not vpon the appetite of the wicked.

Obiect. Yet they reply, that there is no reaſon wherefore men ſhould bee thus called axes and ſwords; and that in the meane while their will, iudgement, and whatſoeuer elſe that diſtinguiſheth them from beaſts, ſhould be taken away from them; ſo as of men we ſhould make trunkes of wood or ſtones. But the anſwer is ready: for although God compares men to ſtones, it followes not therupon that they ſhould be altogether like them. For that which is like, is not the ſame, but agrees in ſome point. For although a ſtaffe cannot moue it ſelfe hither and thither, yet notwithſtanding is fit to giue blowes: ſo the wicked haue ſomething in nature, and yet can they turne themſelues neither one way nor other further then they be ſtill guided by the prouidence and ſecret counſell of God. Thus this fitting or agreement of things, hindereth not that the whole action ſhould not be attributed to God onely.

Anſ. But it is very farre from the purpoſe that ſome doe heere moue that queſtion touching the will of man. For although God be ſaid to hold the counſels of men in his hand, and turnes their enterpriſes and executions to what end it pleaſeth him; doth it therefore follow that they conſult not, or ceaſe to deuiſe this or that? For wee muſt not here imagine any conſtrained will, as if God drew men whether they would or no: but hee rules all their mouings by a wonderfull and an incomprehenſible manner; yet ſo as their owne will remaines vnto them ſtill. Now Iſaiah teacheth chiefly in this place, that all the indeuours of men are vaine, if the Lord giue not an iſſue vnto them: and therefore that the King of Aſſur could haue done nothing, what enterpriſe ſoeuer hee had taken in hand, if God had not giuen him his victories. In regard whereof, hee hath no cauſe to attribute the praiſe of thoſe things to himſelfe, which hee obtained not but by the meanes of God. And this is it which hee confirmes by another ſimilitude, when hee ſaith, that the lifting vp of the ſtaffe, comes not from the nature of wood, but from the will of him which handleth it.

Verſ. 16. Therefore ſhall the Lord God of hoſtes ſend among his fat men leannes, and vnder his glory ſhall he kindle a burning like the burning of fire.

HE goes on ſtill with the former doctrine, ſignifying that God will ſhew the Aſſyrian how hee hath lifted vp himſelfe too too much, and that hee will bring that his arrogancy downe to the ground, wherein he fooliſhly pleaſed himſelfe. For in as much as hee put his truſt in his forces, and in the multitude of his munition, Iſaiah declares that God will take all this away from him; and this vnder the ſimilitude of fat and leane. For by this word fat, hee ſignifies as well riches, as ſtrength of warre: and by the word leane, the want and neede of theſe things, wherein the Aſſyrian truſted too much: as if he ſhould ſay, The Lord will cauſe all the fat and well fed things of the Aſſyrian to waxe leane. It is no new thing to compare proſperitie vnto fatneſſe: for euen as horſes that are ouermuch pampered, become proud, ſo as they are readie to caſt their rider, or wince and fling with their heeles if any offer to come neere them: ſo abundance makes men become wild and cruell, inſomuch that a man cannot maſter them but by bringing downe their fleſh.

The other ſimilitude is yet more proper, to wit, that the fire ſhall be kindled vnder his glorie: for his meaning is, that by how much the more his felicitie increaſed, the hotter ſhould the flame bee which ſhould conſume it. And therein alſo he ſhewes, that the Aſſyrian ſhall be vtterly brought to nothing, euen as if one should plucke vp a tree by the rootes, or should race an house to the very foundation. For if a man should onely loppe off the branches of a tree, it would easilie bring forth other branches: or if the roofe of an house were onely burned, all the other parts would remaine safe and sound. He leaueth nothing then to the Assyrian, but affirmes that hee shall be vtterly consumed. By this word As, or like, which imports a similitude, hee fitly shewes, that the flame shall bee such that it shall consume all the worst of the Assyrian.

Vers. 17. And the light of Israel shall be in fire, and his holy one shall be as a flame, the which shall burne and consume his briars and thornes all in one day.

HE makes an elegant allusion to this burning, wherewith he had threatned the Assyrians. For there are two things in fire, to wit, light, and heate: and as God consumeth his enemies by his heate, so he also inlighteneth his faithfull ones with his light. Now it is well enough knowne that God is sometime called deuouring fire in one place, and light in an other (as Psal.36.9.) in diuers respects, because the power which he sheweth towards the faithfull is not like vnto that which he manifests against the vnfaithfull. In a word, he so threatens the Assyrians with destruction, that therewithall he comforts the faithfull, and that two waies; first, because they shall see that God will be reuenged vpon the iniuries done vnto them: in the second place, being gladded with his light, they shall receiue new strength, and life.

Deut.4.24. Heb.12.29. Chap.10.30 Mich.7.8.

He plainely without any figure sheweth what this light is, when he addeth, his holy one, so as there needs no long exposition, to wit, that he wil defend and keepe this people whom he hath elect and chosen to himselfe as his owne from amongst other nations. He saith then, that the fauor of God which shines vpon Israel, shall be as a fire to deuoure the enemies at the last. In a day, that is to say, it shall burne with a sudden fire. For he signifies a fearefull and vnaccustomed burning, which we commonlie see to befall the wicked euen then when they thinke themselues safest and furthest off from danger. To concude, he shewes that all the forces which they shall oppose, shall be as Tow, which being once set on fire shall quicklie come to nothing.

Vers. 18. And the glorie of his forrest shall come to an end with his fruitfull territorie, from the soule to the flesh: and shall be broken, as the breaking of a standard.

HE continueth still the same similitude of burning, and declareth that the fire shall as well consume the high things as the low, and shall leaue nothing sound: for it may fall out that the fire will seaze vpon the top of a place, and in the meane while it shall leaue y bottome vntouched. The word Carmel, which is put here, is not a proper name, as I thinke, but is rather to be taken for a fat and fruitfull territorie: and there would also be some absurditie in it, to say that Mount Carmel was in the land of Assyria. The sense therefore is, that not only the ruin of the forrests of Assyria drawes neere, but also that the graine or corne shall be consumed by the same fire, because it shall not only run vpon the vpper parts of the land, but shall pearce downe euen into the bottoms. He addes also another similitude taken from man, Euen as a man is composed of body and soule, so also his diseases shall seaze vpon him one by one, till euery part be smitten. For it often falles out that the body will be sick and impotent, and the spirit will be sound, and so on the contrarie; but when both together are smitten, it is very dangerous. By this similitude then he threatens, that nothing shall remaine in good plight to the Assyrians, who are now destinate to destruction, because they shall perish, both soule, and flesh: not that mens soules are mortall, but because God will openly shew his vengeance vpon them. Surely this is very terrible; for the end of corrections are, that the soule might be saued, although the bodie should perish, 1.Cor.5.5. but when the spirit also is destroied with the bodie, can we imagine any thing more miserable? For the flame onelie toucheth the faithfull, but consumes them not, as it doth the vnfaithfull: in whom it findes nothing but fewell fit for the fire.

As the breaking of a standard.] There are here a meeting together in the Hebrew words, which cannot be expressed in another language. But it is the same thing which he hath set before vs in his other similies, to wit, an extreame discomfiture: for when the standard is beaten downe, the whole armie is put to flight. For when enfignes are taken, then there is the greater bloodshed. As when the Historiographers mention any great slaughter, they say that the standards are taken. Now the Prophet threatens not the Assyrians thus in fauour towards them, that they being admonished, might profit thereby, and be touched with true repentance: but it was to comfort the faithfull, to the end they should not thinke the Assyrian should escape vnpunished, when he had exercised his cruelties against the people of God: as also lest they should imagine, that the Lord had forgotten his promise, or that he was not able to bring the enterprises of his enemies to confusion. And in deede, vnlesse the Prophet had speedily preuented the matter this way, many such doubts would haue come into their mindes.

THe Hebrew phrase shewes that there shall be a very small number left; and thus hee onely confirmes the former sentence, to wit, that that there ſhal be ſuch a waſte after the Lord ſhall haue brought the Aſſyrians downe, that the reſidue ſhall be eaſilie told. And yet he goes on further in ſaying, there ſhall be ſo few, that a little child ſhall bee able to tell all that remaine: for we know that little children haue much adoe to count to three or foure. Thus then the kingdome of the Aſſyrians, which in times paſt appeared as a great forreſt, the trees thereof being cut downe and ouerthrowne, ſhall become like to a ſmall number of trees ſcattered a great way off one from another.

Verſ. 20. And it ſhall come to paſſe in that day, that the remnant of Iſrael, and thoſe which ſhall eſcape of the houſe of Iacob, ſhall reſt no more vpon him that ſmote them: for they ſhall reſt vpon the Lord, the holy one of Iſrael in truth.

NOw hee returnes to the choſen people, and deſcribes the fruit of the chaſtiſement which was at hand. For in as much as it is an hard and difficult thing to be moleſted and afflicted, and that wee flee it as much as poſſibly we can: the Lord ſhewes vs the fruit of afflictions, that ſo hauing learned to conſider the end thereof, we might indure them the more cheerefully: as if hee ſhould ſay, I know you would faine that the Aſſyrian were farre off from you, that ſo you might inioy your commodities quietly; but yet think with your ſelues, that this affliction is as neceſſarie for you, as a potion for a ſicke ſtomacke: for you know not the power of God, and therefore withdraw you your affiance from him, to ſet it vpon the wicked. Now what a miſerable thing is it to put the hope of our ſaluation in thoſe that are Gods enemies, and to ſtay our ſelues vpon them which ſeeke nothing but our ouerthrow? For the Iſraelites reſted one while vpon the Aſſyrians; then vpon the Egyptians. And therefore there was no loſſe in leſſening of the people, becauſe this little handfull which remained, learned thereby to put their truſt in God. And in this reſpect alſo wee may know how needefull it was that God ſhould chaſtiſe the Iſraelites.

Now the moderation which he addes, containes an excellent and wonderfull conſolation, to wit, that notwithſtanding this, yet a remnant of the Iewes ſhould remaine, amongſt whom the true ſeruice of God ſhould be reſtored. For the particle In truth, is not ſuperfluous: for before the Lord afflicted thē, they all made profeſſion to be of the true religion, and called vpon God together: but it was in hypocriſie. Iſaiah then deriding this counterfet holineſſe, ſaith, that their hope ſhall bee ſound and ſincere, when they ſhall once bee purged from their fainings and deceits. For although they proudly boaſted themſelues to reſt onely vpon the Lord, yet did they reſt indeede vpon the helpe of the Aſſyrians. When the Aſſyrians therefore ſhould chaſtiſe them, they ſhould then learne to truſt in God only, and to turne away their heart from looking for ſuccours from men. Hence we may gather, that we cannot ſolely reſt our ſelues vpon God, vnleſſe wee wholly plucke away all our truſt from creatures. Becauſe we ought ſo to ſtay vpon him, as to renounce all other things willingly for his ſake. Where this confident truſt is not, there hath truth no place, becauſe the heart is double and parted in twaine.

Verſ. 21. The remnant ſhall turne, the remnant of Iacob to the ſtrong God.

THe remnant ſhall be converted. This is a confirmation of the former ſentence, although hee ſeemes to allude to that place of the ſeuenth Chapter, where the ſonne of Iſaiah was called Shear-iaſhub. For we haue there ſaid, that this name was impoſed vpon him accidentally; to the end hee might be as it were a pledge of that deliuerance to come, of ỹ which his father had propheſied. It was needfull alſo that the Iewes ſhould be confirmed diuers waies, to the end they might bee aſſured that the Lord would bring them backe in the end. Whereunto alſo appertaineth that which he addeth, Vnto the ſtrong God, that is to ſay, to him, whom the people being converted from their reuolt, ſhall acknowledge to be the protector of their ſaluation. For this epithite is attributed vnto God, according to the circumſtance of the place. It ſhould ſeeme that the word אל, which ſignifies God, ſhould chaue xpreſſed his power ſufficiently; but he would alſo adde Gibbor: that is to ſay, Mightie, or Strong, to the end he might ſtirre vp the people to truſt the more confidently in him. For how could it come to paſſe that the people ſhould returne from vnder the Aſſyrians and Egyptians, vnleſſe they were perſwaded that God was al-ſufficient, who ſhould doe the deede? This then is the welſpring of all our euils; to wit, when wee are not reſolued that whatſoeuer wee can wiſh or deſire for our ſaluation, is in God.

Verſ. 22. For though thy people, O Iſrael, were as the ſand of the ſea; yet ſhould but a remnant be ſaued. The conſumption determined ſhall abound in iuſtice.

HEe excludes hypocries from their fooliſh confidence: for it was enough in their conceit for them that they were the children of that holy perſonage Abraham according to the fleſh onely: and vnder this bare and naked pretext of their originall, they would be thought moſt holy. In the meane while he exhorts the faithfull to patience, to the end they might learne with a meeke and quiet ſpirit, to wait for this diſcomfiture and diminution of their multitude; to the end that whē it ſhold come to paſſe, they ſhould not be troubled at it as at ſome new thing. He comforts them then for feare they ſhould not beare ſuch a waſting patiently; becauſe therout the Lord was purpoſed to gather a ſmall remnant at the least. The Hebrew verb signifies To finish, and sometimes also To consume. The latter signification agrees best, for he calles this diminishing of the people, a Consumption, and that Accomplished: and herein hee speakes excessiuely (as they say) for it would be a thousand to one that they were not all destroyed, and therefore a very few should escape.

The name of Israel may be taken here in the genitiue, or in the vocatiue case; so as in this latter sense he should speake to the Patriarke Iacob, or to all the faithful in his name. But seeing ỹ meaning is cleare inough howsoeuer we take it, the matter is of no great moment. It may be taken also in the genitiue. For mine owne part I rather thinke it is a proper name to point out as it were the true and obedient Israelites, for he vtters a vehement speech in turning himselfe to the Patriarke; and God in speaking to him that was dead testifies to the liuing, that that which he had long ago promised, to wit, that the posteritie of Abraham, which should be innumerable as the sand of the sea, should not stretch it selfe to a confused multitude, who had cast off all true godlines, but that there should be an interruption in this degenerate people, till that a little while after they should be renued. Gen. 13. 16. & 22. 17. 28. 14.

He addes also another consolation, to wit, that this little handfull shall abound in iustice. For we are in danger to be out of heart, and to doubt of the mercie of God, when we see the Church of God oppressed with such grieuous calamities, so as it seemes it must fall into ruin. Those who are touched with true repentance know by experience that this is the heauiest temptation of al others. It was needfull therefore that the hearts of the faithfull should be fortified against it, that by considering the fruit which should come vnto them from this discomfiture, they might feele their griefe asswaged: which fruit was this, that thereby the whole earth should be ouerspred with Iustice, euen as a riuer that ouerfloweth. He touched this point before, when he said that this remnant should rest vpon the Lord their God in truth. Vers. 20.

The word Iustice is diuersly expounded. Some referre it to the preaching of the Gospell, because the righteousnes of God is reuealed frō faith to faith by it, as S. Paul saith Rom. 1. 17. Now the Gospell was published throughout the whole world by the ministrie of the Apostles, who were as a small remnant of the Iewes. Others had rather to take it thus, as if this Consumption were a testimonie or witnes of the iustice of God, who did so grieuously chastise his people. But I had rather expound it more generallie thus; This consumption shall suffice to fill the whole earth with Iustice. Those which shall remaine, be they neuer so few, shal yet suffice notwithstanding to cause the riuers to run with iustice, in such wise that the whole world shall be couered therewith.

Vers. 23. For the Lord God of hostes will make a Consumption, and shall plase the bounds in the midst of the earth.

THis repetition doth againe pluck away the meanes from these proud contemners of God wherein they flattered themselues. For it was a thing almost incredible that the Iewes should perish as it were in a moment, who had so many promises made them, and with whom God had contracted a perpetuall couenant: it also seemed to be repugnant to the nature of God, which is immutable. The Prophet threatneth then, that the Lord is the author of this Consumption, to the end he might beate downe the pride of the wicked, who trusting in their present felicitie, thought themselues out of all danger, and being puffed vp with this vaine confidence, laughed at all admonitions and warnings. God, saith he, shall bring your land to a desert, so as in the most florishing part thereof shall be seene a consumption most like vnto a wildernes. For he takes the midst of the earth for the heart of it, that is to say, for the places most strong and best fortified. Many thinke the word Consumption should be an adiectiue: but I had rather affirme that it is a substantiue, according to which sense it is taken in Daniel, and in other places. Gen. 17. 5. Dan. 9. 24. 27.

Saint Paul alledgeth this text, but it is somewhat different in words from these of the Prophet in this place, to wit, according to the vulgar exposition which was then most receiued. Now although the Apostle spake properlie, faithfullie, and according to the Prophets meaning, yet the words which he reciteth being drawne from the Greeke interpretation, haue occasioned many to erre from the true sense of the Prophet. For in regard that the Greeke translator had turned it Logos, that is to say, The word, many haue descanted vpon the Gospel, and thereupon haue affirmed, that the abolishing of the law is here signified, because the Gospel puts an end to the figures and ceremonies: and cōsequētlie, that it is a word abbreuiated & compendious, wherby we are discharged of ỹ yoke of the law vnder which the people sighed. But this comes nothing neere ỹ Prophets intention, for he calles consumption heere a decreasing, by meanes whereof the people shall be almost brought to ruin: and thereunto tend both senses, namely, that of S. Paul, and of the Greeke interpretation also. For by Word, they vnderstood that which the Hebrews expresse by the word Dauar. And although the Prophet hath not the word Dauar, yet notwithstanding that which he hath in the text signifies a thing determined, that is to say, a Consumption, and both of them haue one and the same meaning. To conclude, the Apostle repeates that in this place which Isaiah said now touching the future consumption of the people, and teacheth that this propheſie was chieflie accomplished in his time when as the Iewes for their vnthankfulnes were cut off from the kingdome of God, some small remnant only reserued. Rom. 9. 28.

Vers.

Verſ. 24. *Therefore the Lord God of hoſtes, ſaith; My people which dwelleſt in mount Zion, feare not Aſſur. Hee ſhall ſmite thee with the rod, and ſhall lift vp his ſtaffe vpon thee, after the maner of Egypt.

*Or, example

HEe goes on with the former conſolation, which onely appertained to the faithfull, who in very deed were then a ſmall number. For many gloried in the name of God, and would be taken for his people; but very few there were who ſhewed that by their practiſe, which they profeſſed in word. He ſpeakes not to all then indifferently; but to thoſe onely which ſtood in neede of conſolation. For ſeeing they were in danger to loſe all their hope, when they compared their condition with others, and that the kingdome alſo was deſtroyed: for this cauſe, I ſay, it was very expedient they ſhould bee comforted. And this diſtinction is to be noted: for otherwiſe it had been abſurd to haue directed ſpeeches ſo diuers, vnto perſons of one condition. He addes the reaſon of the conſolation; to wit, that this diſcomfiture ſhall bee nothing elſe but as the liſting vp of the rod, which ſhall be onely to chaſtiſe them, and not to deſtroy them.

The letter Beth, is a particle of ſimilitude. The word Derec ſignifies example. I expound it then, After the example of Egypt; as if hee ſhould ſay, Although the Aſſyrian be cruell, and by all meanes will ſeeke thy ruine; yet he ſhall not kill, but ſhall onely ſmite thee. Hee alledgeth the example of Egypt then, the bondage whereof was very hard; and yet not deadly. For in the midſt of perplexities and confuſions, the Prophets are wont to bring the people backe to the contemplation of this redemption, whereby God deliuered his choſen people miraculouſly from the hand of this cruell tyrant Pharoah. The ſenſe therefore is, euen as the Lord was the ſtrongeſt then, and deſtroyed the Egyptians, who practiſed your deſtruction: ſo will he now alſo eaſilie ouercome the Aſſyrians.

Exod. 14.24

Others expound it, In the way of Egypt, in regard the Aſſyrians made warre with the Iewes, becauſe of the Egyptians. But this expoſition cannot agree; and if wee looke narrowly into the text, we ſhall finde none more fit then that which I haue alleadged; as alſo it is approued of the beſt expoſitours. For there are heere two members one oppoſite againſt another; to wit, the affliction wherewith the Egyptians had vexed this people; and the calamitie wherein they ſhould be wrapped vnder the Aſſyrians. As the puniſhment which the Egyptians inflicted vpon them was not mortall, no more ſhould that of the Aſſyrians be. As if it had been ſaid in theſe or the like words; Thou knoweſt my force and power againſt Pharoah; ſo alſo ſhalt thou know it againſt Senacherib. Neither would the knitting together of theſe ſentences match well, vnleſſe we ſhould expound it thus.

Verſ. 25. But yet a little while and mine indignation ſhall bee conſumed: and my wrath ſhall be kindled to deſtroy them.

HEe meanes not onely the ſiege which Senacherib planted with a mightie armie before Ieruſalem, but the other diſcomfitures alſo whereby this citie was deſtroyed, the Temple raſed, and the people carried away captiues. For it was needfull that the faithfull ſhould be fortified againſt theſe greeuous aduerſaries with ſuch promiſes as theſe. Which wee are diligently to obſerue; becauſe if wee lightly paſſe this ouer, as other expoſitours doe, wee cannot fitly ioyne theſe things together. Thus the captiuitie of the people was as a conſumption; becauſe Babylon was as their ſepulchre, and their exile as a kind of death. When neceſſitie then appeared, and that Senacherib with his armie beganne to preſſe neere vpon them, ſo as they were in great diſtreſſe being thus beſieged, this very conſolation was exceeding neceſſarie. For it might ſeeme that Iudea was vtterly conſumed, and there was little or no hope of ſuccour left touching outward appearance: as if he ſhould ſay; Obſerue therefore this conſolation diligently; to wit, the Lord will ſpare thee: true it is hee will deferre it for a little while, and will hold his ſuccour hidden as it were from thine eyes; but in the end hee will deliuer thee, and will be reuenged vpon thine enemies, whom hee hath determined vtterly to conſume.

2. King. 18. 17. 2 Kin. 25. 4

If any will take the verbe Calah, To conſume: he ſaith, he will conſume his wrath, in the ſame ſenſe, as we are commonly wont to ſay, we conſume the yeares and our age: that is, I will giue way to mine indignation, till ſuch time as I haue vtterly deſtroyed the Aſſyrians. But the word, to accompliſh, is more proper; as if he ſhould ſay, Till I haue executed mine indignation. And this is the deſtruction wherewithall hee threatens the vncircumciſed elſewhere. For when the Lord hath taken away all hope of mercy, hee then executeth his iudgement againſt the vnfaithfull.

Verſ. 26. *And the Lord of hoſtes ſhall raiſe vp a ſcourge againſt him, as the plague of Madian, in the rocke of Oreb, and his ſtaffe vpon the ſea: and ſhall lift it vp in the way of Egypt.

*Or, after the manner of Egypt.

ISaiah vſeth heere the word ſcourge, and not rod: thereby ſignifying, that the Lord would handle the enemies much more roughly and ſeuerely then they handled the Iewes. For he threatens them with an vtter deſtruction: and declares the ſame more plainely by two examples: the firſt is of the Madianites, who were horribly deſtroyed in the valley of Oreb, which was thus nominated becauſe of their king: the ſecond is of the Egyptians, which were drowned by the Lord in the red ſea, when they purſued his people. Iudg.7.22. Exod.14.21. Now in the first place he recites the historie which was a little freshest in memorie then the other: in the second, that which was most auncient. Whence we learne, that the Lord displayeth his power for the maintenance of his Church, to the end that in the middest of the greatest confusions in the world, we might remaine stedfast in faith, that being vpheld and stayed vpon his fauour, we might be of good cheere, and of good hope. For his custome hath bin to deliuer his Church by wonderfull and vnexpected meanes, as wee may see came to passe in the time of Moses, and Gedeon. Wee ought euermore thē to call these his benefits to mind, to the end we may so much the more couragiously learne to put our trust in God, and to perseuere constantlie.

1 God manifests his power in all times for the preseruation of his church, that in the middest of the greatest confusions our faith might remain vnshaken.

2 We may also gather from hence, that all the afflictions which compasse vs about, are the rods wherewith God beates vs; and yet in the meane while he suffreth neither Satan nor none of his instrumēts to hurt vs deadlie.

3 Contrariwise, an horrible destruction is prepared for our enemies, as wee see came to passe to the Madianites and Egyptians. This is then a singular consolation, that when wee shall compare our condition with theirs, we shall indeede see them merrie, and proudly insult ouer the children of God; but it is only for a time: for we shall by and by heare what an horrible sentence is pronounced against them, to wit, that they are ordained to a deadlie and an eternall destruction.

Vers. 27. And at that day shall his burden be taken away from off thy shoulder, and his yoke from off thy neck: and the yoke shall be destroyed because of the anointing.

IT is vncertaine whether he heere speakes of the deliuerance which hapned vnder Zorobabil, or of that admirable discomfiture of Senacherib, whē he besieged Ierusalem with a mightie armie. All almost agree to this latter exposition: and in very deed, the drift and scope of the text approues it, for he will adde a description of the wayes and chiefest places whereby Senacherib should passe to come to Ierusalem: so as it should seeme nothing should hinder him from inioying the citie at his pleasure. I somewhat assent to this exposition; I only extend this prophesie further off: for Isaiah meant to comfort the faithfull who were pressed with the present calamitie: and the promise also might seeme vaine, seeing the calamities which should come vpon them afterwards were whollie contrarie vnto it. As for example, if the Lord should promise me prouision for the next yeere, and should yet leaue me destitute of it, what credit could I giue to the promise made vnto me; the accomplishment whereof I must wait for so long a time, if he deliuer me not from the present necessitie? Thus the promise of the Lord, who had said he would deliuer his people out of Babylon, and would perpetuallie assist them, might seeme as good as vanished, when the people should see themselues laid open to the throte of this rauenous wolfe. The Prophet then minding to preuent this difficultie, comprehends both the points before mentioned, to wit, that God will keepe his people, and in the end deliuer them from death. Others restraine this to the discomfiture of the host of Senacherib. But because Isaiah promiseth that the yoke shall be dissolued, or broken, I make no question but he speakes of the deliuerance from the captiuitie. In a word, he affirmes, that God will not only deliuer them out of Babylon, but will also giue them succor euen against the siege of this Tyrant Senacherib, whom he will not suffer to passe beyond that which is threatned.

2.Chron.36. 22, 23. Ezr.1. & 2. 2.Kin.19.35

His burden shall be taken from off thy shoulder.] He expresseth this tyrannie two waies, that he might the better amplifie the benefit of the redemption. If any will referre this to Senacherib, there was not as yet any such heauie burthen imposed vpon the shoulders of the Iewes vnder his tyranny. The people only payed him a certaine tribute, as we may discerne by the holy historie. Wherfore then hath hee expressed this tyrannie vnder two termes? It is very likely that he had respect vnto the present perill, in regard this proud tyrant had alreadie deuoured y whole countrie of Iudea (like a cruell beast as he was) by his insatiable couetousnes: and had so oppressed them, that it might seeme his yoke could neuer be remoued frō off their necks. But I haue alreadie giuen the exposition which seemes best vnto me, to wit, that the Prophet speakes here of the cōtinuall course of Gods grace, euen till the time of redemption.

2.King.18. 14.& 23.33. 2.Chro.36.3.

Some expound this which followes of the face of anointing, by the word Fatnesse, which noynts the yoke: but this exposition is too strict. Others are better aduised, who take the word Schamen in his accustomed signification, to wit, for oyntment, or oyle. For he brings them back vnto Christ, shewing, that by meanes of him it shall come to passe they shall be deliuered from vnder this tyranny. Now hee calleth Anointing, the kingdome which had bin consecrated by the Lord, and for this cause would he keepe it pure and entire. And when the Prophets will set forth the maiestie of this kingdome, they make mention of the anointing wherewith the Lord in speciall maner had adorned it, because it was a figure of Iesus Christ. For although God had established the rest of their neighbour kingdomes, yet were they prophane notwithstanding: but this was an holy kingdome in respect of others, because the Lord ruled after a speciall maner in Iudea; and vnder this figure of the kingdome, he represented Iesus Christ vnto them. For this cause also the promise was made to Salomon, that the throne of this kingdome should be perpetuall. 1.King.9.5.

Whereas some expound this word anointing, of the King himselfe; it is too much constrained, neither containes it any substantiall doctrine in it. Thus then the Prophet shewes them them the meanes whereby this tyrannie ſhal be brought to nothing: for there was little or no hope left in outward appearance, that they ſhould thus eaſilie ſhake off the yoke of ſo mightie a tyrant. Now he telles them then that this ſhall come to paſſe by meanes of the anointing of this heauenly kingdome: to the end all might vnderſtand that this benefit did wholly depend vpon the vertue of Chriſt, and not vpon fortune, nor vpon the power of men.

Verſ. 28. He is come to Aiath: he is paſſed into Migron: at Micmaſh ſhall he lay vp his armour.

BEcauſe the holy Citie ſhould immediately be beſieged, the Prophet ſets al the furniture of Senacherib before their eyes, to the end that after the faithful had wel bethought them of euery particular formerly mentioned, they might reſt ſtedfaſt vpon God. And this deſcription had great efficacie to appeaſe their terrours, when they knew the Aſſyrians ſhold not remoue a foot but by ỹ wil of God, who by the mouth of his Prophet, had plainely chalked out all the way of the enemie. We need not ſtand much in expounding the ſituation of the places which are named here. It ſufficeth vs to know that hee paſſed by theſe places, whereof the Iewes are heere aduertiſed. Whereas we haue tranſlated, he ſhall lay vp his armour; others tranſlate, He hath numbred: for the verbe Paqad, ſignifies alſo to number. I reiect not this interpretation; but yet I willingly receiue the firſt rather, becauſe it ſeemes to mee the Prophet declares that the King of Aſſyria ſhall lay vp his armour: that is to ſay, his victuals and other warlike munitions in Micmaſh. We alſo know it is the manner of them that goe to warre, neuer to ſet forward without munition, which they lay vp in ſome ſafe and fit place, to the end the Campe may be prouided of thoſe things which are neceſſary for it. Now by the word Armour, or, munition, hee not onely meanes darts, and ſwords; but alſo all prouiſions and helpes of warre: for the ſignification of the Hebrew word ſtretcheth very farre, and comprehends all ſorts of inſtruments; as alſo vnder the word Veſſels, the Latins vnderſtand diuers things.

Verſ. 29. They haue gone ouer the foord: they lodged at the lodging at Geba: Ramah is afraid: Gibeah of Saul is fled away.

SOme thinke hee ſpeakes in this place of Iordan: but I know not whether one could wade ouer Iordan in that quarter or no. Howſoeuer it be, hee ſets forth what an aſtoniſhment there ſhould bee when newes ſhould come of the Aſſyrians arriuall; to wit, that all the Countrie ſhall be ouerwhelmed with feare and terrour; ſo as it ſhall fall into the hands of the Aſſyrians, euen as it were of it owne accord. For where ſo great a feare hath once inuaded the heart, there the vanquiſhed will eaſily yeelde themſelues euen at the firſt aſſault of the enemie: ſo as the conquerours ſhall rob and ſpoile at their pleaſure. Hee ſpeakes in the plurall number, as hauing changed the perſon; becauſe he mentioneth the King in one reſpect, and his hoſt in another. He names Ramah chiefly, becauſe it was the neereſt village: and deſcribes alſo the flight of ſome, who being amazed with the onely bruit, ſhould giue vp the Country into the enemies hands.

Verſ. 30. Lift vp thy voyce O daughter Gallim; cauſe Laiſh to heare, O poore Anathoth.* *Or, neigh.

AFter hee had ſpoken of ſo great terrour, by the word neigh, hee alſo mentioneth the cries and ſhrikes which ſhould bee heard in other parts. It is a verie common thing among the Hebrewes to call Cities by the name of daughters. Now hee ſhewes that the cry ſhall be ſo great, that the neighbour Cities ſhall heare it. For the lamentation which ſhall be made in Anathoth, ſhall be heard of Laiſh.

Verſ. 31. Madmenah is remoued: the inhabitants of Gebim haue gathered themſelues together.

BY an exceſſiue manner of ſpeech hee meanes, that this Citie Madmenah was ſhaken in ſuch wiſe, as it ſeemed to remoue out of the place. Which is to be referred to the tumults of the people, that fled: as if hee ſhould ſay, The inhabitants of Madmenah ſhall make no leſſe noiſe, then if the Citie ſhould be turned vpſide downe. As touching that which followes; the inhabitants of Gebim haue gathered themſelues together; wee may expound it, that they ſhould gather themſelues vpon an heap with feare. Others vnderſtand it as if they ſhould preſſe one another, the way being too narrow for paſſage.

Verſ. 32. Yet there is a time that he will ſtay at Nob: hee ſhall lift vp his hand toward the mount of the daughter Zion, the hill of Ieruſalem.* *Or, It ſhall be yet day, when hee ſhall come into Nob to ſtay there.

SOme expound that the Aſſyrian ſhall remaine yet one day in Nob, which was a litle citie neere to Ieruſalem, as S. Ierome and others witnes. But I rather agree to their opinion, who thinke that the enemie ſhould ariue there very early, that he might make his preparations to goe the next day to beſiege Ieruſalem: for his meaning is to ſhew the diligence of the Aſſyrian; and how neere Ieruſalem was to an vtter ruin: as if he ſhould ſay, The enemie ſhall haue no great way to goe, and ſhall ariue in Ieruſalem before the day be at an end. That which followes of the liſting vp of the hand, ſerues to augment the feare, becauſe Senacherib hauing alreadie conquered all the countrie, will threaten Ierusalem, as if with his only looke he could take and sack it. By the word Zion he comprehends all the citie, taking a part for the whole, because this part was the highest, and ouerlooked all the quarters of the Citie. From the foolish ouerweening of this tyrant the Prophet shewes that the citie of Ierusalem was not farre off from an vtter downefall: for the whole countrie, yea the Citie it selfe was so astonished, that none durst oppose himselfe against the enemie. Thus the Prophet meant to amplifie the benefit of God by these circumstances, to wit, that it was to be attributed to the speciall fauor and good wil of God, and not to mans help, which auailed nothing that Ierusalem was deliuered, euen as if a man should haue pulled a sheepe out of the iawes of the wolfe.

Vers. 33. Behold, the Lord God of hostes shal cut off the bough with feare, & they of high stature shall be cut off, and the hie shall be humbled.

34. And he shall cut away the thick places of the forest with iron, and Lebanon shall haue a mightie fall.

ALmost all the expositours doe expound this place of the Assyrians, for they think the Prophet threatens this destructiō wherewith the Lord will roote them out after they haue besieged Ierusalem; as if he should speak on this wise, The Assyrian shall be so swolne with pride, that he will thinke himselfe sure of Ierusalem as soone as he shall haue once looked vpon it: and also, that all shall be astonished at his comming, so as some shall flee away, others shall yeeld themselues voluntarilie; therefore he will by and by imagin himselfe Lord ouer all: but the Lord will sodainly ouerthrow all his deseignes, and will cut downe his high branches. Yet when we aduisedlie consider euery thing, and especiallie that which is by and by added of Lebanon, with the consolation that followeth, I am of opinion that this place ought to be referred to the Iewes themselues. So then Isaiah, as I thinke, continues still to threaten the calamities which should happen soone after to the people: as if he should say, the Assyrian shall not only come to Nob, but shall spoile the whole countrie; and therefore he shall waste and whollie roote out whatsoeuer is beautifull and good therein, euen as if one should cut off the boughs from the trees, or as if the tree it selfe should bee plucked vp by the roots.

The Chapter following confirmes this interpretation, wherein the Prophet giues consolation against this calamitie, and that consolation is ioyned to this verse, and is added as a fit remedie to asswage the bitternes of so great heauines. I do not greatlie allow of the diuision of the Chapter, which is often times cleane against the haire, and whollie confoundeth the sense of ỹ Prophet: I thinke then that that consolation ought to be ioyned to this verse, as if there were no diuision at all.

The beginning of the Chapter ensuing, depends still vpō the two last verses of this present Chapter.

Moreouer, this similitude is not easie to be expounded, for it sufficientlie appeares that by the high and mightie trees he meanes whatsoeuer is strong, excellent, and high; so as he foretels the ruine and destruction of Iudea, and compares it to the cutting downe of a forest, signifying that there shall be nothing so high and excellent in the countrie which the enemies shall not cast downe euen till they shall haue stripped the land of all her ornaments. He also makes mention of Lebanon, for wee know that it was a mountaine greatly renoumed in regard of faire & goodly trees which were in it: but if he had spoken of the Assyrians, there should haue been no reason in it for him to speake of the destruction of Lebanon. Whence we gather, that he heere threatens the Iewes againe, and that the preface of his Sermon agrees very well when it begins at this particle demonstratiue Behold, Vers. 33. Chap. 10.

Reade the former Section saue one, for the better vnderstanding of the verse following.

THE XI. CHAPTER.

Vers. 1. But there shall come a rod forth of the stock of Ishai, and a grasse shall grow out of his rootes.

BEcause the description of so horrible calamities might astonish the faithful, and might therewithall minister matter of despaire vnto them, it was very requisit to set some word of consolation before their eyes. For the beholding of the kingdome wasted, the cities ouerthrowne, and all parts of the countrie destroyed, could not but worke sighes and deepe gronings in them, so as they might very easily haue been shaken, and in the end vtterlie become desperate if the Lord had not preuented them by this consolation. The Prophet then shewes what the Lord will do in time to come, as also how he will restore the kingdome. Now he still continues the similitude which he had vsed in the former Chapter, for there he said that Iudea should be brought to nought, euen as the fire consumes the forest. The defotmitie of this countrie then should resemble a wast ground, where nothing can be discerned but ashes, after the trees haue been consumed with fire. But to the end there might be some resemblance betweene things opposite, he saith, that a rod Vers. 33. 34.

ſhall come forth of a ſtocke, which yet ſhall become a tree, and ſhall ſpread his branches and fruits farre and neere. For this cauſe I haue choſen rather to tranſlate the word Guetza, A dry ſtocke; then roote: although the matter be not great whether of them both we vſe; and yet this word ſtocke, notwithſtanding doth better expreſſe the Prophets meaning: for hee ſignifies, that howſoeuer the ſtocke be dry, yet the graffe which ſhall come forth of it, ſhall bee more excellent then all the forreſts in the world.

Whence wee gather, that this prophecie cannot agree to any other perſon then to Chriſt; becauſe no ſuch graft was ſeene to come forth, before hee came into the world. Verily this can no way be applied vnto Hezekias, neither yet to Iosias, becauſe they were aduanced euen from their birth to be Kings at the length. As touching Zorobabel, he neuer came to the thouſand part of that dignitie which the Prophet extolleth in this place. Wee ſee then that the conſolation of the poore and deſolate Iewes, is heere ſet before them in one onely Meſſiah, and that their hope concerning the ſame, is deferred euen till his appearing. For when he was manifeſted, there was no hope left of any reſtoring, or reeſtabliſhing of the kingdome; neither in deed could they haue had any if this promiſe had not been added: becauſe it ſeemed that the houſe and linage of Dauid was vtterly extinct. For this cauſe he mentions not Dauid, but rather the familie of Iſhai; becauſe the dignitie of this family was ſo diminiſhed, that it ſeemed rather the houſe of a countrie Farmer, then the houſe of a King: for ſuch indeed was the houſe of Iſhai, when Dauid (little thinking thereon) was called to the gouernment of the Kingdome. Thus then after they had loſt their antient glory, and had receiued ſo great a diſcomfiture, hee calleth it the familie of Iſhai, becauſe it was the moſt inferiour of all others. And therefore I thinke that the conſolation rather beginnes heere, then at the end of the former Chapter. The Iewes might doubt in ſo horrible a deſtruction, who ſhould be their defender: Iſaiah promiſeth one vnto them, howſoeuer hee muſt come forth of a drie ſtocke.

1. Sam. 16. 11, 12. 2. Sam. 7. 11 & Pſal. 78. 70, 71.

He continues ſtill the former ſimilitude of the forreſt (as I haue ſaid) becauſe it hath greater elegancie then if he had ſimply ſaid, that Meſſiah ſhould come. For hauing ſhewed heretofore that the forreſt ſhould be vtterly conſumed, hee addes notwithſtanding, that a rod ſhall come forth, which ſhall reſtore the abundance and beautie of this burnt forreſt againe: and this rod is Ieſus Chriſt, who ſhould come to bee the protector and Sauiour of his people. Now it is not needfull to ſhew how abiect and baſe the beginnings of this kingdome was. Truely all that was to bee ſeene therein was ſo poore and weake, that to outward appearance all things (the originall of the blood royall excepted) ſeemed to be directly contrary to this which ſhould be accompliſhed in the perſon of the Redeemer. Yea ſo low were they brought, that this royall race was as good as vtterly extinguiſhed: for who would haue thought that a poore Carpenter had been begotten of the royall ſeede? Beſides, in what place, I pray you, was Chriſt borne, and what was his bringing vp? To conclude, after he had ſpent his whole life in contempt, and continually expoſed to ſhame and deriſion; was he not cruelly and ſhamefully put to death, by which hee was to begin his kingdome? Yet notwithſtanding all this, he grew into an infinite greatneſſe, euen as a great tree growes vp of a ſmall & little ſeede: as Chriſt alſo himſelfe teacheth vs, Matth. 13.31. whereof wee haue daily examples. For it muſt come to paſſe of neceſſitie, that the ſame ſhould befall his kingdome, which came to paſſe in his owne perſon.

Verſ. 2. And the ſpirit of the Lord ſhall reſt vpon him: the ſpirit of wiſedome and vnderſtanding, the ſpirit of counſell and ſtrength, the ſpirit of knowledge, and of the feare of the Lord.

NOw he begins to ſpeake of Chriſt plainely and without any figure. It had been ſufficient to haue propounded the conſolation vnder the former ſimilitude: and fitly did the oppoſition anſwere betweene the burning of the forreſt, and the new reſtoring of it againe. He therein deſcribed the twofold eſtate of the people: for hauing ſpoken of the calamitie, he by and by addes the hope of reſtauration: the beginning whereof notwithſtanding, muſt come forth of a little bud: but now hee manifeſtly ſhewes what this deliuerance ſhall bee, and what the condition both of Chriſt and his Kingdome ſhould be alſo.

Some thinke this ſhould rather be referred to Ezekiah, who was a figure of Chriſt: but how inconſiderately wee ſhewed heretofore. For when Ezekias was borne, the name and royall dignitie of the houſe of Dauid had yet vigor and ſtrength in his ſucceſſours: and beſides, hee was farre ſhort of this greatneſſe, whereof he will ſpeake by and by.

Moreouer, hence we gather, that the ſpirituall Kingdome of Chriſt was promiſed in times paſt to the antient people, inaſmuch as the vertue, power, and maieſtie thereof is heere eſtabliſhed in the gifts of the Holy ghoſt. Now albeit Chriſt had little neede of theſe gifts and graces: yet was it needfull for vs that he ſhould be thus inriched with them, becauſe hee tooke our fleſh vpon him; to the end hee might afterwards powre out againe all thoſe benefits vpon vs, whereof we ſhould otherwiſe haue been vtterly deſtitute. For out of his fulneſſe muſt we all draw grace vpon grace, euen as out of the fountaine; according to that in Iohn 1.16.

Iob. 3.32.

The Spirit of the Lord.] We muſt keepe that in mind, which I touched erewhile; to wit, that this is to be referred to the humane nature of Chriſt; becauſe it could not be that hee ſhould haue been inriched with the gifts and graces of the Father, but as in reſpect that he was made man. Beſides, as he deſcended ded frō heauen for our sakes; so did he also receiue the gifts of the holy Ghost from heauen to adorne vs with them: and this is that anointing whereby he obtained this name of Christ, the which he communicates to vs. For whence comes it that wee are called Christians but by reason that hee receiues vs into his fellowship, and that he distributes to euerie one of his fulnesse, according to the measure of his free liberalitie? And in very deed, this place doth not so much teach vs what Christ is in himselfe, as rather what he receiued of the Father, that hee might fill vs with his abundance. Now albeit there is no great need that wee should stand long in opening the meaning of the words, yet not withstanding if any will haue a short difference betweene wisedome and vnderstanding, I am of opinion that the word wisedome, doth generally comprehend whatsoeuer belongs to the order and rule of life: and then that vnderstanding is added in stead of the exposition thereof. For if we haue the foresaid wisedome, wee shall haue vnderstanding enough. This word counsell, signifies as much as the word Iudgement; whereby wee are able to giue resolution in doubtfull things: for it were not sufficient to haue vnderstanding, vnlesse wee were therewithall endued with counsell, to guide vs safely in matters of importance. The word strength, is sufficiently knowne. As touching knowledge, or skill, it differs little from vnderstanding, vnlesse it should rather appertaine vnto knowing, and so it should declare the act. The feare of the Lord, signifies a sincere affection to serue and honour God. Now the Prophet reckons not vp all the graces of the holy Ghost heere, as many haue thought. For the Papists haue sottishly and vnlearnedly drawne their seuenformed grace from this place: and some of the antients haue been no lesse absurdly deceiued therein then they. Esaiah mentioneth but sixe, & they haue added the seuenth of their owne head. And as one errour lightly followes another, so they haue indeuoured to restraine the gifts and graces of the holy Ghost to be but seuen in number: and yet notwithstanding in other places wee see that there are as many epithites more attributed vnto him, according to the diuersitie of his effects. Moreouer, it is a thing sufficiently knowne, that wee our selues are made partakers of many other benefits by the meanes of Christ, then those which are heere recited; to wit, meekenesse, chastitie, sobrietie, truth, holinesse, and the like, which comes to vs from no other fountaine then from Christ himselfe. Hee recites not all the gifts heere then, which were conferred vpon the Lord Iesus, neither was it needfull so to doe: his meaning was onely to shew that Christ was sent vnto vs furnished and adorned with all graces fit to inrich vs with all.

Eph. 4. 7.

We are taught in this place, not so much what Christ is in himselfe, as what he hath receiued of his Father, that he might fill vs with his abundance.

1. Wisdome.

2 Vnderstanding.

3. Counsell.

4. Strength.

5 Knowledge.

6 The feare of the Lord.

Gal. 6. 1.

2. Tim 1. 7.

If these things had not been added, peraduenture wee might haue conceiued the restauration of this kingdome to be carnall rather then spiritual, as the Iewes doe: or might haue imagined Iesus Christ had been vnfurnished of all necessarie graces. And therefore hee shewes first generally, then particularly, that the gifts of the holy Ghost were powred into him, to the end we might boldly goe vnto him to aske those things we stand in need of. For he will inrich vs with wisdome and vnderstanding, he wil giue vs counsell when things are confused, he will make vs strong and valiant in combats, and will beautifie vs also with godlinesse; that is to say, with the true feare of God: in a word, hee will furnish vs with all things needful for our life and saluation. The Prophet then comprehends all gifts and graces heere, so as it is too foolishly done of them, who haue gone about to suppresse that which is not heere expressed.

These gifts of the holy Ghost, namely, wisdome, vnderstanding, counsell, strength, knowledge, and the feare of the Lord, are therefore powred into Christ, that wee standing in neede of all, or any one of them, might boldly beg the same at his hands.

Now hee shewes that all graces are in Christ, to the end they might be communicated vnto vs: for which cause we are called his companions in the 45. Psalme, verse 8. For as the strength of the members flowes from the head, so Christ powres out the vertue of his heauenly vnction vpon the whole body of his Church. Whence it followes, that those who are barren and dry, haue no communion at all with Christ; and therefore doe falsly challenge vnto them the name of Christians. As often therefore as wee feele in our selues the want of any of these gifts, let vs accuse our owne infidelitie as the cause of it; because true faith makes vs partakers of all Christs benefits. Let vs humbly intreat the Lord then, that he will not suffer the lusts of our flesh to raigne in vs, that so Christ may wholly vnite vs vnto himselfe. Let vs also obserue, that it is onely in Christ, in whom wee are to seeke all good things. For we greatly deceiue our selues, if wee thinke to obtaine any thing at the Fathers hand by any other meane.

Vers. 3. And shall make him prudent in the feare of the Lord: for he shall not iudge after the sight of his eyes, neither reproue by the hearing of his eares.

THe verbe Riach, which is put heere in the coniugation of Hiphil, signifies properly to smell. It may also bee expounded in the actiue signification, To giue a piercing smell: which I thinke agrees as fittest to this place; that this prudencie might also be placed amongst the gifts of the holy Ghost. And this effect also agrees particularly vnto the person of Christ; to wit, that he is wise and prudent to gouerne his owne beyond al that the capacitie of any of the faithfull is able to comprehend. First, we are to note the similitude of the verbe, To smell; which signifies that Christ shall so abound with iudgement and discretion, that he shall not neede to apprehend any thing either by sight or hearing, because hee shall be able by his onely smell, to discerne the most secret and hidden things.

The most part of the expositours take the particle, In the feare of the Lord, as if all the affections of the heart should bee discouered before Christ, so as hee should be able easilie to iudge who are the true seruants of God.

But

But let the readers conſider if the ſenſe would not agree better to ſay, that the feare of God is taken heere for a certaine rule of iudgement. For the Prophet doth of ſet purpoſe diſtinguiſh the heauenly iudgement of Chriſt, from the iudgement of men; to the end we might know that the outward appearance of holineſſe or integritie, is nothing at all approued before him. The ſenſe then is, that when we come before the tribunal of Chriſt, he will not onely examine things according to the outward actions, as men doe in ciuill policie: but the life is there examined and squared out, according to the rule of true pietie. Neither indeed is it fit for men to bee the ſearchers of the heart: and we ſhall often ſee, that there is onely a vaine appearance in thoſe whom we ſhall eſteeme honeſt men: but Chriſt iudgeth not by the outſide, becauſe he knoweth and ſoundeth the vttermoſt and hiddeneſt ſecrets of the heart. His iudgement then is far different frõ mans iudgement, who though they bee neuer ſo expert and wittie, doe yet too foolithly oft times ouerſhoot theſelues. Thence it followes, that none can be the true ſeruants of God, but thoſe whom Ieſus Chriſt approueth. Now they cannot bee approued of him, vnleſſe they ſhew a pure and vpright heart: for we cannot deceiue him by any falſe and vaine appearances.

Verſ. 4. But with righteouſneſſe ſhall he iudge the poore, and with equitie ſhall he reproue for the meek of the earth: and he ſhall ſmite the earth with the rod of his mouth, and with the breath of his lips ſhal he ſlay the wicked.

To whom theſe graces formerly mentioned doe properly appertaine.

HEere he teacheth that Chriſt ſhall be the protectour of the poore: or rather hee ſhewes who they are to whom the grace of Chriſt properly appertaines; to wit, to the poore and meeke: that is, to thoſe who being humbled vnder the ſenſe of their owne miſerie, haue throwne to the ground this high and proud conceit of themſelues, wherewith men are vſually puffed vp, till being meekened by the word, they haue learned to humble themſelues. The Prophet heere proteſts then, that Chriſt will not be the defender and protectour of all in generall, but of thoſe who acknowledge themſelues poore, and deſtitute of all good things. And this Ieſus Chriſt himſelfe ſhewed to the Diſciples of Iohn Baptiſt, when he told them that the Goſpell was preached to the poore: Mat 11.5. For all are not indeede indifferently capable of this doctrine, but thoſe onely who being ſtripped of all ouerweening of the fleſh, haue their recourſe to this heauenly ſafeguard and protection.

All are not not capable of this doctrine.

There is heere then a cloſe oppoſition; to wit, that Chriſt gouernes not the rich: that is to ſay, thoſe who are blowne vp wiith a falſe opinion of themſelues: becauſe that howſoeuer he cals al men vnto him, yet notwithſtanding the moſt part refuſe to ſubiect themſelues vnder his gouernement; for they are the poore onely, which ſuffer themſelues to be guided by him. This text admoniſheth vs to ſtrippe our ſelues quite and cleane of all pride, and to put on the ſpirit of meekeneſſe and modeſtie, if wee deſire that Chriſt ſhould rule vs vnder his hand. Behold heere then the ſpirituall pouertie which the Prophet recommends to all the members of Chriſt, which is not to be ſwollen with an ouerweening, but truely to be humbled with the feeling of our pouertie and miſerie, to the end we may depend vpon Chriſt onely. Hauing once reſolued throughly vpon that, this King and faithfull protectour will take care of our ſaluation, and will defend vs euen to the very end againſt all our enemies: we alſo heere learne, who they be that he calles vnto him, Come to mee all you, ſaith he, that trauaile and are heauie laden: Matth. 11.28. Needfull it is then that we trauaile and be preſſed vnder the weight of our burthen, if wee will feele and haue experience of his ſuccour.

Wee haue alſo to obſerue the order which the Prophet keepes heere: for firſt hee placeth pouertie, and afterwards meekneſſe or gentleneſſe: becauſe we muſt be poore before wee can bee brought to be meeke and lowly. As long as we thinke our ſelues to be any thing, being puffed vp with a vaine confidence of our owne worth, our heart forthwith ouerfloweth into all pride and conceitedneſſe, ſo as wee cannot be humbled nor brought into any order: but when we once know our own miſerie, then we beginne to abaſe our ſelues, and being weake and oppreſſed, wee are forced to ſigh vnder the burthen. He heere deſcribes then ỹ condition of Chriſts people, as heeretofore hee had ſet forth the nature of their King: whence alſo we are to learne, that all doe not indifferently partake in theſe excellent gifts of the holy Ghoſt, wherewith Chriſt was adorned, as we haue ſeene heretofore, but the poore and humble onely.

We muſt be poore before we can be brought to meekeneſſe.

In the former verſes the Prophet did ſet forth the nature of Chriſt as he is the King of his Church: heere he deſcribes the qualities and condition of his ſubiects.

Now this word, to iudge, ſignifies gouernment, the principall part whereof is, that Chriſt makes vs partakers of thoſe gifts which hee hath receiued of his Father, to the end hee might liue in vs, and we in him.

And ſhall ſmite the earth.] In this place the Prophet extolles the efficacie of the word, which is the royall ſcepter of Chriſt. For the rod of the mouth is as much to ſay, as a verball ſcepter: and in the ſecond member, ſpeaking of the breath or ſpirit of the lips, hee repeates the ſelfeſame thing: as if he ſhould ſay, Chriſt ſhall not neede to borrow ſtrength from others to beate backe his enemies, and to ouerthrow whatſoeuer is contrary to his dignitie and Empire; for his onely breath or word ſhall be ſufficient thereunto. Now this may be a generall ſentence, ſeeing it is of neceſſitie that the faithfull doe firſt die, to the end they may bee renewed into a ſpirituall life. And in this ſenſe, the Goſpell is called the ſword of the Spirit, dedicated for the killing of the ſacrifices: but the latter part of the verſe requires another ſenſe. And yet notwithſtanding, if any bee minded to vſe a diſtinction heere, the ſmiting of the earth ſhall be referred referred as well to the elect as to the reprobate, becauſe ỳ Goſpel is a two edged ſword, piercing into the inmoſt and darkeſt corners of the heart and diſcerning the thoughts and affections: but it wounds one of them after one maner, and the other ſort after an other. For in mortifying the vitious nature of the elect, it kils their luſts, that they may be a liuing & ſweet ſmelling ſacrifice before God: but it ſmiteth and killeth the reprobates outright, becauſe they rot in their perdition; yea, it is made vnto them the ſauour of death vnto death as the Apoſtle ſpeakes 2.Cor.2.16. And I could eaſily grant that he ſpeakes here of both effects in deed, were it not that the vſe of the Hebrew tongue doth contradict it, becauſe the Hebrues doe often repeate one and the ſame ſentence in diuers words.

Heb.4.12.

Now it followes by and by after, that Chriſt is armed with the breath of the lips to ſlay the wicked withal; vnleſſe ſome wil ſay that Iſaiah added this ſecond member for amplification ſake. And in very deed it is much more to ſlay, then to ſmite only. Seeing then it is the propertie of the Goſpel to humble all men generallie, it is a thing accidentall in the reprobate when he ſtrikes them with a deadlie wound. Thus the Prophet ſhould conioine the ſpeciall to the generall, thereby ſhewing that the wicked fall vpon the ſword of Chriſt vnto eternall deſtruction, becauſe they are not conſecrated to be acceptable offrings. How euer it be, vndoubtedlie this laſt member ought to be wholie reſtrained and referred to the wicked, and therefore it was added, in as much as this efficacie appeareth not at the firſt in the preaching of the Goſpell: and contrariwiſe many deſpiſe and ieſt at it, holding whatſoeuer Ieſus Chriſt hath ſaid in his word to be no better then a fable. But howſoeuer they feele not his power by and by, yet can they not eſcape it, but at the laſt they ſhall be ſmitten to death therewith. And yet it ſeemes the Prophets meaning ſhould not be ſufficientlie explaned, becauſe he not only ſpeakes heere of the inward feeling wherewithall the wicked are touched whether they will or no, but alſo euen of that impietie it ſelfe which ſhall be ſcattered and aboliſhed by the vertue and efficacie of this ſcepter, as the Apoſtle Saint Paul expoundeth it in the 2.Theſſ.2.3. who queſtionles had reſpect vnto this place when he ſpake of the ruine of Antichriſt, and in that place he opens vnto vs the meaning of the Prophet. He ſhewes then that Ieſus Chriſt ſhall neuer be without enemies, which ſhall indeuor to ouerthrow his kingdome, to aboliſh or ſtop the free paſſage of his Goſpell (otherwiſe the Prophet had laid this without cauſe) but Ieſus Chriſt ſhall deſtroy them by the ſound of his word, as well euery one of them in particular, as all of them in generall, with their head and Captaine alſo. Thus S. Paul ſets before vs a double vſe of this doctrine in an other place, requiring this of a Paſtor, that he be not only fit to teach, but alſo that he conuince the gainſayers, Tit.1.9. For the Paſtor ought not only to feede the flock, but alſo to keepe and maintaine it againſt all harmes.

The wicked may for a time take pleaſure in contemning the word of the Goſpel, but in the end the Goſpel ſhal ſmite them thorow vnto endleſſe perdition.

Chriſt performes all theſe things, and therefore he is furniſhed with force of armes fit and neceſſarie to ſurmount the lies of Satan, the crueltie of tyrants, and all ſorts of enemies. It hereby appeares, that falſe doctrines can not otherwiſe be aboliſhed but by the Goſpel; for the Magiſtrate ſhall vſe the ſword in vaine (which yet muſt be vſed notwithſtanding) to repreſſe falſe teachers and falſe prophets: all this, I ſay, will ſerue to no purpoſe, vnleſſe the ſword of Gods word be firſt walking: which we ought diligentlie to obſerue againſt the Papiſts, who being deſtitute of the word of God, haue their refuge to new weapons, by meanes wherof they thinke to make their partie the ſtrongeſt. And which is worſe, they are ſo impudent to brag that heretikes can not be ouercome by the word, although both the Prophet, and the Apoſtle Paul alſo eſtabliſheth none other meanes but it.

Falſe doctrines can no otherwiſe be put to flight, but by the power of the Goſpel preached.

When the Prophet ſaith by the ſpirit of the lips, we muſt not reſtraine it to the perſon of Chriſt only. For this is to be referred to the word which is preached by the miniſters of it; becauſe Chriſt works ſo in them that his will in their mouth ſhould be reputed his mouth; and their lips as his owne lips: that is to ſay, when they ſpeake by his mouth, and preach his word faithfully. On the other ſide, the Prophet ſends vs not heere to ſecret reuelations, that Chriſt might reigne in vs: but he openlie extols the outward preaching of the word, and teacheth that the Goſpel preached and ſounded forth, is a royall ſcepter in the hand of Chriſt; otherwiſe he had vnfitlie made mention of the mouth and of the lips. Whence it followeth, that all thoſe which reiect the outward preaching of the Goſpel, do as much as in them is to ſhake off, or at the leaſt would pluck from Chriſt the ſcepter which he holds in his hand: not that the efficacie whereof the Prophet ſpeakes depends vpon the voice of men, but in regard that Chriſt himſelfe works by his miniſters, who will not haue their labour to become vaine or vnprofitable, but that they ſhould bring in the elect vnder his obedience, and kill the reprobates, as S. Paul glories in a certaine place, that he hath vengeance readie againſt all vnbeleeuers and rebels, 2.Cor.10.6.

Luk.10.16.

Heere we muſt againe remember what is the nature of the kingdome of Chriſt: for as he hath neither crowne vpon his head, nor yet materiall armor vpon his back, no more doth he rule in the world by force of armes, neither gets he himſelfe authoritie by ſhewes and great preparations; nor yet brings he his people to his obedience either by feare or conſtraint; but the doctrine of the Goſpel is his kinglie banner, vnder which he aſſembleth the faithfull to his ſeruice. Wherefore in what place ſoeuer the doctrine of the Goſpel is preached, there it is certain the Sonne of God reignes; but where it is reiected, there is his rule and dominion aboliſhed by the ſame meanes. Whence it appeares how ridiculous the bragging of the Papiſts is, when they ſay that the Church is amongſt them only, when as yet in the meane while they put Chriſt himſelfe to ſilence, and can not indure his voice: nay, doe they not on the contrarie diſgorge their edicts with full mouth, their lawes, decrees, and tyrannicall conſtitutions againſt it?

Verſ. 5. And iuſtice ſhall be the girdle of his loines, and faithfulnes the girdle of his reines.

OTher tranſlate girdle: but becauſe the Prophet ſets Chriſt before vs decked as it were with his royall ornaments, I haue rather tranſlated it ſword-girdle, or hangers: for this alſo is a kinglie ornament. as was the ſceptre which was giuen him heretofore. And Iob minding to ſhew that God will ſtrip kings of their honour, ſaith, that he will vnlooſe or vnbuckle their girdle. Iob.12.18. Wherefore to be girt with a ſword-girdle is nothing els but to be placed in royall dignitie, as we alſo ſhal ſee hereafter in another place, Chap.22.21. Now the Prophet heere deſcribes two ſorts of girdles, to wit, iuſtice, and faithfulnes: vnleſſe any had rather ſay that the word faithfulnes being a ſubſtantiue, ſhould be put in the place of an adiectiue, as if he ſhould ſay, that Chriſt ſhall be girt with faithfull iuſtice. For faithfulnes is not added here as a diuers thing from iuſtice; but to declare what this iuſtice is wherewith Chriſt is girded. Some thinke he ſpeakes here of that iuſtice which Chriſt communicateth vnto vs, ſo as it ſhould not only be in him, but in his members alſo. By faith or veritie they vnderſtand that faith whereby we imbrace the ſaluation which is offred vnto vs.

Chap.14.5.

The Chalde Paraphraſt expoundeth it thus, The iuſt ſhall come about him, and the faithfull ſhal approch vnto him. But I take it more ſimplie, as if he ſhould ſay, He ſhall not appeare as kings clothed with purple, & crowned with a diademe, or girt with a ſword-girdle, but iuſtice and faithfulnes ſhall ſhine in him. I confeſſe that iuſtice is not ſo incloſed in Ieſus Chriſt that it alſo appertaines not to all his members: yet notwithſtanding wee muſt obſerue this maner of ſpeech, that Chriſt Girded with righteouſnes, comes forth to gouerne his members by it, the which alſo he forthwith powres out vpon them by a ſecret power of the holy ghoſt. If we diſtinguiſh the word faith from iuſtice, me thinks it ſhould be put for faithfulnes or ſtedfaſtnes; as if the Prophet ſhould ſay, that Chriſt will neuer deceiue thoſe that are his, becauſe he will alwaies continue like himſelfe.

Verſ. 6. The woolfe alſo ſhall dwell with the lambe, and the leopard ſhall lie with the kid, and the calfe and the lion, and the fat beaſt together, and a little child ſhall lead them.

7. And the cow and beare ſhall feede, their young ones ſhall lie together: and the lion ſhall eate ſtraw like the bullocke.

HEe againe deſcribeth the qualities and conditions of thoſe which ſhall be ſubdued vnto Chriſt. For becauſe there is a mutuall correſpondency betweene the King and the ſubiects, he ſometimes aſcends from the body to the head, and by and by from the head to the members: and we haue alreadie ſaid, that Chriſt raignes not for himſelfe, but for his faithfull ones: whence it followes, that hee frames our vnderſtandings to his will, by the operation of his holy Spirit. Yet notwithſtanding the Prophet aimes at a further thing: for it is as if he ſhould promiſe an happie reeſtabliſhment to the world, deſcribing as it were the order which was at the beginning, before that woful and ſorrowful change happened by the reuolt of man, vnder the which we are conſtrained to ſigh at this day. Whence comes it that the brute beaſts are ſo cruell, that ſuch as haue any ſtrength giue themſelues to ſnatch, rent, and deuoure with violence? Certainely there ſhould haue bin no diſcord betweene God and the creatures, if they had continued ſtedfaſt in their firſt and pure originall. When they riſe vp then one againſt another, and that the weakeſt haue neede of defence againſt the ſtrongeſt, is it not a teſtimonie of that confuſion which is iſſued from the ſinne of man? Now ſeeing Chriſt is come to the end, that hauing aboliſhed the curſe, he might reconcile the world vnto God; it is not without cauſe that the reeſtabliſhment of a perfect eſtate is attributed to him: as if the Prophet ſhould ſay, that the golden world ſhould returne, during which time all felicitie ſhould flouriſh: that is to ſay, before the fall of man, and the change and ruine which followed thereupon.

Verſe 2.

God by Hoſea ſpeaketh thus; I will make a couenant for them with the beaſts of the field, with the birds of the ayre, and with the creeping things: Hoſe.2.18. as if hee ſhould ſay, After that God ſhall become mercifull to the world for Chriſts ſake, he will therewithall ſhew the ſignes of his good fauour vnto it: to the end that whatſoeuer corruptions did proceed from the ſinne of man, might come to an end. To conclude, the Prophets vnder theſe figures, teach the very ſame which S. Paul affirmes plainely; to wit, that Chriſt came to gather the things which were ſcattered both in heauen and in earth: Epheſ. 1. 10. The ſumme of all then is, that Chriſt ſhall come to chaſe all hurtfull things out of the world, and to reſtore it to the firſt beautie in which it was before it was accurſed.

Col. 1.20.

And therefore he ſaith, that the lion ſhall feede as the bullocke: for if the contagion of ſinne had not infected the world, wee ſhould not haue ſeene any beaſt giuen to blood nor to the pray, but the fruits of the earth would haue ſufficed all things; which kind of foode indeed was preſcribed vnto them by the Lord. In the meane while, although Iſaiah ſaith, that the wild and the tame beaſts ſhould liue quietly together, to the end the bleſſing of God ſhould appeare & ſhine euery where; yet notwithſtanding he aimes chiefly at that which I haue ſaid, to wit, that no hurtfull affection ſhould be diſcerned amongſt the people of Chriſt, neither yet any crueltie or inhumanitie whatſoeuer. And whereas before they had beene as lions and leopards, they ſhould now become like lambs and ſheepe; becauſe they ſhall haue put off all cruell and brutiſh affection. For by theſe kindes of ſpeech, he meant nothing elſe but to ſay, that thoſe which in times paſt had been like outragious and cruell beaſts, ſhould become gentle and traictable. And therefore he compares violent men and robbers, to wolues and beares, which liue of the pray and ſpoile: and pronounceth that they ſhould become tame and meeke, ſo as contenting themſelues with a common and ordinarie diet, they will carefully auoid the doing of wrong or hurt vnto any.

Had not the contagion of ſinne infected the world, we ſhould haue ſeene no beaſt giuen to deuouring, or bloodſucking, but the fruits of the earth would haue ſufficed all liuing creatures.

Now here we muſt argue from the leſſe to the greater; to wit, if Chriſt doe appeaſe and ſet the brute beaſts at vnitie together, much more will hee nouriſh brotherly concord betweene men, whom hee will gouerne by the ſpirit of meekenceſſe. And yet it is not the Prophets meaning that any are thus gentle and peaceable of their own nature, before they be reformed by grace; but he promiſeth, ỹ how peruerſe ſoeuer their nature ſhall be, yet they ſhall forſake their crueltie, and ſhall become as meeke as ſheepe or lambs.

Whereas hee addes, that a little childe ſhall leade them: it ſignifies, that thoſe beaſts which were otherwiſe cruell and vntamed, ſhall readily yeeld cheerfull ſeruice, ſo as there ſhal be no need to vſe any violence to repreſſe their crueltie. In the meane while, we muſt keep in minde the ſimilitude which we haue touched; to wit, that thoſe ſhall obey Chriſt, which ſhall be giuen vnto him, although they were outragious beaſts before; and ſhall obey in ſuch wiſe, that they ſhall by and by follow him, and that at his leaſt becke: as it is alſo ſaid in the 110. Pſalme, verſe 3. Thy people ſhal come willingly. Neither ought they to be placed in the ranke of ſheepe, which are not indued with this meekeneſſe. Let vs ſuffer him then to maſter and rule vs, and let vs willingly ſubmit our ſelues to thoſe to whom he hath giuen vs in charge, although they be like little children. Thus it ſeemes that the Miniſters of the word ſhould heere be compared to little children, becauſe they haue no externall power; neither doe they ſhew themſelues to haue any ciuill authoritie.

Obiect. But it may be demanded, whether there be not ſome who are meeke and gentle, who yet haue not been tamed by the doctrine of the Goſpell. For it ſeemes indeed that the Prophet ſhould ſay ſo, when hee compares ſome to ſheepe, and others to beares and lions.

Anſ. I confeſſe we ſhall finde a meruailous diuerſitie in men, who yet are led by the very inſtinct of their own nature: ſome are meeke and peaceable, others turbulent and inhumane; but yet it is certaine that all are ſauage and outragious, till Chriſt haue tamed them by the Goſpell. All are puffed vp with ambition & pride, before they bee purged with this medicine. True it is that many may well counterfet a falſe appearance of modeſtie and humilitie, but in the meane while they burſt with pride inwardly. To bee ſhort, where the Spirit of Chriſt dwelles not, there let vs not looke to finde any true humilitie.

No true humilitie to be found, where the Spirit of Chriſt dwels not.

Verſ. 8. And the ſucking child ſhall play vpon the hole of the aſpe: and the weaned child ſhall put his hand vpon the cockatrice hole.

HE continues his former ſpeech; to wit, that when men ſhall be receiued againe into fauour with God, and that they ſhall be purged from their vices by the ſpirit of regeneration, they ſhall then alſo bee freed from their hurtfull nature. For men ſhould not neede to feare the biting of venemous ſerpents, but in regard ỹ they are vnworthy that God ſhould ſubiect the parts of the whole world vnder their authoritie. And in that the ſerpents haue this libertie to hurt little children, truely it thence appeares, that all the poſteritie of Adam is infected with ſinne from the conception in the wombe. Now we are to obſerue this ſimilitude whereof wee haue ſpoken; to wit, that thoſe who are filled with an hidden venome to hurt, ſhall in ſuch wiſe change their naturall inclination, that they ſhall not hurt ſo much as little children.

The libertie of doing harme which one creature hath ouer an other, argues that the whole poſteritie of Adam is infected with ſinne, euen from the conception.

Some are openly fierce and cruell; others carry and nouriſh their malice in ſecret, as a ſerpent doth his poiſon; as Dauid alſo deſcribes it, Pſal. 55.22. For ſome are more readie to manifeſt their malice; others more ſlow. In a word, whatſoeuer they be, he ſignifies that all muſt bee purged from their malice, as well open as ſecret, after they ſhall be once ſubiected vnder Chriſt. He alſo ſignifies, that hence forward there ſhall be a generall ſecuritie euerie where, ſo as thoſe who are deſtitute of all helpe, ſhall liue in ſafetie, in ſuch wiſe as they ſhall aduenture to expoſe themſelues euen to the moſt perillous dangers.

Verſ. 9. Then ſhall none hurt nor deſtroy in all the mountaine of mine holineſſe: for the earth ſhall bee full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters that couer the ſea.

NOw he plainely ſhewes, that euen men themſelues hauing ſubdued their naturall peruerſitie, ſhall bee inclined to equitie. He ſpeakes then of the faithfull, who are truely regenerated into newneſſe of life. For although there are many hypocrits full of iniquitie, mingled in the Church with the elect of God; yet notwithſtanding they are like to to the Iſhmaelites, whom God will driue out thence when his time is. To this purpoſe we are to note that which is ſaid in Pſal. 15,2. & 24.4. that none but the louers of iuſtice ſhall haue any ſetled or ſure reſt in the Temple of God, to dwell there perpetually. This then appertaines to the lawfull citizens of the Church to bee pure and exempt from all deſire to doe hurt. Whence we gather alſo, that it is a ſingular gift of the holy Ghoſt, when men abſtaine from violent courſes; becauſe ambition, pride, crueltie, and couetouſneſſe, will ordinarily puſh them forward to wrong their neighbours euery kinde of way, and therefore the Prophet addes to very good purpoſe that this ineſtimable gift flowes from the knowledge of God. Thus then it behoues that all fleſh be humbled, and that mẽ learne to put themſelues into the protection and ſafegard of God, and to maintaine brotherly kindnes betweene thẽſelues when they know that he is the father of them all. For although many which are not yet renued by the ſpirit of Chriſt may haue ſome appearance of humanitie, yet is it very certaine that they are caried away therein with the loue of themſelues, becauſe all haue this naturallie ſo rooted in them, that they will alwaies ſeeke their owne profit rather then the profit of an other, and therefore thinke they are put in this world only to ſerue their owne turne and not their neighbours: yea, they would haue all the world at their commaund if it were poſſible, which Plato alſo wiſely conſidered.

There may be ſome appearance of humanitie euen in the vnregenerate: which yet ſpringe onely from ſelfeloue.

Plato.

From hence proceed deceits, periuries, theftes, robberies, & an infinit other ſuch like wickednesſes. There is no fit remedie then to tame this vnbridled luſt but the knowledge of God only. Now we ſee how the Prophet doth againe eſtabliſh the dominion of Chriſt in the faith and doctrine of the Goſpel, it being the meanes (indeed) without which he doth not ordinarilie gather vs to himſelfe: for thereby he illuminates our vnderſtandings to manifeſt vnto vs the heauenly life, which is nothing elſe (as himſelfe witneſſeth) but to know him to be the only true God, and him whom he hath ſent, Ieſus Chriſt, Iohn 17.3.

Moreouer, the abundance of knowledge is here eloſely compared to that ſmall taſte which God gaue to the ancient people vnder the law. And albeit the Iewes were kept vnder ſuch childiſh rudiments, yet vnto vs hath the perfect light of the heauenlie wiſdome ſhined by the meanes of the Goſpel, as Ieremiah alſo foretold, They ſhall not euery one teach his neighbour, nor euery one his brother, ſaying, Know the Lord, for they ſhall all know me, ſaith the Lord, from the leaſt vnto the greateſt, Ier. 31.34. If ſo be ŷ this fulnes of knowledge then haue taken poſſeſſion in our vnderſtandings, it will purge and cleanſe them frõ all maliciouſnes. This place alſo informes vs what maner of Church there is in the Papacie, where the light of holy doctrine being ſmothered, yea almoſt cleane extinct, their whole religion is, to be blindfolded in a bruttiſh ignorance.

Though we attaine not vnto a perfect knowledge the firſt day: yet we muſt endeuour to profit more and more continually.

Now if it ſo fall out that we haue not a perfect knowledge at the firſt daſh, yet we muſt endeuor day by day to profit more and more, 2. Pet. 3.18. and that in ſuch wiſe, that the fruit thereof may iſſue from this roote. Whence it appeares that the greater part haue profited but very meanly in the ſchoole of Chriſt, when ſo many coſenages, extortions, and violences haue their full ſwinge on all ſides.

Verſ. 10. And in that day the roote of Iſhai which ſhall ſtand vp for a ſigne vnto the people, the nations ſhall ſeeke vnto it, and his reſt ſhall be glorious.

HE returnes againe to ŷ perſon of Chriſt, and repeates the ſame ſimilitude which he tooke vp heretofore in the beginning of this Chapter, to wit, of the roote, or ſprig iſſuing out of the drie ſtock, which had no appearance of any ſap in it. He ſaith then it ſhal come to paſſe that the Gentiles, who in times paſt had the Iewes in abomination, ſhall yet come and doe homage to the King of the Iewes. Now this might ſeeme a thing altogether incredible: and no doubt but this promiſe was a long time derided, becauſe ſuch a change ſhould rather haue been expected when the kingdome ſtood & floriſhed in his full ſtrẽgth then after it was deſtroyed. But needfull it was it ſhould be brought thus low, to the end it might afterwards be exalted; and that the glorie and power of God might hereby be better knowne, then if all things had been in their floriſhing eſtate. For what is he that with the eyes of fleſh could haue apprehended ſuch a height, from a little ſprig that it ſhould be diſcerned of all people, and ſhould draw the eyes of euery one vnto it? He compares it to a ſtandard lifted vp on high: and we know that this was accompliſhed in the publication of the Goſpel, yea much more excellentlie then if Chriſt had ſoared aboue ŷ cloudes. Hereunto appertaines that which is ſaid in S. Iohn, As Moſes lift vp the Serpent in the wilderneſſe, ſo muſt the ſonne of man be lift vp, Iohn. 3.14. Luk. 2.31.32 Numb. 21.9

Chriſt is then ſought when wee run vnto him to obteine ſaluation, as in many places of the ſcripture, where the ſeeking of God, is as much to ſay as to put our whole hope and confidence in him. And therfore the Greekes haue tranſlated, They haue hoped, reſpecting the ſenſe, rather then the ſignification of the word.

As touching that which immediatlie followes, that his reſt ſhall be glorious, all the expoſitors almoſt do expound it of the Sepulcher of Chriſt, taking a part for the whole, becauſe they by and by after referre it vnto his death. And to ſay the truth, the buriall of Chriſt was but an appendance of his death. The ſenſe then according to their opinion ſhould be, that the death of Chriſt which was ignominious before the world, ſhall be full of glorie and maieſtie. But when I conſider all circumſtances more narrowly, the Prophet in this place by this word reſt, ſignifies the Church: as alſo it is ſaid in the Pſalmes, This is my reſt for euer, here will I dwell, Pſal. 132. 14. And thus he decketh the companie of the faithfull with an honorable title, becauſe in them he will haue his perpetuall manſion. Seeing then that the Church at that time was expoſed to mocks and reproches, he promiſeth that it ſhall be brought to a better and more happie eſtate, and ſhall yet againe recouer her firſt beautie. Here then we haue an excellent teſtimonie, which giues vs to vnderſtand, that God will dwell for euer in his Church, although this ſhall not alwaies appeare ſo vnto men.

Verſ. 11. And in the ſame day ſhall the Lord ſtretch forth his hand againe the ſecond time, to poſſeſſe the remnant of his people (which ſhall be left) of Aſſur and of Egypt, and *Pathros, and Ethiopia, and of Elam, and of Shinar, and of Hamath, and of the Iles of the ſea.

*Or, parthe.

BEcauſe the propheſie touching the future glorie of the Church was incredible, hee now declares by what meanes it ſhall bee brought to paſſe; to wit, that God will manifeſt the ſtrength of his hand to performe as it were a famous and memorable act. Moreouer, to confirme the elect people in good hope, hee brings to their remembrance the deliuerance paſt, to the end they might not doubt that God ſhould not bee as well able to deliuer them now, as hee was to deliuer their fathers, who had experience thereof in former time in Egypt. For this word againe, aimes at that, and it is all one as if hee had ſaid, Now alſo will God be the Redeemer of his Church. This hee confirmes by another reaſon; to wit, although it ſeemed that God ſhould deſpiſe his people; yet will hee not be depriued of his inheritance. The ſumme is, that God will take care of the ſaluation of his Church, to the end hee may not be bereaued of his right.

Exod. 12. 31.

Notwithſtanding hee ſpeakes expreſly of the remnant, becauſe this deriuerance ſhould appertaine but to a little handfull of ſeede. Laſtly, hee repeates that which hee had ſaid heretofore; Howſoeuer God ſeparates and ſcatters his Church, yet can it not be that he ſhould wholly reiect it; becauſe it is no leſſe pretious vnto him, then our heritage is deare vnto euerie one of vs. Now he ſpeakes not of the Aſſyrians, which had led the people into captiuitie, but alſo of other nations amongſt whom the Iewes were ſcattered. For after the greater part of the people were carried into Babylon, ſome fled into Ethiopia, others into other regions; becauſe they feared leſt they ſhould be led into the ſame bondage with others. As touching Parthe, in the text it is Pathros: ſome thinke it ſhould be Parthe; and this is probable, although others ſay that it is Arabia the Stony. Vnder the word Elam, he comprehends the Medes, Zocdians, Bactrians, and other Eaſterne people. Shinar, or Ethiopia, is comprehended in Chaldea. By Hamath, ſome vnderſtand Cilicia, and other neighbour regions about Mount Taurus. Vnder this word of the Iles, the Iewes vnderſtand all the regions which are beyond the ſea. For according to their opinion, Greece, Italie, and Spaine are Iles; becauſe the ſea is betweene them and others. We ſee then that the Prophet ſpeakes not onely heere of the deliuerance which was vnder Zorobabel, bu the aimes at a further marke: for the Iewes were not then carried into Egypt, neither into Ethiopia, nor yet into any other regions. This cannot be vnderſtood then of the deliuerance out of Babylon, but ought to be referred to the kingdome of Chriſt, vnder which this deliuerance hath been, and is accompliſhed by the preaching of the Goſpell. Moreouer, we muſt obſerue, that this which is heere mentioned, is a ſpeciall worke of God, and not of men; becauſe hee ſaith, that the Lord ſhall ſtretch out his hand; heerein attributing that to the diuine power of the Lord, which men cannot accompliſh by all their ſtrength.

We are alſo to note, that from the conſideration of the benefits which the Lord hath done for vs in times paſt; wee ought to be the better confirmed in hope for the time to come: ſo as when we call to minde the deliuerance out of Egypt and out of Babylon, wee may boldly conclude, that the Lord is as mightie now as he was then; and that he will no leſſe aſſiſt vs at this day, euen in ſetting vp the Church againe in her primitiue beautie and glory. He can performe the ſame thing the third, the fourth, yea many times, which hee hath done once or twice. Whereas the Prophet calles thoſe whom God deliuers a remnant, let vs learne not to affect a great multitude, but let vs content our ſelues with our ſmall number, and not bee abaſhed although we be but a few. For if ſo be the truth and righteouſnes of God floriſh amongſt vs, we ſhall haue true and ample occaſion giuen vs to reſt therein ſecurely.

Former deliuerances ſhould incourage vs to hope for the like in time to come.

2. Cor. 1. 10.

Multitudes not to be affected, vnleſſe truth and righteouſneſſe doe alſo flouriſh.

Verſ. 12. He ſhall ſet vp a ſigne to the nations, and aſſemble the diſperſed of Iſrael, and gather the ſcattered of Iudah from the foure corners of the world.

THis verſe containes nothing in it but the explication of the former. Now this maner of ſpeech is taken from a ſimilitude, the ſenſe whereof notwithſtanding may be double; to wit, either that the Lord in making the ſigne, will amaze the enemies in ſuch wiſe, as they ſhall not dare to ſtop the paſſages againſt the people which ſhall returne; or rather that hee will ſet vp a ſigne to the poore baniſhed, to the end they ſhould make no difficultie to take their iournie home againe. Beſides, the vſe of this doctrine hath its force amongſt vs euen at this day: for looke how the ſtandard is lifted vp in the Campe, to aſſemble euerie one to his colours, and to hold himſelfe in battel aray; ſo alſo is the ſtandard now ſet vp before vs, to the end all of vs ſhould gather our ſelues together thereunto; that is to ſay, The Goſpell which the Lord hath liſted vp amongſt the Gentiles, and in the which Ieſus Chriſt is preached vnto vs. From hence let vs obſerue, that we cannot be gathered vnto the Lord, vnleſſe wee come vnder this enſigne, and bee vnited vnto him by faith. For he will not acknowledge vs for any of his ſheep, if we be not gathered in from our ſcattering, and that all of vs doe aſſemble our ſelues vnder this banner: as himſelfe alſo ſaith, My ſheepe heare my voyce, and they follow me: Iohn 10. 27. There is a repetition in the word To gather: for he ſhewes how effectuall the calling of God ſhall bee, becauſe becauſe he will ſet his people in their former eſtate, euen as ſoone as he ſhall be pleaſed to make but a ſigne onely.

The word ſcattering, is collectiue, and vnder it he comprehends the Iewes ſcattered here and there. It ſeemes alſo that he alludes (as hee often doth in other places) to one ſelfeſame text of Moſes, where the Lord promiſeth to gather together his people, when they ſhall be ſcattered to the vtmoſt parts of the world, yea euen into the foure corners of the earth: Deut. 30.4. Now this was fulfilled vnder the leading and gouernment of Chriſt: at this day therefore ought wee to hope, that by the meanes of this good Captaine, the poore and deſolate Church ſhall bee reſtored. For otherwiſe there is little hope that this ſmall remnant ſhall bee gathered together, vnleſſe the elect doe bend their eyes toward this enſigne. We ought often therefore to call theſe promiſes to minde, to the end wee being vnderpropped by them, may bee more and more eſtabliſhed and confirmed.

Verſ. 13. The hatred alſo of Ephraim ſhall depart, and the aduerſaries of Iudah ſhall be cut off: Ephraim ſhall not enuie Iudah, neither ſhall Iudah vexe Ephraim.

1 HEere hee promiſeth that there ſhall bee
2 ſuch great tranquillitie in the Church,
3 that the Iſraelites and the Iewes ſhall not waſte themſelues any more by ciuill diſſenſions, neither yet bee moleſted in any ſort by their enemies: alſo, that they ſhall not bee ſubiect to hatred nor enuie, as they were before. Not as if there ſhould no wicked ones at all be found ſtill among them; but that the Lord will roote them out at the laſt. Yet we are eſpecially to obſerue that which he addes touching the pacifications of ciuill hatreds and diſſenſions; to wit, that the children of Abraham ſhall no more moleſt one another, but ſhall be at vnitie in one religion, and in the true feare of God. For it was an odious and deteſtable ſpectacle to ſee them ſo long time ſworne enemies one to another. It is not for nought that he ſhewes the fountaine of diſſenſions; to wit, enuie, which was the cauſe why the ſucceſſours of Abraham did rent one another, when the Tribes of Iudah and Ephraim ſtroue amongſt themſelues for the excellencie. This curſed fire brand enuie, hath kindled all the warres in the world, when as no man will humble himſelfe, nor part with the leaſt iot of his right. In a word, the Lord promiſeth heere, both an outward and an inward peace, which is an excellent and deſireable benefit aboue all things.

Enuie the fountaine of diſſenſions.

But ſome will ſay, that this was neuer yet accompliſhed, and that we haue rather ſeene the contrarie come to paſſe. For as ſoone as the Goſpell beganne to be publiſhed, diuers wars, tumults, and horrible perſecutions followed thereupon; all the world almoſt was in an vprore and ſhaken: and ſince I pray you, what peace hath the Church had within it? Satan by ſowing of his cockle and curſed ſeede, hath ſtirred vp horrible troubles euen amongſt Chriſtians themſelues; ſo as the Church hath had none more dangerous nor deadly enemies, then thoſe that haue been nouriſhed and maintained in her owne lappe.

Obiect.

Anſ. 1 I anſwere, that the Prophet heere comprehends the whole Kingdome of Ieſus Chriſt, and not one age or generation. For 2 in this life wee doe but onely taſte the firſt fruits as it were of this Kingdome. Moreouer, 3 although the Church be vexed with enemies, as well ſtrangers as domeſticall, yet euen in the midſt of them, God ceaſeth not to preſerue and maintaine it: and thus in the end 4 ouerturnes all his enemies. Alſo, this prophecie properly appertaines to the true and lawfull children of Abraham, whom the Lord daily purgeth by afflictions and baniſhments; cauſing them by this meanes to forget all ambition and enuie: for we ſhall not vſually find deſire of vaine glorie amongſt them, who haue been meekened and inſtructed in the ſchoole of Chriſt. Thus then, that which Iſaiah heere promiſeth, hath alreadie beene fulfilled in ſome part, and is accompliſhed euery day. But we muſt goe on ſtill in theſe exerciſes, and haue fightings daily, as well within as without, vntill wee obtaine that eternall peace which wee ſhall inioy hereafter, with all felicitie in the Kingdome of God.

Verſ. 14. But they ſhall flee vpon the ſhoulders of the Philiſtims toward the weſt: they ſhall ſpoile them of the Eaſt together: Edom and Moab ſhall be the ſtretching out of their hands, and the children of Ammon in their obedience.

HIs meaning is, that the Lord will alſo aſſiſt his people by another means; to wit, that he will triumph ouer his enemies, & ſubdue them vnder his power. For as he hath hitherto ſpoken of the ſafetie of the Church; ſo now alſo he declares, that ſhee ſhall obtaine victorie ouer her enemies. Now hee makes mention of the nations againſt whom the Iewes had continuall warres: the Philiſtims 1 aſſailed and moleſted them on the one ſide, on the other ſide they had the Ammonites and 2 Moabites, by whom they were conioyned both by conſanguinitie and neighbour hood. And 3 on the other ſide were the Idumæans, who were not withheld by any neereneſſe of kin- Gen. 36.1. red whatſoeuer, from being the ſworne ene- 8.9. mies of the Iewes; they came of Eſau the brother of Iacob, the remembrance whereof ought to haue turned them from all hatred and rancour. And therefore the Lord promiſeth to his Church, that although ſhe ſhould haue enemies, that yet notwithſtanding by ſuffering vnder them, ſhee ſhall conquer and bring them vnder in the end.

The Church ouercomes by ſuffering.

The ſtretching forth of the hands, ſignifies the domination which the Church ſhall obtaine ouer her enemies: for ordinarily the hand, signifies power, and the Hebrues vse the phrase, To stretch out the hand, to subdue this or that. So as it is said in the Psalme, I will set his hand in the sea, and his right hand in the floods, Psal.89.26. To stretch out the hand then signifies power to rule and gouerne; and contrariwise he also addes the obedience which the enemies shall yeeld vnto her.

The Iewes who dreame of an earthlie kingdome and Messiah, interpret all these things carnallie, and draw them to I wot not what outward power, whereas they should rather be esteemed according to the state and condition of Christes kingdome. True it is that the effect of this propheſie was seene to be fulfilled in some part, when the Lord brought back the Iewes from captiuitie, at which time he raised them vp into a good estate in despite of all their neigbour enemies: but the faithfull were to expect a more excellent victorie, which in the end they obteined by the preaching of the Gospel. For albeit we must fight continuallie vnder the crosse, yet we ouercome our enemies notwithstanding: 1 first, when being deliuered from vnder the tyrannie of the diuell & vnbeleeuers, we are called and maintained in freedome by Iesus Christ, that the flesh with all his lusts may be 2 brought vnder: secondly, when by meanes Luk.21.19. hereof we liue to him, and possesse our soules in patience, quietly with a meeke spirit bearing whatsoeuer befalles vs. We also heape Rom.12.20. coles of fire vpon the heads of our enemies, and by this meanes likewise we obteine victorie ouer them and ouer all their iniuries and reproches, vnder which it seemes we are subiect.

Vers. 15. The Lord also shall vtterlie destroy the tongue of the Egyptian sea, and with his mightie wind shall lift vp his hand ouer the riuer, and shall smite him in his seauen streames, and cause men to walke therein with shooes.

HE meanes nothing else in this verse but to shew that the Lord by his admirable power will open a way vnto his people which seemed to be shut vp before. Now he speakes by a figure, for one side of the sea is called a tongue, because when the sea enters vpō both lands, and occupies one part, it seemes like a tongue thrust out. He speakes of the Egyptian sea then, yea of Egypt it selfe, which he yet more plainly declares hereafter. But he principallie names the sea and the riuers, because these be fortresses of the regions and the closings in of all passages.

Vpon the riuer.] No doubt but he meanes the riuer Nilus, which watereth and compasseth all Egypt in many places, by meanes whereof they might haue shut vp the passage before the people returning into Iudea. I doubt not but the word Ruach is here taken for wind, although these words of the Lord be ioyned therewith: for all the winds are the Lords, seeing he gouernes and guides them as it pleaseth him, and especiallie a vehement whirlwind raised vp miraculouslie is so taken when this word is vsed.

Now he alludes to the first deliuerance of the Church whē it was brought out of Egypt. For whē it pleased God to giue them passage, he dried vp the sea by the violence and force of the winds, Exod. 14.21. I grant that God needed not the help of winds, because he was able to haue done it of himselfe: but when he vseth ordinarie meanes, first from thence 1 wee learne that all creatures are readie to yeeld obedience vnto him. And howsoeuer they haue their naturall course, yet are they all in his hands, so as he will turne their force and violence which way soeuer it shall please him. For example, when the wind ariseth, it takes his beginning of a naturall cause: all the winds also haue their seuerall proprieties: the south wind is moyst, the north wind cold, and the effects which proceed from them are altogether alike: for the south wind makes the bodies moist, and the north wind dries them. The Lord shewes by admirable miracles that he hath a superior power, and an ouerruling hand farre aboue these naturall causes, so as nature (that is to say, the disposition of things, as prophane men haue imagined) ouerrules not, but he only. Secondly he shewes, that when he thinks good 2 he changeth the nature and order of things, to the end he may be acknowledged the author of them, because such a change doth the better set forth his power and domination. This is the cause why Isaiah speakes not of the wind alone, but of the wind of the Lord, to the end we might know that the wind is not raised vp by chance, but is directed by the hand of the Lord.

What we haue to learne from Gods working by ordinary meanes.

And he shall smite him in his seuen streames.] Others translate floods, and expound it thus, He will diuide Nilus into seuen parts. Now although this exposition be receiued of all, yet I approue not of it; and as I take it, they haue failed here by forgetfulnes rather then by ignorance, for I hold them learned men notwithstanding, and such as are well exercised in reading the ancient writers. It is well enough knowne by histories, that Nilus hath seuen principall mouthes; others were called false mouthes, because they had no name. Look then how many armes or mouths it had, so many streames and riuers it made as it seemes; and his riuers would haue been so many lets and impediments to slacken the voyage. Now Isaiah did purposely name the, because of the great fame of this flood. Moreouer, although this flood was deepe, yet notwithstanding he saith, it shall be so dried vp, that one shall not neede to pull off his shoes to passe ouer it: which yet they must needs haue done if there had been neuer so little water remaining.

The Prophet then vnder these borowed speeches meanes nothing else but to certifie them, that no power whatsoeuer shall be able to let God, when it pleaseth him to deliuer his people out of captiuitie. He touched the historie of the first deliuerance, to the end they might know that the same should now befall them which had hapned to their fathers in times paſt. This is the cauſe why he doth thus paint it forth before their eyes, becauſe the meanes of this deliuerance ſhould not appeare. For this promiſe ſo barely publiſhed, would not haue entred into their hearts ſo effectually as this notable example did, which was thus propounded and ſet before them.

Verſ. 16. And there ſhall be a path to the remnant of his people, which are left of Aſſur; like as it was vnto Iſrael in the day that hee came vp out of the land of Egypt.

THis verſe containes no new matter, but opens that further which went before; to wit, that the people ſhall feele the verie ſame powerfull hand of God in their deliuerance out of Babylon, as they had formerly proued in their deliuerance out of Egypt. He opened a way thorow the ſeas, alſo thorow a waſte deſert: and laſtly, thorow the midſt of Iordan: euen thus will hee make way againe, Iſaiah ſaith, for his people by the ſame admirable meanes. Now what the Lord hath once done, let vs expect the ſame againe for the time to come; and let vs to this end conſider the antient hiſtories. This alſo ought to bee referred to the laſt deliuerance of the Church, when wee altogether ſhall be fully deliuered out of all miſeries and calamities: ſo as howſoeuer the things which are taught vs concerning the reſurrection and eternall life, ſeemes incredible vnto vs, and that the meanes thereof appeares not vnto vs as yet; let vs know notwithſtanding, that it ſhall be eaſie with God to finde both the way and meanes. THE XII. CHAPTER.

Verſ. 1. *And thou ſhalt ſay in that day; O Lord, I will praiſe thee: though thou waſt angry with me, thy wrath is turned away, and thou comfortedſt me.

*Or, thou wilt comfort.

IAiah now exhorts all the faithfull to render thankes to God: although the exhortation hath alſo this drift; to wit, that they ſhould giue the greater credit vnto Gods promiſe. For hee hath ſealed it vp as it were vnto them by this exhortation; to the end they ſhould aſſure themſelues that it is vnmoueable. As alſo that they ſhould not imagine that the Prophet meant to feede them vp with a vaine hope, when hee put this forme of thankſgiuing as it were into their mouthes: which thankes, they could not haue giuen, vnleſſe the occaſion thereof had been both ſure and ſtedfaſt. In this ſong alſo hee ſhewes why it is that God doth good to his Church; to wit, that the memorie of his bleſſed name might be magnified; not that he needes any of our praiſes, but becauſe this is profitable vnto our ſelues. For we ought diligently to conſider, what honour he doth vs when he vouchſafes to ſerue himſelfe of our indeuours, in the magnifying and publiſhing his glorious name; wee notwithſtanding being ſuch vnprofitable, yea altogether vnprofitable ſeruants. The Prophet in this ſong addreſſeth himſelfe in generall to all the people, euen as if hee ſpake to one man: for it was requiſite they ſhould be ioyned together, as if they had been but one. According to this example, our coniunction ought to be ſo ſtrait, that there ſhould bee but one ſoule and one mouth: Rom. 15. 6. eſpecially if wee meane that our prayers and thankſgiuings ſhould bee acceptable before God.

This is noted from the word Thou, in the text.

Though thou waſt angry.] The ſumme of this ſong is, that howſoeuer God was iuſtly prouoked to anger againſt this people, yet notwithſtanding ſatisfying himſelfe with one little ſtroke of the rod, he will eaſilie be appeaſed. Now becauſe the particle Ci, is often put for ſhewing of the cauſe, ſome tranſlate; O Lord I will praiſe thee: for being angry againſt me, thou wert by and by appeaſed. But becauſe it is ſometime taken otherwiſe, I haue followed that which I thought to agree beſt to this place. The faithfull then doe firſt acknowledge their fault: ſecondly, they attribute their deliuerance out of their miſeries, vnto the mercy of God. Now becauſe the verbs are put in the future tence, one may alſo expound, The chaſtiſement wherewith thou ſmiteſt me for a time, ſhall be no impediment that thou ſhouldeſt not pitie mee at the laſt, and giue mee matter of ioy and conſolation. Whether of the expoſitions ſoeuer we receiue, this ſentence ought to be diligently obſerued: for as ſoone as our hearts are touched with the feeling of Gods wrath, wee are ſollicited vnto deſpaire; ſo as if the danger be not ſpeedily preuented, wee ſhall be ouerwhelmed before we are aware. Satan alſo tempts vs euery kind of way, and aſſaieth all meanes whereby hee may put vs out of heart. So much the more neede haue wee then to bee well armed with this doctrine; that howſoeuer we feele the wrath of God, yet we may reſolue with our ſelues, that it ſhall not indure long: but that hee will ſend vs ſome conſolation after he hath chaſtened vs. The ſumme of this ſong.

But if we haue deliuerance, then let vs remember that the afflictions are ended: not becauſe we haue ſatisfied the iuſtice of God, as if we had merited it at his hands; but becauſe he beares with our weakeneſſe, euen of his fatherly louing kindneſſe. This confeſſion Afflictions no ſatisfactions of Gods iuſtice.

therefore appertaines properly vnto the faithfull and elect: for although the afflictions of the faithfull & the wicked are alike in appearance, yet is there great difference betweene them. For the wrath of God against the reprobate is perpetuall: and the plagues which they receiue are the tastes and beginnings of their eternall destruction: neither haue they any promise of refreshing or comfort But the faithfull feele by experience, that the wrath of God endures not long, and doe therefore cheere vp their hearts with good hope and assurance; because they know that God will be mercifull vnto them in the end: which hope certifies them, that hee chastiseth them not so much for their sinnes, as rather to bring them to repentance, that they should not perish with the world.

Great difference betweene the afflictions of the godly and the wicked, though they seeme alike in outward appearance.

1. Cor. 11. 31.

Vers. 2. Behold God is my saluation; I will trust and will not feare: for the Lord God is my strength and song, he *is also become my saluation.

*Or, shall be.

ALthough wee ought to apprehend the helpe of God in the midst of afflictions by faith, yet Isaiah speakes heere of that knowledge which is grounded vpon experience: for he endites a song of reioycing, when God by outward testimonies gaue them to vnderstand, that he was pacified towards his Church. Heereunto appertaines the particle behold, because the bright and shining light of Gods countenance, which had for a time bin hidden from them, did now shine againe vpon them; and that so apparently, that it might almost be pointed out with the finger. Now inasmuch as wee are terrified in afflictions, so as it cannot be auoided, but ý the conscience of sinnes will ouershadow our vnderstandings; no otherwise then as if the helpe of God were farre from vs, or did nothing at all appertaine vnto vs; the Prophet doth heere describe what a change there is in the affections, when God hath once reconciled vs vnto himselfe. But this prophecie extends it selfe principally vnto the comming of Christ, in which time God caused his saluation to appeare after a more speciall manner.

This prophetical song extends it selfe principally to the comming of Christ.

He addes afterwards, that when wee are once well resolued that our saluation dependeth vpon God, that the same is a stedfast foundation of full assurance, and a singular remedie to appease feares. For without this wee must needes tremble, be still in vnquietnesse and perplexities, and miserably tossed to and fro. Hence wee gather, that confidence proceedes from faith, as the effect from the cause. For by faith we feele that our saluation is in God: from thence followes a quiet and peaceable estate in the conscience: but where faith is not, there the conscience cannot be in quiet. Let vs know then that we haue well profited in faith, when we are furnished with this confidence which the Prophet heere describes.

Confidence proceedes from faith, as the effect from the cause.

We haue well profited in faith, when we are furnished with this confidence.

Moreouer, this confidence ought so to beare rule in our hearts, that it ought to put all feare and horror vnto flight: not that wee can be vtterly exempt from all feare and disquietnesse, but because assurance will beare away the victorie at the last. Yet notwithstanding wee must remember what I haue said; namely, that the Prophet heere sets forth the cheerefulnesse which the faithfull inioy, when God is fauourable vnto them; whereas in former times they were almost ouerwhelmed vnder the weight of temptation.

Confidence ought so to beare sway in our hearts as to put all feares to flight.

For the Lord is my strength.] He more cleerely and in a more especiall manner expresseth, that the faithfull shall haue good occasion to sing, because they shall know by experience, that their strength was in their God: for the truth is, that their deliuerance was an excellent proofe of the power of God. But seeing Isaiah recounts not heere the benefit of one day onely, but extolles the worke which God determined in himselfe, to continue vntill the comming of Christ; it thereupon followes, that the praises of God are not sounded forth as is meete, vnlesse it be by them who feeling their weaknesse, doe onely seeke vnto God, that hee would furnish them with strength and power. For it is not said heere, that hee should be a part, or the stay of our strength, but that hee is our full and perfect strength. The reason is, because wee haue no more strength and power, then that wee receiue from him. And in this regard also the faithfull say, that he is their song; because they are thus liberally dealt withall by him, to the end they should exercise themselues in thanksgiuings. Whence we gather, that the beginning of ioy proceedes from the fauour of God, and that the end of that ioy is the sacrifice of praise. Truely the hearts of the faithfull ought to bee so disposed to patience, that they should not cease to praise God euen when they see tokens of his frowning countenance: yet in the time of peace and prosperitie, they haue much more cause to open their mouthes, to the end they may sing forth ý benefits of God with a loud voice.

Who they be that are fit to praise God.

Psal. 50. 23.

We ought to praise God euen then when we see manifest tokens of his wrath, much more when wee perceiue signes of his fauor.

But because the wicked reioyce euen whilest they despise God, and besot themselues like brute beasts with a false ioy, rocking their consciences asleepe therein, neuer awaking themselues to praise God, iustly doth our Sauiour Christ curse their ioy; Woe bee to you, saith hee, that now laugh, for you shall weepe: your ioy shall be turned into heauinesse, and your laughter into gnashing of teeth. In the end of the verse, if any be pleased to retaine the preterperfect tence of the verbe, the sense will be, that the faithfull sing ioyfully, because God hath saued them. The sense will also agree very well in the future tence; to wit, that God hath not deliuered his chosen once onely, but that hee will also continue the same vnto the very end: for the faithfull ought not to stay themselues in the beholding of the present benefit alone, but to stretch forth their hope to the continuall progresse of Gods fauour.

Luke 6. 25.

Vers. 3. Therefore with ioy shall yee draw waters out of the wels of saluation.

*Or, out of the Sauiour.

BY this verse he confirmes that which we haue touched before, to wit, that this Chapter

This ſong is a ſeale to confirme the promiſe made touching the peoples deliuerance.

Chapter is as it were a ſeale to confirme the promiſe made touching the deliuerance of the people; as if he ſhould ſay, The ſaluation of the Lord is ſet before you as a liuing fountaine, out of which you may draw waters in abundance. This ſimilitude is very fit, for as there is nothing more neceſſarie for this preſent life then water, ſo nothing troubles and diſquiets vs more nor goes ſo neere vs as the want thereof doth. Thus by a figure called Synecdoche (when a part is taken for the whole) he ſhewes that whatſoeuer is neceſſarie for the ſuſtentation of life is giuen vs freely out of the meere bountie of God. And becauſe we are barren & emptie of all good things, it is no maruell that he compares the 1 mercie of God to a fountaine which ſatisfies
2 them that are thirſtie; refreſheth thoſe that
3 are parched with heate; and recreates thoſe that are wearie and laden.

Of the ſauiour.] This word ſauiour agrees much better heere then if he had ſaid, out of the fountaines of God. For wee haue farre greater cauſe of conſolation when we know him himſelfe is the author of our ſaluation. The Prophet therefore hath appropriated this epithite according to the circumſtance of the place. Now if this promiſe comprehends vnder it the whole kingdome of Chriſt, wee for our parts ought alwayes to applie the ſame vnto our vſe. Let vs know then that the goodnes of God is heere offred and ſet before vs, to the end we might ſatisfie our ſelus to the full therewith. For we ought (as Dauid ſaith) to be as the parched ground, gaping for thirſt, Pſal.143.6. and to aſpire vnto theſe waters of the ſauiour. Now this goodnes of God is wonderfull and incredible, when he permits not that our deſire ſhould be in vaine, but freely offers and preſents a fountaine vnto vs, out of the which we may draw waters in abundance. Moreouer, Ieſus Chriſt is this fountaine, and in him we haue the participation of all Gods benefits; for as S. Iohn ſaith, we draw all out of his fulneſſe, Iohn 1.16. It remaineth then that wee goe directlie vnto him as ſoone as our pouertie and want preſſeth vs.

Verſ. 4. And yee ſhall ſay in that day, praiſe the Lord, call vpon his name, declare his works among the people, make mention of them, for his name is exalted.

HE not only exhorts them one by one to praiſe God, and to giue him thanks, but would alſo that they ſhould ſtirre vp others with them to doe the like: And as he had ſayd before, many people ſhall goe and ſhall ſay, Come, and let vs goe vp to the mountaine of the Lord, prouoking one another by mutuall exhortations to imbrace the pure worſhip of God: ſo after he hath commanded euery one of them to render thanks to God, he would now alſo that they ſhould incite one another to the ſame dutie. He ſhewes then that this ought not to be ſaid only to one, but to all; and not only in one time, but for their whole life. Now in a briefe ſumme he ſhewes how God is rightlie honored when he commands vs to call vpon him, and to reioyce in none but in him only. For this cauſe alſo the holy ſcripture by the word Inuocation, comprehends often times vnder it the whole ſeruice of God, vſing therein a part for the whole: for by prayer wee ſhew the truſt that wee haue in God; and this indeede he requires of vs aboue all things. I alſo thinke that prayer is ioined with praiſe, that the Prophet might comprehend the whole ſeruice of God.

Chap.2.3.

Make mention &c.] His meaning is that this deliuerance ſhall be ſo excellent a work, that it ought not to be hidden from any corner, but publiſhed thorowout the whole world. I grant that he would haue the Iewes to acknowledge this in the firſt place, but after he cauſed all people to haue the knowledge of it. And this exhortation whereby the Iewes ſhewed their good will, was as a preamble to the preaching of the Goſpell which was afterwards publiſhed. For as the Iewes magnified the fauor which God had ſhewed them amongſt the Medes and Perſians and other nations neere about them; ſo alſo after Chriſt once appeared, they ought to haue been heraults to publiſh the name of God thorowout all the quarters of the world. Hereby it appeares with what zeale all the faithfull ought to be moued, namely, that they cauſe the goodnes of God to be manifeſted vnto all, to the end the ſeruice of God may be imbraced. Now we ought then eſpeciallie to be moued with ſuch an affection when we haue been deliuered from ſome great danger, as out of the iawes of the diuell, and from vnder the tyrannie of eternall death.

Verſ. 5. Sing vnto the Lord, for he hath done excellent things: this is knowne in all the world.

HE goes on ſtil with his exhortation, ſhewing vs from what affection this prayſe ought to proceed; for he teacheth that it is our dutie to publiſh the goodnes of God in all places: and yet muſt we not exhort nor prouoke others to go forward, and our ſelues in the meane time to ſtand ſtill with our armes acroſſe, but we ought to leade them the way by our example: for there is nothing more abſurd then to ſee them ſlothfull and neghgent, which prouoke others to prayſe God. Now in ſaying that God hath done excellent things, he thereby ſignifies that there is great cauſe to ſing. Neither in deed would the Lord haue them to ſing forth his praiſes vpon no ground; but he gaue them ample and very good cauſe thereof when he deliuered his people out of that extreme hard bondage. Now we haue alreadie ſaid that we muſt not reſtraine this ſong to one moment of time, but that it ought to be extended euen vnto the whole kingdome of Chriſt. This worke therefore is excellent indeed when God ſent his Sonne, by whom he hath reconciled vs vnto himſelfe, and hath deſtroyed the dominion of death and of the diuell. If wee then conſider wel of this worke of our deliuerance as we ought, we ſhall haue exceeding abundant matter giuen vs to praise God. When he saith in the last member, that this is knowne in all the world; hee therein toucheth the calling of the Gentiles, and confirmes that which hath been alreadie said; to wit, that this worke shall be such as it ought not to be concealed in some one corner; but to be published thorowout the whole world.

*Or, reioyce and sing.

Vers. 6. Cry out and shout, O inhabitant of Zion: for great is the holy one of Israel in the midst of thee.*

HEagaine exhorts the faithfull to reioyce in God, and therewithall shewes what is the true reioycing, and whereupon it is grounded. For we can haue no felicitie, but when God dwelles in the midst of vs: without this, our life is poore and miserable, although wee had the abundance of all other benefits and riches whatsoeuer. So then if our hearts bee ioyned to this treasure, this felicitie will draw all our senses easily vnto it. He calles God holy, to the end we might know that he will make himselfe felt of vs when he dwelles with vs: that is to say, wee shall not onely reuerence his Maiestie, wherewith wee are by and by ouerwhelmed; but that we shall be also fully assured that hee hath a fatherly care ouer vs, albeit wee be separate from the rest of the whole world. For he calles him the holy one by the effect; because by gathering vs vnder his wings, and sauing vs by his grace, he sanctifies vs as a thing consecrated for his owne vse. And therefore if God be with vs, the feeling of his gratious presence will fill our hearts with ioy vnspeakeable. By reioycing and singing, he signifies, that when God displayeth his power in the midst of vs, wee haue occasion to reioyce greatly. Also, speaking directly to the inhabitants of Zion, he shewes that all are not capable of so great a benefit: and hee therewithall closely exhorts vs to perseuere in the vnitie of faith, that being knit vnto the Church, we may reioyce with this happie and blessed ioy.

No felicitie but where God dwels.

From the first Chapter hitherto, the Prophet hath denounced iudgement against the two Kingdomes of Iudah and Israel: from the beginning of the Chapter following, to the 24. the Prophet foretelles what horrible calamities should befall the enemies of the Church. And thus God iudgeth his owne house first, as Peter speakes, 1. Pet. 4. 17.

THE XIII. CHAPTER.

Vers. 1. The burden of Babel, which Isaiah the sonne of Amoz did see.

Seuen reasons shewing the cause why God caused the ruine of the Churches enemies to be foretold.

FRom this Chapter vnto the 24. the Prophet foretelles the grieuous and horrible calamities which should befall the Nations and Countries then knowne to the Iewes; either because they were neighbours vnto them, or else in regard that they had traffique or leagues with them.

1 And this he doth vpon good reasons: for when diuers changes happened, some thought that God did sport himselfe as it were, and tooke pleasure to bring base things to confusion: others thought that all things were guided by a blind violence of fortune; of which profane histories giue sufficient testimonie: and verie few there were who could be resolued that these casuall mishappes were ordained and gouerned by the counsell of God. For no one thing is so hardly beaten into mens heads as this, namely, that the world is gouerned by the prouidence of God. Many indeed will confesse this with their mouth, but the number of them is verie small which haue it truely engrauen in their hearts. We neede but one little puffe of wind to trouble vs, and behold we are vndone: then fall wee to searching the causes of it, as if this depended vpon the will of men. What will we doe then, when all the world is in an vproare, and that all things are so changed in diuers places, that it seemes they must needes shiuer into peeces? Well, we see then it is very profitable that Isaiah and the rest of the Prophets should speake of such calamities, to the end that all might vnderstand, that they come not to passe but by the secret and wonderfull counsell of God.

2 For if they had prefixed no prophecie touching this matter, things being thus suddenly confused, it might easilie haue troubled and appalled the hearts of the faithfull. But when they knew long time before that this should come to passe, they had therein a mirrour wherein to behold Gods prouidence touching the things that happened.

3 After that Babylon was taken, vse and experience taught them, that those things which they had learned in times past from the mouth of the Prophets, had not been foretold at random nor in vaine. Notwithstanding, there was an other cause why the Lord commanded that the ruine of Babylon and other places with it was foretold: not that the Babylonians had any profit at all by these prophecies, neither yet the other Nations, as though these writings came to them.

4 Another cause then was this, God meant by this consolation to asswage the sorow of the faithfull, lest they shold grow out of hert, as if their estate had bin worse then that of ỹ heathen, then, if they ſhould haue ſeene them eſcape the hand of God altogether without punithment. For if ſo be the monarchie of Babylon ſhould haue continued ſafe, the Iewes would not only haue thought they had ſerued the Lord in vaine, and that the couenant which he had contracted with Abraham had been to no purpoſe, ſeeing ſtrangers and wicked men were better dealt withall then the elect people of God: but they might alſo haue entred into a worſe ſuſpition, to wit, that God had fauored theſe curſed theeues, who trod all iuſtice and equitie vnder their feet by their robberies and ſeditions; truely they might by and by haue thought either ỳ God

1 had had no care of his people, or elſe that he
2 wanted power to ſuccor them in their need;
3 or that all things were turned vpſide downe by the confuſed mouing of fortune. To the end then they ſhould not be too much appalled, nor become vtterlie deſperate, the Prophet preuents this by the conſolation of this propheſie, ſhewing therein that Babylon alſo ſhall be puniſhed.

6 Moreouer this compariſon did admoniſh them how grieuous the chaſtiſement ſhould be, which they of ſet purpoſe had pulled down vpon their owne heads: for if God threaten the vnbeleeuers and prophane nations ſo ſharplie, who yet haue erred in darknes, how much more ſeuere ought his anger to be againſt his people, who had wittinglie rebelled againſt him? Iuſt it is that the ſeruant which knew his maſters will and did it not, ſhould be beaten with more heauie ſtripes. When God then denounceth ſuch rough puniſhments againſt poore blind wretches, he therein did ſet a looking-glaſſe before the Iewes (who had been trained vp in the law) what chaſtiſement they had deſerued.

Luk. 12.47.

7 And yet the chiefe marke that Iſaiah aimes at in theſe propheſies, is to ſhew the Iewes how deare and pretious their ſaluation was in Gods eyes, when they ſaw that he tooke their cauſe into his owne hand, and executed vengeance vpon the wrongs which had been done them.

When God corrects, he alwais begins with his owne.

Now in the beginning the Prophet ſpake of the deſtruction and waſting of the kingdomes of Iuda and Iſrael (as we haue ſeene) which was to come, becauſe iudgement muſt firſt begin at the houſe of God, 1. Pet. 4. 17. for the Lord hath a ſpeciall care of his owne, and chiefly regards them. Wherefore euen as often as we reade theſe propheſies, let vs learne to applie them to our vſe. True it is that the Lord doth not by piecemeale foretell all things which come to paſſe at this day in kingdomes and amongſt nations, and yet notwithſtanding hath he not reſigned vp the adminiſtration of the world, which himſelfe keepeth in his owne hand, to another. When we then ſee the ruin of cities, the calamities which befall nations, and the change of kingdomes, let the things aforeſaid come vnto our minds, to the end we may humble our ſelues vnder Gods ſcourges, and learne to be wiſe by other mens coſts, and crie vnto the Lord for comfort in our afflictions.

Verſ. 1. The burden.] As touching this word in gen. which we ſhall meete ſo often withall, I will brieflie ſhew how we are to vnderſtand it. When the Prophets meane to denounce any aduerſitie, they vſuallie vſe this word burden, that the people might know how no aduerſitie ſhould happen which the Lord himſelfe ſhould not lay vpon them, euen as a burden or fardle is laid vpon mens ſhoulders. Now in regard that the wickednes and inflexiblenes of the people conſtreined the Prophets to ſpeake inceſſantlie of Gods ſcourges, thence it came to paſſe by a common flout or deriding maner of ſpeech, that the Iewes gaue this name of burden to all the propheſies, as it appeareth in the 23. of Ier. verſ. 36. where the Lord ſharplie rebukes them, becauſe by this flouting kind of ſpeech they not only diffamed his word, but alſo made it odious and contemptible. What is vnderſtood by this word burden. 1

Moreouer this word ſhewes, that God ſends all calamities and afflictions to the end euerie one may beare the puniſhment of his owne ſinne. He expreſly ſhewes, that that which he was to threaten was reuealed vnto him by a heauenly viſion, to the end this authoritie might put all diſcourſes of fleſhlie wiſdome to ſilence. It was a thing no doubt hard to be beleeued, that a Monarchie ſo beautifull, and abounding with ſo great riches, could be ouerthrowne by any meanes. In regard therefore that ſo great a power might not dazell their eyes, the Prophet brings them to the truth of the heauenly oracle, to the end they might by faith vnderſtand that iudgement of God which they were not able to comprehend by ſenſe. 2

Verſ. 2. Lift vp a ſtandard vpon the hie mountaine: lift vp the voice vnto them that wag the hand, that they may go into the gates of the nobles.

THere is a ſimilitude in the word mountaine, becauſe it is ſpoken to Babylon, which (as we know) was ſeated vpon a plaine: but he ſets it as it were vpon an hie place like a fortreſſe mounted vp aboue all peoples, and that in regard of the Monarchie. Vnleſſe any had rather take this word indefinitly: as if he ſhould ſay, that whē the ſtandard ſhall be lifted vp, they ſhall runne thither from farre cōuntries, becauſe it will draw people vnto it from all parts by the ſight of it. I take this latter ſenſe to be the moſt probable; but I thought it not amiſſe to ſet downe that firſt which was commonly receiued. 2

Notwithſtanding, this might ſeeme ridiculous, that the Prophet ſhould heere lay a commandement vpon the creatures, as vpon his ſubiects; were it not that he was taught to doe ſo of God, and was furniſhed as it were with his authoritie. For a priuate man heere commands the Medes and Perſians; hee calles armies, he bids them diſplay the banner, ſound the trumpet to prepare vnto battel. In this place then wee haue to conſider the Maieſtie of God, in whoſe name he ſpeakes; and alſo the vertue and efficacie which is alwaies ioyned to his word. Wee often meete with theſe Doctrine.

kindes of speech in the Prophets, to the end we might know that God threatens nothing by his seruants, the execution whereof is not at hand. Isaiah might haue spoken more simply, and in plainer termes might haue told them, that the Medes and Persians shall come, and breake open the gates of Babylon, how strong and inuincible soeuer they seemed to be. But these exclamations haue much greater vehemencie in them, when hee not onely threatens war, as taking to himselfe the person of an Herald; but with soueraigne authoritie, commands the Medes and Persians to come, as if they were souldiers vnder his pay. Besides, he not onely teacheth that they shall bee readie when God shall onely make a signe vnto them, because they shall be pricked forward by his secret instinct: but being sent of God to denounce the ruine of Babylon, he attributes the effect of so incredible a thing to his owne voice. The summe is, that when God hath once spoken, we neede make no doubt but that his word shall be accomplished.

This is also worthy our obseruation, that he speakes to the Medes and Persians, and yet names thē not: and this hath much greater vehemency in pointing them forth with the finger: as when we say, This man, and that man. This manner of speech serues to confirme the prophecie, when he shewes things which were far off, as being present. When he saith; Shake the hand, and they shall enter: his meaning is, that the Medes and Persians shall no sooner set forward at Gods commandement, but they shall haue an open and easie way to march, without any impediment. Now although the Hebrewes call Princes, gracious Lords, and bountifull, (as our Lord Iesus Christ also giues them this title in the Gospell) notwithstanding it rather seemes that the Prophet speakes of the excellent power whereof the Babylonians boasted. For they were furnished with multitudes of people, and all preparations for war, aboue any others: so as it was a thing incredible vnto them, that they should euer be ouercome. But the Prophet declares that nothing shall bee able to let, that God should not prepare the way, and giue passage to the enemies.

Vers. 3. I haue commanded them that I haue sanctified: and I haue called the mightie to my wrath, and them that reioyce in my glory.

HEere the Prophet brings in the Lord speaking and declaring his Commandements. He calles the Medes and Persians his sanctified: that is to say, those which hee had prepared. For the verbe To sanctifie, is diuersly taken: sometimes it is referred to the spirit of regeneration, which is peculiarly giuen to the elect of God. Sometimes also it signifies to set apart, or prepare: which signification is the most fitting to this place. Now all those whom the Lord creates, hee also appoints to some certaine vse; and scatters not men here and there vpon the earth at randome, to range whithersoeuer they think good: but he gouernes them by his secret counsell, orders and moderates the violences of the reprobates, so as hee moues them at his pleasure, this way or that way; and then represseth and pulles them in short when hee listeth. And therefore he calles them sanctified, whom hee hath set apart, and prepared for his seruice, howsoeuer they bee no whit aware of it.

Whence wee are taught, to attribute and referre all the changes in this world, to the secret counsell of God. In this place also wee haue a meruailous consolation; to wit, that the wicked shall be able to doe nothing but that which is decreed of God, let them enterprise what they will. Where hee immediately addes, that he hath called them; it is much more then to command: which hee puts in the first place. For his meaning is, that the enemies shall not onely rouze vp themselues at the signe which God shall giue them, but at his expresse commandement: euen as if I should call one to come vnto mee, and hee should forthwith follow me. He shewes then that Babylon shall be destroyed by the Medes and Persians, no otherwise then if they should yeelde obedience to the call of God. For although their ambition, pride, and crueltie, was the motiue (touching themselues) which prouoked them to the warre; yet God fitted them thereunto without their priuitie, that they might bee the executioners of his iudgement.

Doctrine

Vers. 4. The noise of a multitude in the mountaines like a great people: a tumultuous voice of the Kingdomes of the Nations gathered together: the Lord of hostes numbreth the host of the battel.

HE now addes a more liuely description, by which he sets the things themselues as it were before their sight, because the Prophets contented not to speake only, vnlesse therewithall they did euen plainely represent the things wherof they spake; for words barely and coldly pronounced after a common maner, moue not so much; neither doe they touch mens hearts so to the quick as figuratiue speeches doe, which represent the liuely image of things. It is then as if the Prophet should say, You now heare a man speake, but know ye that this voice shall haue such great efficacie that by the very sound thereof nations shall be moued, peoples shall make a noyse, and a great sound, for the great multitudes of them; yea, they shall cast forth fearefull cries, and all to bring Babylon to ruin. This cry then shall haue such force, and that after my death, as if that which I now threaten were presentlie before your eyes.

By this therefore we see of how great efficacie the word of God is, when all creatures both in heauen & in earth yeeld obedience vnto it. So much the more then ought we to be confirmed in this doctrine, seeing nothing came came to paſſe which was not foretold long time before. This is the reaſon why he affirmes in the latter end of the verſe, that God will aſſemble diuers nations together vnder his conduct: and howſoeuer they ſhall haue no meaning at all to execute thoſe correctiõs which he hath ordained, yet ſhall they do nothing but by his appointmẽt, euen as if ſome Captaine amongſt vs ſhould muſter or ſet his ſouldiers in array.

Verſ. 5. They come from a farre countrey, from the end of heauen: euen the Lord with the weapons of his wrath to deſtroy the whole land.

*Or, veſſels, or inſtrumẽts.

HE yet more fullie confirmes that which I ſaid erewhile, to wit, that the preparations of warre come not out of the earth nor by hap hazard: for albeit men by their luſts raiſe vp thoſe troubles which are in ỹ world, yet God hath an ouerruling hand aboue them. Iſaiah therefore rightlie attributes the preheminence vnto him, ſeeing men are nothing but the weapons of his wrath. Now he ſaith, that the deſtroyers of the Monarchie of Babylon ſhall come from a farre countrie, the reaſon is, becauſe we ſeldome feare any dangers, vnleſſe thoſe which be very neere vnto vs. Babylon was in ſuch wiſe fortified and well compaſſed about with ſo many kingdomes and prouinces which were ſubiect vnto it, that it ſeemed no enemies could euer ſo much as approch vnto it. In a word, ſhe feared no dangers at all, euen as if ſhe had been compact together, and built in the cloudes.

In as much then as there was no danger which threatned this citie any way round about it, he therefore ſhewes that the deſtruction thereof ſhall come from farre. For although all things may ſeeme quiet and peaceable in our conceit, hauing no controuerſies at all with our neighbours, yet notwithſtanding God is able to cauſe enemies to come from the vttermoſt part vnder heauen. Wherefore we haue no occaſion to promiſe a ſecure and proſperous eſtate vnto our ſelues, although we ſhould diſcerne no danger neere at hand to threaten vs. If this propheſie ſhould haue been caried to Babylon, no doubt but they would haue deſpiſed it as a meere fable. For let it bee granted that they would haue had ſome reſpect of the Prophets perſon, yet would they (in this their proud confidence wherewithall they were poſſeſſed) haue contemned theſe threatnings as vaine and friuolous. An example whereof wee haue readie at hand: for wee at this day ſpeake of the Turke in our Sermons, yet euery one thinks they be idle tales, becauſe we thinke they are very farre off: notwithſtanding wee ſee how much ground he hath gotten in a ſmall time, in ouerrunning thoſe which were farre remote from him, and were more mightie then he. The ſottiſhnes of men is ſo great, that they can not be awakened vnleſſe they be beaten vpon till they may feele the blowes. Let vs therefore ſet the Babylonians before vs as an example to teach vs wiſdome, that ſo we may feare the threatnings which the Prophets denounce in their Sermons betimes, leſt we be ouertaken with the reprobates, who truſting to their tranquillitie are ſo aſtoniſhed when the hand of God appeares and ſmites them, that they are vtterly vnable to ſtand, but rather fall downe ſenſeleſſe and amazed.

Whereas he puts the whole land for Babylon, he hath reſpect to the largeneſſe of the kingdome, that they might not thinke to preuent the aſſaults of the enemies by meanes of the prouinces wherewith they were inuironed on euery ſide: yea, notwithſtanding that he ſhewes the calamitie ſhall be ſuch, that it ſhall not only come in one way vpon them, but ſhall be as a deluge, ouerſpreading a great part of ỹ world. Moreouer, the Medes and Perſians are here called inſtruments, or veſſels of the wrath of the Lord in a contrarie ſenſe to that which the reprobates are ſo called by S. Paul Rom. 9. 22. For there the Apoſtle oppoſeth the veſſels of wrath to the veſſels of mercie; and teacheth, that the free grace of God ſhines in the elect, and his iuſt and ſenere iudgement in the reprobate. But the Prophets meaning is, that the Medes and Perſians are as darts in Gods hand, of whom he ſerues his turne to execute his wrath and vengeance.

Verſ. 6. Howle you for the day of the Lord is at hand: it ſhall come as a deſtroyer from the Almightie.

*Or, of the ſtrong, or, deſtruction of the deſtroyer.

HE followes the matter ſtill, and commands the Babylonians to howle; not that he directs his ſpeech to them, as if he were in hope that it ſhould profit them, but in ſhewing what effect it ſhould haue, hee intermingles this maner of ſpeech with great vehemencie. He ſpeakes of the day of the Lord after the vſuall phraſe of the ſcripture, becauſe that when the Lord deferres his iudgements, it ſeemes he ceaſeth from performing of his office, euen as Iudges do when they go not vp into their Iudgement ſeates. Let vs then obſerue this language well; the reaſon is, we would willinglie ſubiect the Lord to our fancies, that ſo he might by and by pronounce ſentence againſt the vnbeleeuers. But hee hath prefixed his owne time, and knowes the opportunities right well in which wicked men are to be puniſhed, and when to giue ſuccor to the good. In the next place he ſhewes that the rigour of Gods iudgement ſhall be ſo great, that it ſhall not only giue iuſt occaſion to the Babylonians to weepe, but alſo to howle, becauſe he will openlie diſplay his ſtrength for their deſtruction. For the verbe Shadad ſignifies to ſcatter and to deſtroy, whence Shadai one of the names of God, which ſome haue tranſlated Almightie, is deriued. Heere is then an elegant alluſion to this etymologie, as if he ſhould ſay, The Babylonians in their deſtruction ſhall feele it is not vaine that God is called Shadai, that is to ſay ſtrong, and Almightie to deſtroy. Doctrine.

Verſ. 7. Therefore ſhall all hands bee weakened, and all mens hearts ſhall *melt.

*Or, run out.

HE ſhewes that the Lord ſhal haue ſo great power to deſtroy the Babylonians, that they ſhall be vtterly deſtitute of any thing whatſoeuer, that might hinder or turne backe his wrath. For albeit they were very rich and mightie, yet ſhould they haue ſuch deiected hearts, and ſuch weake hands, that they ſhould neither haue will nor power to reſiſt. And thus by the way hee glanceth at the crueltie wherewith the Babylonians were puffed vp: ſeeing it is in the power of God to diſſolue mens hearts, to breake, looſen, or weaken their hands, or armes, in ſuch wiſe that all valour ſhall fall to the ground, and ſtrength ſhall be turned into ſmoke. Now when the heart quailes, what auailes caſtles, great troopes of men, riches, forts, and fortreſſes? what auailes a ſhop well fraught with tooles without a workeman? we haue experience of this daily, euen in thoſe to whom God notwithſtanding giues great meanes. And thence we may perceiue how vaine that confidence is, which wee put in the helps of fleſh, ſeeing they are ſo vnprofitable, if God doe ſmite our hearts but with the leaſt aſtoniſhment.

Verſ. 8. And they ſhall be afraid, anguiſh and ſorrow ſhall take them, and they ſhall haue paine as a woman that trauelleth: euery one ſhall be amazed at his neighbour; and their faces ſhall be like flames of fire.

BEcauſe the ſignification of the word Tſirim, is doubtfull, the Greeke tranſlatours haue turned it, Ambaſſadours. But here it ſignifies anguiſh, as may ſufficiently be perceiued by the ſimilitude of the woman in trauaile with child: which is afterwards added. For he heere ſets before them as it were in one word, that which he had told them before; to wit, that their hearts ſhould melt, and their hands ſhould be weakened, becauſe, ſaith he, anguiſh and ſorrow ſhall ſurprize them. But whence comes this aſtoniſhment? From God. The ancients called this aſtoniſhment, a diſtracted feare. Thus called they the hobgoblins viſions, and ſuch like things which frighted men, albeit they had no inward occaſion at all ſo to doe. This was not altogether from the purpoſe; but yet notwithſtanding they erred too groſly, becauſe they vnderſtood not that ſuch a thing proceeded from God.

Verſ. 7.

As a woman in trauell with child.] Surely the Babylonians had iuſt occaſion of feare, ſeeing themſelues aſſailed by valiant and warlike men; but yet the Prophet threatens them that they ſhall quaile and be in a ſwound, although they were ſtrong enough to reſiſt them; becauſe they ſhould bee dulled by a ſecret iudgement of God. To this appertaines that which he addes; namely, that euerie one ſhall be amaſed at his neighbour, euen as when men affrighted, looke gaſtly here and there: and not onely that, but alſo when there ſhall be any hope of ſuccour, yet they ſhall ſtand ſtill like blockes, as men depriued of all feeling. But the vehemencie of the feare is yet much more cleerely expreſſed in the member following, when he attributes vnto them faces like fire. For they are too ſparing, who thinke (as ſome doe) that this word ſignifies ſhame; as if it were ſaid in one word, they ſhal bluſh with ſhame. Iſaiah meant a greater and a more fearefull thing then ſo. When torments preſſe vs indeed, the face will be inflamed, and wee ſhall glow as being cloſed in with dolours: truely it were too light then to referre it to a bluſhing onely, in ſuch an horrible deſolation. For he deſcribes ſo ſtrange a calamitie, that for the bitterneſſe of it, flames ſhall ſparkle as it were out of the face: which indeed comes to paſſe, when men are vexed with extreame dolour. The ſimilitude of a woman in trauile, not onely expreſſeth the greatneſſe of the griefe, but alſo a ſudden hurliburly. Euen as the calamitie then ſhould be bitter and violent, ſo alſo Iſaiah ſaith, it ſhall be ſudden: and good reaſon, for the Babylonians, who wee furniſhed with ſo many forces, could neuer haue dreamed that they ſhould euer be moleſted by any means whatſoeuer.

Verſ. 9. Behold, the day of the Lord commeth, cruell with wrath and fierce anger, to lay the land waſte: and hee ſhall deſtroy the ſinners out of it.

HE repeates that which he touched heeretofore; to wit, that although the Babylonians reſted ſecurely in their abundance; that the day of the Lord notwithſtanding is at hand, which will aſtoniſh theſe ſecure fellowes. But yet it may be demanded, for what cauſe the day of the Lord is called cruell, ſeeing there is nothing more deſireable, then to inioy the preſence of God: neither is there any thing indeed but this onely, which makes vs happy. I anſwere, we muſt alwaies obſerue to whom the Prophet ſpeakes. For the Prophets were accuſtomed to deſcribe God in diuers ſorts, according to the diuerſity of the auditors: as Dauid alſo teſtifies where hee ſaith; that hee is mercifull and fauourable to the good, ſeuere and rigorous to the wicked: Pſal. 18. 16. 27. For what can the wicked conceiue in God, but an extreme ſeueritie? and therefore they tremble as ſoone as they heare him ſpoken of. But the faithfull on the contrarie, conceiue and receiue great ioy and ſweetneſſe in ſuch words; ſo as nothing can bee propounded vnto them more delectable. And therefore when the Prophets turne themſelues to the faithfull, they mingle ioy and gladnes therewithall in mentioning of God; becauſe they onely feele him gracious and mercifull vnto them: but if they ſpeake to the vnfaithfull, the iudgement of God

Queſt.

Anſ.

God is no ſooner propounded, but they adde teares and ſorrowes. For euen as the faithfull reioyce at the preſence of God, becauſe they apprehend his goodneſſe by faith: ſo alſo the wicked on the contrary are afraid, becauſe their conſciences reproues them, and findes them guiltie in regard their ſeuere iudge is at hand. And becauſe hypocrits alſo ſeeme to wait for the day of the Lord with great deſire, boaſting that he will aſſiſt them; the Prophets are wont to vnmaske them, teſtifying alſo, that this day ſhall be cruell and terrible.

Amos 5. 18.20.

Iſaiah alſo applies a deſcription to this prophecie, much vſed; the better to ſhew how greatly the wrath of God is to be feared. For inaſmuch as we are ſlow by nature, or rather blockiſh, wee moue not much if the Lord ſhould ſpeake of his iudgements ſimply. Becauſe therefore a bare and naked ſpeech ſhould haue little vehemencie, hee findes out new kindes of ſpeakings to awaken our drouſineſſe. By ſinners, hee meanes not all men in generall; but thoſe wicked and deſperate wretches which dwelt in Babylon.

Verſ. 10. For the ſtarres of heauen, and the planets thereof ſhall not giue their light: the Sunne ſhall bee darkened in his going forth; and the Moone ſhall not cauſe her light to ſhine.

TO the end men might be the more lively and effectually touched with the feare of Gods iudgemẽt, the Prophets are wont to adde exceſſiue manners of ſpeeche to their threatnings, which ſhould euen ſet the wrath of God as it were before their eyes; that ſo it might pierce into all their ſenſes: euen as if there were not one of the elements which ſhould not riſe vp on Gods behalfe to execute his vengeance. And yet theſe exceſſiue ſpeeches exceede not the heinouſneſſe of the offence: for it is impoſſible to ſet forth ſo horrible a repreſentation of Gods iudgement, but the feeling thereof ſhall be far more terrible. Well, he ſpeakes of the Sunne, Moone, and ſtarres, and the reaſon is, becauſe theſe are excellent teſtimonies of the fatherly kindneſſe of God towards men. Chriſt therfore ſhewes, that Gods goodneſſe doth in ſpeciall maner appeare, becauſe he makes his Sunne to ſhine vpon the good and bad: Matth. 5. 45. When the Sunne, Moone, and ſtarres then ſhine in the heauen, God giues vs cauſe of reioycing, euen as it were by a ſweete and amiable countenance. In as much then as in the brightneſſe of the heauens, he ſhewes a ioyfull and cheerefull face, euen as if he laughed: the darkneſſe which the Prophet here deſcribes, ſignifies as much, as if God hauing hid his face, would caſt men headlong into ſorrowes and into darkneſſe, becauſe he is angry with them.

There is the like deſcription in the ſecond Chapter of Ioel: and wee haue alreadie ſaid, that this manner of ſpeech is familiar in the Prophets; to let vs know, that all things ſhall turne to our ruine, if God be once againſt vs. True it is hee ſometimes ſhewes ſignes of his indignation in the Starres; but that is extraordinarie: and the darkneſſe which the Prophet here deſcribes, ſhall not come before the laſt cõming of Chriſt Ieſus. But this ought to ſuffice vs, namely, that all creatures which imploy themſelues for our ſeruice, as teſtimonies and inſtruments of the louing kindneſſe of God, ſhall not onely ceaſe from the ſeruice which now they doe vs; but ſhall euen arme themſelues for our deſtruction, as ſoone as God ſhall aſcend to iudgement.

Verſ. 11. And I will viſit the wickedneſſe vpon the world, and their iniquities vpon the wicked: and I will cauſe the arrogancie of the proud to ceaſe, and will caſt downe the pride of tyrants.

THe Prophet ſpeakes not heere of all the world: but Babylon being then the ſeate of the mightieſt Monarchy in all the earth, therefore it is that hee attributes this name world vnto it by a phraſe of ſpeech, hauing great weight in it. For Babylon then was as a world, and ſeemed to occupie almoſt all the earth. But in the meane while, he declares that nothing is ſo highly exalted in this ſame world, which God ſhall not eaſilie bring downe euen with his leaſt finger. On the other ſide, hee aduertiſeth that God will then take vengeance vpon the crueltie which the Chaldeans exerciſed. Let vs alſo therewithall obſerue, that hee ſets the malice and wickednẽſſe of Babylon in the firſt place, to the end wee might know that God is not to be eſteemed cruell, in regard he chaſtiſed it ſo ſeuerely, ſeeing hee ſmites not this people, but according as the meaſure of their offences and iniquities had deſerued. He takes away all occaſion of falſe accuſations then, to the end we might vnderſtand that God is not delighted with the calamities of men: for when hee deales with them according to their deſerts, all muſt haue their mouthes ſtopped, in regard hee neuer ſends bitter and ſharpe afflictions, but he findes the cauſe thereof in men themſelues. And yet we muſt keepe in minde that which I touched; to wit, that the Prophet greatly comforts the faithfull when he ſhewes them that he will puniſh the crueltie of the Babylonians at the laſt, howſoeuer hee ſpared them for a time.

Hee expreſſeth this immediately, in touching one particular vice; to wit, pride: for thence it was that Babel tooke libertie to oppreſſe the poore to the vtteruoſt, euen as ſhe liſted. But from thence ought we alſo to gather a very profitable doctrine; namely, that God muſt needes viſit vs ſharpely, if wee be proud, and pleaſe our ſelues in our ſelues. For vnder this word, the Prophet comprehends all maner of arrogancie and high imaginations. Be it then that men thinke themſelues ſomething; or that they admire their riches, and care for none in reſpect of themſelues; the Lord cannot beare anie arrogancie, neither will he leaue it vnpunished. Seeing then that this is noted heere as the principall and most notorious wickednes amongst a great many other wherewith Babylon was stuffed, so also the wrath of God we see is most set on fire by this sinne. Now this arrogancie was not without tyrannie and crueltie as it ordinarilie falles out: and therefore he addes immediatlie the glorie of tyrants. For violences, outrages, and oppressions do follow, when men despise others: neither can it be chosen that a man should abstaine from offring violence vnto another, vnlesse he put off all perswasion and opinion of himselfe. Let vs pull down our peacocks feathers then, and learne we also to bring vnder our loftinesse to a true and voluntarie humilitie; vnlesse peraduenture we had rather be smitten downe and humbled to our confusion and destruction.

Vers. 12. I will make a man more pretious then fine gold, euen a man aboue the wedge of Ophir.

HE heere describes in particular the cruell and horrible warre which shall be made vpon the Babylonians: as also the faithfull being instructed by these prophesies, wished (by the spirit of prophesie) for that which was the extreamest and most cruell stratageme of warre, to wit, that the Medes and Persians might pluck the little children from their mothers breasts to dash them against the stones: the summe is, that Babylon shall not only be destroyed, but also whollie rooted out. For when he saith the life of man shall be more pretious then gold, he meanes, that the enemies shall be so fleshed in shedding of blood, that men shall not escape their hands for any ransome whatsoeuer. Why so? Because they shall loue rather to massacre then to take any ransome.

Quest.

Some may demand whether this discomfiture were so cruell as Isaiah heere describes it, for histories witnes otherwise: and Daniel himselfe (who was there present) saith, that the citie was taken only, Dan. 5. 30. This is the cause why some expositors haue beene driuen to referre euery thing which is said here of Babylon to all reprobates: but therein they haue wrested the text, for the Prophet by and by after speakes of the Medes and Persians. Moreouer, the threatnings which wil orderlie follow hereafter touching the Moabites, Tyrians, Egyptians, and other nations, doe sufficientlie shew that this prophesie is properlie against the Chaldeans, whom the Prophet placeth in the first rank: not that their destruction was so neere at hand as was the destruction of the rest; but because y Church had no greater nor more dangerous enemies then they. And wee must obserue that Isaiah spake not this whilst the Monarchie of Nineue florished, but whatsoeuer he foretold against the profane nations in the whole course of his ministrie, is put all vpon one heape as it were. Thus then the order of time was not kept, but the likenes of things was the cause why they haue put all these prophesies in one. For whence is it that Isaiah makes no mention of Nineue, seeing hee afterward sheweth that the Assyrians only were they which molested the Iewes (with whom the Babylonians were in league) but in regard that he speakes not of the histories of his time till he comes to the three and twentie Chapter, but only prophesieth of the iudgements of God which came to passe after his death?

Dan. 6. 1.

Now when he declares that Babylon shall be destroyed vtterlie; it is certaine he speakes not of one destruction barely, but vnder it comprehends the full ruin thereof, which followed long time after the first. For Babylon florished, yea after the Persians had subdued it, and kept the name and dignitie of a thrice renoumed citie. And howsoeuer it be true that another citie was built, called Ctesiphon, that part of the glorie and riches of Babylon might be taken away; yet notwithstanding the commoditie of the place, the sumptuous buildings and fortresses of the citie, caused that (the dignitie royall excepted) she was in nothing inferior to the head citie of Persia. Yea, after the death of Alexander the Great, when Seleucia was built neere vnto it, yet could it not staine the name and reputation of this so ancient a citie. From hence then we gather, that the things which are heere spoken, can not be restrained to one time. And yet is it not without cause that the Prophet threatens them so sharplie, seeing the change of their empire was the beginning of diuers calamities which followed thereupon afterwards. So that howsoeuer all the people were not slaine, yet notwithstanding in regard the citie was forcible assailed and taken by a sodaine assault, and that by night when all the kings court were drowned in drunkennes; it could not be but the Medes and Persians hewed all those in pieces which they met withall: and therefore we need not doubt but the most valiant of the enemies made many slaughters before they receiued all the people to their mercie. For will any man doubt but that this proud nation was dishonorablie handled by these barbarous conquerors, seeing it was vnpossible to subdue them by any other meanes?

The change of Babels Empire, the beginning of future calamities.

Now after that Babylon was by little and little brought vnder, shee by and by after changed her king, and after she had been a while vnder the gouerment of Alexander the Macedonian, she sodainly fell into the hands of Seleucus, who indeuored by all meanes to abate the greatnes of it, till at the last it was brought vtterlie to ruine. And thus whilst God suffered her to stand, she serued as a deformed and shamefull spectacle, that the accomplishment of this prophesie might be the more excellent and certaine: and therefore our Prophet rightlie affirmes, that the wrath of God shall not be appeased, vntill this den of theeues shal be wholly brought to nought. As touching the words, some of the expositors take Enosh (which we haue translated man) for a warlike and noble man: and Adam (which wee haue expounded person) for all handicrafts men. But in as much as the Etymologie mologie agrees not well herewith; I doe not thinke the Prophet meant ſo: I am rather of opinion, that it is a repetition of words, which is common with the Hebrewes. Others take the word Ophir, (which I, according to diuers expoſitours, haue tranſlated, pure gold,) for a precious ſtone: but we gather from many places of the Scripture, that it ſignifies very pure and tried gold.

Alexander the Macedonian. Seleucus. Babel brought to ruin at last.

Verſ. 13. Therefore I will ſhake the heauens, and the earth ſhall remoue out of her place, in the wrath of the Lord of hoſtes, and in the day of his fierce anger.

THis is an other figure which ſerues for an amplification. For God cannot repeate this doctrine too often. The reaſon is, not onely to aſtoniſh the infidels, but alſo to bring conſolation to the good, who are often times diſquieted, when the wicked are at their eaſe, and haue all things at their deſire: which Dauid confeſſeth when he ſaith; I haue cleanſed mine heart in vaine, and waſhed mine hands in innocencie: Pſal.73.13. Theſe liuely images then are for good cauſe thus painted out before our eyes, to ſhew vs plainly the deſtruction of the wicked. And therefore it is as if Iſaiah ſhould ſay; Were it ſo that the verie heauens had neede to be ſhaken for the bringing downe, and the rooting out of infidels; euen that ſhould be done. For they thinke themſelues out of all danger, and ſo deepely rooted in the earth, as if it were impoſſible to plucke them vp: but the Prophet ſhewes that they greatly deceiue themſelues, becauſe the Lord will rather ſhake the heauen and the earth alſo, then that they ſhould not come tumbling downe from their greatneſſe, whereunto they are mounted vp aloft. Whence it followes, that although the world preſents a thouſand leaning ſtockes vnto vs, as well high as low, yet notwithſtanding there ſhall be no ſtedfaſtneſſe in any of them, vnleſſe God therewithall be mercifull vnto vs. And if this appeares in particular iudgements, how much more will it appeare in that generall iudgement, when Chriſt ſhall aſcend into the iudiciall throne of his maieſtie to pronounce ſentence of condemnation againſt all the wicked?

Verſ. 14. And it ſhall be as a chaſed Doe, and as a ſheepe that no man taketh vp: euery man ſhall turne to his owne people, and flee each one to his owne land.

HEe declares that outward ſuccours ſhall profit the Babylonians nothing at all: and by theſe ſimilitudes, ſhewes with what feare the ſouldiers ſhall be ſeazed. Now Babel did not onely ſtrengthen her ſelfe with the men of warre of her owne Countrie, but ſhe had ſtrangers alſo vnder her pay. He ſaith, they ſhall all reſemble little Fawnes or Does, which are very timerous beaſts: and to ſcatered ſheepe; ſo as they ſhall retire neither to their Enſignes nor Gariſons, nor yet keepe any order. And when he adds, euerie one ſhall flee to his land; it ſufficiently appeares from thence, that the Prophet ſpeakes not of the inhabitants of Babel, nor of her people; but of ſtrangers which had been called to her ſuccour. For it hath been ſaid heretofore, that the hearts of men are ſo in the hands of God, that when it pleaſeth him they ſuddenly recouer new ſtrength, who were before fearefull and amazed: and contrariwiſe, thoſe who haue ſhewed great valour and boldneſſe, loſe it all in an inſtant, and become weake and effeminate.

Verſ. 15. Euerie one that is found, ſhall be ſtricken thorow: and whoſoeuer ioyneth himſelfe, ſhall fall by the ſword.

HEe here confirmes that which he ſaid heretofore; to wit, that none ſhall eſcape out of Babylon, and that all thoſe which ſhall be therein ſhall periſh. Xenophon telles, how by the commandement of Cyrus, all thoſe which were met withall the firſt night, were put to death: and the next day, all thoſe which had not brought in, or laid downe their weapons. But we haue already ſaid, that this prophecie hath a further extent; becauſe this firſt taking was onely the beginning of all other calamities, whereunto Babylon was expreſly reſerued by the Lord, to the end it might be puniſhed the more often. Others expound the ſecond member otherwiſe then I haue tranſlated it: for in as much as Saphah ſignifieth, To loſe, or, To conſume; they reade, Whoſoeuer ſhall be loſt; and expound this of old men, who by reaſon of their age, can liue no longer: as if he ſhould ſay; they would not pardon, no not euen thoſe who are alreadie worne with age, and vpon the brim of their graues, yea when they ſhould haue one foote within as it were, and ſhould bee ready to yeeld vp the ghoſt. But becauſe this is a conſtrained expoſition, and that the very ſame verbe ſignifies, To be ioyned, I had rather follow Ionathan, and others, who thinke the Prophet ſpeakes of the bands and ſquadrons: as for example, when a Citie is to be taken, the ſouldiers ioyne together to beate backe the aſſaults of the enemies. Vnleſſe any had rather vnderſtand by theſe words, the confederates and companions which were ioyned together with the Babylonians, the more to amplifie the greatneſſe of this diſcomfiture.

Xenophon. Cyrus.

Verſ. 16. Their children alſo ſhall be broken in pieces before their eyes: their houſes ſhall be ſpoiled, and their wiues raniſhed.

HEe paintes out an image of more then barbarous crueltie. For behold the vttermoſt extremitie of the enemies rage; when no age whatſoeuer ſhall be ſpared; when little children are ſlaine, who ſhould rather bee defended in regard of their young yeares.

And yet he further amplifies the crueltie, when he ſaith that this ſhall be done in the preſence of their fathers and mothers. That which followes of the houſes which ſhall be ſpoiled, and of the women which ſhall be raviſhed, tends alſo to the ſame end: and this falles out when the enemies hauing forgotten all humanitie, and being inflamed with crueltie, would ỹ thoſe whom they haue ſubdued were vtterlie rooted out, with their name alſo.

Verſ. 17. Behold, I will ſtirre vp the Medes againſt them, which ſhall not regard ſiluer, nor be deſirous of gold.

THe Prophet hauing propheſied the deſtruction of ỹ Babylonians, ſhewes therewithall alſo the authors; or, he rather expreſſeth, that God ſhall be the mouer of them: and therein alſo ſpecifies how or by whom this worke ſhall be done: for he ſaith, that he will ſtirre vp the Medes. Certainlie he could not conieƈture this by any humane reaſon; for there was then no enmitie nor diſſenſions betweene the Medes and the Babylonians. And although there had been diſcord; what was the power of the Medes then, to doe the Babylonians any harme? Seeing things were not ſo fitted then that the Medes could make warre with the Babylonians, it is very certaine that the Prophet was inſpired of God in this matter, eſpeciallie if we conſider that he foretold theſe things more then an hundred yeres before they came to paſſe. When he addes that they ſhall not couet gold, nor ſiluer, he excuſeth not the Medes of their rauening and auarice, as if they ſhould be ſo liberall as to deſpiſe gold and ſiluer: but he rather meant to ſay, that this warre ſhall be ſo cruell & terrible, that nothing ſhall be ſeene but a final deſtruƈtion; for example, becauſe the ſpeciall drift which the Spaniards aime at now adaies when they make warre, is only to ſpoile and rob, they doe more eaſily ſpare mens liues, and are not ſo addiƈted to ſhed blood as the Almans or Engliſhmen be, who thinke of nothing but killing their enemies.

The Spaniard.

Almans. Engliſhmen.

Now let it not ſeeme ſtrange to any man that the Lord who is louing & gratious doth yet notwithſtanding ſerue his turne of ſo cruel executioners: for he works iuſtlie euen by the wicked, and yet is not ſpotted himſelfe with their malice. Wherefore we muſt not iudge of the worke of God by the executioners thereof, who are caried away with ambition, couetouſnes, or crueltie: but wee ought to conſider therein the iuſt vengeance of God, which the Babylonians had well deſerued, becauſe of their wickednеſſes.

Verſ. 18. With bowes alſo ſhall they deſtroy the children, and ſhall haue no compaſſion vpon the fruite of the womb, and their eyes ſhall not ſpare the children.

SOme tranſlate, They ſhall cut, and thinke that this is ſpoken by an exceſſiue maner of ſpeech, as if they ſhould vſe the children of the Babylonians in ſtead of arrowes, in regard they daſhed them againſt the ſtones, that they might breake them with the greater violence. But I had rather take it more ſimplie, namely, that the crueltie of ỹ Medes ſhall be ſo great, that they ſhall not ſpare ſo much as the little children, which notwithſtanding are neuer touched except it be there where they commit exceeding outrages. In a word, that neither old nor yong ſhould be ſpared, as we haue ſaid erewhile. But we reade not that the Medes vſed any ſuch crueltie: and Babylon was in good eſtate, and floriſhed long time after this diſcomfiture: and although the ſeate of the kingdome was caried thence, yet ſhe kept her renoume ſtill, for the very day and night before that it was taken, there was no hurt done, except it were to thoſe which bare armes. In the meane while howſoeuer it was the Prophets meaning to comprehend other iudgements of God alſo which threatned the Babylonians, and came to paſſe long time after this firſt calamitie: yet is it not without reaſon, neither from the purpoſe that he deſcribes the maners of barbarous nations, that ſo the Iewes might the better vnderſtand that God had a iuſt recompence readie in his hand to execute vpō the Babiloniſh tyranny. No doubt but ỹ faithfull alſo vpō the ground of this promiſe made the imprecation cōteined in the 137. Pſalme, Bleſſed ſhal he be that takes thy children and daſheth them againſt the ſtones.

Verſ. 19. And Babel the glorie of kingdomes, and the beautie and pride of the Chaldeans, ſhall be as the deſtruƈtion of God in Sodome and Gomorah.

ISaiah meant to cōclude his propheſie touching the ruin of ỹ Babylonians in a briefe maner in this place, although he addes ſome amplifiƈations to confirme his ſpeech touching the full rooting of them out. For the Prophets ſpeake in ſuch ſort of the puniſhments of the wicked, that they leaue them no hope of mercie wherewith they might comfort themſelues. But as touching the faithfull, although it ſeemes now and then that they ſhould be chaſtened too ſeuerely, yet are they ſuſteined with this aſſurance, that the Lord will haue pitie vpon them, and will not vtterlie deſtroy them. Whence we ought to gather, that we muſt not alwaies iudge according to the outward appearance. For we ſhall many times thinke that the children of God are vtterlie vndone, whoſe ſaluation notwithſtanding is neere, yea euen in the midſt of death it ſelfe.

In Sodome and Gomorah.] This example is oft alledged by the Prophets, to the end wee might know that howſoeuer all chaſtiſements be not equall, yet notwithſtanding in as much as God is vnpartiall in his iudgements, the memorable example which he ſhewed thereof in the deſtruƈtion of Sodom appertaines to all reprobates: ſo as thoſe who harden themſelues in their ſinnes with the like obſtinacie, ſhall be no leſſe puniſhed then they were. And they diſtinguiſh betweene the puniſhments ments of the elect, and reprobates, in ſuch wiſe, that ſtill God left ſome ſeed to the Iſraelites; but to the wicked none: as we haue ſeene in the firſt Chapter; If the Lord, ſaith he, had not left vs a ſeed, we had bin as Sodome and as Gomorah. But he purſues the reprobate with all ſeueritie: and therefore the Prophets threaten them with the very ſame ruine which happened to the Sodomites; that is to ſay, an vtter deſtruction without all hope of recouerie.

Sodome and Gomorah.

Gen. 19. 24.

Chap. 1. 9.

He ſaith it is the ouerthrow of God; to the end wee ſhould not thinke it came to paſſe by chance, or by the will of men. For euen as the fire fell not vpon Sodome & Gomorah from heauen at randome; ſo Babylon alſo was not deſtroyed by haphazard, but by the iuſt vengeance of God. Which being alwaies like vnto himſelfe, did execute his iuſt iudgement againſt them, and will ſtill doe the ſame againſt all reprobates euen vnto the end. Whereas Babylon is called the glorie and bright beauty of Kingdomes; this is added for amplifications ſake, to teach vs, that God cannot bee hindered from performing his worke by any glorie or excellencie whatſoeuer, that hee ſhould not vtterly roote out the wicked. For in regard that this deſtruction was incredible, therefore ſo much the more did an excellent example of Gods mightie power appeare in the confuſion of it.

No glory can withſtand Gods almightie power.

Verſ. 20. It ſhall not be inhabited for euer, neither ſhall it be dwelled in from generation to generation: neither ſhall the Arabian pitch his tents there; neither ſhall the ſheepheards make their foldes there.

*Or, ſit vpon.

BY the word To ſit, hee ſignifies a firme eſtate; as if he ſhould ſay, Neuer looke that Babel ſhall be reſtored any more. For all theſe phraſes of ſpeech tend to one and the ſame end; namely, the Babylonians ſhall be ſo deſtroyed, that their ruine ſhall be perpetuall. This alſo he further amplifies when he addes, that the deſtruction ſhall be ſo great, that the verie Arabians ſhall diſdaine to pitch their tents there, and the ſheepheards their foldes. Now wee may well ſay that this place was become wonderfull deſert, and inhabitable, ſeeing theſe vagabonds made no reckoning of it: for this nation of the Arabians in verie deed, did nothing elſe but trot vp and downe, and had no ſetled abiding. For hauing left their owne Countrie, becauſe it was barren; and therefore is called the deſert Arabia, (for of that wee ſpeake) and being giuen to nouriſh cattell and to hunting, they frisked it hither & thither, and abode in the midſt of the fields, eſpecially in places of beſt paſture. Thence it came that the Greekes called them by a name which ſignifieth dwellers in tents.

Arabians vagabonds and theeues.

The region of Babylon was wonderfull fruitfull before this deſtruction, by reaſon whereof this change was ſo much the more terrible, and as it were prodigious, whether in regard that it loſt the firſt fruitfulneſſe, or that all abhorred the ſight of it, becauſe of the continuall calamities wherewith it was waſted. Certaine it is the Prophet declares it ſhal come to paſſe, that not only the buildings ſhall be broken downe, but that the land alſo ſhall be accurſed.

Verſ. 21. But Ziim ſhall lodge there, and their houſes ſhall be full of Ohim: Oſtriches ſhall dwell there, and the Satyres ſhall dance there.

HE goes on in deſcribing a deſert place, and alludes to that he ſaid before; to wit, that Babylon ſhould be vnhabited. I cannot well tell how this word Ziim ſhould be tranſlated, in regard the opinions of the expoſitours are ſo diuers; who agree no more in this, then they doe about ſundry names of beaſts and hearbs. The vſe of theſe things continued not alwaies, and the Iewes being ignorant themſelues, haue not the knowledge of them; although ſome amongſt them are not aſhamed to brag of their skill in phyſicke: and yet notwithſtanding are ignorant not onely of the nature of plants, but of beaſts alſo. Whereas ſome are of opinion that Ziim, was a wild beaſt: others, that it ſhould be a bird: and ſome others a fourefooted beaſt: herein there is no great difference. For mine owne part, I make no queſtion but the Prophet meant in this place to ſpeake either of wild beaſts which cannot be tamed, or of birds which make their neſts in forreſts farre remote from men. And there will be no inconuenience in it, if we expound that which followes of Satyres, or Fairies, which the Frenchmen, according to the diuerſities of regions, in one place call Hobgoblins, Robingoodfellowes; and Bugbeares in an other. For as Satan abuſeth men by diuers impoſtures, ſo alſo he allots diuers names to euery one of theſe.

It is certaine that the word Ziim, is ſometimes taken in the Scripture for wicked ſpirits: for it comes of Ziiah, which ſignifies drineſſe or deſert: as Iim comes of Iiaim, which ſignifies feare. For in as much as the diuell workes ſtrange illuſions by Fairies and Satyres, therefore the names thereof are attributed vnto him. The Prophets drift is, to ſhew that there ſhould be ſuch deſolation, that the place ſhould not onely be forſaken of men, but the euill ſpirits alſo ſhould worke their illuſions there: for by the ſolitarineſſe of the place they take occaſion to terriſie thoſe which paſſe thereby. And looke how theeues and enemies ſhew themſelues more cruell when they come out of ſome obſcure place or caues: ſo alſo the diuels ſeeke for the night, darkeneſſe, and places far remote from mens ſight, to the end they may the more affright them which are fearefull and timerous of nature.

laces: and the time thereof is readie to come, and the daies thereof shall not bee prolonged.

HEe sets forth that which hath been touched before, and shewes how horrible this change shall be; that it might appeare that this shall come to passe from the iudgement of God, and not by fortune. He also amplifies it whē he saith, that this shal happē not to houses, but to pleasant palaces. The shortnesse of time whereof he speakes here, may be referred to the first destruction; yet so, as it was requisite that the expectation of the faithfull should bee held the longer in suspence. I haue told you that Babylon was not so quickely ouerturned; and that the discomfiture made by the Medes, was not so great that the Citie might therefore be compared to a desert. He saith then, that the destruction thereof shall shortly come; the beginnings whereof were seene soone after, for the Iewes were to content themselues, in regard that this vengeance vpon Babylon was not promised them in vaine.

The holy Ghost in like manner is wont to prevent our heate and hastinesse, because we would haue God execute his iudgements out of hand, and should chastise the wicked as soone as we thinke good. But he only knowes the fit season, which yet wee are impatient in waiting for, by reason of the boiling of our passions. But if wee could meditate of his euerlastingnesse, we should easilie bridle this ouer great hastinesse by patience: but because we haue much adoe to hold in our importunitie, God doth somewhat incline vnto vs, shewing that he will come by and by. And yet let vs not iudge of the shortnesse of the time, according to our reason: but let vs lift vp our hearts to heauen, and despise the daies of this life. Aboue all, let vs learne to stoope as soone as we begin to see the iudgements of God comming towards vs, yea though it be in the least measure: although he deferre the execution of them for a long time. The second member is immediately added for a confirmation; to wit, that the daies of Babylon shall not be prolonged: as if he should say; The Lord hath appointed a day, so as none shall be able to make truce any longer.

A iust reproofe of our impatiency.

The meditation of Gods eternitie, the best bridle to curbe our impatiency.

We must not iudge of the shortnesse of time according to our carnall reason.

THE XIIII. CHAPTER.

Vers. 1. For the Lord will haue compassion of Iacob, and will yet chuse Israel, and cause them to rest in their own land: and the stranger shall ioyne himselfe vnto them; and they shall cleaue to the house of Iacob.

BEcause the particle Ci, hath diuers significations, wee may conioyne this verse with the former, thus; But yet the Lord will haue pitie vpon Zion: and so it should shew how much the condition of the Church differeth from that which he described before. But I had rather take it for a particle rendring the cause; and that indeed agrees best to this place, as in many other texts: so as the sense shall be this; God shall destroy Babylon, because he shall haue compassion of Iacob; whom hee can neither despise nor reiect. Whence wee perceiue, that the Prophet hath indeuoured hitherto, to assuage the sorrow of this poore people; to the end they might learne to be of good comfort in those their afflictions, which God would at length auenge. Thus Babylon & the Church of God are here set before vs as in a glasse: Babylon (I say) exalted in her soueraigne power, who had so oppressed the poore and desolate Church, that shee was vtterly past hope (in a manner) that euer shee should be restored againe. But the Lord tumbling Babylon downe from her high seate, therein witnesseth, that he hath care ouer his people, how abiect or contemptible soeuer they seem to be. From hence we may gather a sweet cōsolation, when wee see that God thus gouernes all the world for our saluation. For all things aime to this end, that the elect may be saued; and not ouerwhelmed by any changes how many soeuer befall thē. But some will aske, whether mercie and compassion ceased to be in God for a time? Doubtlesse it continued in him alwaies: but the people which were so greeuously afflicted felt it not. For being forepossessed with the sense of his wrath, they iudged of themselues according to the outward appearance, and were not able to apprehend his mercie. And yet was the Lord euer like himselfe notwithstanding, & neuer left his mercifull nature. Thus then we must distinguish betweene the vnderstanding or knowledge of faith, and experience: for whilest the signes of Gods indignation appeare on all sides, in regard that (according to the iudgement of the flesh) we thinke hee is angrie; so his grace is hidden from vs: yet faith notwithstanding lifts vp our hearts aboue all darkenesse, to the end wee may behold God in heauen, who is fauourable towards vs.

Note this consolation.

Quest.

Ans.

We must distinguish betweene faiths apprehension, and experience.

He will yet chuse Israel (saith he.) The election of God is eternall: for hee chuseth vs not, as if he thought not on it before: and euen as we were chosen before the foundations of the world, so doth he neuer repent himselfe of the same his election, Ephes. 1. 4. Rom. 11. 29. But when the Lord corrects his children, this hath in it some appearance of reiection, as we may gather from the ordinarie complaints of the faithfull: Lord why hast thou put vs away for euer? Why is thy wrath kindled against the sheep of thy pasture? Psal. 74. 1. For we apprehend the election or reiection

We often meaſure Gods affection towards vs by his outward worke. Our vocation a confirmation of our election. How God is ſaid to elect, and reiect vs.

tion of God according to our infirmitie, and meaſure his affection towards vs by the outward worke, (I ſpeake of that knowledge which proceeds from experience, which is corrected by the light of faith.) And therefore when the Lord calles vs, that is to ſay, when he confirmes his election, it is ſaid he chuſeth vs; and contrariwiſe that hee reiects vs, when he ſhewes vs any euident ſigne of his indignation. See then how we are to vnderſtand this verſe, to wit, that although the Lord ſhould ſo ſharplie correct his people as if he meant to caſt them off, yet notwithſtanding he will ſhew in the end by the effects, and will giue them to know that he hath elected them, when he ſhall giue ſufficient teſtimonie thereof, and ſhall take compaſſion vpon them.

Great difference betweene the chaſtiſements of the elect, and thoſe wherewith the reprobate are viſited. Note.

Now we may eaſily collect that which I ſaid erewhile, to wit, that there is great difference betweene the chaſtiſements which the faithfull indure, and thoſe wherewith the reprobates are viſited. For the faithfull bethinke themſelues forthwith of their election, whereby they take heart of grace: but the vnbeleeuers ſee nothing but thick darknes, bottomles gulfes, and fearefull confuſion on all ſides. As ſoone then as the Lord corrects vs, let vs by and by call to mind this difference, to the end we may confirme our hearts in the hope of an happie iſſue.

When he ſpeakes of their returne into their owne land, he therein ſets before them a ſigne of grace and reconciliation: for the land of Canaan was a pledge of adoption to the children of Abraham.

The land of Canaan a pledge of adoption to Abrahams poſteritie.

And the ſtranger ſhall ioyne himſelf with them.] He propheſieth of the calling of ỹ Gentiles, as if he ſhould haue ſaid, The Lord will not only put them into the poſſeſſion of the land of Canaan, but will alſo inrich them with a great increaſe: for he will ioyne the Gentiles with them, that of two peoples there may be made but one only bodie. This benefit then is not to be referred to a few daies, but appertaines to the whole Church, which God promiſeth to ſet at reſt in a ſure place. For the Prophet ſpeakes not only of the Church of that time, but of that alſo which ſhould be before, and vnder the kingdome of Chriſt, otherwiſe this addition ſhould be improper.

A propheſie touching the calling of the Gentiles.

Verſ. 2. And the people ſhall receiue them and bring them to their owne place, and the houſe of Iſrael ſhall poſſeſſe them in the land of the Lord for ſeruants and handmaides, and they ſhall take them priſoners whoſe captiues they were, and haue rule ouer their oppreſſors.

HE ſhewes that the ſtrangers ſhall willinglie accompanie the Iewes, and that in ſuch ſort, that they ſhall not refuſe to become their ſeruants. We haue ſeene the proofe of this when the people came out of Babylon, Ezra 1. 6. but this was onely a ſmall taſte of thoſe things which were done by Ieſus Chriſt, to whom all this muſt be referred. For the Lord in deed inclined the hearts of the nations which hated his people deadly, to be louing to them whom he meant to reſtore to their countrie and libertie by their meanes: but ſo farre was it off that many nations helped the Iewes after their returne from Babylon, that contrariwiſe the neighbours through enuie conſpired one with another to moleſt them. Ezra 4. 4. For they were not only bent againſt them to driue them out of the land of Canaan, but alſo to roote them from off the earth. Theſe things then were accompliſhed vnder the kingdome of Chriſt, to whom all power is giuẽ not only in earth, but in heauen alſo, Math. 28. 18. who by his Goſpell hath vnited the Gentiles with the Iewes, which before were ſtrangers, Epheſ. 2. 14. to the end they might not only help the Iewes to take poſſeſſion of their inheritance, but alſo to bring them vnder ſo, as to beare the yoke quietlie and willinglie.

And hereunto appertaines that which he addes of ſeruants and handmaides: for ſeeing the Iewes are the firſt borne in the houſe of God, we which are ioined vnto them ſeeme to haue bin aſſembled as it were vnder their hand, becauſe they were before vs, and obteined the firſt place before all other nations: which honor they might hold euen at this day, if by their owne frowardnes and ingratitude they depriued not themſelues of ſuch a dignitie; and yet their vnthankfulnes did not let the Lord to effect that which he here promiſeth. For the Apoſtles who were Iewes, ſubdued ſtrange nations by the word of God; yea euen thoſe which in times paſt held them priſoners, and to whom they paid tribute, to wit, the Aſſyrians, Chaldeans, Perſians, and at laſt the Romane Empire, ſo as all the Gentiles might iuſtlie be called their heritage, although they would not reigne ouer them, but winne them to God, that ſo together they might acknowledge one Lord and Prince. This then ought to be referred to the yoke & gouerment of Chriſt whereunto the Iewes ſubdued the Gentiles, and not to a worldlie kingdome and rule, as the Iewes falſlie imagin. Exod. 4. 22.

The Iewes might hold the honor of the firſt born ſtill in the houſe of God if their owne ingratitude deprined them not of it.

The Apoſtles meant not to reigne by their conqueſt, but to win men to God.

Verſ. 3. And in that day ſhall the Lord giue thee reſt from thy ſorrow, and from thy feare, and frõ the ſore bondage wherein thou didſt ſerue.

4. Then ſhalt thou take vp this prouerb againſt the king of Babel, and ſay, How hath the oppreſſor ceaſed? and the gold-thirſtie Babel reſted?

HEe addes a confirmation to the former promiſes: and thus God vſeth to prouide for our weakeneſſe, becauſe it is very hard for vs to giue credit to his word, but eſpecially then when things are troubled. And yet the Lord will this way proue the ſtedfaſtneſſe of our faith, when he ceaſeth not to promiſe vs ſaluation, and yet all hope thereof ſhall be quite and cleane cut off from vs. He confirmes this with many words, that ſo caſting off all doubt, wee ſhould not ceaſe to reſt our ſelues

God will proue the ſtedfaſtnes of our faith in promiſing vs ſaluation, and in the meane while withholding from vs all hope of obtaining the ſame.

ſelues vpon his gracious free promiſes, how deſperate ſo euer things ſeeme to be. And herewithall alſo he exhorts the Iewes to acknowledge, and neuer to forget ſo excellent and memorable a worke of God. Now of ſet purpoſe hee makes expreſſe mention of the yoke and bondage; thereby to teach the Iewes, that the Lord would take away all theſe impediments when it pleaſed him; and that nothing ſhould let him to deliuer his people, as ſoone as he ſaw occaſion. Let vs apply this doctrine to our vſe now, euen in this miſerable ſeruitude and vile bondage of Antichriſt, vnder whom poore Chriſtians are holden. For albeit they be inuironed and incloſed on al ſides in his nets and ſnares, yet haue they God for their deliuerer, who will eaſilie ouercome all manner of difficulties and impediments. And this may alſo bee referred to all vexations, miſeries, and troubles.

We are in theſe times to apply this doctrine to our vſes.

Moreouer, by the word prouerbe, or, parable, (for amongſt the Hebrewes it ſignifies graue ſentences, high & worthy of note) he ſhewes that this deſtruction of Babylon ſhall be ſo great, that men ſhall make a prouerbe of it; which they are wont to do in great and wonderfull things. This word how, is an interrogation proceeding from a taunting manner of aſtoniſhment: for it was incredible that Babylon (furniſhed with ſuch abundance of riches and ſtrength) could be ouerthrowne, and fall into the hands of her enemies. Hee iuſtly mockes then at their vaine and fooliſh confidence, in regard that being puffed vp with their intollerable pride, they thought themſelues inuincible and out of all danger. But it ſeemes contrarie to the modeſtie of the faithfull, to mocke at the miſerie of others: a man would thinke they ſhould rather haue compaſſion on them. But this is not againſt modeſtie, when our zeale is ordered according to the equitie of Gods iudgement: for by humane affection, we may bewaile the miſerie of thoſe who periſh through their owne folly; and yet therewithall deſpiſe their pride and furie. And euen as the Lord exalts himſelf againſt them, ſcorning their beaſtlineſſe; ſo alſo hee doth in this place command vs (which loue and deſire his glory) to contemne them, not after a proud and inſulting maner, but as magnifying and extolling his goodneſſe and power. By this example then it is lawfull for vs to ſcoffe at Gods enemies, when they are ouerthrowne and abaſed as at Antichriſt, whoſe power wee daily ſee to decay by little and little.

To ſcorne the wicked is not againſt modeſtie, when our zeale is ordered therein according to the equity of Gods iudgements. Pſal. 2. 4.

The word Madhemah, which is put in the end of the verſe, may be tranſlated gils, or of gold: but becauſe this word is conioyned with tyrant, or exactor, it is very like the Prophet ſpeakes of the couetouſneſſe and inſatiable deſire of gold, which the Babylonians thirſted after. For it often comes to paſſe, that how much the more, great Empires, Commonwealths, and nations haue of riches, ſo much the more doe they burne with luſt of increaſing and hauing.

Verſ. 5. The Lord hath broken the rod of the wicked, and the ſcepter of the rulers,

6. Which ſmote the people in anger with a continuall plague, and ruled the Nations in wrath: if any were perſecuted, he did not let.

HE now anſwers to the former interrogation, and would not that the faithfull ſhould any way doubt of the euent thereof, but rather that they ſhould ſtand aſtonied at ſuch admirable workes of God. For the interrogation ſerued to awaken vp their mindes to the greater attention. It is as much then as if he ſhould haue ſaid; It came not to paſſe by chance, or by any blinde paſſion of fortune, that you were not ſtill oppreſſed vnder a continuall bondage, but you are wholly to attribute it to the prouidence of God, who brake ſo ſore a yoke of ſeruitude from off your neckes. Now the wicked are at their wits end when they ſee ſuch workes, and ſtand amazed becauſe they ſee not the reaſon of them: but the faithfull know that this ought to bee attributed vnto God. Let vs learne then to admire the workes of the Lord, and let vs bee ſtricken with ſuch an aſtoniſhment, that we may acknowledge him to bee the author of them: and let vs not in any wiſe paſſe lightly ouer the leaſt of them; but eſpecially then when he manifeſts his power in the redemption of his Church, when by his admirable ſtrength, he redeemes any one of vs from vnder the ſeruitude of the diuell, the tyranny of Antichriſt, and from eternall death. For theſe are no common workes; and therefore wee may not in any ſort attribute the ſame to the power of man, or to any other cauſes whatſoeuer. Hee ioynes the ſcepter of the rulers, to the ſtaffe of the wicked; ſhewing by this repetition, that an vniuſt tyranny cannot be eſtabliſhed by a power imperial in any ſort whatſoeuer. Then by and by after, he more cleerly ſhewes, that the Monarchy of the Babylonians ſhall be aboliſhed, becauſe it was vniuſt and tyrannicall; and ſaith, that the people were ſmitten with an incurable wound, and extremely afflicted, becauſe they ouerflowed in all exceſſiue diſſolutions. By this we are admoniſhed, that howſoeuer God may ſeeme to winke at the tyranny of the wicked for a time, yet that he will ſpare them neuer the more for all that in the latter end, for they ſhall be deſtroyed euen as we know Babylon was, becauſe the Lord is iuſt, and continues alwayes like himſelfe.

Gods works ought diligently to bee obſerued, but eſpecially in the redemption of his Church.

Verſ. 7. The whole world is at reſt and is quiet: they ſing for ioy.

8. Alſo the firre trees reioyced of thee, and the cedars of Lebanon, ſaying, ſince thou art laid downe, no hewer came vp againſt vs.

HEere he ſhewes how Tyrants are hatefull to all the world, for they are no ſooner dead or deſtroyed, but all leape for ioy, ſhewing what affection they caried towards them, which which for feare before they dissembled. Then shall you see men vtter forth their discontentments and hatreds: and not men only discouer their ioy, but euen the dumb creatures also, as the Prophet addes afterwards, speaking of the firre trees, and cedars, by way of amplification; for as all things are ouerturned and peruerted by tyranny, so also it being abolished, it seemes all things are put into their perfect estate againe.

Now to the end the speech might haue the greater vehemencie, he addes a figure called Prosopopeia, by which he brings in trees speaking and reioycing, that they shall stand quietlie now this tyrant is dead. So then ỹ Prophets drift is to shew that the heauenly Iudge can not indure tyrants alwayes to vsurp, whom all the world detests & hates. Whence we may gather, that albeit men be silent, and dare not open their lips whilst tyrants beare sway, yet the Lord notwithstanding heares their secret grones and complaints. Let vs not wonder then if tyrants be cut off by such admirable meanes; for it is neeessarie that God who is priuie to all the outrages which they commit, should fauour and assist the innocent.

God will not alwayes suffer Tyrants to vsurp.

Vers. 9. Hell beneath is moued for thee to meete thee at thy comming, raising vp the dead for thee, euen all the princes of the earth, and hath raised from their thrones all the kings of the nations.

EVen as before he attributed gladnes to Trees, so now also by the same maner of speaking hee attributes speech to the dead. For he brings them as it were out of their graues, to the end they should deride the pride of this tyrant; and all the words following are nothing else in a maner but most pleasant taunts and flouts. For when great kings approch neere a place, people tremble; they go before and receiue them with great pomp and preperations: so Isaiah faines that the dead shall goe before this tyrant, who after his death shall descend into his sepulchre, that they may do him homage, but yet such as to him appertaineth. Which is as much as if he should say, His death shall not only be acceptable to the liuing, but to the dead also, so as they shal receiue him honorablie according to his deserts.

Vers. 10. All they shall cry and say vnto thee, Art thou become weake also as we? Art thou become like vs?

BEhold what taunts the dead shall vtter against this tyrant, whē he shall be in their companie; as if they asked a reason of him, why he also is dead as well as others. And therefore the Prophet being astonished with the noueltie of such a thing, brings in the dead enquiring thereof with admiration, as of a thing vtterlie incredible. For tyrants are so blinded with their greatnes, that they thinke themselues no mortall creatures, but make themselues halfe gods, and worship themselues. For this cause it is well inough perceiued after their death, that their condition differed in nothing from other men; howsoeuer they thought themselues exempted out of their ranke.

According to this sense, the dead reproch him with a wonderfull nipping derision, in saying, that he is made like vnto them: because death onely giues vs to know (as the satyrike Poet speakes) how weake a thing the bodie of man is. Dauid also speaking of Princes, and of their dignitie, saith thus; I haue said you are Gods: yet must you die like men, and fall like one of the people: Psal. 82. 6, 7. For the bodies of Princes must needes bee eaten and consumed with wormes at the last; although sumptuous and glorious sepulchres be prepared for such kind of persons.

See Chap. 5. vers. 9. sect. 2.

Vers. 11. Thy pompe is brought downe to the graue, and the sound of thy viols: the worme is spread vnder thee, and the wormes couer thee.

HE mentions the royall pompe, to the end one might more diligently note this mutation, when they should compare the former things with the latter: and thus shewes that nothing could let this tyrant from being brought into a like estate with others. Vnder the instruments of musicke, hee comprehends all pleasures and voluptuousnesse, wherein Kings are wont to take delight: because by the sweete harmonie thereof, they not onely forget death, but also by these mixed sounds, all cares are driuen away, so as their mindes are somewhat intoxicate therewith.

In the second part of the verse, the dead doe pleasantly say vnto him; Thou hast a bed fit for thee. For in stead of tapestrie, or a soft pillow, thou hast mothes; and for a sumptuous couerlet, thou hast wormes. To be short, we haue heere a liuely image of mens fooliish confidence, who being besotted with the present prosperitie and peaceable estate of their affaires, reioyce and cheere vp themselues. This doctrine ought to be diligently obserued: for howsoeuer men know well enough what their condition is, and haue death still before their eyes; yet are they so dulled with ambition, and tickled with pleasures, yea bewitched with vaine glory, that they vtterly forget themselues.

Vers. 12. *How art thou fallen from heauen, O Lucifer sonne of the morning! and cut downe to the ground, which didst cast lots vpon the nations?

*Or, which weaknedst men.

ISaiah continues the matter which hee began before in the person of the dead; and concludes, that this tyrant differs in nothing from others, although by all his flatteries he indeuoured to perswade himselfe that he was some god. He vseth an elegant similitude in comparing him to the starre of the morning; calling him the sonne of the twilight, and that because becauſe of his excellencie and glorie, which made him ſhine far aboue all others. Whereas ſome haue expounded this place of Satan, they haue done it ignorantly: for the ſcope of the text doth ſufficiently ſhew, that it ſhould be vnderſtood of the King of Babylon. But when men ſnatch vp places of Scripture at randome, and conſider not the coherence of the text, we neede not meruaile if wee often meete with ſo many errours. And yet was it a more abſurd blockiſhneſſe, when they made Luciſer the prince of diuels, making folkes beleeue, that the Prophet gaue him this name. But for as much as ſuch inuentions haue no colour at all; let vs leaue them for fables as we found them.

The expoſitours haue been deceiued in the ſecond member of the verſe, in tranſlating the Hebrew particle in the paſſiue ſignification, ſaying, Thou art weakened; ſeeing it is in the actiue ſignification. Notwithſtanding, becauſe the verbe whence it is deriued, ſignifies to caſt the lot; and that the particle Sur, is ioyned therewith, this ſenſe agrees well, that this tyrant diuided all regions by lot, as the Lord and Maſter of them, and drew them to himſelfe, as if they had appertained to his ſucceſſion. And yet I reiect not the other expoſition; namely, that he weakened the people.

Verſ. 13. *Yet thou ſaidſt in thine heart, I will aſcend into heauen, and exalt my throne aboue beſides the ſtarres of God: I will ſit alſo vpon the mount of the Congregation of God.*

*Or, couenant.

*Or, in the ſides of the north.

This phraſe To ſay, expounded.

THis muſt bee ioyned to that which went before. To ſay, in this place is taken to reſolue in himſelfe; according to the Hebrew phraſe. For he derides the pride of the Babylonian, who reſting vpon his greatneſſe, durſt be ſo bold as to promiſe himſelfe continuall happineſſe; euen as if it had been in his power to bring the euents of things to paſſe at his pleaſure. Wherein wee haue a faire looking glaſſe to behold the fooliſh pride wherewithall the wicked are puffed vp; which alſo ſometimes they are not aſhamed to vomit forth. Neither muſt we heere conſider the perſon of one tyrant onely, but the damnable furie of all the wicked, which make their concluſions in ſecret, no otherwiſe then if they were able to diſpoſe of all things according to their owne fantaſie. Whoſe plots S. Iames deſcribes in liuely colours; We will goe into ſuch a Citie, ſay they, wee will buy, and ſell, and get gaine: and yet in the meane while, they know not what ſhall come to paſſe to morrow: Iam. 4. 13. They neuer thinke they are vnder Gods hand; but haue this ſottiſh conceit, that they will doe all things by their own ſtrength. I grant that this brag, I will aſcend into heauen, and that which followes alſo, is ſo abſurd, as it ſeemes impoſſible how it could come out of the mouth of a mortall man: but in regard it was not the Prophets meaning to ſet downe the ſpeeches of Nebuchadnezzar, word for word, let it ſuffice vs to conſider the thing it ſelfe. For to ſpeake the truth, whoſoeuer he be that attributes more vnto himſelfe then the condition of men can beare, hee exalts himſelfe againſt God, as the Giants did, of whom the prouerb ſpeakes: whence it followes, that all their deuiſes ſhall come to confuſion. But eſpecially hee, who paſſing beyond the bounds of his calling, prouokes the Lord againſt him by his boldneſſe. And therefore let euery one of vs content himſelfe with his eſtate, and not deſire to be mounting vp aloft: but let vs rather continue in that degree wherein God hath placed vs. Indeed if God reach out his hand vnto any, and lift him higher, he may go further: but he ought to vſurpe nothing to himſelfe, nor to clime vp thereunto of his owne head. And concerning thoſe who are exalted vnto high degree and dignitie, they ought to carry themſelues humbly and modeſtlie; not feinedly, but with ſuch meekeneſſe of ſpirit, as if they were not exalted at all.

Beſides, we may ſufficientlie ſee wherefore the Prophet accuſeth this tyrant of Babylon particularly of ſuch outrage, and alſo what the ſcope is to which theſe figuratiue ſpeeches do aime, the rather by thoſe that follow, to wit, that he deſired to mount into the mountaine of the teſtimonie, and by ſuch pride to make himſelfe equall with God. For howſoeuer he made theſe diſcourſes after the ordinarie maner of men, that he was able to conquer the Iewes, yet becauſe he deſpiſed the helpe of God, vnder which they ſhrowded themſelues, as he had often heard tell, it was as much as if he had conſpired to ouerthrow the heauens. Now in ſtead of the mount of Zion, he puts the ſides of the north, which deſcription is alſo conteined in the 48. Pſalme. The mountaine of Zion in the ſides of the north, is the citie of the great King. He called it before the mountaine of the teſtimonie, which title is drawne from the verbe Iaad, which ſignifies, to vnite, to agree, and make peace. And therefore Moed ſignifies peace, couenant, and day prefixed. Laſtly, it may be referred to time, place, and perſons. But I had rather take it heere for couenant, or agreement. For the Lord ſpeaking of the Tabernacle of the couenant in Exodus, ſaith, I will there make appointment with you. Exod. 25. 21. 22. 29. 42. We muſt not thinke then that he ſpeakes heere of an aſſemblie of men, as when the profane meete in fayres or in their feaſt dayes: but that the Lord meant there to ſhew a ſigne of his preſence, and to ratifie his couenant; which we ought diligentlie to obſerue, becauſe this condemnes the ſacrilledge of this wicked king, who rather fought againſt ỹ very heauens, then againſt an earthly place.

Verſ. 14. I will aſcend aboue the height of the cloudes, and will be like the moſt high.

A Man would maruell that the Prophet doth thus accuſe the king of Babylon, as if he would be check-mate with God, ſeeing that (as wee haue ſaid) ſuch a thought could could not once enter into any mans heart, but that he muſt needs quake and tremble for feare. For euen as there is in vs ſome ſeed of religion by nature, ſo alſo are we conſtreined in deſpite of our teeth to beare ſome reuerence to this diuinitie, which we thinke to be the moſt excellent aboue all things. And there is no man ſo ſenſeleſſe that would imagin to caſt God out of his throne, becauſe we are all taught by nature rather to honor and worſhip God. And therefore howſoeuer the heathens knew him not, yet notwithſtanding they worſhipped their Idols. Thus we may imagin, it was not likelie that the king of Babylon meant to driue God out of heauen, and to reigne there himſelfe. Yet doth not the Prophet accuſe him without cauſe: for although the vngodlie reſolue not to reigne in Gods ſtead, yet notwithſtanding they fight againſt him whē they exalt themſelues more then they ought; hereby attributing that to themſelues which is proper vnto him: which is as much in effect, as if they meant to pluck him out of his ſeate. And what did ſatan elſe when he deceiued the firſt man? You (ſaith he) ſhall be as gods, Gen. 3.5. Therefore all ſuch as dare attribute more to themſelues then God permits, do lift vp themſelues no otherwiſe then if they meant to proclaime open warre againſt him; for where pride gets the maſterie, there of neceſſitie muſt be the contempt of God.

Where pride gets the maſterie, there the contempt of God muſt needs follow.

And thus alſo we may note that which we haue touched before, to wit, that this tyrant bent himſelfe of ſet purpoſe againſt God as it were in ruſhing himſelfe againſt the Church which is his holy heritage. Seeing then that he violated the heauenlie Sanctuarie, this ought not to ſeeme any exceſſiue maner of ſpeech vnto vs. Now from hence we obſerue a doctrine full of conſolation: for wee are taught that the wicked doe arme themſelues euen againſt God, as oft as they ſet themſelues againſt his Church. This king heere is not accuſed for lifting himſelfe aboue the Angels, but for indeuoring to ouerwhelme the Church of God. Now the ſeruice of God at this day is not ſhut vp in any certain place, but is ſpread thorowout the whole world. In what part ſoeuer then the name of God is called vpon, if there any tyrant do purpoſe or practiſe the deſtruction of the faithfull, let vs know that ſuch a one ſets not himſelfe ſo much againſt men, as againſt God, who will not long indure the proud ſo to make warre vpon him. We ſhall finde the like example hereafter in Senacherib, of whom the Prophet ſaith, that in threatning and offring violence to Zion, he did it to God himſelfe. Let vs therefore be aſſured that we are ſo vnder the protection of God, that whoſoeuer doth vs wrong, ſhal haue God for his enemie. He that hurts you (ſaith the Lord) hurts the apple of mine eye. Zach. 2.8. He alſo teſtifieth that he dwels in the midſt of the Church, Pſal. 46.5. ſo as none can aſſaile it but he muſt beare the firſt brunt. He will then ſurely take vengeance of all the wrongs which the Church indures, although he ſuffer it to be afflicted for a time.

The wicked arme themſelues againſt God, as often as they ſet themſelues againſt his Church.

Chap. 36.18. 19.20. & 37.4.6.17.

He that wrongs any member of Chriſt, may aſſure himſelfe to haue God for his enemie.

Verſ. 15. But thou ſhalt be brought downe to the graue, to the ſides of the pit.

HE hath heretofore ſhewed, how it was the King of Babel that enterpriſed to ſet his ſeate aboue the cloudes. And now he oppoſeth an euent quite contrarie; to wit, the ſides of the pit, or caue, that is to ſay, ſome corner of the ſepulchre into which he ſhould be caſt. For he ſaid before, that this tyrant would aſcend aboue the mountaine of Zion in the ſides of the north, becauſe the place on this ſide was high aboue the reſt. Now he takes this word ſides in a contrarie ſenſe, as if he ſhould ſay, that he ſhall be put in the moſt contemptible place of the pit or ſepulchre, euen as when a man thruſts one into ſome darke or by-corner. For if ſo be a ſepulchre be large and ſpatious, they deſire to lay the honorableſt perſonage in the midſt of it: but he ſaith, that this fellow ſhall be caſt into ſome hole, or into the ſides that ſhall be left emptie. See how the Lord ſcornes the pride of the wicked from an high, ſo as when they ſhall haue deuoured all by their couetounes, and pierced the cloudes & the heauens with their pride, yet will he expoſe them to deriſion at the length, hauing ouerturned all their enterpriſes eué in leſſe then the twinkling of an eye.

Verſ. 16. They that ſee thee ſhall looke vpon thee and conſider thee, ſaying, Is this the man that made the earth to tremble, and that did ſhake the kingdomes?

THE Prophet ſcornes this wicked king againe in the perſon of the dead, and yet this may alſo be vnderſtood of the liuing: but it is better to referre this whole ſpeech to the dead, vnleſſe we had rather vnderſtand it of the ſepulchre, which is almoſt all one in effect. Now we are wont to ſtretch forth our neck, and to ſtand vpon the tipto when any admirable or rare thing is preſented to our view. So in regard it was a thing almoſt incredible that this king furniſhed with ſo great power ſhould be dead, the Prophet ſaith, that all haue caſt their eyes vpon him to behold him diligentlie, as if they could hardly beleeue that to be true which they ſaw euidentlie before them. They aske in the firſt 1 place whether it be poſſible that he which made the world to tremble with his looke only, could be ſo ſuddenlie & eaſilie brought low. Next, the Prophet ſhewes how all his wicked 2 deſires and enterpriſes are ouerthrowne; as alſo that tyrants with their crueltie are like to cloudes, which poure downe water or haile on a ſudden as though they meant to deſtroy the whole world, but they are ſcattered and gone in an inſtant. And this ſimilitude that ſame good old father Athanaſius vſed, when ſome threatned him with the furie of Iulian. Now the Prophet ſhewes that this change came from the hand of God, who by his only will can ouerthrow the whole world.

See Martin Luther vpon the Pſalme of degrees, fol. 33.

Vers. 17. Hee made the world as a wildernesse, and destroyed the Cities thereof, and opened not the house of his prisoners.

IN this verse he expresseth the crueltie and inhumanitie of this Tyrant; namely, that he brought the world to a wildernesse, raised the Cities, deliuered not his prisoners. Those who haue obtained victorie, haue been accustomed sometimes to release their prisoners, that they might win their hearts by gentlenesse: but Tyrants had rather bee feared then loued: because they perswade themselues, that the onely safe way to raigne, is to make themselues feared of all, through a brutish cruelty. We need not wonder then at their so miserable and wofull an end: for it cannot bee but God must render them like for like; after hee hath corrected his Church by their crueltie, shewing no more mercy to them, then they did to others. Thus then he shewes how miserable Tyrants are, in regard they haue both God and men their enemies.

Tyrants had rather be feared then loued.

Vers. 18. All the Kings of the Nations, euen they all sleepe in glorie, euerie one in his owne house.

19. But thou art cast out of the graue like an abominable branch: like the rayment of those that are slaine, and thrust thorow with a sword, which goe downe to the stones of the pit, as a carkase troden vnder feete.

HEe opposeth the King of Babylon against other Kings; to shew that hee shall be more wretched after his death, then they all. And thus he amplifies the iudgement of God (who should execute vengeance vpon the cruelties done to his Church) by comparison. This place is the cause why I dare not restraine that which Isaiah speakes heere of the King of Babylon, to the onely person of Nebuchadnezzar: because we finde not by histories, that hee was depriued of buriall. Although the Iewes tell, how Euil-merodach commanded hee should be taken out of his sepulchre, because the great Lords of his kingdome durst not doe him homage, till they were certaine of the death of his father. But S. Ierome, howsoeuer hee be credulous enough in other things, yet holds this as a fable. He speakes not then of one man particularly, but of the whole Kingdome: euen as when the Scripture speakes of Antichrist, it comprehends the estate of all the Popes. And therefore he scornes the pride of all Tyrants, vnder the person of one, testifying what their issue shall be; to wit, that they shall fall into such miserie, that not so much as a small handfull of dust shall be giuen them for their buriall: howsoeuer in times past they were like insatiable gulfes, whom all the wealth in the world was not able to satisfie. Those which haue scarse one foot of land, haue notwithstanding the honour of buriall; and this was esteemed sacred and inuiolable aboue all things among the Patriarks: for it was a great dishonour to be depriued of this priuiledge. Yet he shewes that the Kings of Babylon should receiue such an opprobie, that being cast out of the sepulchre of their fathers, they should be a spectacle of disdaine vnto all. But some may aske, whether it were so great a matter in Gods sight, to bee buried with a mans predecessors, that it should be esteemed as a punishment and curse to be depriued of it? I answere, he speakes not of the sepulchre here, as of a thing necessarie to saluation: and yet that it was reputed a great shame for this Tyrant to want buriall.

Quest.

Ans.

First of all then let vs consider why buriall was so esteemed among all Nations. Doubtlesse this came from the Patriarks, whose bodies the Lord commanded to bee buried, in hope of the last resurrection. The carkases of beasts are cast out, because they are ordained to none other end but to turne to rottennesse: but our bodies are couered with earth, that being laid vp therein, they may wait for the last day; at which time they shall be raised vp to inioy the soule in an eternall and blessed life.

The reason why we are buried, and beasts are not.

Whereas diuers superstitions are crept in touching the buriall of the dead, it is certaine that Satan hath brought this to passe by his subtletie; who is wont to corrupt and peruert all things, which yet in their owne nature are good and profitable: for he hath forged infinite waies whereby to bewitch men. But concerning the Iewes, we are not to meruaile if they had many ceremonies in this behalfe, neither ought wee to condemne them for it: for they had not so cleere and manifest a reuelation of the resurrection, because Christ was not yet reuealed. But the matter is farre otherwise now, seeing we behold our resurrection in Iesus Christ apparently, and the vaile being taken away, wee now see the promises as in the sunshine, which were obscure to the Iewes. If at this day then any would bring in and reuiue the ancient ceremonies; such a one should suppresse the light, and doe great wrong vnto Iesus Christ: for, they indeuour to put a vaile before him, who hath discouered himselfe vnto vs with open face. Notwithstanding it is not vnprofitable to regard the interring of the corps, because it is a witnesse of the last resurrection, which wee yet wait for. But we ought vtterly to reiect all such superstitions, and pompe of funerals, which indeed euery faithfull man should abhorre.

Buriall of the dead ought to be retained, but superstitious customes therin to be reiected.

But if any bee left vnburied, wee must consider the cause. For many Prophets, Martyres, and holy personages haue been depriued of buriall. Wee heare how the Church complaines, that the bodies of Gods seruants were cast out to the beasts and birds, and that there was none to bury them: Psal. 79. 2. And wee daily behold how they burne, drowne, and hang the seruants of Iesus Christ, whose death notwithstanding is pretious and blessed in Gods sight. For euen as the Crosse of our Lord was blessed; so also the gibbers, bands, chaines and deaths which his members endure do partake of this bleſſing, yea, and that in ſuch wiſe, that they far ſurmount the felicitie, decking-maieſtie, and pomp of all the kings of the earth: ſo as according to S. Paules example, they may boldly glory in theſe afflictions. Moreouer, albeit we can ſee nothing but a ſigne of Gods wrath vpon thoſe whom he depriues of buriall, yet muſt we haue our recourſe to the former, and ſuch like ſentences.

Iere. 22. 19. Now as Ieremiah threatned Ioachim that he ſhould be buried as an aſſe, becauſe he deſerued rather to be laid with the brute beaſts then with men, who after death are ſeparated from the condition of beaſts by meanes of buriall: euen ſo, in as much as this Babylonian had exalted himſelfe aboue all, it was good reaſon he ſhould be deiected beneath all, ſo as his bodie might remaine without buriall. Iſaiah then foretels that this tyrant ſhall not be buried in his houſe, that is to ſay, in the Sepulchre of his anceſters and predeceſſors: for we muſt not thinke that the Sepulchres were within the houſes. The ſimilitudes which are conioined do further expreſſe the iuſt ignominie of this tyrant: for, as burſtfull and vnprofitable trees are pluckt vp by the roores, ſo he ſhewes that the king of Babylon was not worthie to remaine among men. Afterward, he compares him to the garments of the ſlaine, becauſe thoſe which die in battaile are not buried according to the accuſtomed maner, but as bloodie and ſtinking carrions troden vnder feete are tumbled into the pit clothes and all, leſt they ſhould infect the aire with their ſmell. Neither will any man offer to touch clothes defiled with blood and mire, for feare of drawing ſome infection frō them. Now we can not affirme that this hapned to the kings of Babylon, yet no queſtion but it was fulfilled, neither ought we to doubt any thing at all of it.

Verſ. 20. Thou ſhalt not be ioyned with them in the graue, becauſe thou haſt deſtroyed thine owne land, and ſlaine thine owne people: the ſeed of the wicked ſhall not be renoumed for euer.

NOw he ſhewes the reaſon why the king of Babylon is vnworthie of buriall, to wit, becauſe he which had deſtroyed his owne land, was neither worthie to be receiued into it, nor couered therewith. For euen as the earth ſuſtaines vs whilſt we liue, ſo alſo doth it couer vs being dead, and keepes vs in her bowels vnto the comming of Ieſus Chriſt. It is then a iuſt puniſhment of crueltie when ſhe refuſeth to receiue thoſe into her boſome that haue offred her violence, and defiled her. He yet addes a more fearefull threat, to wit, that God will poure out the remainder of his plagues vpon the ſucceſſors. Yet when he ſaith, The ſeed of the wicked ſhall not be renoumed for euer, we may expound this member two waies, either that the race of the wicked 1 ſhall not long endure, or that it ſhall be vt- 2 terlie put out. The diuerſitie of the interpretation conſiſts in the word alwaies, for it is either referred to the time paſt, or to come. To the time paſt thus, Although the ſeed of the wicked haue borne ſway for a while, yet the memorie thereof is vaniſhed and gone in the end. In the time to come, thus, God will ſo blot out the race of the wicked, that there ſhall be no more mention of them. Now it is vſuall with the Lord to curſe the ſeed of the wicked; as on the contrarie he bleſſeth the of-ſpring of the faithfull. And euen as the memorie of the iuſt indures for euer, ſo alſo doth it follow of neceſſitie that the remembrance of the wicked ſhould be vtterlie extinct and aboliſhed. Now howſoeuer we ſee not theſe things fulfilled with our bodily eies, yet haue we ample and pregnant teſtimonies for it, whereby the truth of the doctrine is ſufficientlie confirmed vnto vs. 1 2 Pſal. 112. 6. Prou. 10. 7. Pſal. 34. 16.

But we are now to obſerue the reaſon of this vengeance, to wit, the Lord will hereby puniſh the pride of reprobates who wil needs aduance their names, and leaue a perpetuall renoume thereof behind them: and hereunto tend all the counſels, enterpriſes, and endeuors of prophane men. Contrariwiſe, the Lord blots our their name and memorie, which yet ſeemed to be ingrauen in euerlaſting monuments. Thus it comes to paſſe that they are not only expoſed to contempt, but euery one deteſts and abhors them. Which in cōcluſion befalles all tyrants, for howſoeuer they be flattered and applauded of all whilſt they liue, yet are they and all their poſteritie held in vile eſtimation when they are dead and gone. And thus it appeares they are deteſtable to God, Angels, and men. Tyrants flattered of all whilſt they liue, but being dead, they are deteſted of all.

Verſ. 21. Prepare a ſlaughter for his children, for the iniquitie of their fathers: let them not riſe vp nor poſſeſſe the land, nor fill the face of the world with enemies. * Or, Cities.

HEere Iſaiah propheſieth againſt the king of Babylon in plainer termes then heretofore. Now we muſt remember what I haue ſaid alreadie, to wit, that hitherunto he hath not ſpoken of one particular man only, but of the whole kingdome: and now he alſo takes away the ambiguitie of this maner of ſpeech. Whereas the old tranſlation hath it, Prepare his ſonnes to the ſlaughter, it comes not neere enough to the right ſenſe, for the letter Lamed being put before ỹ word ſonnes, ſhews it ſhould be tranſlated, Prepare a ſlaughter for his ſonnes. Now let vs ſee to whom this ſpeech is directed, for we muſt of neceſſitie vnderſtand that he here couertlie ſpeakes to certaine officers, ſergeants, or executioners, whom God commands to prepare themſelues for the execution of his iudgement. And who are they? partly the Medes and Perſians, as alſo others, by whom Babylon was raſed to the foundation. It was not vtterlie deſtroyed when the Perſians tooke it (as we haue ſaid before.) Thus then he ſpeakes to thoſe whom God had ordeined in his ſecret counſell to deſtroy Babylon. This phraſe of ſpeech hath greater vehemencie in it then if he had barely ſaid, The ſlaughter is prepared: for he ſhewes that God not onely diſpoſeth of that which the wicked are to doe, but that hee alſo hath executioners at his commandement, to auenge himſelfe vpon their iniquities.

Obiect. Whereas he by and by addes, that the iniquitie of the fathers ſhal be puniſhed by meanes hereof: it may at the firſt ſeeme ouer ſeuere, to couple the children with the fathers, as touching the puniſhment which the fathers haue deſerued, and ought to beare. And yet ſeemes it to be more hard, that the puniſhment due to the fathers ſhould be extended to the children, and their childrens children. But this abſurditie may eaſily bee auoided, if we interpret the Hebrew word Aon. Miſerie: becauſe it ſignifies as well the puniſhment of the ſinne, as the ſinne it ſelfe. But becauſe ſuch ſentences are found in many places of the Scripture; to wit, that God will viſit the iniquitie of the fathers vpon the children: we need ſeeke no ſuch euaſion. Neither doth the place in Ezechiel; The ſonne ſhall not beare the iniquity of his father: Ezech. 18.20. croſſe this. For God puniſheth not the innocent: neither muſt we ſo vnderſtand this place, as if the puniſhment due to the anceſtors, were conueied ouer by God vnto the children, altogether guiltleſſe: for the fault of the children is forth-with coupled therewithall.

Anſ. Exod. 20 5. & 34 7. Deut. 5.9. Ier. 32.18. Ezek. 18.20.

But leauing now to ſpeake of that vniuerſall curſe of all mankinde, whereunto all of vs are ſubiect from our mothers wombes; let vs take an example from ſome wicked one; whom when God reiects with his whole race, truely we haue no cauſe at all to complain of it. For his bleſſing is free: and it is not lawfull for vs to compell him to beſtow it equally vpon all: becauſe he may diſpoſe of his grace according to his owne good pleaſure; and it is the dutie of euery of vs apart, to acknowledge, that whatſoeuer good thing wee haue receiued, it is none of our own properly nor naturally, but comes vnto vs from elſewhere; namely, frō Gods free libealirty. If ſo be then that he reiect any; muſt it not alſo needes follow, that his ſeede ſhould bee accurſed? For what can remaine in thoſe which are deſtitute of his grace, but a maſſe of impiety? And if they deſerue eternal death, much more are they worthy of tempotall puniſhments: for hee who expects the cutting off of his head, ought much more to iudge himſelfe worthy of the priſon and ſtripes. Wee muſt obſerue this point diligently. For I hold the ſolution of thoſe but childiſh, who thinke the Lord puniſheth the children of the wicked with temporall puniſhments, becauſe of the iniquities of their fathers: thinking it not vnbeſeeming for the Lord to correct thoſe that are innocent. Now we know he neuer puniſheth ſuch as haue not deſerued it: beſides, he is naturally inclined to mercy. But how ſhould he ſpare the wicked, if he ſhould exerciſe his wrath againſt the guiltleſſe? This then muſt be held as a thing reſolued; to wit, that all ſuch as are deſtitute of Gods grace, are ſubiect to the iudgement of eternall death. Whence it followes, that the children of reprobates, whom the curſe of God purſues, are ſubiect to the ſame condemnation with their fathers. And therefore Iſaiah ſpeakes not of innocent children, but of the loſt and deſperate; which, it may be, haue ſurpaſſed their fathers in wickedneſſe: and therefore are iuſtly coupled with them, and adiudged to the ſame puniſhments with them; becauſe they haue walked in their ſteps. But ſome may ſay, that then they beare their owne puniſhment; and not that which their fathers haue deſerued. I grant this to be true in part: but the reiection began before in their fathers; for which cauſe they are alſo forſaken and caſt away of God. And yet their fault is not ſo particular as if they were not guiltie at all; but being inwrapped in the ſame ſinnes in regard of reprobation, they are alſo liable to the ſame miſeries and puniſhment. I know wel enough that this ſolution will not ſatisfie thoſe who neuer ceaſe to diſpute & braule againſt God: but if ſo be I ſatisfie the faithfull, and thoſe that are not contentious, I paſſe not much what the reſt ſay. As for the faithfull, I doubt not but they will content themſelues with this ſolution, which I dare affirme to be moſt true.

In the end of the verſe, ſom tranſlate, That they fill the world no more with enemies: as if the Prophet meant to ſay, that all the wicked are the enemies of mankind; yea, euen of the whole earth: and therefore that the Lord prouides for the ſafety of all, when he ſweeps them from the earth: otherwiſe it ſhould be choked by them, as with thornes and briars. It ſeemes that this ſignification expreſſeth ſomewhat more; becauſe the earth receiues vs into her lap, if we diſcharge our dutie: but if wee be contemners of God, it nouriſheth and ſuſtaines vs vnwillingly, as her very enemies. Yet had I rather follow the other ſignification, which is more generally receiued: for I thinke the Prophet meant to ſay, that the wicked grow vp into a ſtocke and linage, and bring forth children in great abundance; ſo as they exceed their progenitors in number, and are more glorious in ſhew: and thence came the prouerbe, that an ill weede growes apace. Now whereas wee behold an infinit multitude of wicked ones, which haue couered the face of the whole earth as it were, we may euen thanke our ſelues for it: and yet the Lord neuer deales ſo ſeuerely with vs, but hee reſerues alwaies ſome good ſeede, although it be very thin ſowne: yea he alwaies hath an eye vnto ſome corner of the world, where he may giue his ſeruants ſome litle breathing. And if he ſhould diminiſh the multitude of the wicked nothing at all, it is certaine they would forthwith ouerſpread the whole earth. By this is confirmed that which wee haue ſaid before; to wit, that the children of the Babylonians were not ſlaine cauſleſſe; becauſe it is here ſaid, it was to the end they ſhould not fill the world with Cities. It followes then, that they were wicked, and therefore cut off by the iuſt iudgement of God; that by this meanes hee might prouide

We may thanke our ſelues that the wicked are ſo multiplied.

for the ſafetie of men; and that the Lord cannot be accuſed of cruelty or hard dealing.

Verſ. 22. For I will riſe vp againſt them (ſaith the Lord of hoſtes) and will put off from Babel the name and the remnant, and the ſonne, and the nephew, ſaith the Lord.

NOw the Lord teſtifieth, that he will doe that himſelfe which he before had commanded others to do by the miniſtrie of the Prophet: ſo that we muſt obſerue both the one and the other, namely, that it is a worke of God when the wicked come to nought, although he vſe men as inſtruments to execute his iudgements. For he ſpake thus to them heretofore: Prepare a ſlaughter, verſ. 21. Whence we haue to note not only the power of God, but alſo the efficacie of propheſie. When the Prophets (ordeined of God) giue commandement to all nations to do this or that, it is then ſo farre off that men can hinder the euent thereof, that they are euen conſtreined to performe the will of God. Now becauſe we ordinarilie ſtay our ſelues vpon men, and in forſaking God attribute the power of doing all things vnto them, we muſt hold this principle, that ſeeing God worketh by them, himſelfe is properlie the author of the worke, whereof they are only but the executioners and inſtruments. This is clearely inough laid open vnto vs by the dependance of the places following.

Though God vſe men as his inſtrumēts in bringing the wicked to nought, yet the worke is properly ſaid to be his owne.

I haue thought it beſt to reſolue the letter Vau into a particle of ſhewing the cauſe: for he yeelds the reaſon wherfore he commands the Medes and Perſians to prepare a deſtruction and ſlaughter for the Babylonians: for I will riſe vp againſt them, ſaith he: and this phraſe where God ſaith he will ariſe, is very frequent. Thus alſo the Prophet applies himſelfe to our capacitie, becauſe the maieſtie of God is ſo high that we can not comprehend it. We thinke he takes his eaſe, and is idle, whileſt he winks at the wicked: and therefore when he will cauſe men to feele his power, and giue ſome teſtimonie thereof by ſome viſible worke, he ſaith he will ariſe.

This phraſe I will ariſe, expounded.

The epithite which he afterward addes, calling him The Lord of hoſtes, ſerues for a confirmation of this ſentence: as if the Prophet ſhould ſay, I haue not giuen theſe Commandements to the nations of mine owne head, for it is God that gouernes and leades all the battailes vnder his owne hand. Seeing ℣ Prophet is ordeined then to pronounce the ſentēce on Gods behalfe, he may alſo command mē, to ℣ end they may yeeld obedience vnto him. He yet repeates the ſame thing in the latter end of the verſe, ſhewing that he ſpeakes nothing but that which the Lord gaue him in charge, that ſo the propheſie might be the more autenticall. Now it hath been often told vs before, that Babylon was not thus ruinated till after the death of Alexander the Great. By the ſonnes, and nephewes, he meanes not only the Poſteritie, but the Memorie which the wicked would obteine, ſo as they might be long renoumed after their death. God tooke euen this alſo away from Babylon, that ſo no remembrance ſhould remaine thereof at all, but only reproch and ignominie.

ſayth the Lord.

God cuts off not only the poſteritie of the wicked, but their memorie alſo. Pro. 10.7.

Verſ. 23. And I will make it a poſſeſſion to the hedghog, and pooles of water, and I will ſweepe it with the beaſome of deſtruction, ſaith the Lord of hoſtes.

HE yet againe confirmes the ſame things which he ſpake heretofore touching the future deſtruction of Babylon, to wit, that men ſhall hereafter inhabit it no more, but it ſhall be made an hidious Caue, into which wilde beaſts ſhall retire. Some ſay that the word Kipod (which we haue tranſlated Bittur) ſignifies a Beuer, others an Hedghog, other a Torteis. But it is very likely by the circumſtance of the place that our Prophet ſpeakes of a beaſt which frequents the waters; becauſe afterwards he mentions pooles, or mariſh, which in deed properlie belongs to the ſituation of the place: for howſoeuer Babylon was not compaſſed in with pooles, yet is it ſituated in a moiſt ſoile. Euphrates waters the region on the one ſide, and Tigris on the other: thence it is that the Lord threatens to drowne it.

Verſ. 24. The Lord of hoſtes hath ſworne, ſaying, Surely like as I haue purpoſed, ſo ſhall it come to paſſe, and as I haue conſulted it ſhall ſtand,

IT was needfull to adde an othe for the more full confirmation of the threatning. For nothing is more hardly beaten into our heads then to heare tell of a preſent deſtruction of the wicked, becauſe we ſee them floriſhing, furniſhed with all kind of helps, ſeeming to be out of all dangers, & vtterlie ſecure. Therfore wee are at our wits end in beholding them, being ſo dazled with their glorie, that we can ſcarſly beleeue God when he threatens their ruin and perdition; and therefore he addes an othe, that they might haue no occaſion to hang in any ſuſpence. Whence we may ſee how gratious & louing he is towards vs in ſuccoring our weaknes by applying this remedie vnto it, for otherwiſe his bare word ought to ſuffice. This ſerues then for the great conſolation of the faithfull, as we ſhall ſee hereafter. But this ſhort forme of an othe which he vſeth ought to be well knowne vnto vs, becauſe we meete often with it in the ſcriptures: and thereby the Lord bridles vs leſt we ſhould take too great libertie in oths which ſlip out of our mouths at randon with too much boldnes: for he ſuppreſſeth the greater part of the othe, If I performe not this which I haue decreed, let men take me for a lier, and hold me no more for God: this I ſay, or ſome thing elſe like vnto it (fearefull to vtter) ſhould be heere ſupplied. Men ought then to refraine their tongues, leſt they ouerflow too lightlie in execrations, making horrible impreimprecations against themselues: yea let them rather learne by the Lords example here, to hold in their rebellion.

Vers. 25. That I will breake Ashur to pieces in my land, and vpon my mountaines will I tread him vnder foote: so that his yoke shall depart from them, and his burden shal be taken from off their shoulder.

2. King. 19. 35. Chap. 37. 36

SOme thinke this is spoken of the host of Senacherib, which was destroyed by the Angell, whilest the siege was before Ierusalem. If wee shall receiue this interpretation, the sense will be thus; to wit, The Lord will shortly shew some euident proofe of this ruine, wherewith hee threatned the Babylonians. For those which heard the propheties, might aske, What shall the ruine of Babel profit vs, when she hath destroyed vs first? were it not better for vs to remain in our own lād, & that she might continue safe? What consolation can we take in her destruction, seeing with her our selues must also perish? And truely I make no question but Isaiah sets before them a proofe of Gods fauour in the destruction of their enemies; which was either come to passe already, or should shortly happen. I dare not affirme in what time the Prophet foretold this, vnlesse there bee some probable coniecture, that the discomfiture of the host of Senacherib, made by the Angell, was already accomplished. According to this sense the Prophet should take this famous example, to giue them good hope of the deliuerance to come: as if hee had said; You haue heeretofore felt how miraculously God assisteth his people in time of neede. And this is the reason which makes me thinke the armie of Senacherib was already destroyed. It was needfull then that there should be some vse of this doctrine.

There may be some probable coniecture that Senacherib was discomfited before the time of this particular prophecie.

Obiect.

But Babylon beganne not to molest the Iewes, till she had subdued the Assyrians, and transported the Monarchy. To what end then should the Prophet speake of the iudgement which God would bring to auēge the wrong done to his people, when as the Iewes had as yet nothing to doe with the Babylonians?

Anſ.

There is no absurditie to say, that a thing alreadie come to passe, should be mingled with a prophecie: neither were it amisse to say, that the Assyrians should here be put for the Caldeans. For although they had no Monarchy, yet is it very likely they were alwaies first prepared, as oft as war was to be made with the Iewes: and so fought vnder the leading of others, that in the meane while they made the greatest parte of the armie. First, they were neerer hand then the Caldeans, and those which then ruled, knew well that such people would be loyall and obedient, because of the ancient hatred which they bare to the Iewes. Adde hereunto, that it was the benefit of the Conquerours to subiect the conquered by continuall warres, vntill they were inured to beare the yoke. All which considered, it is not amisse that Isaiah speaking of Babylon, comprehends all the forces thereof vnder the name of Ashur; so taking a part for the whole.

No absurditie would follow, if the Prophet should put the Assyrian here, for the Caldean.

Thus there is no reason that constraines vs to expound this place of the discomfiture performed by the Angell in the host of Senacherib. For as I take it, the Prophet meant only to affirme, that God would put an end to the tyrannie of the Assyrians; so as they should not be alwaies so mightie: as if hee should say, Although God permit the wicked to beare rule ouer you for a time, yet this domination or superioritie shall not last euer; for hee will one day deliuer his people from the seruitude which oppresseth them, by breaking the yoke from off their necks. And as hath bin said already, although the Assyrians were subdued by the Caldeans, yet did they not cease for all that to be enemies to the church still. But Babylon, which succeeded Niniue, hauing the preheminence by transporting thereof, began to make warre with the Iewes.

Where it is said, that Ashur shall be broken in Iudah: wee must not take it as if they should be slaine there, or destroyed by some discomfiture; but that the elect people should be deliuered from their tyranny: by means whereof their dominion should be abolished. The breaking therefore is not referred so much to the persons, as to the Empire. That which he adds touching the yoke and the burden, cānot be properly vnderstood of the Assyrians onely, who yet neuer had taken Ierusalem. And therfore we must note that succession, whereof I spake heretofore: because the Caldeans had no occasion to make war, vnlesse it were because they boasted to haue the preheminence ouer the Assyrians. Now yee see the cause why I thought good to extend this prophecie to that deliuerance whereby the Lord shewed himselfe the protector of his people against the Caldeans and Assyrians; because the yoke was then shaken off, vnder which the Iewes were miserably hampered: yea, thus it comprehends the deliuerance purchased by Christ, whereof this was but a beginning.

Some thinke touching that which followeth concerning the Mountaines, that they haue put the plurall number in stead of the singuler, as if hee spake of mount Zion: but I had rather translate it otherwise. For in as much as Ierusalem was situated among the mountaines, the whole countrie was contemned for that regard. Wherefore the Prophet speakes by way of derision, granting to the enemies that the mountanous region was indeed the lesse esteemed because of them. But this contempt serued to amplifie the power of God, who deliuers his Mountaines from vnder the dominion of a mightie Monarchie. Hereunto appertaines that which is conteined in the twentith Chapter of the first book of Kings, verses 23. 28.

Vers. 26. This is the counsell that is consulted vpon the whole world, and this is the hand ſtretched out ouer all nations.

The Lord contents not himſelfe with a confirmation or two: no, he hath much adoe to refraine from aſſuring vs more and more of one and the ſame thing; and all becauſe he knowes how greatly our vnderſtanding is naturellie inclined to diſtruſt: for no repetitions ſuffice vs, although hee makes neuer ſo large promiſes in many words, and addes his othe thereunto. The Lord then we ſee is deſirous to remedie this euil, and thereto tends the repetition, that we ſhould not eſteeme it as ſuperfluous. For thoſe who think the Prophet (or rather the ſpirit of God) ſhould heape vp too many words, haue not yet attained vnto any knowledge of their owne weakenes. Well, in the firſt place he propounds the will and counſell of God: ſecondly his power. Whence comes it that we doubt of his word, but becauſe wee attribute not that ſtrength vnto God which to him belongeth, neither are we well perſwaded of his power? Theſe two things are wholie the cauſe of our incredulitie, againſt which wee ought to oppoſe two other things, which Iſaiah heere recommends vnto vs, to wit, the counſell, and the power of God. For we muſt in the firſt place hold it without controuerſie that the Lord is true, becauſe he pronounceth nothing but that which is ſtable and immutable: ſecondly, that he is almightie, that euery knee muſt bowe vnder his hand. Now it is not for vs to ſearch into the ſecret counſell of God, becauſe the Prophet commands vs heere to reſt our ſelues contented in the decree which the Lord hath manifeſted vnto vs by his word. We muſt not then flie any higher to prie into the ſecrets of God, but muſt reſt ſatisfied with the infallible teſtimonies which hee propounds vnto vs by the mouth of his Prophets. Let vs therefore with all our affections imbrace the promiſes of God, and ioine his power thereunto, becauſe his mightie hand ought neuer to be ſeparated from his mouth.

But we muſt take heed we imagin not an idle power after the maner of Philoſophers, but ſuch a one as the ſcriptures do informe vs of, that is, a power full of efficacie, and ſpeedie in execution. But ſome may here demand why mention is made of all the world, and of all nations, ſeeing he ſpeakes only of Babylon? We muſt remember what I haue ſaid heretofore, to wit, that the Empire of Babylon hauing conquered Nineue, did ſpread it ſelfe ouer all the Eaſt, and that diuers nations were ſubiect vnto it, for which cauſe the ruin thereof was alſo the ruin of the whole world: for ſuch Monarchies can not fall, but they muſt needs pull great deſtruction vpon others with them. Wherefore ſeeing the huge maſſe of ſo great an Empire might peraduenture haue called the certentie of this propheſie into queſtion, Iſaiah ſhewes, that albeit it ſhould ouerſpread far and wide, and comprehend infinit multitudes of people, yet none of all this ſhould let God to put his decree in execution.

The Lord is deſirous to cure our infidelitie.

Thoſe who thinke the ſpirit of God is wont to vſe too many repetitions, haue not yet thoroughlie felt their owne weakenes.

We muſt oppoſe the counſell and power of God againſt our infidelitie.

Let vs with all the powers of our affections imbrace the promiſes of God, and ioine his power thereto.

Verſ. 27. Becauſe the Lord of hoſtes hath determined it, and who ſhall diſannull it? and his hand is ſtretched out, and who ſhall turne it?

HEere the Prophet vſeth an exclamation as it were the better to confirme the former ſentence. For hauing told them that this was the counſell of the Lord, to the end he might ſhew them it is ſo inuiolable that it can not be broken, Pſal. 33. 11. he asks the queſtion as of a thing vtterlie impoſſible: Who (ſaith he) can diſannull his counſell, or turne his hand back? and thus by this exclamation he ſets himſelfe boldlie againſt all creatures. For the Lord no ſooner decrees a thing, but he ſtretcheth forth his hand: Is it once lifted vp? the worke then muſt of neceſſitie be put in execution. Now he not only excludes men by this his exclamation fro being able to hinder the decree of God, but all things elſe whatſoeuer; yea, be it that any other creature beſides the diuell or man would ſet it ſelfe againſt his will. To conclude, he ſhewes, that God is not ſubiect to repentance or change, but whatſoeuer falles out, were it in the greateſt confuſion in the world; yet is he alwaies like himſelfe; neither can his enterpriſe be foreſtowed by any occaſion. Num. 23. 19.

If any replie, that God hath changed his counſell ſometime, as when he pardoned the Niniuits, Abimelech, or Pharaoh: the anſwere is eaſie. For when the Lord ſent Ionah to the Niniuits, he manifeſted not that which he had decreed in his ſecret counſell, but meant to touch their hearts, and to bring them to repentance by the preaching of the Prophet, that he might ſhew them mercie, Ionah 3. 3. & 3. 10. The like he did when he threatned Abimelech and Pharaoh, becauſe they had taken Abrahams wife vnto them, Gen 12. 17. and 20. 3. for the Lord by fearing them cauſed them to change their courſe, leſt they ſhould be puniſhed for their obſtinacie.

God ſent a meſſage to the Niniuits by Ionah, but he manifeſted not that which he had decreed in his ſecret counſell, which was to ſhew them mercie.

Verſ. 28. In the yeere that king Ahaz died was this burden.

The fifteenth Chapter ſhould begin heere.

THis ſhould be the beginning of the fifteenth Chapter, becauſe the Prophet enters now into a new argument: whence it euidently appeares how ill the Chapters haue been diuided, or rather torne in ſunder. For hauing ſpoken of the Babylonians, he comes to intreate of the Philiſtins, of whom he was to ſpeake before he came to mention other nations. Now theſe were the Iewes neere neighbours, and hated them deadly: theſe were the remainder of the nations which the Iſraelites had ſpared, although the Lord had expreſly commanded that to be wholie rooted out. The peoples infidelitie was the cauſe why the Lord ſuffred this remnant to remain euen as thornes to prick their eies, which puniſhment God had threatned them with before, as the Scripture teacheth, Numb. 33. 55. Deut. 7. 16. Wherefore in regard there was deadlie feode betweene these two nations, there came no sooner any damage vnto the Iewes, but the Philistims counted it their gaine. For they desired to see the Iews rooted out, neither could any newes be better welcome vnto them, then to heare that the people of God were ouerwhelmed with all manner of miseries and calamities. This is the cause why the Prophet prophecieth against them, as against the perpetuall enemies of the Church.

The cause why the Prophet prophecieth against the Philistims.

Now the time is to be noted wherein this vision was represented vnto the Prophet: because the Philistims were very strong during the life of Ahaz: and this wretched hypocrit was punished for his disloyaltie, because by forsaking God, he fled vnto outward helpes; as namely, vnto men. And therefore in his time the Philistims recouered the Cities that Vzziah had taken: yea they gathered more strength after his death, because they hoped to attaine their enterprises, by reason that the heire of the Kingdome was but a childe. For Ezechias, who was the new King, had as yet neither wisedome, counsell, nor authoritie. It is needfull then to obserue these circumstances diligently, because Isaiah respects not the Philistims so much (although hee speakes of them) as the faithfull whom hee would comfort by this prophecie, and fortifie those with good hope, who might otherwise haue thought Iudah to haue been laid waste, in regard it was assailed with enemies on all sides, no succour appearing from any place whatsoeuer. Isaiah then seekes to establish the faith of these poore afflicted ones, destitute of all succour; and bids them be of good courage, because God will vndoubtedly help them. He calles this prophecie a burden, because it would be vnwelcome and troublesome to the Philistims, who thought themselues safe in regard that the Iewes were miserably oppressed; neither was there any hope left them of a better estate. He shewes then that the destruction of the Philistims also draws neere.

Why the Prophet calles this prophecie a burden.

Vers. 29. Reioyce not (thou whole Palestina) because the rod of him that did beate thee is broken: for out of the Serpents roote shall come forth a Cockatrice, and the roote thereof shall be a fierie flying Serpent.

IN the very entrance, hee beates backe that vaine confidence wherewith the Philistims were rashly puffed vp: and in adding, thou whole, he signifies that all, how many soeuer, shall haue their part in this calamitie. As if he should say; That region shall not be spoiled in one place onely, but there is not the least corner which shall not feele it: and as farre as the land doth reach, so farre shall the destruction and ruine thereof be perceiued on all sides. As touching that which he addeth of the rod broken; some referre to Ahaz, but besides the purpose; for he was ouercome in all the warres which hee had against the Philistims. And therefore it should rather be referred to Vzziah: and yet am I loth so to restraine it vnto him, that it should not therewithall be vnderstood of the whole body of the Iewish Nation. It is as much then as if he had said to Palestina, or Palestin; Thinkest thou to take thy rest, whilest the Iewes which afflicted thee in times past, are destroyed? No, thou greatly deceiuest thy selfe: for ere long thou shalt be vexed much more. This is the cause, as I haue said, why I restraine not this to one particular person; but rather as I take it, vnder the person of one, hee points out the whole body of the Iewes. He forthwith addes the reason why Palestin should not reioyce; to wit, because the Iewes shall be better able to annoy them then they were in former time. For if the Philistims receiued any detriment by the Iewes before, they should feele it ten times more heauy hereafter. The which he sets forth by a very fit similitude: for the Cockatrice is more dangerous then the Adder, and the fierie Serpent more hurtfull then the Cockatrice. But God be thanked wee are not annoied with these hurtfull beasts in this Country. The Prophets meaning is nothing else then, but to shew that the Philistims greatly beguiled themselues, in thinking that the Iewes should not ouermatch them. And therefore I consent not vnto them, who refer the name of the Cockatrice, and flying Serpent, vnto Hezechias. For howsoeuer they haue great shew of reason for it, because Hezechias conquered all that the Philistims held, euen vnto Gaza: yet the Prophet meant to stretch this promise further. Let vs know then, that albeit we begin at Hezechias, yet notwithstanding this fauour appertaines to all the Iewes, as to the whole body. Now from hence wee may gather a generall doctrine; namely, that when wee are oppressed with aduersities, and the wicked reioyce thereat, as if wee were vtterly confounded, and they were the only happy men; the Lord testifies, that all this their ioy is but in vaine. God will euermore vphold his Church, and set her in her first estate, though all men should iudge her cast away. The children of God shall get new strength, which wil breake the hearts of the wicked for very despite: not that the faithfull wish or purpose any such thing; but because it must so come to passe: for God hath so ordained it. Neither are these names of Cockatrice, and fierie Serpent, any names of disgrace vnto them; for they are not such by nature, but are so called, in regard they are deadly to the wicked, though harmelesse in themselues. For it comes to passe by the iust iudgement of God, and the malice of the wicked, that that which is in it owne nature profitable and healthfull vnto them, is turned into losse and poison. Such is the nature also euen of God himselfe, and of his Gospell: 2. Cor. 2. 16.

2. Kin. 18. 8.

The reioycing of the wicked lasts but a while.

In that Gods children are hurtfull to the wicked, it is not from their owne disposition, but from the wickeds malice. Psal. 18. 27.

Vers. 30. For the first borne of the poore shall bee fed, and the needie shall lie downe in safetie: and I will kill thy roote *root with famine, & * it ſhal ſlay thy remnant.*

* Or, he.

The prophets in their denunciations againſt the wicked, reſpect not ſo much, as the comforting and incouraging of the faithfull who are oppreſſed by them.

THe Prophet, as hath beene alreadie ſaid, had not reſpect ſo much to the Philiſtims (whom his threatnings feared nothing at all) as to the Iewes, whom he meant to comfort in their afflictions: for they were ſo oppreſſed that they were now neere vnto deſpaire; and therefore he calles them the firſt borne of the poore by a note of excellencie, in regard of their miſeries: for being now brought into vtter extremitie, they held as it were the firſt ranck of all wretched people. Now he promiſeth that the Lord will deliuer them from ſuch calamities, and will then feede & nouriſh them as at the firſt: whereby we may ſee that the Philiſtims were deſtroyed and cut off for the ſaluation of Gods people: who alſo had made this promiſe vnto Abraham and his poſteritie, ſaying, I will bleſſe thoſe which bleſſe thee, and curſe thoſe which curſe thee: for they muſt needs haue God for their enemie, who offer violence to his children. Then the Prophet compares them to ſheepe, whom wee ought to reſemble, if we meane to haue God hold vs vnder his protection. We meete with no one thing oftner in the ſcripture then this ſimilitude. Doth the Lord correct vs then? Surely wee may well be compared to ſtrayd ſheep, laid open to the violence of wolues and theeues: but if contrariwiſe he ſmite our enemies, he will gather vs againe together, that wee may reſt in a quiet and ſafe place. This is it which the Prophet ſignifies by ſaying they ſhall reſt in ſafetie. The Lord then promiſeth two things here, firſt good paſture, that is to ſay, all things needfull for food and rayment: ſecondly ſafetie and defence, to the end we may reſt incloſed & ſhrouded againſt all dangers. Theſe are the two duties belonging to a good ſhepheard: & in theſe two are included all things neceſſarie for ſaluation.

Gen. 12. 3.

They muſt needs haue God their foe, that offer violence to his children.

Pſal. 95. 7. Pſal. 100. 3. Iohn 10. 16. 27.

Two duties required in a good ſhepheard.

In the ſecond member he directs his ſpeech againe to the Philiſtims, whom he compares to a tree, that hath his roots ſo deeplie fixed in the earth, that it ſeemes a thing impoſſible to pull it vp; but yet if the roote wither, it muſt alſo of neceſſitie loſe his vigor, though it be neuer ſo profoundlie ſetled. Whence we are to gather, that the eſtate of the wicked is neuer ſo firme, but that God will eaſily ouerturne it: for he will not only prune off the bowes, but will parch, and bring to nothing the very roote that lies hidden in the earth.

The ſtate of the wicked is neuer ſo faſt rooted, but God can eaſily diſplãt them.

That which followes, he ſhall ſlay thy remnant, is commonlie referred to Hezekias; but as I haue alreadie ſhewed, I had rather extend it generallie to the whole bodie (of which he ſpeakes as of one man) of the King as head, who repreſented Ieſus Chriſt. We may alſo referre it to the Aſſyrian, and to all others whom God vſed for the rooting out of the Philiſtims. For the Iewes are accuſtomed to ſpeake thus indefinitly, when they minde to point out the officers by whom God executes his iudgements.

Verſ. 31. Howle ô gate, crie ô Citie, thou whole land of Paleſtina art diſſolued, for there ſhall come from the North a ſmoke, and none ſhalbe alone, at his time appointed.

HEre the Prophet vſeth amplifications to ſeale vp the truth of his propheſies in the hearts of the faithfull, and the more effectuallie to imprint thoſe things therein which without theſe would hardlie haue beene beleeued. It hath been ſaid elſewhere, that the gates ſignifies the places moſt frequented, in which they kept their meetings. He threatens then that all the Cities ſhall lament, yea and that extraordinarily, becauſe the moſt honorable aſſemblies ſhould make it. That which is added touching the ſmoke, may be taken for the fire, ſo as the thing it ſelfe ſhould be ſhewed by the ſigne, becauſe the ſmoke appeares before the fire burnes forth. By North we may vnderſtand as well the Aſſyrians as the Iewes, ſeeing both of them were ſituated on this ſide of the Philiſtims: yet had I rather referre it to the Iewes: I meane not now to ſtand refuting of the contrarie opinion. As we haue ſaid heretofore then, the Philiſtims thought themſelues great gayners by that which the Iewes loſt, when the Aſſyrians had done them any ſcathe. Which alſo happened not long ſince to many nations, who tooke pleaſure to ſee their enemies deſtroyed by the Turks: for they knew well inough that ſuch victories brought heauines and damage vnto them. So as when they whoſe ruin they thirſted after were vanquiſhed, the way by that meanes was laid open for ſuch as in the end ſubdued them.

Whereas he addes in concluſion that none ſhall be alone, it appertaines to the enemies, who ſhall be ſo furniſhed with power and authoritie in the day preſixed, that is to ſay, when God ſhall haue decreed the deſtruction of Paleſtina, that none ſhall remaine idle in the houſe, but all ſhall be readie and prepared to march forward. As if any in praying the authoritie and power of ſome Prince ſhould ſay, that all his ſubiects aſſemble themſelues and are in a readineſſe as ſoone as he holds vp but his leaſt finger.

Verſ. 32. What ſhall then one anſwere the meſſengers of the Gentiles? that the Lord hath eſtabliſhed Zion, And the poore of his people ſhall truſt in it.

I Had rather interpret this of all Nations ſimply, then of any one in particular: for as ſoone as ſtrangers are entred into a Citie, they are wont to inquire what is done there, to the end they may get ſome newes. It is as much then as if he had ſaid; What anſwer ſhall they giue to ſtrangers, when they ſhall inquire after newes? What ſhall be the common talke after the Philiſtims be vanquiſhed? This, The Lord hath eſtabliſhed Zion. His meaning is then, that the ouerthrow of the Philiſtims, ſhall be ſuch an excellent pledge of Gods mercy towards his people, that all ſhall thereby vnderſtand, that that the Lord is the keeper and protector of them whom he had chosen to himselfe. For this establishing is nothing else but Gods free adoption, wherein hee promised to be the God of Abraham, and of his seede: Gen.17.7. Secondly, he established it when hee willed that his Temple should be built in Zion, to the end his name might there bee called vpon. And yet did not this foundation consist of morter or stones, but in the promises concerning eternall life: which grace was alwaies knowne to all the faithfull. For this cause the Prophet shewes that the destruction of the Philistims shall be a memorable example by which all nations, yea those that are furtheſt off, shall vnderstand that God conserues and keepes his chosen people.

Shall trust in it.] Hee meanes not that the faithfull shall put their trust in Zion; as wee say that we must hope in God: but that the inhabitants of Zion shall dwell in a quiet and secure place; as the Prophets often affirme, that saluation is in Zion: Ioel 2.32. He would not that the faithfull then should put their trust in the Church, but shewes that they are conserued and kept in it, because the Lord vpholds and defends it. And yet will hee try our faith, lest we should wholly make our heauen here: and therefore he calles them poore, that none should thinke to be exempt from common calamities, although God hold vs vnder his protection. But could there be any greater consolation brought vs, then to heare that the inhabitants of the Church are out of all dangers, notwithstanding they be subiect to infinite miseries? Let vs then apply this consolation to our selues in the midst of all our troubles, and let not impatience cause vs to giue ouer, seeing we perceiue that God hath care of vs, and that we are assured of safetie vnder his wings.

Though God hath taken vs vnder his protection, yet we must not thinke we shall therefore be freed from correction.

THE XV. CHAPTER.

Vers. 1. The burden of Moab. Surely Ar of Moab was destroyed and brought to silence in a night: surely Hir of Moab was destroyed and brought to silence in a night.

HEre Isaiah prophecieth against the Moabites, who were neighbours to the Iewes, and knit vnto them by consanguinitie. For we know that the Moabites descended from Lot, nephew to Abraham: Gen.19.37. Seeing then there was so neere affinitie betweene them, humanitie required at the least that these two peoples should haue entertained one another louingly. But the Moabites would not be moued by any coniunction whatsoeuer, to bee friends with the Iewes; but were their deadly enemies, and as soone as occasion was offered, molested them; shewing thereby their stubburne and churlish nature. The Prophet then threatens their ruine also; because they exercised so great cruelty against that people, whom they should haue loued with a brotherly affection.

Note whereunto the prophecies tend.

Now we are still to keepe in mind the end whereunto these prophecies tend: for it is hard to say whether the Moabites profited by them; no though they had heard that which we here reade from the Prophets own mouth: but he neither spake in their hearing, nor yet sent this prophecy vnto them in writing. He had respect therefore rather to the faithfull then to them; and that for two reasons: first, that in seeing so many changes happen; namely, the ouerthrow of Cities, the destruction of Kingdomes, one of them succeeding another: they should be far off from thinking that the world was guided by a blinde rage of fortune, but in all these things might acknowledge the prouidence of God. For if none of all this had bin foretold, men (hauing their mindes snarled in vanitie, and not perceiuing the least of Gods workes) might easilie haue concluded, that all things had been guided by chance. But being admonished thereof afore hand by the Prophets, they might behold the iudgements of God as from an high Tower. As wee at this day behold in the prophecies of Isaiah (no otherwise then if he had pointed that out vnto vs with his finger, which was then hidden) the Lord sitting in his throne, and ordaining all things to fall out according to his good pleasure: for howsoeuer the wicked offered violence, first to one, and then to another, according as their malice carried them; yet God vsed them as his instruments to execute his iudgements. The second end which the Prophets aimed at was, that among all the garboiles which fell out in the world, the Iewes might know that God had a care of their saluation; and that he might shew how deare his Church was vnto him, when hee should take vengeance vpon her enemies, that had vsed her so vnkindly.

Ar of Moab.] Ar, according to the Hebrewes, signifies a Citie: and so Kir as much as to say, as a wall. But in regard that Ar of Moab was one of the chiefe Cities of the Mobites, some take it here for a proper name. And yet wee may so expound both names, as if the Prophet threatned the ruine of those Cities wherein the Moabites gloried most. But I willingly receiue the common interpretation. And so Isaiah hath here set before vs such a description, as wherein we may behold the destruction of the Moabites; to wit, when when their principall Cities are made euen with the ground.

By night, hee ſignifies a ſudden and vnexpected downefall which the Moabites did not ſo much as dreame of. For in regard that the night is appointed for reſt, if any accident fall out therein, all men are affrighted greatly, as at a thing vnlooked for. And beſides, he meant to taxe the careleſneſſe of the Moabites, becauſe they thought themſelues exceedingly well fenced on all ſides, as men out of all dangers. Brought to ſilence: That is, to be deſtroyed; and therefore ſilence is taken for death. But others leauing the ſimilitude, haue rather tranſlated, She is cut off: which I leaue in ſuſpenſe. But this which Iſaiah denounceth againſt the Moabites, the ſcripture affirmes to befall the reprobates: to wit, that their deſtruction drawes neere, ſo as they ſhall bee ſuddenly ouerwhelmed when they thinke on no ſuch matter: 1. Theſſ. 5. 3.

Verſ. 2. Hee ſhall goe vp to the Temple, and to Dibon to the high places to weepe: for Nebo and for Medeba ſhall Moab houle: vpon all their heads ſhall be baldneſſe, and euery beard ſhauen.

AS touching the wordes, ſome leaue out the Hebrew word Baiith: but ſeeing it ſignifies Houſe, and Temple, it is very likely they haue vſually taken it to ſignifie a Temple; as in many places we know the Temple is called the houſe of God: Exod. 23. 19. & 24. 26. Deut. 23. 18. Ioſh. 9. 23. Now, in that he brings in the Moabites proſtrate before their idols, he therein taxeth their ſuperſtition, becauſe they worſhipped their falſe god Chamos; as it is eaſilie gathered out of 1. King. 11. 7. Iere. 48. 8. 13. The Moabites, ſaith Iſaiah, ſhall runne to their god, when things are in this deſperate caſe, but in vaine, for they ſhall finde no help in him. And forthwith mentioning the high places, we may eaſily diſcerne thereby, that he ſpeakes of the Temple. Neither is it to bee doubted but the Moabites had a renouned fortreſſe far aboue the reſt, where they had built the places of their deuotion, in honour of their idoll. For inaſmuch as they knew not the true God, neither had their recourſe vnto him in their aduerſities; it was no wonder if they trotted to their idoll, according to their cuſtome. But hereby they increaſed the miſchiefe, and heaped a full meaſure of all euils vpon their own heads; becauſe ſo much the more they prouoked the wrath of God againſt them, as they imagined that ſeruice would pleaſe him beſt. The Prophet meant then to ſet out the comfortleſſe condition of the wicked in their aduerſities, as in a glaſſe; becauſe there is no greater bane vnto them, then thoſe remedies whereby they thinke to heale their diſeaſes. For they kindle the wrath of God againſt them to to the vtmoſt.

Nebo was alſo a Citie of the Moabites. The Prophet hath mentioned two of them already; he now addes the third, and afterwards the fourth: as if he ſhould ſay, This deſtruction ſhall not fall onely vpon the borders of the Country, but ſhall approch euen vnto the midſt; ſo as there ſhall be no place exempt. Vpon euery head. There is no Nation which hath not his ceremonies to manifeſt either their ioy or ſorrow. The Italians and Weſterne people, ſuffer their haire & beards to grow when they mourne; and this they call, The growing of the beard. Contrariwiſe thoſe of the Eaſt haue their heads & beards, which before they held for an ornament: ſo that when they change their ordinary guiſe, it is among them a ſigne of great ſorrow. He meanes nothing elſe then, but to ſhew that there ſhall be ſuch cauſe to bewaile the eſtate of the Kingdome, that euery one laying aſide all ſignes of ioy, ſhall put vpon him as it were the ſignes of ſorrow and lamentation.

Verſ. 3. In their ſtreete ſhall they be girded with ſackcloth: on the tops of their houſes, and in their ſtreetes euery one ſhall houle, and come downe with weeping.

HE goes on ſtill with his former ſpeech, deſcribing yet more fully the ſignes of mourning. Now thoſe of the Eaſt are wonderfull exceſſiue in theſe kindes of ceremonies: for as they are more vehement and quicke witted, ſo alſo doe they manifeſt their inward affections by outward ſignes, more then thoſe who are of dull capacities, and conſequently, ſo much the more vnweildie in their mouings and behauiours. Yet was it a vice in them to exceede thus in ſo many ceremonies and geſtures: but the Prophet ſpeakes thereof as of a thing common, and ſufficiently knowne, onely to ſet forth the ſorrow which ſhould happen vpon the laying waſte of that Country. Neither is it in vaine that he addes this deſcription; becauſe the propheties neuer touch vs to the quicke, vnleſſe God cauſe them to bee ſet before our eyes, as a thing acted and done indeed. To the end the Iewes ſhould not thinke then, that all theſe things were but words, in deſcribing this deſtruction: hee alſo ſets forth the manner of their griefe, as weeping and houling; to the end they might behold and ſee that accompliſhed (as you would ſay), which to them was ſo incredible. For the Moabites were then in a quiet eſtate; in regard whereof, the faithfull had the more neede of confirmation, that they might not call the truth of this propheeie into queſtion. And herewithall he notes the deſpaire whereinto the vnbeleeuers fall in their aduerſities, becauſe the rocke whereon they build, is of no force to vphold them.

Verſ. 4. *And Heſhbon and Elealeh ſhall cry; their voice ſhall be heard vnto Iahaz: therefore the *warriours of Moab ſhall ſhout; the ſoule of euery one ſhall lament in himſelfe.

*Or, barneſſed.
*Or, houſe.

5 Mine heart ſhall cry for Moab: his fugitiues

fugitiues shall flee vnto Zoar, an heifer of three yeeres old: for they shall goe vp with weeping by the mounting vp of Luhith: and by the way of Horonaim they shall raise vp a crie of destruction.

HE heere names other Cities; for his meaning is to bundle vp all the Cities of this Countrie (as it were) in one fardle, that they may be throwne into the same destruction with the rest; as if he should say, Not one shall escape. Whereas he addes a little after, Therefore the harnessed of Moab: although the Hebrue particle be a shewing of the cause, yet others expound it otherwise; but it is a matter of no great moment. The Prophets meaning is to shew that none shall be exempted frō howling, seeing the strongest and most valiant amongst them shall do it. Afterwards he shewes that euery one shall be so affected with his owne griefe, that he shall not minde his neighbour. In the 5. verse he takes to himselfe the person of a mourner, or a sorrowfull person: but it may seeme strange, yea very vnfitting, that the Prophet should bewaile the destruction of the Moabites, for he should rather haue sorrowed at the calamitie of the Church, and reioiced at the ouerthrow of the enemies. But the Prophets are wont to take vpon them the person of those against whom they prophesie afflictions, to the end they may represent their estate as it were vpon a stage or scaffold. And thus they moued affections more, then if they had propounded the doctrine simplie without this art. And yet no doubt the Prophets trembled themselues at the iudgements of God, yea euen at those which they threatned the wicked withall: but that which I haue said is lesse cōstreined, and agrees best, as we may easilie discerne by common experience. He calles them fugitiues which fled thence: for his meaning is that those which shall escape frō Moab shall come vnto Zoar, whom he compares to a heifer of three yeere old, which is in her full force and strength, and hath not yet brought forth, nor felt labor, nor the yoke; but fetches her frisks, and playes the wanton.

Now when the forces of the enemie presseth neere vpon a place, then they flee to other Cities which haue not yet been assailed, and which seeme to be furthest out of danger. Zoar was such a one, because the enemies had not yet ouerrun it: but if any had rather expound this of the whole region, I gainsay him not, because it seemes Ieremiah speakes in generall, who notwithstanding borrowes many sentences from our Prophet: vnlesse some had rather affirme that he there expresseth as well Zoar, as Horonaim, or rather the whole region which lieth between them. If it be referred to the whole nation, the sense will be, that the Moabites who were nourished vp in pleasures and abundance of all good things, felt no euill till it came vpon them, from whence they grew proude. And therefore to tame them, it was requisit they should be driuen to Zoar, which was farre remote from the Moabites, thereby shewing that they could not saue themselues but by flying very farre off. Ier. 48. 34.

Those whom the Lord thus tenderlie fosters, are heere admonished to be humble, and not to prouoke the wrath of God against them by their pride and dissolutions: but to be sober; yea euen thē when all things prosper with them in the best maner that can be wished: as also to prepare for all changes when God shall be pleased to visit them. How such ought to behaue themselues vpon whom God bestowes most of his benefits.

By the mount of Luhith he describes other places of the countrie of Moab, and sets forth the flight of this people, and the sorrow that shall be thorowout the whole kingdome. Whereas we haue turned, They shall raise vp the crie; others haue translated, They shall breake, or cleaue asunder with loud cries, affirming that there is a transposition of letters, and that the letter Gnain is doubled. In this sense this verb should be deriued from Raah, which signifies to breake or bruse: but because this serues not much touching the principall, I haue let that stand which is most approued, so as the verb descends from an other, which signifies to waken or raise vp. If any had rather retaine the word, To breake, the sense is, that there shall be a breaking, and (as it were) a bruising of the members with sorrow and crying when one smites one arme against an other.

Vers. 6. For the waters of Nimrim shall be dried vp: therefore the grasse is withered, the herbs consumed, and there was no greene herb.

THe Prophet amplifies this desolation by a kind of excessiue speech. He saith, The grasse shall wither, which falles out when God depriues a land of all helps. Also that the waters shall be dried vp: for it is very likely they were exceedinglie necessarie for this quarter which was drie: for such countries as those bring forth nothing vnlesse they be watered. But howsoeuer this be an excessiue speech, yet it conteines nothing but that which is most true: for he passed not his bounds, but was faine to lay forth these things in the more words, because of the peoples dulnesse, to the end they might know that this land beeing depriued of Gods blessing, should become a desert deformed, and void of all beautie. 1 2

THat which euery one hath reserued, signifies the same which we vsually say, that which is left, or spared. For his meaning is to speake of riches reserued; thereby shewing what happens ordinarily in those countries which the enemies inuade, to wit, euery one labors to transport his goods to an other place, and to lay them vp safe there, that so they may fetch them home afterwards. Now he saith that that theſe ſhall haue no fortreſſe nor refuge to put their goods in ſafetie: ſo as they ſhall bee conſtrained to hide them amongſt the willowes. See here an extreme miſerie, when wee can finde no place of refuge, to ſafegard and keepe that which woe haue gotten with great labour, from being a ſpoile to the enemies. It is very likely that theſe willowes ſtood in ſome ſecret and cloſe place remote from others. Some expound this of the enemies, which bring the riches which they haue pilled, to the riuer, to part the pray among themſelues.

Verſ. 8. For the cry went round about the borders of Moab, and the houling thereof vnto Eglaim, and the skriking thereof vnto Beer-Elim.

THe Hebrew particle Ci, was added for ornament. His meaning is, that all the quarters of this Country ſhall be filled with cries and lamentations in euery corner; becauſe this deſtruction ſhall reach from one end to another. To the cry, he addes a skriking or double houling, to expreſſe the exceſſe of dolour; it being the maner of deſperate perſons to become vtterly deſolate, and to bee reſolued into teares.

Verſ. 9. Becauſe the waters of Dimon ſhall be full of blood: and I will bring more vpon Dimon, euen lions vpon him that eſcapeth Moab, and to the remnant of the land.

*Or, increaſings.

HEe not onely deſcribes here the dolour, houling, flight, and trembling, or the couetouſneſſe of the enemies in raking together of riches; but the ſlaughter of men, which muſt needes be fearefull, when the great and renowned riuers (as Dimon was) were filled with blood. By increaſings hee meanes that the Lord, in whoſe perſon hee ſpeakes, will augment the murthers; ſo as the dead bodies ſhall be piled one vpon another, and there ſhall be no end thereof, till they be all put to the ſword. Now howſoeuer the aduerſaries were cruell in this deſtruction, yet the Lord paſſed not meaſure for all that: becauſe hee iuſtly puniſhed the inhumanitie which the Moabites vniuſtly exerciſed ouer the Iewes; vpon whom they ought to haue had compaſſion. It was iuſt then for them to beare the ſame puniſhment which they had laid vpon others.

Which are eſcaped.] Theſe are alſo the increaſings whereof he ſpake; or at leaſt part of them. For behold the higheſt pitch of all theſe calamities; that if any indeuoured to ſaue himſelfe in battel, from out of the hands of his enemies, hee ſhould meete with lions and cruell beaſts which ſhould deuoure him. And this is the true meaning of the Prophet, if we narrowly weigh the whole context. He meant to expreſſe this diſcomfiture, and the miſerie thereof in liuely colours, by ſhewing that the ſmall remnant which ſhall eſcape the ſlaughter, ſhall fall into the pawes of the lion: becauſe the hand of the Lord doth ſo purſue the wicked, that they can no way eſcape: if they paſſe one danger, they by and by fall into another. But withall let vs remember, that the Prophet ſpeakes theſe things for the conſolation of the faithfull, that they might fortifie themſelues by ſome promiſes againſt the cruelty of the enemies, who in the end ſhould be cut off, and ſhould finde no refuge at all in their gods, fortreſſes, or lurking holes; neither ſhould their flight any thing at all auaile them.

THE XVI. CHAPTER.

Verſ. 1. Send yee a lamb to the ruler of the world, from the rocke of the wilderneſſe, vnto the mountain of the daughter Zion.

HEere the Prophet inſults ouer the Moabites, for that they knew not God whileſt they had time; but boldly expected his puniſhing hand, till at length they were deſtroyed by it. In this place then there is a condemning of too late a repentance; when men cannot be brought to amendment by any admonitions whatſoeuer, but harden their faces againſt God. In a word, this kind of exhortation hath place, when the diſeaſe is become incurable. Now wee muſt diligently obſerue the words, becauſe both Hebrewes and Chriſtians interpret this place amiſſe. Saint Ierome expounds it of Ieſus Chriſt, becauſe he deſcended from the Moabites, of whom Ruth came: Ruth 1.4. Matth. 1. 5. and the moſt part of Chriſtian expoſitours follow him. As if the Prophet ſhould ſay; Lord, although ſo ſeuere a iudgement be prepared for the Moabites, yet thou wilt not vtterly deſtroy them. Why? Becauſe they muſt ſend vs the Lambe, which is the ruler of the world. But as this expoſition hath no ground, ſo needes it not to be refuted. As touching the Hebrewes, they thinke this was ſpoken in regard that the Moabites, who ſeeing the Iewes to haue ill ſucceſſe, ceaſſed to pay them the tribute which they ought: and Iſaiah hauing propheeied the reſtauration of the Kingdome of Iudah, they thinke that therewithall hee exhorts the Moabites to acknowledge their King. And ſo would haue this a royall edict to correct their diſobedience: as if hee ſhould ſay; Send the tribute which you owe. But wee reade not in any place that the Moabites were ſubiect or tributaries butaries to the Iewes: neither is there ſo much as any probable coniecture of it. Whereas they alleage the hiſtory of the Kings, they are miſtaken: for it is there ſpoken to the king of Iſrael: Ahab and Samaria are there expreſſly named: 2. King. 3. 5, 6 and we know that the Samaritans bare a deadly hatred againſt the Iewes. I content my ſelfe then in the firſt expoſition which I haue touched, as being the trueſt and moſt naturall: becauſe the Prophets meaning is to condemne the Moabites for not repenting in time, and therefore ſhould now ſeek reconciliation in vaine; which before to their great vtilitie they might eaſily haue obtained.

The true ſenſe of this place.

Thus the word ſend, muſt be taken by way of deriding: as if he ſhould ſay; You may now ſend, but looke for no pardon, nor to get any benefit by it. For when the wicked are admoniſhed, they proudly deſpiſe all exhortation: but when the rod is vpon their backe, then they fare like franticke men, running hither and thither, ſeeking helpe euery where, trying all remedies, but without any fruit; for they profit no whit thereby. Iſaiah then ſcornes at their obſtinacie and rebellion, and ſhewes there will be no time of repentance when the deſtruction ſhall come vpon them, which they haue iuſtly deſerued.

The wicked deſpiſe admonitions till they feele the ſmart of the rod, and then they ſeeke to God, but for the moſt part in vaine

The Iewes thinke that the Prophet ſpeakes here of Hezechias, but contrary to all reaſon: for there is no mention made here of any certaine land, but rather of the whole world; whereof the Prophet ſpeakes in generall. This ought then to be referred to God himſelfe. He calles that a Lambe, which ſhould be offered in ſacrifice: for the Nations profeſſed to worſhip God when they offered their ſacrifices. By the ſtone or rocke of the wildernesſe, hee meanes a Citie, which was eſteemed the chiefeſt in Moab; although wee may well affirme, that hee meant to comprehend the whole Country: and ſo a part ſhould be taken for the whole. To the mountaine: That is to ſay, to the true Temple of God, where the ſacrifices were offered according as the Law commanded. This place is of excellent vſe againſt the obſtinate, who reiect all wholſome doctrine, proudly deſpiſing God, till his iudgements take them in the necke.

Deut. 12. 5, 6, 7. 2. Chron. 7. 12.

Verſ. 2. For it ſhall bee as a bird that flieth, and a neſt forſaken: the daughter of Moab ſhall be at the fords of Arnon.

*Or, it ſhall come to paſſe that the daughters of Moab ſhall be at the fords of Arnon, as a bird taking her flight, flies from her neſt.

THe Prophet now ſhewes what he meant to ſay, by his former deriſion; to wit, that the Moabites muſt not thinke of ſending ſacrifices then, becauſe they cannot otherwiſe ſaue themſelues, but by fleeing from their Country. By the ſimilitude of birds, he expreſſeth the terror wherewith they being once ſtrucken, ſhall flee at the noiſe of a leaſe. For hee threatens the fearefull and wearieſome flight of the Moabites, who had abuſed their reſt.

Verſ. 3. Gather a counſell, execute iudgement: make thy ſhadow as the night in the mid-day: hide them that are chaſed out: bewray not him that is fled.

HE goes on with his ſpeech. But if we will rightly vnderſtand this place, we muſt ſet the calamitie wherewith the Moabites were extremely afflicted, before our eyes. Now he calles their wickednesſes to remembrance; to the end all might know how iuſtly this calamitie befell them. When they had all things at their deſire, they ouerflowed in diſſolutions, and reiected all reprehenſions: now being forſaken and left deſtitute of helpe, they mourne, ſeeking remedies, but find none. For thus God deales with the reprobates: he ſupplies their neceſſities, and puts all they can wiſh into their hands, to leaue them without excuſe. But after they haue abuſed theſe bleſſings of God through their wicked luſts, and haue turned all things to an ill end, he takes from them all meanes and helpes, and then brings them to nothing. Whileſt the Moabites were in proſperitie, they made no great reckoning of mercy and vprightneſſe, although they might haue ruled, and had a floriſhing Kingdome without doing any man wrong: yet did they abuſe it to eſtabliſh their tyranny. Now then when they are depriued of all authoritie, baniſhed, and fugitiues; Iſaiah in ſcorne, admoniſheth them to gather a counſell, and to execute iuſtice, which before they had ouerturned by fraud & extortions. For Iſaiah hath an eye to the time when the Moabites were ſpoiled of all principality and pwer. And it ſeemes this reproch is like to that which the Lord vſed to Adam, ſaying; Behold Adam is become as one of vs: Gen. 3. 22. For he is there ſcorned by a biting kinde of ſpeech, that not being content with the excellent graces he had receiued, hee would needes be like God himſelfe. So the Moabites being not contented with their ornaments and riches, vexed the poore Iewes and Iſraelites after a barbarous maner; pilled and polled them, and imagining wicked deuices againſt them.

How God deales with the wicked.

Seeing then that they had abuſed the excellent gifts of God, hee iuſtly reprocheth their fact. Which alſo appertaines to all reprobates, who inſolently exalt themſelues when they proſper; and abuſing the ſame, doe offer hard meaſure to the faithfull. For in as much as they pollute the things which God hath conſecrated to a right end, it is good reaſon they ſhould be depriued of them, and ſuffer extreme want. Wee ſee daily examples hereof before our eies. Whence is it that thoſe who are aduanced to great places of honour, fall ſo violently, but becauſe God auengeth himſelfe of their tyrannous gouernment and wicked practiſes? The Lord alſo reprocheth their ſhame, contempt, teares, and complaints: as when they cry out, Oh that I might returne againe to my goods! Oh that I were ſet in my firſt eſtate! But then alas repentance is too late.

Make thy ſhadow.] The Moabites (as I haue touched before) might haue refreſhed the Iewes, Iewes ſomewhat in their miſerie when the Aſſyrians vexed them. At the leaſt, had there been any ſparke of humanitie in them, they ought to haue receiued the fugitiues: but inſtead of doing this, they perſecuted and wickedlie offered violence to thoſe which were oppreſſed too much alreadie by the hands of others. Good reaſon it was then that the Moabites ſhould haue experience in their owne perſons of that crueltie which they had exerciſed towards others, that being chaſed from their dwellings, baniſhed and wandring to and fro, they might finde no ſuccor nor ſhadow to hide and defend themſelues from the heate. For why ſhould they enioy that comfort which they had vnkindlie refuſed to giue vnto others?

He takes the mid-day heere for extreme heate: and this ſimilitude is often found in the ſcriptures, to wit, that the Lord was as a cloud at hie noone, and as a pillar of fire by night, Exod.13.21.22. Numb.14.14. Deut.1.13. becauſe he did it once in the wildernes. The Prophets retained theſe phraſes of ſpeech becauſe they were then in vſe, although they recited not the hiſtorie. Beſides, when he ſaith, hide them that are chaſed out, he ſpeakes of the Iewes, who being purſued and vexed by the Aſſyrians, were notwithſtanding vncourteouſlie intreated by ỹ Moabites, whoſe dutie it was to haue entertained and comforted poore fugitiues, eſpeciallie thoſe who fled to thẽ for ſuccor. But ſince they chaſed them away, it was requiſit that themſelues ſhould be chaſed and depriued of all help and ſuccor. For juſt and equall is that ſentence of the Lord, who commands that euery one receiue that meaſure which himſelfe hath meaſured, Deut.19.19.21. Matth.7.2. Now the Prophet would haue the Moabites to acknowledge their ſinnes, to the end they might confeſſe the puniſhment of their cruelties to be iuſtlie inflicted vpon them. Although he rather reſpects the Iewes, to teach thẽ that God neglected not their miſeries; but would afterwards let them ſee that he reuenged all their wrongs.

Verſ.4. Let my baniſhed dwell with thee: Moab be thou their couert from the face of the deſtroyer: for the extortioner ſhall end, the deſtroyer ſhall be conſumed, and the oppreſſor ſhall ceaſe out of the land.

THe Prophet ſpeakes to the Moabites as if he humblie ſued vnto them in the name of the common people; as if he ſhould ſay, You are neighbours and of the ſame blood, I pray you receiue and ſuccor the oppreſſed. If you will not help vs, yet at the leaſt harme vs not. He brings in God ſpeaking, who is wont to put himſelfe in the place of his people, as if he ſpoke vpon him the perſon of a ſuppliant. It is very certaine that the Moabites ſhewed none of this kindnes to the Iewes: nay they rather ioined with their enemies to hurt them by all the meanes they could. This place is worthie our diligent obſeruation, for God heere ſhewes the great care he hath ouer his choſen, ſeeing he is as greatly moued with the wrongs done to them, as with thoſe which are directly againſt his owne Maieſtie. As in Zacharie hee witneſſeth, that as oft as his children are oppreſſed by any, they euen touch the apple of his eye, Zacha.2.8. He ſees the teares and heares the grones of the afflicted which call vpon him, Pſal.12.5. & 38.9. & 102.20. And howſoeuer this alwaies comes not to paſſe in our ſight; yet will he ſhew in due ſeaſon that he hath heard them. Let vs then learne from hence to be kinde, and giuen to ſuccor poore exiles: eſpeciallie the faithful, baniſhed from their countrey for the confeſſion of the truth. For there is no ſeruice which God accepts, or allowes better then this: as on the cõtrarie, nothing is more diſpleaſing or deteſtable in his ſight, then crueltie and inhumanitie. Wherefore if we will feele any refreſhing in our calamities, let vs ſhew our ſelues louing and merciſull, and not withdraw our helpe from thoſe that haue neede. Bleſſed is he, ſaith Dauid, which iudgeth wiſely of the poore and needie, the Lord ſhall deliuer him in the time of trouble, Pſal.41.1. Whereas on the cõtrarie there ſhall be iudgement mercileſſe to him that ſheweth no mercie, Iam.2.13. Now in that the Lord calles the Iewes heere his baniſhed: although this might well be referred to the chaſtiſement, as if he ſhould ſay, they are indeed driuen out of the land of Canaan according as they were oftentimes threatned before: yet he therewithall meanes, that they remaine vnder his protection and ſafegard, acknowledging them for his owne, although they be chaſed and baniſhed out of their countrie. For this calamitie which the Iewes endured, ſeemed a kind of reiection, but the Lord takes them ſtill for his children, although he thus ſharplie corrected them.

A Conſolation. God is no leſſe moued with the wrongs done to his children, then with thoſe which are done directly againſt his owne Maieſtie.

Be merciſull to poore exiles, baniſhed for the truths ſake.

Deut.28.64.

Hence we may gather a ſingular conſolation, to wit, that we are ſtill of the number of Gods children, howſoeuer we may be ſmitten with hard and grieuous plagues. The extortioner ſhall end. He now directs his ſpeech to the Iewes, and continues to comfort them as before, ſhewing that when their enemies ſhall be cut off, they ſhall thereby be eaſed of all their miſeries and calamities. Now howſoeuer the Prophet ſpake heretofore expreſly to the Moabites, yet did he therewithall direct his ſpeech to the Iewes alſo. But then he only threatned the Moabites as enemies: here, he more clearely promiſeth comfort to his people; as if he ſhould ſay, O Moab, thou thoughteſt that my people were vtterlie vndone, but I will ſubdue their enemies, and put an end to their afflictions: thou ſhalt periſh, but my people ſhall in the end eſcape from the heauie burthens which oppreſſe them. Vnleſſe any had rather ſay that there is a change of the time here: ſo as the particle Becauſe, ſhould ſignifie vntill, and ſo reading the ſentence all with a breath. But becauſe this may ſeeme conſtreined, I had rather retaine the naturall ſenſe.

A Conſolation.

Verſ.5. And in mercie ſhall the throne

be prepared, and he shall sit vpon it in stedfastnesse in the tabernacle of Dauid, iudging, and seeking iudgement, and hasting iustice.

It is ill done of the Hebrewes to expound this whole verse of Hezekias. For the Prophet speakes of a greater restauration of the Church: the Moabites were not as yet chastened, whilest the gouernement of Hezekias flourished: and at that time the blessing of God began to shine againe vpon the Iewes. It is as much then as if he had said, the enemies of the elect people doe plot the ruine of this kingdome, which God had promised to stand firme; yea, and that for euer. To the end then that the faithfull might not be out of heart in this wofull scattering; the eternitie of the kingdome which had been set before their eyes by an excellent prophesie, is here brought to their remembrance. This place therefore can be referred to none other but to Iesus Christ, of whom Hezekias, as also Dauid and his successors were figures. These then doe rather leade and conduct others to Christ, who is the onely safe keeper and protector of his people: who indeede gathereth together the remnant that is scattered. Thus then hee brings the faithfull backe vnto Christ: as if hee should say, You know what God you serue: he hath promised to be the onely keeper of your saluation; to the end you may remaine safe vnder his protection, Iohn 10.28. And if it so fall out that things goe crosse sometimes; yet hath he promised you a redeemer: vnder whom you shall recouer a new and stedfast felicitie. What then if for a time you be sad and heauie? yet will this Sauiour of the Church come in the end: who wil set you in a flourishing liberty. And therefore settle your selues constantly in the expectation of him: yea euen then when you shall see the estate of the Church miserably scattered.

Dan.7.27.

Iob.10.16. & 11.32.

All consolations whatsoeuer are fading and transitorie, vnlesse they be referred vnto Christ.

We haue need to obserue this diligently, because all consolations whatsoeuer are but earthly and transitorie, if all be not referred vnto Christ. Let vs then fasten our eyes vpon him, if we will enioy any prosperitie or happines: for he hath promised that felicitie shall accompanie vs, euen in the middest of persecutions; Matth.5.10,11. and that all our anguishes and vexations shall open a way vnto vs to eternall life: yea, that all the afflictions which we endure, shall turne to a full measure of happinesse vnto vs, Rom.8.28.

Now Isaiah shewes that this shall not come to passe by meanes of men; but by the grace of God, which is the onely builder of this throne. Wherefore to him onely must we attribute this mercie, and acknowledge that it is of his free goodnesse that he hath established this sacred throne in the middest of vs. Now the Prophet confirmes it very well in saying, that the cause must be sought no where else, but in the meere mercie of God. This is a grounded trueth: for God was not moued thereto by the worthinesse of any merits; alas they were of no value to set vp that throne againe which was fallen downe by the sinne and iniquitie of the people: but seeing those whom he had adopted, had vndone themselues, he meant to shew a token of his infinite bountie in their restauration.

Shall sit vpon it in stedfastnesse.] There is almost no one word here which hath not his weight, so as this verse is worthy to be continually remembred. I grant indeede there is an allusion heere in the word Tabernacle, as some doe expound it; to wit, that he was as a common person before he was called to sit in the royall throne. For the Prophet meant to decipher out a liuely image of the Church, which is farre vnlike the thrones of kings and princes; neither shines it with gold, siluer, or precious stones as they doe. Now howsoeuer he proposed the spirituall kingdome of Christ vnder a base and abiect resemblance: yet he therewithall admonisheth, that it shall bee prepared, and set vp among men in the earth. For if it had been onely said that the throne of Christ should be set vp; it might haue been demaunded whether his seate should be set vp in heauen or in earth.

1.Sam.16. 11.12. 2.Sam.7.8.

But when he saith in the Tabernacle of Dauid, he shewes that he reignes not onely among Angels, but among men also: lest wee should imagine he were not to be found, vnlesse we ascend vp into heauen. The wicked laugh at this: taking all that we say of the kingdome of Iesus Christ but for a fable; as if it were a fancie forged in our owne braine. For they must behold that wee tell them of with their eyes; also it must agree to their senses: as for vs we ought in no wise to conceiue any thing carnally of him; but to content our selues with his power and vertue.

Vnlesse the wicked see it with their eies which is told them, they will beleeue nothing.

In stedfastnesse.] The word Emeth signifies all stedfastnesse whatsoeuer, and trueth. Here the Prophet meanes that the kingdome of Christ shall be firme and stable, as Daniel also hath witnessed, Dan.2.44. and 7.14. Likewise the Euangelist Luke: Of his kingdome (saith he) shall be none end, Luke 1.33. Wherein it differs from the common condition of other kingdomes, which often fall and tumble downe by their owne weight: be it that the foundations of them bee riches and other great commodities, alas their stedfastnesse differs very little from vanishing shadowes. But howsoeuer the kingdome of Christ seeme to totter now and then, yet Isaiah tels vs that it shall stand for euer, because God vpholds it with his hand. We must therefore arme our selues with these testimonies against the temptations which shal happen when Christs kingdome is assailed with many and mighty enemies, so as a man would imagine it would fall to ruine forthwith. Let the world deuise what it can then, yea, let hell it selfe cast forth flashes of flaming fire: yet must we sticke fast to this promise.

Christs Kingdome differs from the common condition of other Kingdoms.

Christs Kingdome may now and then seeme to totter: but it shall euer stand stedfast, because God vpholds it.

He shall iudge.] I take the word Shophet for Gouernour: as if he should say, there shall be one that shall gouerne: we often see a magnificent throne, and yet no man sits on it: and it will ordinarily fall out that kings shall be either idols or beasts, who haue neither iudgment, wisedome, nor any discretion in them.

But

But heere he ſaith, that he which ſhall ſit in this throne wil performe the office of a good gouernour: which is added, to the end we may know that Chriſt will be our protector in deed: for the iudgement which is attributed to him is nothing elſe but the ſafe cuſtodie vnder which he hath receiued vs, and which none can wring from him: neither will he let the wicked remaine vnpuniſhed when they haue offred vs violence, if ſo be that with a meeke and quiet ſpirit we will put our ſelues vnder his protection.

We muſt ſet Chriſts ſpeedines in comming to our reſcue, againſt our impatiencie.

By the word haſten, the Prophet ſheweth that Chriſt will take vengeance quicklie and ſpeedilie of our afflictions: which we ought to oppoſe to our impatiẽcie, becauſe it ſeemes to vs that he is too ſlow in ſuccoring vs. But when we ſhall be ſo ouerſwayed by our paſſions, let vs thinke, ſurely this comes to paſſe becauſe we giue not place to his prouidence.

Although Chriſt ſeeme to tarrie long in our ſenſe, yet he knows what time is fitteſt to help vs.

Although then that he tarrie according to the ſenſe of the fleſh, yet doth he alwaies moderate his iudgements after a moſt excellent order, according as he knowes the ſeaſons beſt for vs. For this cauſe then let vs quietlie wait his good pleaſure.

Verſ. 6. We haue heard of the pride of Moab (he is very proud) euen *his pride and his arrogancie, and his * indignation,* but his lies * ſhall not be ſo.

*Or, inſolencie.
*Or, ſhal not be approued, or, ſhall not take effect.

THe Prophet addes this ſentence by way of preuẽtion. For that which he had promiſed touching the reſtauration of the royall throne, ſeemed incredible; neither could they perſwade themſelues that the Moabites could be deſtroyed, ſeeing they floriſhed at that time with abundance of riches, as alſo in ſtrength and power of men: who for this cauſe (being puffed vp with proſperitie) became exceeding proud. Adde alſo, that their malapertnes wherewith they inſulted ouer the poore Iewes, was vnto them like a ſore and hard engin to breake and bruiſe their hearts. The Prophet that he might preuent this temptation, tels them that the brags of the Moabites are well enough knowne; but yet their pride ſhall not hinder the Lord from puniſhing of them: becauſe there is neither force, riches, nor multitude that is able to reſiſt him. Iſaiah then ſpeakes as of a thing commonlie knowne: to wit, that the Moabites were become ſo extreame proude, that they feared nothing: it being in deed the vſuall faſhion of thoſe that abound in wealth and power, to inſult malapertlie ouer God and men. But how great ſoeuer their arrogancie is the Lord will eaſily pull it downe.

His inſolencie.] The word Euvah for the moſt part ſignifies indignation: but the circumſtance of this place ſeemes to require ſomewhat more. This noune comes of the verb to Tranſgreſſe, as if we ſhould ſay in Latine, To exceed, and therefore I haue thought good to tranſlate it inſolencie. Ieremiah hauing mentioned their pride & arrogancie, ſpeakes of hautines of the heart, Iere. 48. 14. & 29. I make no queſtion but Iſaiah and Ieremiah both meant that this people were ſo cruell in regard of their ouerweening, loftines & ſtatelines, that they would wax wroth and angrie vpon the leaſt occaſion; and churliſhlie aduance themſelues againſt others. This vice is alwaies ioined with loftines of mind, becauſe the contempt of others is accompanied with pride: and thoſe who aſcribe vnto thẽſelues more then is meete, are eaſily prouoked to anger vpõ the leaſt occaſion: ſuch can beare nothing, and are not only inclined to wrath, but to outrage alſo. For by their good wils they would ſubiect euery man vnder them, neither will they giue place by any meanes to any man whatſoeuer. If euery one be not readie at their beck they take it in foule ſcorne. Proude men doe eaſily bewray this their high ſtomack: whereas the humble on the contrarie are of a louing diſpoſition, ioyned with modeſtie anſwerable thereunto, and are ſoone intreated to pardon any that haue done them wrong.

Riches begets pride, pride brings forth wrath, and wrath is for the moſt part accompanied with outrage.

His lies.] The Hebrues call the members of man, or the branches of a tree Baddim: and they alſo take this word for Diuination, which is vſed in this ſignification in ſome other places. Some thinke it is put heere by a figure, for childrẽ: others referre it to words, or thoughts: others expound it of ſtrength or ſinewes. But in mine opinion it is taken rather for a fooliſh boaſting, becauſe this noune is often taken for a lie: and we ſhall ſee hereafter how this ſignification agrees beſt to this place. The expoſitors alſo differ in the word Ken. The moſt tranſlate, That lies, or words are not vpright: others, that lies are not true. For the ſubſtance, I am almoſt of their opinion: neither doubt I but the Prophet meant to ſay that Moab vtters his vaine brags, becauſe he can not attaine to his chiefe enterpriſe.

Moab vtters his vaine brags, when he can not attaine his chiefe enterpriſe.

For the ſenſe of the words we ſhall beſt gather it out of the foure and fortith Chapt. of Ieremiah verſ. 30. for hauing there repeated the very words of our Prophet, he preſentlie addes by way of expoſition, They ſhall not do ſo, as if he ſhould ſay, That which they haue reſolued in themſelues to do, ſhall neuer come to paſſe. Yet notwithſtanding I am not of opinion that there ſhould be a particle of ſimilitude in the firſt member, but rather of confirmation, as it were by a negatiue, becauſe he declares that there ſhall be no ſtedfaſtnes in Moabs counſels: neither ſhould his diuinations or lies come to effect. Thus the proude often determine of all things no otherwiſe then as if the diſpoſing of them were in their owne hands, and themſelues exempt from being ruled by the prouidence of God. Such pride ſaith Iſaiah ſhall fall, and whatſoeuer they promiſe vnto themſelues concerning their power, ſhall vaniſh like ſmoke.

Heereby wee are admoniſhed, that pride is greatly diſpleaſing vnto God: and by how much the more men bee puffed vp in regard of their riches, ſo much the neerer are they to their owne deſtruction.

Pride diſpleaſing to God.

Verſ. 7. Therefore ſhall Moab houle

vnto Moab; euery one ſhall houle: for the foundations of Kir-hareſeth ſhall yee mourne: yet they ſhall be ſtricken.

HE ſets forth that more plainely which he touched before: to wit, that this pride and crueltie which proceedes thereof, ſhall be the cauſe of Moabs ruine. For ſeeing the Lord reſiſts the proud, hee muſt needes take downe this haughtineſſe, vnder which the Church was miſerably and ſhamefully trodden vnder foote. According to which example, the end of all proud perſons muſt of neceſſitie bee lamentable. Where it is added, Moab vnto Moab; his meaning is, that there ſhall bee a dolorous ſong as it were, when they ſhall make their mone one to another touching their calamities, and ſhall weepe for one anothers griefes. Iam.4.6. 1.Pet.5.5.

Some tranſlate, Becauſe of Moab; but vnfitly. For it is by and by ſaid, that the houling ſhall bee generall, or amongſt the people.

For the foundations.] It ſufficiently appeares that Kir-hareſeth was the head Citie, and the Kings regall ſeate: but ſome thinke it to be a proper name; others ſay it is appellatiue: no doubt but the etymologie of the word was taken hence; namely, becauſe it was built of chalke. It may be alſo that it was called thus, in regard of the height of the walles which were made of bricke. Now this was a citie greatly renowned in that Country: yet he rather names the foundations then the Citie it ſelfe, becauſe it ſhould be raced to the groũd. As if he ſhould ſay; You ſhall not lament the ruine of the Citie or buildings, but the vtter ſubuerſion of it, becauſe there ſhall nothing remaine of it.

They expound the word Neeſam, Lame: I had rather tranſlate it, Hurt. The particle which is ſet before it, ſignifies as much as, Certainely, or, Surely: ſometimes it is taken for But, or, Notwithſtanding. Thoſe which take it in the affirmatiue, expound it thus: You ſhall ſurely mourne, when you ſhall bee hurt or ſtricken: that is to ſay, you ſhall not neede to hire thoſe that ſhall faine a mourning for you, as they vſually doe at the buriall of ſome; but you ſhall mourne in good earneſt. But I expound it Onely; as if he ſhould ſay; All that ſhall remaine, ſhall be ſtricken; not one ſhall eſcape in ſafetie. And by this maner of ſpeech he expreſſeth the extreme ruine of that Citie, ſhewing that thoſe which liue, ſhall not onely bewaile the calamities of others, but their owne alſo: becauſe they themſelues ſhall be ſtricken. If the proud be thus ſharply corrected, let vs learne to carry our ſelues modeſtly and peaceably; and freely to humble our ſelues vnder the mightie hand of God.

Verſ. 8. For the vineyards of Heſhbon are cut downe, and the vine of Sibmah: the lords of the heathen haue broken the principall vines thereof: they are come to Iaazer: they wandred in the wildernesse: her goodly branches ſtretched out themſelues, and went ouer the ſea.

THe Prophet deſcribes the deſtruction of the whole Country here vnder an allegorie. It is very credible that it abounded with good vineyards: which wee may eaſily collect frõ this place, and another like vnto it in the 48. of Ieremy, verſ. 32. Now when the Prophets threaten any Countries with deſtruction, they are wont to recite the chiefeſt things in them. For example, if wee were to ſpeake of Picardie, truely we would not mention vines: as if we ſpake of Orleance, or Burgondie. The Cities which the Prophet deſcribes in this verſe, are the head Cities in the Country of Moab.

He ſaith, that the principall vines of the vineyards were plucked vp by the Lords of the nations: that is to ſay, by the conquerours which bare ſway as they liſted ouer the people whõ they had ſubdued. Where he ſaith, that theſe branches came to Iaazer, it is for amplifications ſake; becauſe this citie was ſituated vpon ỹ bounds of the land of Moab. As if he ſhould ſay, They ſhall not onely cut downe ſome part of your vines, but the whole Country ſhall bee laid waſte from one end to the other. Some referre this to the enemies: but I had rather referre it to the vines which ſtretched ſo far, that they came to Iaazer: ſo as the ſenſe ſhall be; Although theſe vines ſhould ſpread euen vnto Iaazer, and ſhould couer much land from thence vnto the wildernesse, yet ſhall the lords of the nations tread them vnder foote. So that the text runnes well, becauſe it is ſaid afterwards, that the vines ſpread themſelues vnto the wilderneſſe; yea, vnto the ſea: thereby ſignifying, that it was a fruitfull ſoile, but eſpecially for vines; he addes, ouer the ſea; becauſe in fertile groundes they are wont to keepe backe the ſea with rampires for gaining of ground: and they preuent the violence of the water with boords and timber, to inlarge the land.

Verſ. 9. Therefore wil I weep with the weeping of Iaazer, and of the vine of Sibmah: O Heſhbon and Elealeh I will make thee drunke with my teares, becauſe vpon thy ſummer fruites, and vpon thy haruest a ſhouting is fallen.

HEere the Prophet takes another perſon vpon him, as we haue noted before: for he ſorrowes and complaines in the perſon of the Moabites. I deny not but the faithfull haue alwaies trembled at Gods iudgements, neither could they euer ſo put off the bowels of pitie, but they had ſtill compaſſion vpon the wicked; yet doth he not deſcribe his priuate affections here: but his meaning is, to get authoritie to his doctrine, that none might doubt of the accompliſhment of it. And therefore he repreſents the ſorrow and heauineſſe which they ſhould all feele after the the diſcomfiture (as it were vpon a ſcaffold) in the perſon of a Moabite; and all to the end he might the better confirme the Iewes in the truth of this promiſe, which might otherwiſe haue ſeemed incredible vnto them.

Becauſe vpon thy ſummer fruits.] The expoſitours interpret this latter part diuerſly. The verbe Naphal, ſignifies to Fall, and to run vpon. Thoſe which take it in the laſt ſignification, referre the word Hedad, to the enemies themſelues: as if he ſhould ſay, The cry of the enemies ſhall runne vpon thy harueſt: ſo as there ſhould be a cloſe oppoſition here betweene this cry, and the ſinging whereof he will ſpeake in the next verſe. Others expound it, It ſhall come to paſſe that they ſhall caſt forth cries: as if ſinging ſhould ceaſe, and as if the pleaſant ſongs and mirth of the reapers, who are wont to reioyce after harueſt, ſhould be no more heard. But I had rather referre it to the cry of the enemies: wherein I follow Ieremiah, the faithfull expoſitour of this place, who ſaith, That the deſtroyer ſhall runne vpon thy ſummer fruites. Which Iſaiah calles here the cry of the enemies: as if hee ſhould ſay; When thou ſhalt prepare thy ſelfe to gather in thy harueſt, the enemies ſhall run vpon thee, from whom thou ſhalt heare this hideous cry in ſtead of thy cheerful ſongs, and ſhall chaſe thee thence.

Ier.48.32.

Verſ. 10. And gladneſſe is taken away, and ioy out of the plentifull field: and in the vineyards ſhall be no ſinging nor ſhouting for ioy; the treader ſhall not treade wine in the wine-preſſes: I haue cauſed the reioycing to ceaſe.

HEe confirmes his threatning by more words, ſhewing that the whole region ſhall be deſtroyed and laid waſte, ſo as there ſhall be no more vintage nor harueſt. When he ſaith, that God will take away the ſongs of the vine-dreſſers, hee reſpects the ancient cuſtome. For they were wont to dance and manifeſt their ioy after the grapes were gathered in. For which cauſe, Virgil ſaith, that the vine-dreſſer ſings when his laſt labours about his vines are finiſhed, euen as the Mariners ſhout for ioy when they be arriued in the hauen. For then hauing ſuffered much, and eſcaped many dangers, they hope to haue reſt, and to obtaine ſome refreſhing. This is as much then as if the Prophet had ſaid, Being deprined of the reuenue of their fruits, nothing ſhall remaine vnto them, but the bewailing of their pouerty.

Virgil.

Verſ. 11. Wherefore my bowels ſhall ſound like an harpe for Moab, and mine inward parts for Kir-hareſeth.

THe Prophet vnder the perſon of a Moabite doth againe deſcribe a great lamentation proceeding from ſuch grieuous ſorrow, that their bowels ſhould breake, or make an horrible noyſe. For hee would ſhew the thing it ſelfe by the ſigne of it. Now we haue alreadie ſhewed whereunto theſe liuely deſcriptions tend; to wit, that hauing the thing demonſtrated as it were in their ſight, wee might the more confidently expect the obtaining of that which far ſurmounts all our thoughts. In that he names the chiefe Citie againe, he notes out the ruine of the whole Country, taking a part for the whole.

Verſ. 12. *And it ſhall appeare that Moab ſhall be weary of his high places: then ſhall he come to his Temple to pray, but he ſhall not preuaile.

*Or, Sanctuary.

HE now returnes to the ſentence which he touched in the ſecond verſe: to wit, that the idolaters ſeeing their affaires to ſucceede ill, doe runne to idols, thinking to find ſome comfort in them. Although he here expreſſeth ſome thing more: for in as much as Idolaters haue their temples and ordinarie chapels, they trot to that temple which they take for the moſt holy (when any great calamitie befals them) as to the place where they hope to finde God moſt fauourable vnto them. For if the Papiſts at this day fall into any great and extreame danger, they perſwade themſelues they ſhall ſooner obtaine their requeſts (and this hath been a common and ancient ſuperſtitious conceit) if they trot to Saint Claude, or to our Lady of Laureſte, or to ſome other Idoll more famous than the reſt: than if they ſhould reſort to the Church that is neereſt hand. They make their extraordinarie prayers in places furtheſt off. Thus the Prophet calles the moſt renoumed and frequented temple among the Moabites, a Sanctuarie; and ſaith, they ſhall goe thither: but to no purpoſe. Now it appeares by the holy hiſtorie, that the famouſeſt temple of the Moabites was dedicated vnto Chemoſh: 1.King.11.7.

Some expound the particle, They ſhall not preuaile: that they ſhould be ſo wearie, that they ſhould not haue ſo much ſtrength as to goe to the temple. But the firſt ſenſe is the fitteſt as I thinke: for he takes away all hope from the Moabites, ſo as they ſhould finde no ſuccour, no not in the gods themſelues. This member, and when it ſhall appeare, hath great waight: for it ſignifies that the Idolaters are not led with reaſo, but rather by their natural appetites, euen like vnto bruite beaſts. For as beaſts iudge by touching, ſmelling, and ſeeing, ſo alſo the Idolaters haue no better ſchoolemaſter to inſtruct them than their owne carnall ſenſe. If any then conuince them by ſound arguments, that they doe ill; a man ſhall gaine nothing from them. And howſoeuer they ſometimes haue experience that all their labour in vexing themſelues after their maner is but loſt; yet will they not therefore giue ouer, but forge new meanes, and will bring in ſeruices of their owne inuention, which they would faine haue God to approue of. If they haue good ſucceſſe, that they attribute to their ſuperſtitions, and ſo waxe the more obduarate: and if matters succeed ill they reiect their inuentions, condemne their new deuised worship, and blame their gods. To be short, they depend wholly vpon euents, iudging of nothing neither by reason, nor by the word of God. Therefore they are newfangled euermore, according as experience leades them. But it seemes the Prophet passeth yet further, to wit, that the Moabites shall come to the Temple of Chamos when their follie shall be manifestlie discouered vnto all; rather with shame and blushing, then of any mature deliberation.

Idolaters depend altogether vpon euents.

Vers. 13. This is the word that the Lord hath spoken against Moab since that time.

THis short sentence is the confirmation of the prophesie: for his meaning is, that he hath euen pronounced the very decree of God himselfe, and hath vttered nothing but the Lords message. Thus putting off as it were the person of man, he brings in God speaking in this manner:

Vers. 14. And now the Lord hath spoken, saying, In three yeeres, as the yeeres of an hireling, and the glorie of Moab shal be contemned in all the great multitude, and the remnant shall be very small and feeble.

THree yeeres.] The time is not only prefixed for the certaintie, but also to the end the faithfull might not languish in waiting any longer. Now he alludes to the agreements and couenants of men, wherein they haue been wont to set downe a certaine day which they must not breake. This is speciallie done in mercenarie businesses; which similitude is often vsed in the scriptures, because the hireling waits with exceeding desire for the appointed day wherein he is to receiue his wages. For they groane as it were vnder the burthen, and beare their ordinarie labors vnwillinglie. Thus God saith, he will assigne a certain day vnto the Moabites which they shall not escape; but all their puissance shall therein be brought to nothing. He speakes expreslie of the multitude, because they were a great people; and therefore bragged of it as if they had been inuincible. Where he ads that the remnant shall be feeble, he meanes, there shall be such a change, that there shall be great ods betweene their former and latter estate, because nothing shall be seene but a wofull and hidious spectacle in those that remaine.

Iob.7.1.2. & 14.6. Chap.21.16.

THE XVII. CHAPTER.

Vers. 1. The burden of Damascus. Behold, Damascus is taken away from being a Citie, for it shall be a ruinous heape.

HE propheseth against the kingdome of Syria, and mentions the head Citie, which was the regall seate of the Kingdome. Now it was requisite that this destruction should be described as well as ỹ rest, to the end the faithfull might assure themselues that God would assist them in time conuenient, and would not alwaies suffer the wicked to molest them without ceassing. For the king of Syria was confederate with the king of Israel against the king of Iudah; as we haue seene before in the seuenth Chapter: and because the Iewes were not strong enough to resist them, being destitute of sufficient meanes, they might also haue doubted of succor from God, as if he had left them at fixe and seauen. That he might therefore free them from this perplexitie, he threatens destruction to this kingdome of Syria, from whence they might well conclude, that God fought for the defence of his people.

The reason why this burden is pronounced against Damascus.

It is not knowen in what time Esaiah prophesied this, neither (as I haue touched heretofore) doth he obserue the precise order of times when he threatens any nation with the chastisements which it deserued: but as I coniecture he foretold this, when the two kings of Israel and Syria had inuaded Iudah: hauing therewithall conspired the destruction of the Church. For in as much as he ioines the Israelites and Syrians together, he calles them both to the same iudgement; to let them vnderstand that they had so profited by this wicked and cursed league, that both of them should be inwrapped in one and the same destruction. The Prophets meaning then is to comfort the faithfull of the tribe of Iudah, because he especiallie had regard to them (and not to the Israelites nor Syrians, whose ruine he now foretels) lest they should be left comfortlesse.

The time when this burden was threatned.

The particle demonstratiue, Behold, seales vp as it were the truth of this prophesie. Whereas he only mentions Damascus in particular, it followes not therefore that hee meant to exempt the other parts of the kingdome: but this maner of speech is very vsuall in the Prophets, namely, to take a part for the whole, so as vnder the ruin of the principall Citie, he comprehends that which should befall the whole Nation: for what could the lesser Cities expect but confusion, when the fortresse of the kingdome should be taken? There is also another reason why the Prophets threaten the chiefe Cities, directing their speech against them, to wit, because they were the seminaries of all wickednes, from which as out of a fountaine it dispersed it selfe ouer the whole land.

1 Reasons why the Prophets threaten ruin to the chiefe Cities, rather then to the inferior.

Vers. 2. The Cities of Aroer shall be forsaken: they shall be for the flockes; for they

they ſhall be there, and none ſhall make them afraid.

Num. 32.34 Deut. 2.36. & 3.12. & 4.48.

IT is vncertaine whether by Aroer here, he meanes that Citie whereof mentiō is made elſewhere. It ſhould rather be the name of a Region or Country; howſoeuer hee deſcribes the forme of a Country laid waſte: for hee ſaith, that the places where Cities were built, ſhould now be common paſtures; ſo as nothing ſhould remaine but the lodges & tents of ſheepheards: for if any inhabitants were left there, they ſhould driue their flocks to another place.

Verſ. 3. The munition alſo ſhall ceaſe from Ephraim, and the Kingdome from Damaſcus: and the remnant of Aram ſhall bee as the glorie of the children of Iſrael, ſaith the Lord of hoſtes.

HEe now ſhewes the cauſe why the Lord would cut off the Kingdome of Syria. The Prophet Amos recites many: Amos 1.3. But that which Iſaiah mentions here, was the principall; to wit, that they had drawne the Kingdome of Iſrael to the bent of their bow, to make warre againſt the Iewes. No doubt but the Iſraelites were inticed by the flatteries of the Syrians, to make a league with them to fight againſt their brethren. And the better to deceiue them, the Syrians alledged that they would aide them againſt all their aduerſaries. And therefore the Iſraelites alſo reſted themſelues vpon the ſtrength of their confederates: ſo as they were perſwaded, that none were too hard for them. Vnder the word Ephraim, he meanes all Iſrael, as in many other places; for Ephraim was the chiefe Tribe of the people. Beſides, he ſaith, that the munition and kingdome ſhall ceaſe from a place, when the ſtrength thereof is broken, and the excellency thereof brought low.

The remnant.] That is to ſay, the peoples both of Syria and Iſrael ſhould bee brought to nought: and the better to authoriſe his prophecie, he addes forthwith, that God hath ſpoken it. Now when God puniſhed theſe two kingdomes ſo ſeuerely, no doubt but hereby he prouided for the ſaluation of his Church, redeeming and deliuering it euen by the deſtruction of the enemies. And for the rooting out of them both, he vſed the helpe of the Aſſyrians, whom the Iewes themſelues had called: in which fact of theirs, they ſinned very groſly. Yet could not their offence hinder the Lord from being carefull of his Church, deliuering it, by ſetting his enemies together by the eares. And by this wee may ſee how great care the Lord hath of vs, ſeeing he ſpares not to puniſh euen great and mightie kingdomes for our ſafetie. We may alſo obſerue, that although all the wicked ſhould band and ioyne themſelues in league together to deſtroy vs, yet the Lord will eaſily finde a way how to deliuer vs out of their deuouring iawes. Beſides, we may note how needfull it is for vs to be depriued of all humane helpes, wherein wee often put vaine confidence, and that againſt God himſelfe: for being once blinded with proſperitie, we begin ſo to pride our ſelues in it, that we can giue God no audience. Hee muſt be faine therefore to remoue all impediments out of our way, to the end we may come to the true ſight of our powertie: as it happened to the Iſraelites, who were ſtripped of all their ſuccours, after Syria was once deſtroyed.

God ſometimes deliuers his Church, by ſetting her aduerſaries together by the eares. 1 2 3

It is fit we ſhould now and then be left helpeleſſe, to bring vs to the true ſight of our owne weakneſſe.

Verſ. 4. And in that day the glory of Iacob ſhall be impoueriſhed, and the fatneſſe of his fleſh ſhall be made leane.

5. And it ſhall be as when the harueſt man gathereth the corne, and reapeth the eares with his arme: and he ſhall be as he that gathereth the eares in the valley of Rephaim.

ALthough hee had promiſed to ſpeake of Syria and Damaſcus, yet now he ioynes the Iſraelites with the Syrians: and the reaſon is, becauſe they were confederates in one and the ſame quarrell. The Syrians, to whom Iſaiah eſpecially directs his ſpeech, were euen as a firebrand to kindle the wrath of the Iſraelites, as hath been ſaid: but the Iſraelites were no leſſe guilty, and therefore iuſtly are they wrapped in the ſame afflictions, as if they had been yoked with them. It is vncertaine whether hee meanes all the elect people, when he ſpeakes of Iacob; ſo as he ſhould comprehend the Tribe of Iudah alſo. Yet is it very likely it ſhould bee referred to the ten Tribes onely, who challenged this name vnto themſelues: ſo as he calles them glorious, by way of deriſion, becauſe when they waxed proud of their ſtrength, multitude, and confederacies, they deſpiſed their brethren the Iewes. Whereas he threatens them afterward with leanneſſe, he doth it to taxe their inſolencie: as on the contrary the Prophets ſcorne and reproch them for being become fat. For their proſperitie made them proud, being puffed vp with the fruitfulnes of their country, euen as fat horſes ouermuch pampered, are wont to kicke with the heele; which is the cauſe why Amos cals them fat kine: Amos 4.1. How wanton and luſtie ſoeuer they were then, the Lord proteſts, that hee will take downe their fat, which cauſed them to be ſo glorious.

The reaſon why the Iſraelites are matched with the Syrians in this iudgement.

Amos 4.1.

And it ſhall be.] By this ſimilitude he ſhewes how fearefull the iudgement ſhall be. Looke, ſaith he, how reapers gather the corne into their armes, ſo ſhall this multitude (how great and mightie ſoeuer) be reaped by the enemies. And that he might not omit any thing, he addes, that after the harueſt ſhall be ended, ſome looſe eares ſhall be gathered, which lay ſcattered here & there: as if he ſhould ſay, After the multitude ſhall be gathered in, & the land made bare, euē as a field that is reaped, the remainder which ſhall be ſcattered, ſhall not therefore reſt in ſafetie. Moreouer, hee vſeth this ſimilitude of the harueſt, becauſe the the people were growne ſecure vpon truſt of their great multitude: But as the reapers are not amazed at all when they ſee the corne very thicke; ſo, ſaith he, the great multitude ſhall not diſable the Lord from rooting them wholly out. We may in like maner referre this to the Aſſyrians; but yet the ſenſe will be ỹ ſame, becauſe they were Gods ſeruants to execute this vengeance. Wee neede not ſtand to debate much about ỹ verb To gather, becauſe it ſignifies nothing elſe but that the ſlaughter ſhall be like an harueſt, which being once ended, others are permitted to gleane the eares which lie ſcattered. For after that the tenne tribes had bin led captiues, the Aſſyrians gleaned vp the remnant alſo, when they vnderſtood of their new deuices, 2. King. 17. 4. 5. He makes eſpeciall mention of Rephaim, becauſe the Iſraelites were well acquainted with the fruitfulnes of it.

Verſ. 6. Yet a gathering of grapes ſhall be left in it, as the ſhaking of an olive tree, two or three berries in the top of the vtmoſt bowes, and foure or fiue in the high branches of the fruit thereof, ſaith the Lord God of Iſrael.

Chap. 24. 13.

HE had preciſelie affirmed that nothing ſhould remaine of the diſcomfiture; euen as if the name of the nation ſhould be vtterlie defaced. Now he addes a conſolation to aſſwage the bitternes of the ſlaughter. For he ſhewes ỹ there ſhall ſome remaine, although the enemies determined to conſume and deſtroy thẽ vtterlie. Euen as a man neuer plucks his vine ſo cleane but there will ſome grape or cluſter lie hidden vnder the leaues: Likewiſe as a man neuer ſhakes his olives ſo thorowlie but that ſome one will hang ſtill in the top of the tree: ſo howſoeuer the enemies be enraged, and the wrath of God kindled, yet as he therin ſhewes himſelfe a ſeuere Iudge, ſo will he ſhew himſelfe gracious and mercifull, in reſeruing a ſmall number; in not ſuffring the ſpoile of the enemies to fall vpon his elect. Whence we may gather, that his mercie will alwaies take place in the midſt of his moſt fierce vengeance. For he ſpeakes here of the children of Abraham, who albeit they were reuolted frõ God, and had made themſelues vnworthie of their adoption, yet did the goodnes of God ouercome their malice. True it is they had deſerued no ſuch fauour, but yet muſt the couenant of the Lord remaine ſure and inuiolable, ſo as the teſtimonie therof appeareth in this remnant, although the people for their parts had aboliſhed it wholle as much as lay in them. Which we ought diligentlie to obſerue, that when we ſee no face of the Church at all, but that the faithfull ſeeme to be periſhed, wee ſhould not thinke it is therefore raced out, becauſe God is immutable, who hath promiſed that it ſhall ſtand for euer, Gen. 17. 7. There ſhall euer be ſome remaine then, although to outward appearance wee oftentimes behold the contrarie.

In wrath God alwayes remembers mercie.

The Church may ſeeme at ſometime to be vtterlie waſted, but God ſtill reſerues a ſmall remnãt becauſe of his promiſe.

Verſ. 7. At that day ſhall a man looke to his maker, and his eies ſhall looke to the holie one of Iſrael.

NOw he ſets forth the fruit of this chaſtiſement: and this is the ſecond conſolation, which ſhould ſuſteine the faithfull in their aduerſities. For howſoeuer they felt nothing but the wrath of God; yet were they to thinke that the Lord (who neuer forgets his owne) would ſtill preſerue his Church for euer: and withall, that the corrections ſhould be profitable to his children. Hauing ſpoken then of the perpetuitie of the Church, he alſo ads, that afterwards men ſhall looke vnto God, which is the moſt deſirable good thing of all others. For when we returne vnto God, then the world, which was laid waſt before, begins to be brought into his right frame againe. Therefore when we are eſtranged from him, becauſe none of vs repents willinglie, we can not be brought backe againe into the right way vnleſſe he vſe the ſpurre and corrections to driue vs forward. Hereby then wee are admoniſhed to beare our chaſtiſements cheerefullie, ſeeing God vſeth thẽ as meanes to purge vs from a moſt deadlie apoſtaſie. For to looke vnto God, is nothing elſe but (hauing once turned out of the way) to come into his fauor by turning againe vnto him, and to put our ſelues vnder his protection. What is the cauſe why men giue ouer themſelues to all leaudnes? Surely becauſe they forget God. For where the true knowledge of God is, there is alſo reuerence of his Maieſtie ioined with it: and whereſoeuer forgetfulnes beareth ſway, there contempt muſt needs reigne. Although this maner of ſpeech appertaine properlie to faith, as if he ſhould ſay, when the Iſraelites ſhall be once tamed by theſe ſharp chaſtiſements, they ſhall then feele by experience that there is no ſuccour but in God alone: in which ſenſe he preſentlie addes the word maker. Trulie it was a deteſtable ſenſleſnes that they reſted not vpon that God only who had indued them with ſo many excellent gifts. The Prophet ſhewes then that they ſhall become wiſer by being humbled vnder calamities and afflictions, and ſhall beginne to hope in him who had bound them vnto him by ſo many benefits.

God vſeth corrections as a ſpeciall remedie to preſerue vs frõ apoſtacie.

What it is to turne vnto God.

Knowledge of God breeds reuerence: forgetfulnes contempt.

He calles God their maker, not as in regard that he created all mankind, but in the ſame ſenſe that he calles him the holy one of Iſrael. Although then that all mẽ be created according to Gods image, yet Iſrael was properlie the worke of his hands, becauſe they were his holy inheritance and choſen people. And this repetition is vſed to ſignifie the ſame thing according to the common cuſtome of the Hebrue tongue. He calles God holy, not only becauſe he is ſo in himſelfe, but alſo in regard of the effect, for he ſanctifies and chuſeth to himſelfe the children of Abraham: whence it followes, that the creation whereof he ſpeakes, ought to be referred to ſpirituall regeneration, for ſo God is ſpeciallie called the maker of Iſrael.

Gen. 1. 27. Exod. 19. 6.

Verſ. 8. And he ſhall not looke to the Altars, the workes of his owne hands; neither ſhall hee looke to thoſe things which his owne fingers haue made, as groues and images.

THis expoſition declares more cleerely, that this looking, whereof he ſpake in the former verſe, is to be vnderſtood properly of faith and hope. For hee ſaith, that all falſe truſts ſhall vaniſh, when men begin once to hope in God: for the very truth is, no man beholds the Lord aright, that forſakes not al his ſuperſtitions. And therefore we are here taught to take away all impediments if we will haue acceſſe vnto God: thoſe therefore doe foully deceiue themſelues, who will ioyne him with idols; as the Iewes once did, and as the Papiſts now doe: and note we alſo, that this vice hath not reigned for a day or two in the world, but alwaies. Let vs thē vtterly abandō all thoſe obſtacles, that ſo reſting ourſelues vpon the only goodneſſe of our God, we may rightly and cleerely behold him, and put our whole confidence in his mercy.

Now that hee might more plainely ſhew his deteſtation, hee calles the falſe gods the workes of their hands: that the Iſraelites being aſhamed of their folly, might put away and rid their hands of ſuch a reprochfull imputation. Now he ſpares no words in deſcribing this ſinne, becauſe they were principally defiled with it: as indeed there is no wickednеſſe more abominable in Gods ſight then it. They had an infinite number of ſuperſtitions among them, and had ſet vp idols and altars in innumerable places; ſo as Iſaiah had iuſt occaſion to reprooue and preſſe this ſinne home vpon them.

Obiect. But it may bee obiected, that the Altar of Ieruſalem was alſo erected by men; why ſhould they not reiect that, as wel as the reſt, to come vnto God? Anſ. I anſwere, this Altar differed very much from other Altars: for albeit it were compoſed of lime and ſtone, and decked with gold and ſiluer, and made with mens hands as others were; yet ought they not to reſpect either the matter or workmanſhip, but God himſelfe which was the author of it, at whoſe commandement this Altar was ſet vp. And therefore the eſſentiall forme (as you would ſay) which it had receiued by the word of God, muſt be conſidered: and none account to be made of the reſt, becauſe God himſelfe was the maſter builder of it. As for other Altars, howſoeuer they ſomewhat reſembled that at Ieruſalem; yet were they deteſtable, becauſe they had receiued no authority from Gods word. And the like reckoning may we make of all the inuentions of mans braine; let them haue what goodly appearance ſoeuer of holineſſe you will: for God cannot allow any thing but that which is conſecrated by his word.

God can allow of nothing, but that which he hath conſecrated by his word.

Verſ. 9. In that day ſhall the Cities of their ſtrength be as the forſaking of boughes and branches, which they did forſake, becauſe of the children of Iſrael; and there ſhall be deſolation.

HE goes on ſtill with that which he began to ſpeake of touching the deſtruction of the inhabitants of the land. Now becauſe the Iſraelites thought themſelues ſafe in regard of their bulwarks and ſtrong Cities, he threatens that this ſhall ſtand them in no more ſtead, than if the enemies walked thorow deſert places. Whereas ſome thinke that Choreſh and Azubath are the proper names of Cities, it is farre fetched: I rather vnderſtand it that he ſpeakes here of thornie or vntilled places: as if he ſhould ſay, Your defence of wals and ditches, ſhall ſerue you to no more purpoſe, then if you dwelt among thornes and buſhes. I make no doubt but the particle Aſher, ſtands here for a note of ſimilitude, and therefore I haue tranſlated it, As: ſo that the Prophet ſhould ſay all with a breath (as it were) that the people ſhall now be ſcattered by a fearefull flight, euen as God once draue out the Cananites before them. Thoſe which make this particle a relatiue, are conſtrained to ſupply ſomething, and to breake off the courſe of the ſpeech.

But the Prophet puts them in minde of an ancient example, to the end the Iſraelites might perceiue how vaine and deceiueable that defence is, which is oppoſed againſt the hand of God. It is a very grieuous reproch: for the Iſraelites conſidered not that God had giuen them this land to inherit, to the end they ſhould obey him: that he had therefore driuen the enemies out of it, to put them in poſſeſſion: they had therefore made themſelues vnworthy of ſo great bountie by their owne vnthankfulneſſe. Being then depriued of ſuch a mercy, they iuſtly felt the difference betweene the preſent euils, and the former benefits which they once inioyed.

This text will be the eaſier to vnderſtand out of Moſes, whom the Prophets often follow: for in the promiſes, he ſaith thus in expreſſe termes; One of you ſhall chaſe a thouſand: and contrariwiſe in the threatings; A thouſād of you ſhal be chaſed by one: Leu. 26. 8. Deut. 32. 30. Ioſh. 13. 10. Euen as he had then ſo aſtoniſhed the Cananites, that they fled by and by before the Iſraelites: ſo alſo did hee puniſh the vnthankfulneſſe of the people, by leauing them without power to reſiſt. Thus the Lord manifeſted his power two waies: firſt, in driuing out the Cananites: ſecondly, in taking vengeance vpon his people. The Prophet then in calling this ancient benefit to mind, doth therewithall vpbraid this vnthankfull and forgetfull people with their diſloyaltie, that ſo they might acknowledge their chaſtiſement to be iuſtly inflicted vpon them: as alſo that it was from Gods own hand that they were thus afflicted by their enemies, to whom in times paſt themſelues were a terrour and aſtoniſhment.

Verſ. 10. Becauſe thou haſt forgotten gotten the God of thy ſaluation, and haſt

*Or, rocke. not remembred the God of thy ſtrength:
therefore ſhalt thou ſet pleaſant plants, and ſhalt graffe ſtrange vine branches.

HE ſhewes the cauſe why God handled the ten Tribes ſo ſeuerely, leſt they ſhould complaine that they ſuffered wrongfully, or were hardly dealt with. To be ſhort, his meaning is to ſay, that all theſe afflictions are come vpon them, becauſe they haue wickedly contemned God. For their vnthankfulnes was too too vile, and altogether vnexcuſable; that hauing receiued ſo many benefits, they ſhold now proſtitute their hopes, by reſting vpon the helpe of idols and profane nations: as if they had neuer taſted the bountie of God in any thing. Indeed none of the vnbeleeuers being called to iudgement, ſhall be able to excuſe themſelues for not offering wrong to God in runnning after creatures. But the caſe was far otherwiſe with the Iſraelites, to whom God had manifeſted himſelfe in ſuch wiſe, that they ought to haue reſted in his fauour alone, and to haue reiected al the corruptions that reigned in the world. Iuſtly then are they condemned of ingratitude, in that they buried the matter of true confidence in forgetfulneſſe. And to ſpeake the truth, after God hath once cauſed vs to taſte the ſweetneſſe of his fatherly goodneſſe, if it take deepe roote in our hearts indeed, in cannot poſſibly come to paſſe, that we ſhould finally ſet our hearts vpon the inordinate loue of creatures. Whence it followes, that thoſe are very ingratefull, which trot hither and thither, not contenting themſelues with God alone. for by this means they ſet nought by his ineſtimable bounty. Therefore it is that the Prophet expreſly calles him the God of ſaluation, and the rocke of ſtrength. The word Tſur ſignifies both the one and the other: for it was a moſt prodigious thing not to hold themſelues faithfull vnto God, who had ſo oftentimes deliuered them, and that as it were by an outſtretched arme.

The ſinne. Whereas hee addes, And haſt not remembred: it ſerues for amplification; becauſe he cloſely taxeth them of wicked forgetfulneſſe, in not conſidering how many fauours God
The puniſhment. had ſhewed them before. Thou ſhalt plant. Now followes the puniſhment; leſt they ſhould imagine this their vnthankefulneſſe ſhould ſcape ſcot-free; to wit, becauſe they had forſaken the fountaine of all good things. For albeit they ſhould take care how to liue, yet ſhould they be conſumed by penurie and famine: becauſe the enemie ſhall ſpoile and waſte whatſoeuer they haue gotten by their induſtrie. This place is taken out of Moſes: for this curſe among others is there pronounced Deut. 28.30.39. Whence we may
The Prophets are the true expoſitours of the Law. ſee, that the Prophets borrowed many things out of Moſes, and are the true expoſitours of the Law; as I haue often ſhewed. He ſpeakes of pleaſant vines, and of branches brought from farre, becauſe the greatnes of the loſſe ſhould augment their ſorrow.

Verſ. 11. In the day ſhalt thou make thy plant to grow, and in the morning ſhalt thou make thy ſeede to floriſh: but the harueſt ſhall be gone in the day of poſſeſſion, and there ſhall bee deſperate ſorrow.

Thou ſhalt make to grow.] He ſignifies a continuall husbandry imployed about planting and ſowing. Yet may we vnderſtand it of the ſucceſſe that comes of it: as if a vine newly planted, ſhould immediately bring forth wine. This agrees with that which is preſently added; where the morning is taken for the day: and thus it ſeemes he ſhould ſpeake of a ſudden ripening; vnleſſe any had rather refer it to diligence, becauſe they were buſie at worke by breake of day. There is ſome ambiguitie in the words: for ſome turne it, The branch ſhall be gone in the day of affliction. But ſeeing the word Chalal, ſignifies Heritage, it ſhould ſignifie properly (as I thinke) in this place, a gathering together: neither doe I ſee how the word Branch ſhould agree. I confeſſe indeede that when they ſpeake of vines, the word Harueſt is vſed; but abuſiuely. It might alſo be tranſlated, Collecting: yet would I not obſtinately ſtand to contend about theſe two words, becauſe the ſenſe will alwaies be one; prouided that the foreſaid word be taken for the gathering of fruits. Thus then the text will runne well; Although thou ceaſeſt not from labour, holding thy ſelfe hard at it from morning to night: yet ſhalt thou gaine nothing by it, becauſe the fruit ſhall wither of it ſelfe, by the ſhaking of the bowes; or, thy vines ſhall be ſpoiled.

Thus then by the figure Synecdoche, vnder the verbe To plant, hee comprehends a daily labour which husbandmen and vinedreſſers take in the fields and vineyards. Such a labour muſt needes bee very irkeſome, and proceeds from the very curſe of God. For if he that is deſtitute of poſſeſſions, be oftentimes baniſhed out of his Country, hee will not be ſo much grieued as hee that inioyeth fruitfull lands, eſpecially if he haue beſtowed any long time in husbanding of them: the Lord then meant to execute his vengeance vpon the Iſraelites, becauſe they had abuſed the abundance of the land, and let looſe the raines vnto all exceſſe. The like puniſhment is alſo threated generally to all the wicked; to wit, that they ſhall riſe early, and labour extremely; becauſe it ſhall be without any fruit: whereas on the contrarie, thoſe which reſt vpon the Lord, are well aſſured to reape the certaine fruit of their labours, becauſe the bleſſing of God accompanies the worke of their hands. Reade Pſalme 127. 2. and 128. 2.

Verſ. 12. Ah, the multitude of many people, they ſhall make a ſound like the noiſe of the ſea: for the noiſe of the people yte ſhall make a ſound like the noiſe of mightie waters.

OThers expound Ah, Woe, as if it were a curſe: ſometimes it is vſed as a word of calling, as we haue ſeene heretofore. But as I thinke, it ſhould rather ſignifie Alas in this place: for he mournes for the calamitie which he foreſaw would befall Iſrael: be it that he doth it of a brotherlie affection, or that he thereby would pierce the deeper into the hearts of this ſenſeleſſe and blockiſh people. No queſtion but the Prophets feared the vengeance of God whereof they were the Heraulds, more then any other: and howſoeuer they ſharplie threatned the people as in regard of the perſon they ſusteined, yet did they neuer ſo caſt off the affection of loue, but they alwayes had compaſſion of thoſe that ſhould periſh. Notwithſtanding the conſideration of the couenant which God had contracted with the ſeed of Abraham, was the cauſe of this: and we ſee that this affection was in S. Paul, who deſires to be accurſed for his brethren the Iewes, Rom. 9. 3. When Iſaiah then ſets the matter thus before his eyes, it could not be but that he was touched with extreme griefe. Now in that he ſets this deſtruction before the view of the Iſraelites as if he himſelfe beheld it, it is to confirme his threatning, as wee haue ſhewed elſewhere. The word multitude is ſet downe, becauſe the armie was gathered of many and diuers nations, whereof the Monarchy of the Aſſyrians was compoſed. By the ſimilitudes which he addeth afterwards, his meaning is only to amplifie his ſpeech: for he compares the enemies to a Sea or deluge which drownes the whole countrie.

Verſ. 13. The people ſhall make a ſound like the noiſe of many waters: but God ſhall rebuke them, and they ſhall flee farre off, and ſhall be chaſed as the chaffe of the mountaines before the wind, and as a rolling thing before the whirlewinde.

ALthough he ſeemes to continue on the threatning which he began before, yet doth he now begin to comfort the faithfull, by repeating again the very ſame words with the former: as if he ſhould ſay, It muſt needs be that thoſe who haue forgotten God ſhould be chaſtiſed, and as good as ouerwhelmed for their wicked reuolt: but the Lord according to his wonted goodnes will repreſſe the ouermuch cruelrie of the enemies; for hauing once ſerued himſelf of their rough dealing, he will finde a meanes well enough to beate them backe and chaſe them away. See heere a ſingular conſolation, by which he meant to put the faithfull which remained in good hope. Now he ſpeakes not of the Iewes onlie, as the moſt haue imagined, for hitherunto he hath directed his ſpeech vnto the ten Tribes: amongſt whom no doubt there were ſome that truly feared God; who had been left in a deſperate caſe if they had had no promiſe whereon to reſt.

By theſe ſimilitudes he deſcribes horrible ſtormes & tempeſts: for when the holy Ghoſt would comfort the faithfull, he ſets thoſe things before them which are wont moſt of all to terrifie and caſt downe their ſpirits: to the end we might learne that it is eaſie for the Lord to ſtill all the violence of tempeſts, be they neuer ſo furious. And looke how he hath the ſea, the winds, and tempeſts at his command, ſo eaſilie can he curb the rage and violence of their enemies. Therefore he by and by after compares the Aſſyrians to ſtraw, or ſtubble: for howſoeuer their furie was terrible to the Iſraelites, yet the Prophet ſhewes notwithſtanding that they are no more in Gods account then ſtraws or ruſhes: becauſe without any paines whatſoeuer he will ſcatter all their preparations. They were not then to iudge of their forces and power according to ſenſe. As oft therefore as wee ſee that the wicked haue gotten the bridle in their necks to runne vpon vs for our deſtruction, let vs arme our ſelues (as much as is poſſible) with this meditation: True it is that we ſee no matter of hope left, but God ſeeth a meanes readie to bring all powers that are raiſed vp againſt vs to nought. The word Galgal, ſignifies a round thing which the wind driues eaſilie away. A meditation of great vſe.

Verſ. 14. And loe, in the euening there is trouble: but afore the morning it is gone. This is the portion of them that ſpoile vs, and the lot of them that rob vs.

THe ſenſe is this, looke how a tempeſt raiſed vp in the euening appeares not in the morning if it be by and by appeaſed: ſo alſo ſhall it come to paſſe that immediatlie after the enemies ſhall be driuen away, you ſhall ſuddenlie eſpie (beyond all hope) a ſweet and quiet calme. The Prophet meant to ſet down two things: firſt, that the rage of the enemies ſhall ſuddenlie fall vpon them: ſecondly, that the ſpoile which they ſhall make ſhall not laſt very long. For as the Aſſyrians roſe ſuddenlie againſt the Iſraelites, ſo alſo they were ſoone brought to nought. All the faithfull ought to gather great conſolation from this place as oft as they ſee things troubled and confuſed, and fearefull changes to approch: for is all this ought elſe then a tempeſt which the Lord will eaſilie ſtill? Tyrants come vpon vs as waues and billowes, but the Lord will quicklie diſperſe their rage: let vs therefore patientlie wait for his help. For albeit he now and then ſuffers vs to be toſſed to and fro, yet will the Lord in the end bring vs to the hauen, and that euen thorow the midſt of all ſtormes. 1 2 A Conſolation.

Now if the Prophet thus comforted a ſmall handfull of the remnant, we need not doubt but this promiſe alſo belongs vnto vs. For we in deed are but an handfull, and the poore Church is ſhut vp within very narrow bounds. But if we conſider the eſtate of this kingdome of Iſrael, how ſmall a number of Gods ſeruants was to be found there? Alas there was none almoſt that durſt open his mouth, ſo much much was religion and godlineſſe hated of all ſorts. Although then that the Lord deſtroies the multitude of the wicked, yet will hee alwaies leaue ſome planke for his Church to ſaue her ſelfe from ſhipwracke, and to bring the ſmall remnant of the poore faithfull, who are toſſed with others as in the ſame ſhip, to a ſafe hauen.

This is the portion.] He ſpeakes of the faithfull which were hid in the kingdome of Iſrael, and ioynes them to the body of the Church, although the members were ſcattered here and there; as it often comes to paſſe to the children of God. And here we may behold the end of the wicked, which haue perſecuted vs. For howſoeuer we be expoſed to their rage and furie, although they ſpoile, rob, and tread vs vnder foote, offering vs all the outrages in ỹ world; yet ſhall they be but like vnto waues, which diſperſe themſelues by their owne violence, and ſo vaniſh ſuddenly away. We ought to wait till the like befalles all ſuch tyrants at this day, who miſerably vexe and afflict the Church, and handle the children of God vnkindly. Let this conſolation then bee ingrauen in the table of our hearts, being fully aſſured that the like iudgment will ouertake them. The end of perſecuters.

THE XVIII. CHAPTER.

Verſ. 1. Oh the land ſhadowing with wings, which is beyond the riuer of Ethiopia.

I Cannot affirme of what people Iſaiah ſpeakes; although it be apparent enough that it was ſome coũtry bordering vpon Ethiopia. Some refer it to the whole land of Egypt; but without any good probabilitie, ſeeing he makes a particular treatiſe thereof in the Chapter following: and therefore wee muſt vnderſtand this as ſpoken to a people ſeparate from the Egyptians. Many ſuppoſe that it ſhould be the Troglodites; which yet ſeemes not very likely, becauſe they had no familiaritie with other nations: for their ſpeech (as the Coſmographers teſtifie, was rather a whiſtling or hiſſing, then any diſtinct ſound of words. But as touching theſe here mentioned, it is plaine that they had both ſociety and league with other nations. Yet is it vncertaine whether they conſpired againſt the Iewes or no, or whether they ioyned with the Egyptiãs to make war vpon the Aſſyrians. If they were the open aduerſaries of the Iewes, then Iſaiah denounceth their puniſhment. But contrariwiſe, if they did feede the Iewes with deceitfull promiſes, he ſhewes that they were to expect no ſuccour from them; becauſe they did nothing but entertaine time with their friuolous meſſages. How euer it be, we may gather by that which he ſpeakes of the nations neere adioyning, which he will name in this Chapter, in what place this people was ſeated; to wit, very neere vnto Egypt and Ethiopia. Vnleſſe any had rather affirme, that it is meant of part of the ſea coaſt of Ethiopia; becauſe it will appeare by the 37. Chapter of this booke, that the Aſſyrians had warre with the King of Ethiopia. Now when it is ſaid, that this land makes a ſhadow with wings, it appeares that the ſea was nigh vnto it; ſo as it became rich in regard of much nauigation. For ſmall and poore regions cannot frequent nor occupie in ſtrange Countries. His meaning is then, that this people vſed to traffique much by ſea. Chap. 37. 9.

Verſ. 2. *Sending Ambaſſadours by the ſea, euen in veſſels of reedes vpon the waters, ſaying; Goe yee ſwift meſſengers, to a nation that is ſcattered abroad and ſpoiled, to a terrible people from their beginning euen hitherto; a nation by little and little, euen trodden vnder foot, whoſe land the floods haue ſpoiled. *Or, rushes. On euerie ſide.

THis is properly to bee referred to the ſtate of thoſe times. It ſeemes that this people had ſolicited the Egyptians, or Syrians, to vexe the Iewes: or elſe that the Aſſyrians vſed them to moleſt the Country of Iudea; or, that they were companions of the Egyptians, ioyning hand in hand to beate backe the Aſſyrians, leſt they ſhould wax too ſtrong and mightie. We can affirme nothing but by way of coniecture, becauſe all hiſtories are ſilent in this behalfe. Seeing then that we want witneſſes in this caſe, we muſt vſe probable coniectures. It is very likely that theſe iournies were not taken in hand to goe to ſome place neere vnto them, but farre off. Whereas hee calles them ſhips of rushes, wee are not to thinke it ſtrange; becauſe it appeares by ancient hiſtories, that the Egyptians commonly vſed ſuch veſſels by ſea, in regard that Nilus is ſo ſteepe and dangerous to thoſe that ſaile in it in ſome places, by reaſon of the height from whence the waters doe violently fall; (which they call Catadupes) that it is impoſſible to bring ſhips of wood that way, without breaking & renting them vpon the rockes. And therefore they are conſtrained to vſe little pliable veſſels. And leſt the water ſhould enter in and drowne them, the hiſtories ſay, that theſe ſhips were lined with pitch in the inſides of them.

Goe yee ſwift poſtes.] This place is obſcure; yet will I follow that interpretation which I take to be moſt probable. The Prophet ſhews the end of his prophecie; that is to ſay, why he foretold the deſtruction of this people; to wit, (if we take them for the ſworne enemies of the Iewes) to bring ſome conſolation to the faithfull, which were miſerablie ſcattered and diſperſed, that by receiuing this good tidings, they might reioyce and giue thanks vnto God. But if any had rather ſay that the Iewes were drawne by this nation to an vnlawfull league, then this exhortation is by way of deriding them, ſo as he rebukes the follie of the elect people, who forſooke God to depend vpon vaine and friuolous ſuccors. For whereas ſome attribute theſe words vnto God, as if he ſhould command theſe nations inhabiting neere the ſea to haſten to the deſtruction of the Iewes: I ſee not how it ſhould agree to the ſenſe of the text. Neither is there any more appearance in that which others thinke, to wit, that by the words following the Prophet ſets forth the deſtruction of this obſcure and vnknowne people, becauſe that by the ſpoiled people hee meanes the Iewes, which ſhould be vexed and ſcattered after a ſtrange maner, ſo as no part amongſt them whatſoeuer ſhould remaine ſafe.

He calles them a terrible nation, becauſe they ſhould be an aſtoniſhment to all thoſe that ſhould behold them, being disfigured with ſuch horrible calamities. For I cannot approue of their iudgement who expound this of ſignes and wonders which the Lord ſhewed amongſt the Iewes to make them feared of all: he hath regard rather to that place of Moſes where it is ſaid, The Lord ſhall make thee an aſtoniſhment and a wonder, Deut. 28. 28,37: alſo, the nodding of the head, and a prouerb and deriſion is vſed in other places, Iere. 18.16, & 19.8. & 25.18. He ſignifies a people then whoſe ſight ſhall be ſo fearefull, that they ſhall be an aſtoniſhment vnto all: and we know that as this was foretold, ſo alſo did it come to paſſe to the Iewes.

When it is ſaid on euery ſide, it is as much as if one ſhould draw lines, and that they ſhould be ſo well knit together, as there ſhould no place be left emptie betweene them: or as if an husbandman made ſuch furrowes in his field, that he leaues not one clot of earth vnturned vp, or broken. Thus was this people beaten downe and broken.

By the floods, he meanes a great armie of enemies, to wit, of the Aſſyrians. Now he alludes to that which he ſaid before in the 8. Chapter, verſ. 6. to wit, that the people being diſcontented with their little riuer Shilo, deſired rather roaring and violent waters. After then that they had called thé forth for their ſuccor, they were ouerwhelmed by them as with a deluge. So that the cauſe of all this ill ſucceſſe was for that they cõtented not themſelues with Gods promiſes, but ſought out ſtrange helps. If now then this commandement giuen to the ſwift poſts be taken as frõ the perſon of God; thence we gather that he doth not alwaies aſſiſt his elect at the firſt brunt, but withholds his help till things be growne to a deſperate eſtate. For he ſends not a ioyfull and happie meſſage to thoſe that were in ſafetie, or to thoſe that were onlie lightlie touched with the rod, but to a nation ſpoyled and troddẽ vnder foote: yet in that he commands them to haſten, his meaning is, that the iudgement ſhall be ſudden and vnlooked for; ſo as light ſhall ſhine out of darknes (as it were) euen in a moment.

Verſ. 3. All yee the inhabitants of the world and dwellers in the earth ſhall ſee when he ſetteth vp a ſigne in the mountaines, and when he bloweth the trump, ye ſhall heare.

HE ſhewes that this worke of God ſhall be ſo excellent, that the Iewes ſhall not only perceiue it, but all the inhabitants of the world alſo. Theſe words which are put in the future tence, are by ſome tranſlated in the Imperatiue, according to the ſcripture phraſe: but it agrees beſt to take it in the time to come. As if he ſhould ſay, euen the people farre off ſhal be witneſſes of this calamitie: becauſe all ſhall behold the ſtandard, and ſhall heare trumpets ſounding thorowout the world. And hence it ſhall appeare, that this warre was not raiſed vp by men; but that God himſelfe will ſhew that he is the only author of it, and that by excellent witneſſes. When warres are made euery man diſcernes what is done openlie: but the greater part of men attribute both the beginnings and iſſues thereof vnto fortune. Iſaiah contrariwiſe ſhewes, that all theſe things ought to be attributed vnto God, becauſe he will plainely manifeſt his power by a new and extraordinarie meanes: for he works ſo ſometime, that his hand is hidden, and his worke vnknowne vnto men. And ſometimes againe he ſhewes his power in ſuch wiſe that euery one is conſtrained to acknowledge it, and that is it which the Prophet meant to ſay in this place.

Verſ. 4. For ſo the Lord ſaid vnto me, I will reſt and behold in my tabernacle as the heate drying vp the raine, and as a cloud of dew in the heate of harueſt.

AFter he hath threatned the deſtruction of the Ethiopians or of their neighbours, and hauing therewithall ſhewed that great conſolation ſhould thereby redound to the Iewes; or elſe by way of a ſtout hauing derided the fooliſh confidence which deceiued them: now he addes that God will ſo moderate theſe confuſions, that he will in the end gather his choſen people vnto himſelfe. The particle Ci, which I haue tranſlated Furthermore, is ſometime put for ſhewing the cauſe; ſometimes aduerſatiuelie. But the latter ſenſe in this place ſeemes to agree beſt: the reaſon is, becauſe the Prophet preuents a doubt which might otherwiſe haue greatly troubled the conſciences of the weake. For when wee ſee things in an vproare, there is a vaile forthwith ſpread as it were ouer our eyes, which takes away from vs the ſight of Gods prouidence: for the eſtate of this people whoſe deſtruction he threatens was ſuch, that this propheſie might ſeeme a fable or matter of ſcorne: for (as we may collect) there was no danger nor change to be expected.

Some referre this to the perſon of Iſaiah, as if he ſatisfied himſelfe, by depending vpō that which God had reuealed vnto him: that is to ſay, as if hee had now quieted and ſetled his minde; which indeed wee ought to doe after we haue heard the voyce af God, waiting aſſuredly for the accompliſhment of that which is foretold vs. As Abacuk ſaith; I will ſtand in my watch-tower: Abac. 2. 1. But I rather think, that the Prophet recites that which the Lord had reuealed vnto him, and that the Lord himſelfe pronounceth this ſentence with his own mouth: as if he ſhould ſay, I will reſt; that is, I will hold me ſtill and do nothing: for the word alſo ſignifies to See. Now hee which looks earneſtly, acts nothing; but onely contents himſelfe with beholding that hee ſees with pleaſure and delight.

Hereunto ſerues alſo the word Tabernacle, as if the Lord ſhould reſt himſelfe on the roofe of an houſe: but on the contrary, hee is ſaid to aſcend into his iudgement ſeate, when he auengeth himſelfe vpon the wicked behauiours of the vnbeleeuers: for theſe phraſes of ſpeech are fitted to our capacitie. Vnleſſe any had rather affirme, that the Prophet alludes to the Sanctuarie: ſo as howſoeuer the maieſtie of the Lord may ſeeme to be hidden for a time from this afflicted people, yet ſhould not his reſt be vtterly without fruit. The ſumme of all is this; that howſoeuer all things ſhould be cōfounded, ſo as one might imagine that God would meddle no more with the gouernement of the world; yet doth he take his eaſe on this wiſe, as you would ſay of ſet purpoſe, euen as if hee were ſhut vp, and fallen aſleepe in a chamber, minding to manifeſt the fruite of this his reſt in due ſeaſon.

As the heate drying vp.] Iſaiah doth yet better expreſſe that which hee hath ſaid before, by this ſimilitude. Wee may apply it to the Prophets meaning two waies. Firſt, as if God being awaked out of his ſleep, would ſhew ſuch a gracious coūtenance as ſhould reioyce the harts of the faithfull: or, as if he would reuiue and quicken them by watering them with ſweet ſhowers: and thus the Prophet ſhould ſhew a diuers ſucceſſe. There may be alſo a cloſe oppoſition, whereby he admoniſheth, that when God ſhall be thought to take his eaſe, and behold things heere below as it were careleſly; that euen then hee may as it were ſport himſelfe in executing his iudgements. Truely becauſe the two verſes following are conioyned with this, it ſeemes that Iſaiah would ſay; Howſoeuer God ſhewes not himſelfe carefull after the maner of men, neither runnes with violent heat to take vengeance; yet hath he ſecret meanes in his hands to execute his iudgements, and yet in the meane while neuer ſtir his leaſt finger. It may be alſo, that hee meant to ſhew that God would vſe an extraordinarie meanes in rooting out this people. But that which I touched erewhile may ſuffice; to wit, that whileſt men are beſotted with proſperitie, and drunken in their delights, thinking that God hath no more to doe with them; euen then their deſtruction is at hand. The reaſon is, becauſe God is able with his onely looke to caſt downe all the forces and preparations of the whole world. And therefore he ſaith, he will be like to a faire bright day, and to the heate, drying vp the raine: ſecondly, to a watriſh cloud, in the hotteſt day of ſummer. Now wee know that ſuch a raine is very fit to ripen fruits; and that the heate comming after the raine, brings them forward and makes them ſwell; becauſe it diſperſeth all the moiſture that is in them, by the force of his heate.

This it it then which the Prophet meant to ſay, that howſoeuer many miſeries and calamities be prepared for the reprobates, yet all things notwithſtanding falles out for a while as they would wiſh; ſo as they ſeeme the onely happy men in the world; no otherwiſe then if God meant to ſatisfie them to the full with the beſt of his benefits. But in concluſion, they ſhall finde that they were onely fatted vp, as Oxen for the ſlaughter: for they ſhall periſh in an inſtant, and that euen then, when they ſeemed to bee come to the very top of their happineſſe. Whence wee may learn, that we are not to iudge of Gods iudgements according to outward appearance: for when the wicked thinke themſelues moſt ſecure, then their ruine & ouerthrow is at the doores. Thus doth he comfort the faithfull in very fit ſeaſon, leſt they ſhould thinke the vnbeleeuers more happy then themſelues, becauſe God winked at their faults: for albeit hee ſeemes to cocker them whom hee ſo forbeares, yet will he quickely bring them to deſtruction.

The wicked are neere to their ruine then, when they thinke themſelues moſt ſecure.

Now we are to apply theſe things to theſe miſerable and troubleſome times wherein the perſecuting tyrants of the Church haue their full ſwinge, abounding in all wealth; bringing their enterpriſes to paſſe no leſſe then if all things were in their owne power: why ſo? becauſe they ſurpaſſe all others in ſtrength, counſel, and policie. But let vs know for certaine, that all theſe things are brought to paſſe by the determinate counſell of God, who is contented to let them goe on forward with their deliberations, and lets them proſper: that ſo he may at the laſt deſtroy and vtterly cut them off. I am not ignorant that ſome others draw the words of the Prophet to another ſenſe: but I hope, that whoſoeuer ſhall wiſely conſider the whole context, will eaſily ſubſcribe to mine expoſition.

A conſolation for the Church.

Verſ. 5. For afore the harueſt, when the flower is finiſhed, and the fruit is ripening in the flower, then he ſhal cut downe the branches with hookes; and ſhall take away, and cut off the boughes.

WOrd for word it is, For the preſence of the harueſt: but we muſt alittle mitigate the ſharpneſſe of the words. The Prophets meaning is not obſcure: for when harueſt drawes neere, and that grapes be ripe, the wicked ſhall finde themſelues diſappointed, and that ſuddenly of their whole reuenue; in hope whereof they meant to glad themſelues. Thus hee goes on ſtill with the ſame ſame matter, and confirmes that which hee ſpake before by the former ſimilitudes; to wit, that the wicked are not ouerthrowne at the firſt, but floriſh for a time, and the Lord ſeemes to ſpare them: but when the harueſt is come, and that the vines haue once budded and bloſſomed ſo as the iuice begins to vtter it ſelfe, then are the very branches cut vp by the rootes. So, when the wicked are neere vnto their ripenes, they ſhall not only be depriued of the fruit they expected, but ſhall be cut vp roote and rinde.

The Lord will giue this iſſue to wicked men, after he hath ſuffred them to inioy their delites for a time: for they ſhall be ſo rooted vp, that they ſhall neuer be able to reuiue, nor yet to be plãted in any ſort. From hence then wee gather a ſingular conſolation, to wit, that when the Lord ſeemes to winke at the practiſes of the aduerſaries, he thereby tries our faith, but yet ſuffers not things to be guided by the vnbridled hand of blind fortune, as prophane men thinke. For he is in heauen as in his Tabernacle, and is reſident in his Church as in a poore tent or cottage, yet ſo, as he will come forth when it ſhall be fit and conuenient time. Let vs thus enter into our conſciences, and lay all theſe things to our heart in priuat, that by this meanes wee may fortifie our ſelues with ſo excellent a promiſe, by which only we may be enabled to ouercome and ſurmount all temptations.

Let vs alſo thinke with our ſelues how the Lord ſhewes vs that he ſets forward and lifts vp the felicitie of the wicked, to the end his mercie toward his Church may be ſo much the more admired. For if he ſhould cut them off as corne before it be ripe, we ſhould neither ſo certainly nor clearely know his power nor his goodnes, as when he ſuffers them to grow vp to their full height, ſuffring them to be full eared and to floriſh, to the end that their owne weight may the ſooner ouerthrow them, or that he himſelfe may cut them vp with his ſickle as fat and full eares.

The reaſon why God ſuffreth the wicked to floriſh for a while.

Verſ. 6. They ſhall be left together vnto the fowles of the mountaines, and to the beaſts of the earth: for the fowle ſhall ſommer vpon it, and euery beaſt ſhall winter vpon it.

Matt. 3. 12. Luk. 3. 17.

HE ſhewes that the wicked ſhal be reiected as a thing of nought: Iohn Baptiſt in like maner compares them to chaffe which is caſt out vpon the dunghill. And Iſaiah ſhewes, that they ſhall be left to the beaſts and birds, ſo as the birds ſhall make their neſts in the mids of them in ſommer, and the beaſts ſhall make their lodgings in them in the winter: as if he ſhould ſay, they ſhall not only be a reproch vnto men, but euen to beaſts alſo. Such then is the condition of the wicked, who thinke themſelues cockſure euen then when they lift vp themſelues moſt againſt the poore Church. But the birds ſhall make their neſts vpon them on the one ſide, and they ſhall ſerue for houſes and food for the wilde beaſts on the other ſide: ſo as they ſhall not only be in worſe caſe then the meaneſt man in the world, but their condition ſhall be far inferior to that of the brute beaſts: for being expoſed to all ſhame and contempt, they ſhall manifeſt to the whole world that Gods prouidence is wonderfull.

Verſ. 7. At that time ſhall a preſent be brought vnto the Lord of hoſtes (a people that is * ſcattered abroad, and ſpoiled, and of a terrible people from their beginning hitherunto, a nation by little and little euen trodden vnder foote, whoſe land the riuers haue ſpoyled to the place of the name of the Lord of hoſtes, euen the mount Zion.

* Or, rent, or torne.

THe Prophet ſhewes againe wherefore he threatned the ruine of this prophane people. For in as much as all nations in a maner had conſpired the deſtruction of the Church, it ſhould ſeeme that her vtter ſubuerſion was now come. The Lord ſhewes then that he will aſſiſt her in due ſeaſon; for had he not reſiſted ſuch enterpriſes, and repreſſed the plots of the enemies betimes, the Iewes might haue deſpaired: therefore hee lets it be knowne that he hath a care of his Church, ſo as howſoeuer it pleaſeth him to chaſtiſe her, yet ſhall ſhe feele his help in time conuenient. Yea, hee will oppoſe his ſtrength againſt the power of tyrants and of her enemies, leſt they ſhould ouerthrow her, and ſo attaine their long expected hopes. That the Iewes then might be imboldned to wait with patience, he not only ſeparates them from the Ethiopians, but aduertiſeth them in like maner that God will moderate his iudgements for their ſaluation.

Now he alludes to the ſecond verſe of this Chapter, where wee ſaw the people of the Iewes termed by theſe names and titles. He vſeth the verb To bring, becauſe before this they ſhould be led away as captiues, ſo as it ſhould be no more lawfull for them to goe vp to the Temple, then for forreine nations. We muſt alſo note this word Rent: for his meaning is that the people ſhall be ſcattered, as if hee ſhould ſay, Howſoeuer you muſt bee brought to a ſmall number, and ſhall be but a poore remnant, yet ſhall this little portion that remaines be offred vnto God for a ſacrifice.

From hence we are to gather a moſt fruitfull doctrine, and exceeding fit for our time. We ſee the Church at this day to be almoſt paſt recouerie; for ſhe is ſcattered, oppreſſed, ouerwhelmed, and trodden downe on euery ſide. What ought we to do in the mids of ſo great diſtreſſes? We muſt lay faſt hold vpon theſe and the like promiſes; and aſſure our ſelues that howſoeuer the world goe, yet God will defend and maintaine his Church. And albeit ſhe be as a bodie torne in pieces, and ſcattered here and there, yet will he eaſily gather her ſcattered members together againe, by the worke of his ſpirit: for he will neuer ſuffer the remembrance of his name, nor the inuocation thereof to perish. The Lord will so worke, that of these peeces which lie now scattered here and there, there shall be a people made and gathered together. For it is easie with him to gather into one, those whom he knits together by the vnitie of his Spirit, although they be diuided farre asunder one from another. Although then that we see the Church diminished, and some of her members cut off; yet shall some gift bee reserued out of her, to be presented and offered vnto the Lord.

To the place of the name] The Prophets are accustomed to vse this manner of speech often. For when they mention the seruice of God, they set it forth by externall exercises: as by altars, sacrifices, washings, and such like. Now the very truth is, that in regard the seruice of God is internall, it cannot be represented but by outward signes; whereby men testifie that they serue and worshippe God. Now he names the mount of Zion here chiefly, because this place was consecrated vnto God, as the place wherein he would haue sacrifices offered vnto him. For the Lord honoured this place aboue al others in causing the doctrine of his word to come out thence, as we haue seene Chap. 2. 3. so that vnder this name wee may rightly vnderstand the pure and sincere worship of God. To conclude, the Prophets describe not this seruice in such wise as it should be after Christ his comming; but such as it was in their own times: the reason is: because it was needfull for them to apply themselues to the capacitie of the people whom they taught. Hence wee may gather, that we appertaine not vnto the Church, vnlesse we be offered vnto God in sacrifice: Rom. 12. 1. & 15. 6. 2. Cor. 5. 15. Whosoeuer hee be the that challengeth any interest in God, let him offer himselfe vp such a sacrifice vnto him, and let him no longer liue vnto himselfe, but giue and consecrate himselfe vnto God. The meanes whereby this is done, is by the sword of Gods word, (to wit, the Gospell) whereby Paul glorifieth that he sacrificed and offered vp men vnto God: as Rom. 15. 6. before alleaged.

We can haue no assurance that we belong to the Church of God, vnlesse we offer vp our bodies and soules a sacrifice vnto God.

By the place of the name of the Lord, he means not that the essence of God (of which wee must not thinke in any wise as of a carnall or earthly substance) should be inclosed therein, as if he were tied to any one place: but because it was the place wherein the Lord was pleased to manifest testimonies of his power, and to be honoured and called vpon: where he also shewed his presence by his goodnesse and power; especially in regard of the weaknesse of the people, who otherwise could not comprehend his maiestie. And yet we are to note, that wee cannot be acceptable vnto God, vnlesse wee be vnited vnto him in the same faith: that is to say, vnlesse wee be knit together as the members of his Church. It is not needfull indeed that we should runne to Ierusalem or to mount Zion: for Zion is now spread ouer all the world, and is consecrated vnto God in generall. It remaines then that we haue the same faith amongst vs, and that wee be ioyned and linked together by the band of loue. For if these be wanting in vs, then is there nothing in the midst of vs but pollution; neither haue we any thing that is holy and consecrated vnto vs.

Where faith and loue is wanting, there all things are vncleane vnto vs.

THE XIX. CHAPTER.

Vers. 1. The burden of Egypt. Behold the Lord rideth vpon a swift cloud, and shall come into Egypt, and the idols of Egypt shall be moued at his presence, and the heart of Egypt shall melt in the middest of her.

The reason why this burden is pronounced against Egypt.

THE burden of Egypt.] Heere the Prophet prophecieth against Egypt, because she was ỳ refuge vnto which the Iewes fled as soon as they saw any danger neere. For hauing forsaken the Lord, in whom they should haue reposed all their helpe, they looked for no succour at all, vnlesse they had it from the Egyptians. And therefore it behoued that this Nation also should be brought low: so as there should no riches nor strength remaine any longer in it to deceiue the Iewes withall: who (as long as Egypt flourished, because it was well peopled, and furnished with all prouisions) contemned the Lord; or at the least made verie slight reckoning of his promises. There was a twofold euill then in this matter: first, that whereas they should haue rested vpon God onely, they were puffed vp with this vaine confidence in Egypt: secondly, in that the Lord no sooner visited them with his rods, but they by and by fortified themselues with the power of the Egyptians against the same: as if they had beene able to ouercome his iudgements, by setting the arme of flesh against them: whereas they ought rather to haue taken occasion by them, to haue turned wholly vnto God. But the Prophet wil handle this matter more largely hereafter in the 30. and 31. Chapters. 1 2

Behold the Lord rideth] This maner of speech is found in other places of the Scripture, as in the 104. Psalme, verse 3. but onely in generall. But Isaiah applies it heere vnto this prophecie; because the Egyptians thought themselues so well fenced on euery side, that God could no way finde a gap open to enter into their Country. Hee derideth this their foolish ouerweening then, and against that, sets the high and mighty power of God, who is borne or carried vpon a swift cloud: by means whereof, he will easily enter in vpon them, neither neither ſhall any of their fortreſſes or bulwarks be able to keepe them out. Now becauſe the riches of Egypt had not onely bewitched the Iewes, but their falſe religion alſo, therefore the Prophet doth in like manner taxe their ſottiſhneſſe in this behalfe; becauſe God would make all their helpe which they looked for from idols, to vaniſh and come to nought alſo. I forbeare to ſpend time in ſhewing the vanitie of their childiſh conceits, which ſome haue dreamed of touching the idols of Egypt; to wit, that Chriſt made them fall downe when he fled thither in his infancie: for it deſerues no refutation at all. Yet haue they abuſed this place to proue this goodly fiction, as alſo many places more like vnto it; and yet the Prophet meant no ſuch matter. For hee ſpeakes of that diſcomfiture which the Aſſyrians gaue the Egyptians; ſhewing how it ought to be attributed vnto God, and not vnto fortune; as profane men are wont to doe. Hee ſhewes then that this is a iudgement of God: by whoſe hand all things that fall out in heauen and in earth, are guided and gouerned.

Now he telles them that their idols ſhall fail: that is to ſay, that they ſhall profit the Egyptians nothing at all, although they put their confidence in them, & thought to be in ſafetie vnder their protection. For it is not to be imagined how much this people was addicted vnto ſuperſtition; inſomuch as they worſhipped cats, oxen, crocodiles; yea onions and all kindes of plants. So as there was nothing to which they attributed not ſome diuinitie. His meaning is to ſay then, that the power of all theſe falſe gods which the Egyptians had taken for their patrons, ſhall fall to the ground. Hauing therefore ſhewed that the Egyptians doe reſt in vaine vpon their ſuperſtitions; hee therewithall alſo beates downe the proud imaginations which they had conceiued in regard of their earthly powers. By the word heart, he means the magnanimitie which ſhould quaile at the length, euen in the moſt valiant amongſt them: ſo as as they ſhould not dare to enterpriſe any thing, although they had all the furniture they could deſire. Thus he ſhewes that they ſhall make warre againſt God, who will ſo weaken their hearts within them, that they ſhall wax cowards, when the time comes that they muſt enter battel with ther enemies. Neither doth he ſay, that they ſhall be terrified onely; but he addes, that it ſhall be in the midſt of all the Kingdome; where was the ſafeſt & quieteſt abiding; becauſe they were there far enough off from all aſſaults of the enemies. The faithfull had good occaſion to conſider well of this, when the Egyptians were at warr: and wee alſo ought to behold the ſame in all mutations of Kingdomes, which proceedes from no other cauſe then the hand of God. If the hearts of thoſe, who are otherwiſe warlike perſons, and haue made great proofe of their valour, doe faile them, if their forces bee alſo feebled; all muſt bee attributed to the iuſt vengeance of God.

The Egyptians groſſe idolaters.

Verſ. 2. And I will ſet the Egyptians againſt the Egyptians: ſo euerie one ſhall fight againſt his brother, and euery one againſt his neighbour; Citie againſt Citie, and Kingdome againſt Kingdome.

HE here deſcribes in a more ſpeciall manner, with what calamitie God was determined to ſmite the Egyptians. In ſaying, that he will ſet the Egyptians together by the eares; he meanes ſuch ciuil diſſenſions which cauſe thoſe to bee rent in ſunder, which ought to defend one another: which is the moſt hurtfull miſchiefe that can befall any Citie or people. Now it was needfull the Iewes ſhould be perſwaded that God (in whoſe hands the hearts of all men are) could make the Egyptians to bee inflamed with hatred one againſt another, by a ſecret inſtinct; whereby they might bee brought to deſtroy themſelues, although they were more mightie then their enemies abroad. Hence wee learne, that the people neuer fall to be mutinous, but the Lord ſets them on to fight and make warre one with another: as if a man ſhould gather a companie of Fencers together into the market place. For hee ſets them agog to fight, and driues them forward to hurt; yea euen to kill one another. So then euen as wee are to attribute it vnto God, when there is friendſhip and loue among Citizens: ſo alſo ought we to attribute it to his vengeance, when one of them riſeth vp againſt another, killing and murdering one another.

Ciuill diſſenſions the worſt calamitie that can befall a Commonwealth.

Ciuill diſſenſions fall not out by chance, but Gods prouidence.

Now by way of amplification he addes that which is yet more horrible and prodigious, to wit, that thoſe who are knit together by parentage, ſhall band themſelues to deſtroy each other. If men be worſe then beaſts whē (in forgetting they are created of one and the ſame nature) they fight together: how much more is it a thing abhorring to nature, that brethren or kinſfolks ſhould deuoure one another? By how much the more monſtrous this is, ſo much the more ought wee to acknowledge it to be God his reuenging hand, & his fearefull iudgement vpon them. It ſeemes then that Iſaiah proceeds by degrees: for firſt of all he mentioneth the brother, ſecondly the neighbours, thirdly the Cities, and in the fourth place the Kingdomes. By Kingdomes, hee meanes the Prouinces into which Egypt was diuided, which the Greekes call Lordſhips, which word alſo they haue vſed in this place.

Verſ. 3. And the ſpirit of Egypt ſhall faile in the middeſt of her, and will deſtroy their counſell, and they ſhall ſeeke at the Idoles, and at the ſorcerers, and at them that haue ſpirits of diuination, and at the ſoothſayers.*

*Or, yea, though they ſhould.

EVen as the Prophet in the former verſes tooke heart and courage from the Egyptians, ſo takes he from them now minds and ſpirits. Theſe two things are exceeding neceſſarie for the defence of kingdomes; becauſe whenſoeuer they be taken away, there is no meanes left for vpholding of a State.

What opiniõ the Egyptiās had of themſelues.

Now the Egyptians thought theſelues farre before all other nations, as touching the conceit they had of their owne wiſedome: and proudly diſdained them as barbarians; thinking themſelues to be the only learned, induſtrious, ciuill, courteous, and honeſt men of the world. For they bragged that they were the inuenters of learning, that Philoſophie and Aſtrologie came from them: in a word, that Egypt was as it were the ſhop of all the liberall ſciences. Therfore they could not imagin that wiſedome and counſell ſhould thus faile from amongſt them: and doubtleſſe if this propheſie had come to their view they would haue ſcorned it, thinking that the Sea ſhould ſooner lack water, and that the whole order of nature ſhould be ouerturned, then that they which thought themſelues ſo naturallie wiſe, ſhould become fooles. Yet doth Iſaiah boldly affirme it: for indeed, he ſpake not of his owne head, but hauing foretold that they ſhould be ſtripped of their pride and arrogancie; the context requires that we vnderſtand now that they ſhould be ſmitten with amazednes, ſeeing both theſe faculties of the ſoule depended vpon the free gift of God.

Let not the wiſe man reioyce in his wiſdome.

The word Ruaech in this place is taken for vnderſtanding, or ſharpnes of wit: which we ought diligentlie to note, becauſe many deceiue themſelues touching this word. The former ſentence is yet better expreſſed by the word counſell: for thereby he ſhews whēce this abaſement ſhould proceed; truely from this, God would depriue them of counſell.

Yea though they ſhould ſeeke.] This is an anticipation or cutting them off: for he preuents the obiections which the Egyptians might make. Haue not wee gods to goe and aske counſell at? Are there not wiſe men, diuiners, and enchanters amongſt vs? and makeſt thou ſo ſlight account of theſe? He affirmes that none of theſe ſhall doe them any good, though they truſt neuer ſo confidentlie in them, being puffed vp alſo with a vaine perſwaſion of their wiſedome. I will not beſtow much time about theſe names, wherein notwithſtanding it ſeemes Iſaiah proceeds on by degrees. For he names the gods, then the magicians, and next the diuiners and ſoothſayers.

Now they had their oracles, wherein they chieflie truſted: the magicians were inferior to them, albeit they had great authoritie amongſt them. In the third place, when there was any queſtion of things of ſmall importance, then they asked counſell of the diuiners and ſoothſayers. And thus you ſee that the ſuperſtitious are ſo toſſed vp and downe with vnquietnes, that nothing can content them. For as they are inconſtant and variable vpon all occaſions, ſo run they firſt to one ſhelter, and then to another: and in the meane while Satan by that meanes doth ſo coſen them, that in the beginning he repreſents vnto them ſome appearance of reſt and quietnes, which they make account ſhall continue: but to no other end (as the ſequell proueth) but to ſhew them ſoone after, that being farre off from their expectation, hee might vex and torment them ſo much the more; and conſtreine them ſtill to be ſeeking of new hopes. From whence we learne, that the only way to haue true contentment of heart, is to reſt vpō God only. And no doubt but the Prophet condemnes theſe arts, as being farre remote from all reaſon. For God hath manifeſted all things which are neceſſarie to be knowne by thoſe arts and ſciences which he hath allowed, and would wee ſhould vſe. If any man will be wiſe beyond theſe, he muſt of neceſſitie haue the Diuell for his ſcholemaſter.

Idolaters ſo toſſed to and fro with reſtles thoughts, that nothing can quiet them.

The only way to attain true contentment.

Hee that walks plainly, walks ſafely.

Verſ. 4. And I will deliuer the Egyptians into the hand of cruell Lords, and a mightie King ſhall rule ouer them, ſaith the Lord of hoſts.

NOw he ſhewes what ſhould befall the Egyptians being once depriued of vnderſtanding, and their courages being quailed, to wit, they were to expect nothing but bondage and ſlauerie. For a people being once deſtituted of vnderſtanding and magnanimitie, needs muſt they become their owne ouerthrow, although no enemie elſe ſhould aſſaile them. So that the Lord is wont after this maner to reuenge himſelfe vpon his enemies, depriuing them of all meanes whereby to defend their liberties. I grant that the Prophet threatens a thing more grieuous, to wit, that the dominion whereof the Egyptians proudly bragged, ſhould not only fall to the ground, but that they themſelues alſo ſhould be ſubdued vnder a ſore ſlauerie & bondage. Now howſoeuer the word cruell be put in the ſingular number, yet notwithſtanding hee ſaith in the plurall number that they ſhall be in ſubiection to Lords, which is much more comberſome to beare, then if they ſhould only obey one.

And a mightie King &c.] Hee meanes that the power of the tyrant vnder whom they ſhalbe ſubdued ſhall be ſo great, that it ſhall be hard for them to recouer their libertie. Hiſtories make mention of diuers changes which haue happened in many Countries, which yet could not be kept long by thoſe which haue conquered them. For oftentimes the keeping of that which a man hath woon is more difficult, then the Conqueſt it ſelfe. But the Prophet tels vs that this eſtate ſhall not eaſily be changed, for the ſeruitude of the Egyptians ſhall be of long continuance: the reaſon is, none ſhall dare to oppoſe nor make warre againſt ſo mightie a Conqueror. We may alſo vnderſtand it thus, that Princes ouer a ſmall people are more courteous and humane towards their ſubiects then thoſe that are more puiſſant: who truſting vnto their greatnes, let looſe the raines to doe whatſoeuer they liſt. For as they thinke, their power is inuincible; ſo do they giue libertie to themſelues to act whatſoeuer their fanſie driues thē to. Whether of the two expoſitions we receiue, the ſumme will be this; That the Egyptians, who eſteemed themſelues in the firſt ranke, and the moſt renowned among men, ſhall fall into the power of another; and ſhall be oppreſſed vnder an hard bondage; to wit, vnder a mighty King, againſt whom, none ſhall dare to oppoſe himſelfe. By this we may ſee how great the folly of ſuch men is, who deſire a mighty King, that ruleth ouer many Countries: as alſo how iuſtly they are puniſhed for their ambition, which yet notwithſtanding cannot be reformed, though ſo manie experiences do daily fall out in the world. France and Spaine boaſt at this day, that they are ſubiects to ſo mightie Princes: but they ſhall feele to their ſmart, how profitable ſuch a falſe pretence of honor is to them. But we haue ſpoken of this matter before in another place: Chap. 8. 6, 7.

Verſ. 5. And the waters of the ſea ſhall faile, and the riuers ſhall be dried vp and waſted.

6. And the riuers ſhall goe farre away: the riuers of defence ſhall be emptied and dried vp: the reedes and flags ſhall be cut downe.

HE goes on with that which he began before; to wit, that the fortreſſes in which the Egyptians kept themſelues ſo ſtrongly, and in ſuch ſecuritie, ſhould auaile them nothing at all. For they ſeemed to be impregnable, becauſe they were inuironed with the ſea, with the riuer Nilus, and with many ſtrong places: and the hiſtories teſtifie, that the paſſages whereby they entred into the Country, were very difficult, becauſe there was no mouth or entrance into Nilus: for which cauſe they could eaſily repulſe the ſhips which came to land there. Thus they gloried much in this goodly ſeate and place that was ſo ſtrong by nature: euen as the Venecians at this day, ſeeing themſelues ſo ſtrongly inuironed with deepe and long riuers, thinke themſelues altogether inuincible. But ſuch fortreſſes and defences are vterly vnprofitable, when God is purpoſed to chaſtiſe vs. Hereunto ſerues that which hee addes touching their munitions. He alludes to the cauſes, which not onely let and hinder the ouerflowings of Nilus, but alſo kept the whole land: as if he ſhould ſay; You ſhall need no ſuch things, becauſe Nilus is ſelfe ſhall be dried vp.

Defences ſerue vs to no vſe, when God is minded to correct vs. Nor the ſtrong man in his ſtrength.

But it is very certaine, that this riuer was neuer drawne dry; and yet hath the Prophet foretold nothing which was not fulfilled. We muſt therefore call to minde what wee haue ſaid in another place; to wit, that theſe deſolations are repreſented in liuely colours before vs, as well in regard of our dulneſſe, as alſo to ſet forth the thing performed (as it were) euen in our view. For it is very neceſſarie we ſhould haue ſuch a ſpectacle as might moue our ſpirits, and quicken vs vp to conſider of the iudgements of God: which wee ſhould eaſily contemne, if by this meanes we were not preuented. Obſerue we then this pride of the Egyptians, who had abundance and diuers ſorts of riches; neuer imagining that it was poſſible for them to be humbled by ſo fearefull a ruine. He mentions the roſh and reede, becauſe there was abundance of them; which ſerued to ſundry purpoſes: vnleſſe any had rather ſay, he meanes that the marſhes and ponds ſhall be drie.

Verſ. 7. The graſſe in the riuer, and at the head of the riuers, and all that groweth by the riuer ſhall wither, and be driuen away, and be no more.

* Or, mouth.

AT the mouth.] Others tranſlate, Riuers: but he vnderſtands it rather of the ſpring it ſelfe, which is ſeldome or neuer drawne dry; although it may fall out that floods and riuers may waxe dry. He takes the mouth then for the head of the riuer, which ſhall ſo dry vp, that no place in the Country ſhall be watered by it. And howſoeuer the head of Nilus was very far off, yet is it not without cauſe, that the Prophet threatens that this riuer, from whoſe ouerflowing the fertilitie almoſt of the whole land proceeded, ſhould be dried vp, euen to the very head and ſpring it ſelfe. For it ſeldome rained in this Country; but Nilus performed that office for them euery yeere: and if it ouerflowed but ſparingly, it preſaged want and famine. This is the reaſon why the Prophet threatning the drinke of it threatens therein the barrenneſſe of the whole Country. And for this cauſe alſo he ſaith, that there ſhall be ſuch want euen in the head it ſelfe, from whence the waters ſhould flow forth, that the graſſe ſhall be dried vp.

Verſ. 8. The Fiſhers alſo ſhall mourne, and all they that caſt angle into the riuer ſhall lament; and they that ſpread their net vpon the waters, ſhall be weakened.

A note touching the vſuall courſe which the Prophets hold in their writings.

Iſaiah hath reſpect ſtill vnto the eſtate of Egypt. We haue ſhewed in the 16. Chapter, verſ. 8. how the Prophets are wont to vſe theſe liuely deſcriptions: as when they propheſie againſt any Country, they ſpecially mention that with which it moſt aboundeth, as alſo that for which it is moſt renowned. If it be a Country of vineyards, then they mention vines: if it abound with gold, they mention that alſo: if with ſiluer, then they ſpeake of ſiluer. So propheſying here againſt Egypt, he ſpeakes of fiſhing; becauſe this region was wateriſh, and abounded with manie riuers.

I wil not reiect their tranſlation who tranſlate the verb Anal, To cut off: but the beſt interpretation is, They ſhall be weakened: for this anſwers to the ſorrow and griefe of which he ſpake before. Now we know that there were great numbers of fiſhers in this Country, which which was not the least part of the riches of Egypt. When the Fishers then should be taken away (of which the Country was full) in which trade also consisted a great part of the riches of the Eyptians, it must needes follow that they should be much weakened. As for example, if draperie should be taken from a people, which are accustomed to liue vpon it, great pouertie must needes ensue. He therefore notes a wonderfull change of the whole Country.

Vers. 9. Moreouer, they that worke in flaxe of diuers sorts, shall be confounded; and they that weaue nets.

AS he spake before of their sorrow; so now he speakes of their shame: because those who before liued well, and at their ease vpon this trade, should gaine nothing any longer by it. Now these occupations depend one vpon another; to wit, fishing and net making. And yet some doubt whether he speakes onely of net makers or no: for if we take the word Seriqoth, for all exquisite linen, it is very likely that this is to be referred to those weauings which are the fairest when they are made of small & fine threed. We also know, that there are clothes of very great price made in Egypt. And it shall not be amisse to comprehend the garments of linen vnder the name of net-worke, or white nets: for these garments were of great price, in regard they were wouen with great difficultie. Thus then it should be a metaphoricall maner of speech, vnder which the Prophet closely nips the dissolutenes of the Egyptians, who clothed themselues with linen garments as if they had beene wrapped in nets. If we vnderstand it so, then the next verse coheres with it: and for mine owne part, I can not see how so exquisit and artificiall maner of weauing can belong to the trade of fishing. But if any had rather referre it to fishermen, the sense shall be, that all such as exercised the arte of fishing, and gained much thereby, should now be oppressed and ouerwhelmed with griefe. I thinke it is not needfull to translate the Hebrue word Seker, which the Prophet vseth, Nets, because the Etymologie of it sheweth it rather to signifie a trade by which much is gained.

Vers. 10. For their nets shall be broken, and all they that make ponds shalbe heauie in heart.

WHere great store of fish is they also haue great Pooles or little fish-ponds to keepe them in: for were it not for them, the fishermen should be constreined to sell their fish for nothing. Besides that, they oftentimes cast their nets into the water and take nothing. He therefore continues the former argument: for if fish can neither be taken, nor kept, the Ponds shall serue to no purpose.

Vers. 11. Surely the Princes of Zoan are fooles: the counsell of the wise counsellers of Pharaoh is become foolish: how say yee vnto Pharaoh, I am the sonne of the wise? I am the sonne of the ancient kings?

HE heere ioines wisdome and follie together very fitlie: for it is vnpossible this perswasion should be plucked from men, but they will be wise, yea and so esteemed, although it be in despight of God himselfe. It is all one then as if he were of their opinion: when he calles them wise, whom by and by after he taxeth with grose follie. The Hebrue particle Ac, is sometimes aduersatiue: but because it seemes the Prophet sets himselfe against the Egyptians, I had rather translate it, surely, or certainly, or, now at the least: because he derides Pharaos Counsellers, who of all others were the greatest fooles, and yet in the meane while tooke themselues, and would be reputed for the wisest men. Thus it is a kinde of exclamation, as if he should say, Where is this wisdome of Egypt become? What is become of these Counsellers which despised euery man? Why defend they not the Kingdome? Now is the time when their wisdome may be manifested. Wee see then how this serues for a confirmation and ratification of this present prophesie, for as much as it appeares that the Prophet speakes not of things vnknowne, but hath the certentie of Egyps destruction apparent as it were before his eyes. Being fullie perswaded then that he was authorized from God, he is bold to proclaime that all these Princes are but fooles, how wise soeuer they make themselues. In a word, the Prophet teacheth, that all their glorie who attribute to themselues the least dram of wisdome without God, is but follie, because it will be perceiued to be so in the end, for when they shall come to triall, they will shew themselues no better then children.

All wisdome which is separate from the word, will in the end proue extreame follie.

I deny not but the Lord suffers them to bring many enterprises to passe, that they may get credit and fame among men: but he besots them in the end, so as notwithstanding all their experience and ripenes of wit, they will shew themselues more fond then little babes. Let vs be admonished then to pray for the spirit of counsell and vnderstanding of the Lord, and when we haue obtained it, let vs carefullie vse it in vprightnes with all modestie. For God resists mens wisdome, whē they attribute more to themselues then is meete: and such as too proudly aduance themselues doe well deserue to be punished for their follie. He therefore oft times makes them stand confounded, to the end men may know that their wisdome is nought else but a vanishing smoke. For there is no true wisdome but that which is grounded vpon the feare of God, which is the beginning of wisdome, as Salomon teacheth, Prou. 1. 7. & 9. 10.

If any man want wisdom let him aske it of God.

The feare of God, the only foundation of true wisdome.

How say ye &c.] He reproues Pharaoes counsellers for flattering of him, as parasites are wont to do now adaies to get ỹ fauor of Princes: for all their flatteries tend to none other end; because they finde that the only readie way to get their ſuites, and to creepe into fauour. And thus among ſo many flatteries and lies, trueth can finde no place at all among them. Now howſoeuer this is an ordinarie fault in the Courts of great Lords, yet bare it the ſway, eſpecially among the Egyptians at that time: for they ſtood vpon their antiquitie, as being the moſt antient of all nations beſides, boaſting, that they found out the arts and liberall ſciences. Now, if the common people had this good conceit of themſelues, how much more were their Kings infected therewith in reſpect of them?

There was a double boaſting then; that is to ſay, of antiquitie and knowledge; both which Iſaiah reproues, and telles them, that neither of them ſhall doe them any good. Pharaoh gloried much of the antiquitie and wiſdome of his Natiõ, which was ẏ peoples fault alſo as well as his; but he ſpeakes of the King eſpecially, as of the head, in whom this pride was more plainely perceiued, then in the common people. But let vs beware how we brag of our anceſtors, as if we were borne to it by inheritance: no, let vs goe to heauen to finde wiſedome; and let vs aske it of him that is authour of it. As for antiquitie, it is a ſottiſh and vaine brag: and yet Princes are ſo hampered with this vice, that they could finde in their hearts to goe ſeeke their race and beginning beyond the Moone, as they ſay: yea, they can verie hardly be diſſwaded from this vanitie. flatterers alſo helpe to augment this folle, who (as wee ſee) haue found out many pleaſant things touching the genealogies of Kings and Princes. For no muſicke ſounds more delectable in their eares, then when they are ſeparated from the common people; as if they were petty gods. But it often comes to paſſe, that whiles they be ſo buſie in ſeeking too curiouſly their grandfathers, and great grandfathers, that they make themſelues ridiculous by it, becauſe it comes to paſſe, that they finde themſelues deſcended from ſome handicrafts man, or trades man.

Iſa. 1. 5.

A ſtorie touching Maximilian the Emperour.

I haue heard a pleaſant ſtorie from ſome of good credit of the Emperour Maximilian, who (becauſe hee was wonderfull curious in ſeeking out his pedegree) a merry fellow perſwaded him that hee had found his genealogie in Noahs Arke. This wrought ſo vpon him, that neglecting and forgetting all other affaires, hee onely doted vpon this newes; in ſo much that hee would permit none to ſpeake with him; no not the Ambaſſadours which were come vnto him to deale in matters of importance. Euery one wondered at this folly, and diſliked it in themſelues; yet none ſo hardy that durſt take in hand to counſell him. At the laſt his Cooke being bolder then the reſt (whom the Emperour vſed as a leſter, and tooke pleaſure many times to heare him talke) hauing obtained leaue to ſpeake, ſaid to the Emperour; No man deſires the honour of your imperiall maieſtie more then my ſelfe; but me thinks, if it pleaſe you, this your great induſtrie to find out your pedegree, is neither profitable nor honourable. I now honour and reuerence your Maieſtie (ſaid hee) as a god; but if you will ſtand ſo much vpon your title from Noahs Arke, then you and I muſt needes be coſins at the leaſt; for we all came from thence. Maximilian was ſo moued with the ſpeech of this knauiſh foole, that he was then aſhamed he had gone ſo farre in the matter, although before, neither friends, counſellers, nor affaires could hold him backe from it. For he knew well that his name, which he meant to make more honourable then his anceſtors, ſhould be made leſſe honourable if they came once to the firſt originall, from whence Princes and ſubiects, noble and baſe, are all deſcended. But is not the folly of theſe men great, when fooles and leſters can perceiue it? Yet this is no new vice, but it is rooted deepe in the ſpirits of the moſt men.

That we may auoid this euill then, let vs learne to depend vpon God onely, and let vs prefer this grace of our adoptiõ before all riches, nobilitie, & parentage. As touching the Kings of Egypt, they were indeed deſcended from moſt ancient Kings, who had raigned a long time; and this made them to ſwell thus with pride, euen as if wiſdome had bin borne in their houſe.

Inſtruction.

Verſ. 12. Where are now thy wiſe men, that they may tell thee, or may know what the Lord of hoſtes hath determined againſt Egypt?

ALthough it be word for word; And they ſhall ſhew thee, and ſhall know: yet the clauſe ſhould bee thus reſolued, That they may ſhew thee, yea that they may know at the laſt. Which phraſe of ſpeech is very common among the Hebrewes. Now becauſe the Egyptians had their ſoothſaiers, they thought nothing ſo obſcure or ſecret, but they might haue ſufficient reſolution from them of it: for they went to aske counſell as well in things of ſmall importance, as in great; and held whatſoeuer theſe men ſaid, as oracles. This vanitie the Prophet derides, ſaying; How will they ſhew you that which they know not? Hath God made them of his counſell? It is verie likely alſo that the art which they vſed in diuining, is heere condemned; for the art was not onely vnlawfull of it ſelfe, but inchantments and ſorceries were contained vnder it. There are three waies whereby we may know or foreſee things to come. The firſt and chiefeſt is, by the reuelation of the holy Ghoſt, who onely can reſolue vs: as alſo by the gift of prophecie, which is imparted but to a few: the ſecond, by Aſtronomie: the third, by cõferring of things already paſt, whence they haue been accuſtomed to gather the definition of prudence. As touching the knowledge of the ſtarres, a man may at ſome times come to the diſcerning of certaine things, by their ſituation and coniunction; to wit, famins, fruitfull and vnfruitfull ſeaſons, the peſtilence, and ſuch like: yet this is vncertaine, becauſe it hath its ground vpon coniecture onely. Reſpect therefore muſt alwaies be had herein, what proportion the ſtarres ſtarres haue with theſe inferior places. For mens actions are not gouerned by them as a ſort of fooliſh and deceitfull Aſtrologians thinke, of whom there are multitudes at this day that inſinuate themſelues into the fauour both of Princes and ſubiects, as if they had the knowledge of all things both preſent and to come in their ſleeue. But ſuch fellows are meere coſeners, who beguile men by their illuſions, and reſemble thoſe of whom the Prophet ſpeakes in this place: and yet Princes giue eare vnto them, reuerencing them as if they were gods. Truly they are well worthie to be ſo abuſed; and it is alſo a iuſt puniſhment vpon them for their curioſitie.

Theſe goodly diuiners forſooth doe likewiſe brag that they vnderſtand the arte Magick, wherein the Egyptians were very skilfull: but thereunto they alſo adde things that are worſe and much more deteſtable, to wit, coniurations and inuocations vpon diuels, which is the moſt hatefull and hurtfull thing that a man can either conceiue or vtter. The Lord curſeth ſuch coniectures and cuſtomes of diuining; neither can it be but the iſſue and euent thereof will be moſt wofull, and full of confuſion.

Coniuring moſt hatefull and hurtfull, as may be ſeene by the wofull euents it brings forth.

If theſe things were condemned in the Egyptians, how much more do they deſerue to be condemned in thoſe who ſhrowd themſelues vnder the name and worſhip of God? It is a wonder me thinks that thoſe who otherwiſe are both wittie and well learned ſhould ſuffer themſelues to be ſo groſely abuſed by ſuch impoſtures, as if they were vtterlie depriued both of wit and iudgement: but it is iuſt with God thus to auenge himſelfe vpon the ingratitude and vnthankfulnes of men. Truly ſo farre forth as we may iudge of things to come by that which is paſt, which alſo wee haue obſerued and knowne by vſe and experience in things, which is beſt of all: this in it ſelfe can not be diſliked: yet I would haue no man imagin that any certentie can be gathered from hence of that which is to come, becauſe the matter alwayes hangs vpō coniecture. Notwithſtanding Iſaiah doth profeſſedlie ſet himſelfe againſt this ſubtletie, which men account a great vertue; not that it is euill in it ſelfe: but becauſe ſuch a wittie and ſubtle fellow is hardlie to be found, that with this his knowledge is not alſo confident to haue at his fingers ends whatſoeuer is worthie and neceſſarie to be knowne. And thus they ſet light by the ſecret prouidence of God, as if nothing were hidden from them.

There is yet another vice beſides: that is, they affect rather a kinde of ſubteltie & iugling tricks, then true wiſedome in deed. But Iſaiah eſpeciallie taxeth this pride which is in men of great wits, who by their owne reaſon will preſume to meaſure the euents of things, as if (they) and not the Lord had not the gouernment of the whole world in his hand: therefore againſt their diuinations hee oppoſeth the heauenly decree. Hence we may gather how fitlie Iſocrates ſaid that Gods felicitie is powerfull and mightie in deed, but that our wiſdome is ſo likewiſe. The Apothegme of this elegant Orator ſeemes a goodly one at the firſt bluſh: but ſeeing he takes wiſdome and prudence from God to giue it vnto mortall men, ſuch a parting of ſtakes is no leſſe ſottiſh then wicked. For what blaſphemie is it to attribute a prouidēt counſell vnto men, & only leaue to the Lord an happie fortune? If any now dare leaue thoſe meanes by which the Lord doth inſtruct vs, to haue recourſe to the impoſtures of the diuell, truely ſuch a one is moſt worthie to be deceiued with ſhame and great diſhonour, for he ſeekes the remedies which are not, and deſpiſeth thoſe which God offers him.

Thoſe that ſeeke to coniurers, are moſt worthie to be confounded with ſhame and diſhonor.

Verſ. 13. The Princes of Zoan are become fooles: the Princes of Noph are deceiued, they haue deceiued Egypt, euen the corners of the tribes thereof.

Zoan was one of the chiefe Cities of Egypt: Noph was alſo very much renoumed: but we can not certainly iudge what Cities they were, vnleſſe any ſhall take it to be Alexandria, the antiquitie and wealth whereof may be gathered from many places of the ſcripture. Whereby alſo their error is refuted, who ſay, that Alexander the Great built it. For albeit it was often laid waſte before, yet he neuer built it vp againe whollie, but only repaired it. Now it appeeres by the third Chapter of Nahum verſ. 8. that it was once a free Citie, and had league with the Egyptians, being as greatlie renoumed as any Citie in the world. He rightlie affirmes then that the beginning of her deſtruction came becauſe of her follie. For the chiefe ſtrength of a common-wealth or of a kingdome conſiſts in counſell, and wiſdome, without which, neither riches, nor multitude of men do profit any thing.

Wherein the chiefe ſtrēgth of a cōmon-wealth conſiſts.

I take this word Angulum, which ſignifies a corner, by way of ſimilitude for the principall part of the building whereupon the whole weight reſteth: ſo that I had rather reade it in ỹ nominatiue caſe then in the accuſatiue, becauſe it ſhould be referred, as I take it, to theſe wiſe men, vpon whom the Egyptians relied as ſecurely, as though no miſhap could poſſiblie befall them. But Iſaiah tels them that this leaning-ſtock is too weake, becauſe the reſting ouer-confidentlie vpō their counſels was the deſtruction of Egypt. Therefore after a taunting maner he condemnes this deceitfull wiſdome, which indeede rather deſerues the title of vanitie and follie, becauſe it is ſeparate from the feare of God. For men not only abuſe this excellent gift of God, but they are alſo puffed vp with vaine ambition and ſubtletie, which pleaſeth them farre better then true wiſedome. Beſides, there is alſo a diueliſh furie in them, for they quite ſuppreſſe the prouidence of God, referring all theſe euents whatſoeuer to the capacitie of their owne braine.

This is the cauſe why the ſcripture cries out ſo often againſt ſuch wiſe men, ſhewing all their wit to be meere madnes. For they take that vpon them which belongs to God, whereby whereby they commit horrible and intolerable ſacrilege. We neede not meruaile then if the Lord ſhew fearefull examples againſt ſuch wiſards. For howſoeuer they be ingenious and quicke witted, yet they ſtumble and miſſe the marke euen in ſmall matters, caſting themſelues into ſuch great dangers, as a ſimple clowne or artificer could haue eaſilie auoided and foreſeene. Let this be a warning vnto vs leſt we waxe proud in heart, in attributing ſome praiſe of wiſdome to our ſelues. If ſo be wee haue any prudence and dexteritie in vs, let vs wholly refer it to the free liberalitie of God, and keepe our ſelues within the rule of modeſtie and ſobrietie. For if we make the Lord the ſtay of our wiſdome, wee haue a ſure corner ſtone, which can neuer bee beaten downe, nor ouerthrowne.

The ſureſt corner ſtone.

Verſ. 14. The Lord hath mingled among them the ſpirits of errors: and they haue cauſed Egypt to erre in euery worke thereof, as a drunken man erreth in his vomit.

BEcauſe it was incredible, and vnexpected, that the leaders of ſo wiſe and politike a people ſhould ouerthrow the Country by their folly, therefore the Prophet attributes the cauſe of it to the iudgements of God; to the end the Iewes ſhould not be as it were hoodwinked in ſo excellent and memorable an example. For prophane men are wont to attribute Gods iudgements to Fortune, when any thing that is new and vnlooked for falles out. now he ſpeakes by way of ſimilitude: as if hee ſhould ſay, euen as wine is powred into a cup or glaſſe; ſo will the Lord make the wiſe men drunke, by powring the ſpirits of giddineſſe into them, that being at their wits end, & becõming ſenſeleſſe, they may be made vnable either to ſay or doe any thing rightly. The cauſe why they deceiued Egypt then was, becauſe themſelues were deceiued firſt. And in that the Egyptians ſuffered themſelues to bee ſo abuſed, and were not able to keepe themſelues from it; therein may we ſee the iudgement of God vpon them.

How God is ſaid to deprive men of wiſedome and counſell.

And yet Iſaiah makes not God ſo the author of this their ſenſeleſnes; as if the Egyptians might haue laid the blame vpon him. But thus ſtands the caſe; men of themſelues haue neither vnderſtanding nor iudgement: for whence comes wiſdome but from the Spirit of God, which is the onely fountaine of light, vnderſtanding, and trueth? Now if the Lord takes this his Spirit from vs, what haue we to charge him withall? Hee is bound to vs no way at all: and in that he is liberall in giuing to men, it proceedes from his meere fauour. So then when ſoeuer hee ſmites mens hearts with the ſpirits of giddineſſe and error, he doth it alwaies vpon iuſt cauſes, howſoeuer (I grant) they may be hidden from vs. But for the moſt part he puniſheth the wicked, who haue lifted vp themſelues againſt him with this blindneſſe: as it happened to the Egyptians, who being ſwollen with an opinion of their owne wiſdome, were ready to burſt with pride, & deſpiſed all in regard of themſelues. It is a ſuperfluous matter then to diſpute of predeſtination in this place, ſeeing the Lord puniſheth them for a notorious vice. Wherefore when hee blindes or giues them vp, hee cannot be accuſed of crueltie; for it is a iuſt chaſtiſement of their rebellion and wickednesſe: neither can he which puniſheth mens iniquities be called the author of euill.

Let vs now ſhew after what manner God inflicts this puniſhment vpon them. He deliuers them vp to Satan, who effects this: for he it is properly who ſowes the ſpirit of error and frowardneſſe in mens hearts: but becauſe hee acts nothing but at Gods commandement, it is ſaid, that God doth that, which Satan indeed doth. For where it is commonly ſaid, This or that is done by Gods permiſſion, nothing is more friuolous. The Prophet expreſſeth yet more; to wit, that this puniſhment was ſent of God. becauſe hee is a iuſt Iudge. For he works by Satan as a Iudge doth by the executioner, and iuſtly puniſheth thoſe that haue offended him: as we reade in the booke of the Kings; Satan there preſents himſelfe before God, and askes leaue to deceiue the Prophets of Ahab. his requeſt being granted, he executes Gods commandement: for of himſelfe hee was able to doe nothing. 1. King. 22. 21.

How God works iuſtly by euill inſtruments.

We neede not heape vp many teſtimonies of Scripture; the thing it ſelfe is manifeſt enough.

In that hee addes, they were deceiued by their counſellers, he therein ſets forth the iudgement of God in the ſecond manner. For it might well be, that although the Princes had been witleſſe, much like to men drunke, that the people neuertheleſſe were ſober and of ſound iudgement: but he alſo ſaith, that the ſeducers ſhould obtaine the efficacie of error to deceiue the people alſo. Thus you ſee a twofold iudgement of God in this place, both againſt the ſeductors, and the ſeduced. By vomiting, hee meanes a beaſtly kinde of drunkennеſſe, adding it by way of amplification, ſhewing, that they are not drunken after an ordinarie manner, ſome wit remaining ſtill in them; but that they were drunke like ſwine.

Verſ. 15. Neither ſhall there be any worke in Egypt which the head may doe, nor the taile, the branch nor the ruſh.

THis is the concluſion of the former ſentence: for his meaning is, that there ſhall be ſuch a bruttiſh blockiſhneſſe in all the Egyptians, that whatſoeuer they enterpriſe, ſhall vaniſh away and come to nothing. This muſt needes befall them who are deſtitute of counſell, and it is a iuſt puniſhment of our pride and ouerweening. The Prophet then meant to note out the euent and effect; to ſhew that all things ſhould haue wofull ſucceſſes. And in menacing the head and taile, he ſignifies thereby, that all eſtates, from the higheſt to the loweſt, ſhall bee deſtitute of counſell, ſo as they ſhall be able to doe nothing to the purpose: vnlesse any had rather vnderstand it as touching the maner of the proceeding of their actions. Let vs learne from hence, that the beginning and end of all things depends vpon God only, of whom we must aske counsell, wisedome, and a prosperous successe in all our businesses: vnlesse we meane to haue things succeed with vs, as they did with the Egyptians.

Vers. 16. In that day shall Egypt be like Women; for it shall bee afraid and feare because of the mouing of the hand of the Lord of hosts, which he shaketh ouer it.

HE repeates that againe which he had said before, to wit, that the Egyptians should haue no strength at all. Some thinke the Prophet alludes to a womanish behauiour, wherewith the Historiographers haue taxed the Egyptians: which was this, all order being peruerted, women managed the publike affaires, and men kept the house, and performed the offices that belonged to women. It may be Isaiah aimed at this. But all being well considered, this coniecture can not be currant, because he threatens a iudgement heere which should bring men into a wonderfull mammering. If he should speake of their accustomed behauiour, it should appertaine nothing at all to ỹ matter in hand: neither doth he reproue the Egyptians for their womanish hearts, but rather tels them they shall be so terrified, that they shall become timerous like women. For they not only esteemed of themselues as of a warlike people, able to wage battaile, but would take it in hand themselues without any prouocation thereunto, and were also helpfull vnto other nations. For wee see that many prophane authors tell sundrie things of the facts of the Egyptians, and stand much vpon their commendation. Howsoeuer then they were more nice and delicate then any other people, yet they were desirous to be esteemed a valarous and warlike people.

But now in so sudden a change we may see an admirable iudgement of God. And therefore he addes that the shaking of the Lords hand shall be the cause of this feare: by which words he shewes that the Lord will order and take all this warre in hand, so as the Egyptians shall neuer be able to stand, in regard they shall not haue to doe with men, but with God himselfe. Now this which Isaiah pronounceth against Egypt ought also to be applied to other nations: for when troubles arise, and warres are proclaimed, the iudgement of God must be acknowledged therein if men proue cowards and faint-hearted. For wee see the most warlike men sometimes to giue place, shewing themselues more delicate then women: yea, to be ouercome with little or no power, when God once smites their hearts with trembling.

Vers. 17. And the land of Iudah shall be a feare vnto Egypt, euery one that maketh mention of it shall be afraid thereat, because of the counsell of the Lord of hosts, which he hath determined vpon it.

SOme expound it simplie, that the land of Iudah shall be a wonderment to the Egyptians as well as other nations; comparing this place with Chap. 18. 2. 7. where it is said, You shal be an astonishment, &c. But I thinke the Prophets meaning is otherwise in this place: for his purpose is to shew the cause why the Lord will shew such an example against the Egyptians, to wit, because they had been the occasion of the destruction of the Iewes. For they had turned them frō the cōfidence which they ought to haue had in God: it being the custome of Princes to solicite their neighbours, and offring them help, to the end they may vse them afterward in the like case. But God had forbidden the Iewes to goe downe into Egypt for any succour, Deut. 17. 16. Yet did this wretched people chuse rather to yeeld to the solicitations of the Infidels which offred themselues vnto them, then to God: they are chastised therefore very iustly. Neither did the Egyptians escape vnpunished, because they had giuen them occasion of incredulitie and distrust: for they were so sharplie chastised that they quaked for feare as oft as they remembred the Iewes.

We may gather a very profitable doctrine from hence, to wit, that all such which shall alienate the Church from the true seruice of God, and from trusting in his help, hauing giuen them offence either by fearing, or counselling them, or by any allurements whatsoeuer, shall be punished and that seuerely. The Prophets words are as much in effect then, as if one should say, That the very looke of a woman will make him to blush which hath entised her to leaudnes, when the filthines of the fact shall come to light; and when God the auenger of the mariage knot shall appeare.

Such as shall be so wickedly minded as to withdraw Gods children from his seruice, or from trusting in him, shall be punished seuerely.

Vers. 18. And in that day shall fiue Cities in the land of Egypt speake the language of Canaan, and shall sweare by the Lord of hosts: one shall be called the Citie of destruction.

HAuing threatned the Egyptians, and laid forth the cause of Gods iudgements, he now comforts them, and promiseth them mercie: for he shewes that all of them in a maner shall be restored, and shall recouer a prosperous and florishing estate againe. For of sixe Cities, saith he, fiue shall be saued, so as one only shall perish. He had before threatned an horrible iudgement to fall vpon the whole kingdome, so as if any shall consider the former prophesie well, he can comprehend nothing therein but a state vtterlie past recouerie. He promiseth then that they shall be restored by a speciall fauour of God. So that this is to be taken as an increase of the Churches reſtauration, or as a full meaſure of Gods grace after the redeemer is ſent.

Churches

The manner of ſpeech is ſomewhat obſcure: but if we examine it well, there is little or no difficultie at all in the ſenſe. For his meaning is, that the ſixt part of the Cities ſhall onely periſh, and that the reſt ſhall continue ſafe. The moſt difficultie is in the word Hacheres: ſome reade it Hacheres, that is to ſay, of the Sunne: but they deceiue themſelues by taking one letter for another. Thoſe who expound it of the Sunne, thinke that the Prophet ſpake of Heliopolis: but it ſutes not well with the ſcope of the text: becauſe hee not onely promiſeth that fiue Cities ſhall bee reſtored (for that had been no great matter) but ſaith in generall, that of ſixe townes or cities, fiue ſhall remaine vntouched: and doubtleſſe there were manie Cities in Egypt.

I let paſſe the fables of the old writers, and of thoſe who haue affirmed, that it contained twenty thouſand Cities. Yet it muſt not be denied, but there were a great number in a Country ſo renowned and well peopled; in a Kingdome that floriſhed as it did, and was ſo frequented, and in ſo ſweete and well tempered an aire. Let vs put the caſe then, that there were a thouſand Cities, or a few more. Hee ſaith, that the ſixt part only ſhall periſh, and that the reſt ſhall be reſtored: ſo as the number of the deſtroyed ſhall bee little in compariſon. Now it appeares ſufficiently by that which followes anon after, that this reſtauration is to be vnderſtood of the worſhip and ſeruice of God.

By the word lip, hee vnderſtands the tongue, taking a part for the whole: meaning thereby, to ſhew the agreement that the Egyptians ſhould haue with the people of God, and the faith whereby they ſhould make profeſſion of his name. By the tongue, hee alſo notes out by a figuratiue maner of ſpeech, a confeſſion. For in regard there was but one tongue onely which acknowledged and called vpon the true God, to wit, of this people that dwelt in the land of Canaan; it thereby appeares ſufficiently, that by this word tongue, we muſt alſo vnderſtand their conſent in religion. To ſpeake the ſame or diuers languages, whereby either agreement or diſcord are ſignified; are phraſes of ſpeech very frequent in the Scripture. But let vs obſerue that euery conſent is not ſufficient: for example; if men ſhould agree together to retaine a worſhip of their owne deuiſing and approbation, ought they not to come and conſent to that truth which was reuealed to the fathers? Neither doth he onely ſay, that the Egyptians ſhould ſpeak one and the ſame language; but the language of Canaan: for they were to change their ſpeech, & to vſe y which God had ſanctified; not that the pronunciation of this language was more holy; but it is commended, becauſe it containes the doctrine of truth. We are to obſerue this diligently, to the end wee may learne the true manner of conſenting. We ought to ſeek agreement by al means; but let vs beware that the coditions be good whereby it is procured: for it is not lawfull to ſeeke a meane betweene both, as the deſtroyers of true religion doe, which yet would be taken for makers of pacifications. Away with ſuch light and double tongues; let the truth be retained, which hath no other foundation but the word of God. Let them that draw neere to it, ſpeake with vs: and whoſoeuer falſifieth that, let him auoid, and chuſe a language fitting his owne humour: but let vs continue firme and conſtant in this trueth. The Egyptians then cannot ſpeake the language of Canaan, vnleſſe they firſt of all forſake their owne; that is to ſay, all ſuperſtitions.

Some refer this to Poſtumus, his time, but without any good ground: becauſe wee may gather from the verſes following, that the Prophet ſpeakes of the pure religion and true worſhip of God. And firſt of all vnder the figure Synecdoche, hee teacheth that the ſpeech ſhall be holy, taking one onely kinde thereof, to wit, that they ſhall profeſſe themſelues to be Gods ſeruants, by ſweering by his name. It may be read, They ſhall ſweare in the Lord, or, by the Lord; becauſe the letter Lamed, often ſignifies By. If we reade it, In the Lord; the ſenſe will be, that they ſhould promiſe to obey him, and that with a ſolemne oath; as when a nation takes an oath of alleageance to their Prince. And it is all one as if he had ſaid; they ſhall ſubmit themſelues vnder the power of God, and yeelde themſelues vnder his gouernment. But in regard the other reading is more generally receiued, I alſo the more willingly allow of it. For ſeeing an oath is a part of Gods worſhip, the whole is hereby ſignified, by taking a part for the whole. To ſweare alſo by the name of God, is often taken to beare witneſſe that hee is the true God.

His meaning is in a word, that they ſhall roundly giue their names to Chriſt. Hence we may gather, that wee muſt make an open profeſſion of our faith, if we meane to yeeld God his true ſeruice: and if any will keepe his faith ſhut vp in his heart, ſuch a one ſhall be ſure to haue but a cold opinion in ſtead of faith; becauſe true faith brings forth a franke confeſſion, and ſo inflames vs inwardly, that we ſhall neither will nor chuſe, but make that knowne to others which we carry in the cloſet of our hearts. Euery knee ſhall bow before mee, and euerie tongue ſhall ſweare by my name, ſaith the Lord: Iſai. 45.23. Where faith is then, there ought alſo to be the outward worſhip & the confeſſion of the mouth: Rom. 10.9.10. Wee muſt in like manner obſerue, that the things which appertaine to Gods ſeruice, ought not to be applied to prophane vſes: it is the profanation of an oath then, to ſweare by any other thing then by the Lord. For it is written, Thou ſhalt ſweare by my name: Deut. 6.13. Doe wee not contemne and defile his holy name, if wee mixe Saints or any other creature in our oathes? Let vs note here alſo with what reuerence we ought to take an oath: for if wee thereby make profeſſion of Gods honour, ought wee not to come thereunto with feare and humilitie? Afterwards, where he ſaith in the end waies prouided that the condition be good.

If faith in the heart bring not forth an open profeſſion, it will ſurely proue but a cold opinion in ſtead of faith.

Holy things muſt not be applied to prophane vſes.

How we ought to ſweare.

We ought to labour for a conſent in religion, al-of the verſe, that euery ſixth Citie ſhall be deſtroyed, the meaning is, that all ſuch as turne not vnto God to ſerue him ſhall periſh, without hope of reſtitution: this is the reaſon why he oppoſeth the Cities of Egypt which ſhould begin to acknowledge God, againſt thoſe that are appointed to cõfuſion. Where the ſeruice of God is wanting then, there we can expect nothing but vtter ruin: for the word Hoves ſignifies curſing and execration, after which followes ruin and eternall death.

Nothing but ruin to be expected, where the ſeruice of God is wanting.

Verſ. 19. In that day ſhall the Altar of the Lord be in the middeſt of the land of Egypt, and a pillar by the border thereof vnto the Lord.

HE continues on ſtill that which he ſpake in the former verſe, and expreſſeth more fullie the renument of Egypt, becauſe true religion ſhall floriſh there, the pure ſeruice of God ſhall be eſtabliſhed, and all ſuperſtitions ſhall fall to the ground. Now he vſeth this word Altar, to repreſent Gods worſhip, as by the ſigne thereof; becauſe ſacrifices and oblations were exerciſes of pietie. By the middeſt of Egypt he vnderſtãds the principall part of all the kingdome, as if he ſhould ſay, in the middes of the kingdome, or in the moſt excellent part of it. As touching the word pillar, we may not thinke he ſpeakes of Images that repreſents the ſhape of Saincts, or men, but memorials of the feare of God: or his meaning is, that they ſhall be as ſignes or land-marks, like to thoſe which bound out the ends and limits of kingdomes: and that after this maner there ſhould be ſignes ſet vp, whereby all men might know that God gouerned this people. And doe we not ſee it ordinarilie fall out, that when a people is truly conuerted vnto God, hauing once forſaken and deteſted their Idols and ſuperſtitions, how they openly ſet vp ſignes of true religion, ſo as all may know that God is purely worſhipped there?

When men are truly turned vnto God from their idolatrie, they teſtifie it by ſome publike ſigne.

Ioſephus tels how Onias abuſed this place, when he fled to Ptolemeus Philometor: for he perſwaded him that it ſhould be a very profitable courſe to ſet vp an Altar in the Countrey, vpon which the Iewes, that dwelt there, might offer ſacrifice: and alledged this text, affirming, that this propheſie ought now to be fulfilled. And in the end this wicked Prieſt made the King beleeue it to be true, although the Iewes openlie gainſaid him: for the King regarded his owne benefit; and this bad fellow, who had been depoſed from his office, meant to obteine new credit and fauour. So by this meanes what oppoſition ſoeuer there was, yet could not this wicked counſell be hindred. But Iſaiah vnder theſe figuratiue ſignes plainely deſcribes the pure worſhip of God which was then in vſe: for he hath reſpect to his owne time, and to thoſe with whom he had to deale. Onias then did wickedlie peruert this place to ſerue his own turne.

Onias.

But the popiſh Doctors are no leſſe impudent at this day, in drawing in a place of Malachie by the haire, as it were, to maintaine the ſacrifice of the Maſſe. For where he ſaith, It ſhall come to paſſe that incenſe ſhall be euery where offred vnto God: from thence they conclude, that there are ſome ſacrifices differing from the ancient ſacrifices; for neither oxen nor other beaſts are to be ſacrificed; therefore it is the Maſſe, ſay they. Truly a very trim argument. Wee may eaſily diſcerne that Malachie ſpeakes there of the ſeruice of God, noting it vnder one of the ſhadowes of the Law, as Iſaiah doth in this place: and we ought to marke theſe kinds of ſpeech diligentlie, which the Prophets are wont to vſe very often. Mal. 1. 11.

The place of Malachi truly expounded.

Papiſts wreſters of Scripture.

This then may be plainly explaned by another place in Ioel, which we will alledge by way of example, Your ſonnes and your daughters ſhall propheſie, ſaith he, your yong men ſhall ſee viſions, and your old men ſhall dreame dreames, Ioel 2. 28. S. Peter tels how this propheſie was fulfilled whe the Apoſtles being inſpired with the holy Ghoſt, ſpake diuers tongues: for whereas they were vnlearned before, they then began to be fit to teach the heauenlie myſteries, Act. 2. We reade nothing there of dreames. The Apoſtle then ſeemes to alledge this place very vnfitlie: but it appeeres that Ioel meant to ſignifie nothing elſe in this place but Propheſie; and vſeth the word dreames and viſions for ornament ſake, becauſe the Lord in times paſt did make his minde knowne to the Prophets by this meanes, Numb. 12. 6. He alſo had reſpect to the cuſtome vſed at that time, becauſe the Iewes would hardlie haue vnderſtood what the gifts of the holy Ghoſt meant, ſeeing it was a thing as yet vnknowne vnto them: for being nouriſhed vp vnder rudiments of the Law, they could aſpire no higher then to the ſacrifices and ceremonies; or whether the ſignes and ſacraments led them.

The Papiſts argument out of Malachi for the ſacrifice of the Maſſe, anſwered by another place out of Ioel.

The Prophets liſped to them then as vnto babes or children, to whom we vſe not to ſpeake of higher matters then that which they may be able by little and little to comprehend by cuſtome. This doctrine therefore will giue vs the meaning of many texts, the obſcuritie whereof wee might otherwiſe be held a long while in doubt of. It plainly appeeres that the Prophet ſpeakes of Chriſt his kingdome, ſo that the things whereof hee ſpeakes, were not fulfilled till his comming. The ſhadowes muſt be taken away, that wee may behold the truth of things; and ſo by the Altar we vnderſtand the pure and true inuocation of Gods name. But yet the Prophet therewithall ſhewes by theſe outward ſignes, that the pure ſeruice of God can not be preſerued without the publick exerciſes of religion, the maner whereof muſt not be diſpoſed according to our will. Let mens inuentions ceaſe then, that God alone may be heard in this matter.

Verſ. 20. And it ſhall be for a ſigne and for a witnes vnto the Lord of hoſtes in the land of Egypt: for they ſhall crie vnto the Lord becauſe of the oppreſſors, and he ſhall ſhall ſend them a Sauiour, and a great man, and ſhall deliuer them.

Drew me, and I will runne after thee Cant. 1. I ſhall runne the way of thy Commandem. &c. when thou haſt ſet mine heart at large: Pſal. 119.

WE cannot offer any acceptable ſeruice vnto God, vnleſſe he preuent vs by his grace. For who will dedicate himſelfe to his obedience, that is not drawne firſt by the ſweet taſte of his goodneſſe, to imbrace him with a right affection? He muſt needes call vs firſt then to himſelfe, before we can call vpon him: and all acceſſe is ſhut vp againſt vs, till hee haue firſt of all allured vs to come vnto him. He ſaid before, that they ſhould be ſubdued by diuers afflictiõs, to the end that they might be ſubiected to God: he now repeates the very ſame thing; for men will neuer renounce neither themſelues nor their vanities, till they are brought to teachableneſſe by ſtrong hand. Notwithſtanding he by and by addes another kinde of ſummons; to wit, they ſhall goe familiarly vnto God, after they haue taſted of his louing kindneſſe. For the cry whereof he ſpeakes, proceedes from faith; becauſe they would neuer betake themſelues to this refuge, vnleſſe they were allured thereunto by the taſte of his mercy. And whereas hee promiſeth to ſend them a Sauiour, by whoſe hand the Egyptians ſhal be deliuered; it can be meant of none but of Chriſt; becauſe Egypt was not deliuered from her miſeries, but in regard that the Goſpell was firſt of all preached there.

Chriſt promiſed.

We reade what ſundry changes this Country indured by the ſpace of foure hundred yeeres, inſomuch as it was almoſt vtterly deſtroyed and laid waſte by forraigne and ciuill warres: but when it ſeemed to be at the laſt caſt, as they ſay, behold, it was conuerted to the Lord, and deliuered out of the hands of tyrants and enemies. Thus Ieſus Chriſt deliuered this Country, when he began to make himſelfe knowne vnto it. We in like manner ought to bee thus diſpoſed to know and ſerue God, that when wee ſhall be diuers waies afflicted, we may know that our ſaluation conſiſteth in him alone. And would to God the world had learned this leſſon at this day, ſeeing it is in ſuch diſquietneſſe, that it ſeemes neere to deſtruction. For what end of theſe troubles can it looke for, but vtter ruine, vnleſſe by repentance it acknowledgeth that it hath been iuſtly puniſhed for the owne impieties? And when it is added, To deliuer them; we are to gather from hence a verie profitable doctrine; to wit, that God helps vs by Ieſus Chriſt; through whoſe power hee hath aſſiſted his owne, euen from the beginning: for hee was the perpetuall mediator; and by his intereceſſion all good things haue been obtained at the hands of God the Father. Who being now come and reuealed, let vs know that wee can obtaine nothing of the Father, but by his meanes.

Whence we are to expect deliuerance out of troubles.

God helpes vs, but it is through Chriſt.

Verſ. 21. And the Lord ſhall bee knowne of the Egyptians, and the Egyptians ſhall know the Lord in that day, and doe ſacrifice and oblations, and ſhall vow vowes vnto the Lord and performe them.

Iſay.

IS*aiah* addes now that which was the principall: for the Lord can neither be ſerued, nor called vpon, vnleſſe wee firſt know him to be our Father. As ſaith Saint Paul; How ſhall they call vpon him whom they know not Rom. 10. 14. For we cannot be partakers of Gods gifts to our ſaluation, vnleſſe the true knowledge which is by faith goe before. Hee hath good reaſon therefore to adde knowledge, as the foundation of all religion, or the key which opens the kingdome of heauen vnto vs. Which knowledge we cannot haue, but by doctrine: whence we may conclude, that God reiects all new found ſeruices; for hee cannot approue of that which is void of that knowledge, which proceedes from the hearing of the true and pure doctrine. Men ſhall neuer be able to ſettle a right forme of Gods ſeruice then, if they onely bring that which themſelues haue deuiſed. Theſe places are worthy to be well obſerued; for therein the holy Ghoſt ſhewes vs what true adoration and inuocation is; namely, hauing baniſhed all the inuentions of men, whereunto they obſtinately ſticke, we ſhould ſuffer our ſelues to be taught by the word of God; and if wee once be furniſhed with the authoritie thereof, let vs freely and openly condemne whatſoeuer the world extolleth and admireth. Whereas he ſaith againe, that Egypt ſhall know, it is a repetition of ſome waight: for this knowledge is of ſo great importance, that it ought not to be ſlightly paſſed ouer, becauſe it holds the chiefeſt place; without which there is no true worſhip of God.

No ſaluation without ſauing knowledge.

Note.

Why this word Knowledge is twiſe repeated.

And they ſhall ſacrifice.] This place muſt be expounded like the former, where he mentioned the Altar. For to what end ſhould ſacrifices ſerue, when Chriſt is manifeſted? Vnder this ſhadow then, he mentioneth the confeſſion of faith and prayer, which followed the preaching of the Goſpell. Now vnder this word he comprehends whatſoeuer was offered to God, as beaſts, bread, all ſorts of fruits, and whatſoeuer ſerued to the acknowledgement of Gods goodneſſe. But the difference betweene the old Teſtament and the new, is to be noted; and vnder theſe ſhadowes and ceremonies, we are to vnderſtand that reaſonable ſeruice whereof Saint Paul ſpeaketh in the Epiſtle to the Romans, Chapter 12. verſ. 1.

The difference betweene the old Teſtament and the new.

That which is added of vowes, is alſo a part of God his ſeruice. The Iewes were wont by vowes, to profeſſe that they acknowledged the goodneſſe of the Lord: and they then eſpecially gaue thanks by a ſolemne vow, after they had receiued ſome rare and excellent benefit of him. They alſo made voluntarie vowes for diuers reſpects, according as euery one thought good. Yet none had libertie to vow this or that, after their owne imagination; but there was a certaine rule preſcribed them. How euer it were, it appeares that the Prophet ſignifies nothing elſe by this word vowe, but Gods ſeruice, vnto which the Egyptians ſhould giue themſelues after they had receiued ỹ knowledge of the truth. But he mentions thoſe exercíſes of pietie, by which the Iewes made profeſſion of the true religion. From hence the Papiſts draw an argument to prooue that wee muſt fulfill our vowes to God: but ſeeing their vowes are made at random, and without any diſcretion, this place giues thē no warrant for the maintenance of their error. For Iſaiah foretels what the Egyptians ſhould do after they had imbraced and followed the doctrine of ſaluation. So in like maner when Dauid exhorts the people to vowe, and to pay their vowes, they thinke it makes for them: but he meanes not that they ſhould therefore make raſh or vnlawfull vowes. For the rule of right vowing ſtands alwaies in force, beyond which wee muſt not paſſe; to wit, Gods word, by which wee are taught what he requires of vs, and what we ſhould vowe and fulfill.

The Papiſts argument out of this place touching their vowes, anſwered.

*Pſal.*76. 12. *Eccle.*5.3.

Gods word muſt be our rule in vowing.

There was neuer any libertie giuen vs to vow whatſoeuer wee liſt: the reaſon is, becauſe we giue our ſelues the raines too much, and ſuffer our ſelues to ruſh againſt God in all things, being more impudent in this behalfe then if we had to deale with men. Now ye ſee the cauſe why it was needfull that men ſhould be reſtrained by ſome bridle, euen to the end they might not giue themſelues ouergreat libertie in Gods ſeruice and religion. Seeing it is thus, we may all ſee that God approues of nothing but that which his Law confirmes, and reiects all things elſe as a ſtrange and ſuperſtitious worſhip. What ſoeuer then any man voweth of his owne head without warrant from Gods word, can not be ſound: and if he fulfill it, he ſinnes double, firſt, for vowing fooliſhlie, as if he toyed and plaid the foole with God: ſecondly, for accompliſhing that which he hath raſhlie vowed without warrant: whereas he ought rather to haue repented himſelfe, and to haue forborne the doing of it. So farre off is it then that ſuch vowes do binde any man, that on the contrarie hauing acknowledged his fault and raſhnes in ſo doing, he ought to change his mind, and to ceaſe from performing of it. If any now ſhall make enquirie touching Papiſticall vowes, it is eaſie to proue that they haue no affinitie with Gods word. For if thoſe which they eſteeme lawfull, and the moſt excellent aboue the reſt are wicked and vnlawfull, as the vowes of Monks are, what may wee thinke of the reſt? They vow perpetuall Chaſtitie, as if it were granted to all in a like meaſure: now wee know this gift is rare, neither is it promiſed to all; no not to thoſe who otherwiſe are indued with great and excellent graces.

Vowes of Monks.

Abraham was of an excellent faith, and conſtancie, of ſingular meekenes, and holines, yet had he not this gift. Chriſt himſelfe teſtifies that it is not giuen to all, euen then when his Apoſtles ſo highlie commended ſingle life, Math.19.6.10.11.12. and S. Paul ſaith the like, 1.Cor.7.7.9. He then which hath not this gift of continencie, and yet vowes it, doth ill, and ſhal be iuſtlie puniſhed for his preſumption. Hence haue come thoſe infinite ſhamefull examples, whereby God hath iuſtlie puniſhed ſuch pride in the Papacie. They vowe pouertie alſo; as if it were vnlawfull for them to inioy any thing of their owne; yet doe they abound in wealth aboue all men: is not this a plaine mocking of God? As touching the obedience which they vow, it is nothing elſe but meere rebellion: for they ſhake off Chriſtes yoke, to ſubiect themſelues to men. Others vow pilgrimages, to eate no fleſh, to keepe certaine dayes, and other things full of ſuperſtitions. Others vow vnto God fond and doltiſh toyes, as if they had to deale with a little child: for we are aſhamed to make ſuch promiſes vnto men, amongſt whom nothing is confirmed vnleſſe both parties be firſt agreed betweene themſelues, and doe allow of one anothers fact. Surely we ſhould much leſſe enterpriſe ought in Gods ſeruice, vnleſſe wee haue good warrant for our deede out of his holie word. What ſeruice will you call that where the ſtatutes of God are nothing accounted of, and where the will of man only takes place? Can this be acceptable vnto God, thinke we? Nay, ſhall it not rather be termed ſuperſtition, which S. Paul ſo much deteſteth? Coloſſ. 2.23. Thoſe which make ſuch vowes then do brag in vaine that they ſerue God therein, as if this place any thing at all fauored their conceit, becauſe the Lord deteſteth ſuch worſhip.

Preſumption in any to vow ſingle life.

Wilfull pouertie.

Papiſts vows of obedience meere rebellion.

Pilgrimages.

Note.

Verſ. 22. Wherefore the Lord ſhall ſmite Egypt, he ſhall ſmite and heale it: for he ſhall returne vnto the Lord, and he ſhall be intreated of them, and ſhall heale them.

NOw the Prophet concludes that which he had ſaid before, to wit, that the chaſtiſement whereof he ſpake ſhould be profitable to the Egyptians, becauſe it ſhould be as a preparatiue to bring thē to repentance: as if he ſhould ſay, The affliction wherewith the Lord ſhall ſmite Egypt, ſhall turne to the ſingular benefit and good thereof. Thoſe who reade, He ſhall ſmite with an incurable wound, do interpret this place amiſſe, and do much diminiſh the Prophets meaning: for he ſhewes that the wounds ſhall be profitable, becauſe God will vſe them as a meanes to bring them home. Whence we are to gather, that we ſhould neuer refuſe to be chaſtiſed of the Lord, ſeeing he doth it for our great good; in regard that impunitie ingenders a greater licence to commit ſinne. And becauſe men are wonderfullie prone in giuing themſelues the raines whilſt God ſpares them; therefore he himſelfe, is faine to preuent the miſchiefe as we ſay: which he doth by chaſtiſements and afflictions, that he might thereby prouoke and prick vs forward to repentance and amendment of life. Loe heere an excellent example ſet before vs in Egypt, who found grace and mercie at Gods hands, although although ſhe was ſtuffed with ſuperſtitions and impietie, and ſurmounted all other nations in idolatry.

But note the meanes how; to wit, by turning vnto God: for this is the expoſition of the former member: as if he ſhould haue ſaid, God ſhal heale the Egyptians, becauſe they ſhall conuert. Let vs gather from hence, that conuerſion is as it were a reſurrection from eternall death; for we are but dead all the while we remaine vnconuerted: but being once conuerted, we enter into fauour with God, and are deliuered from hell. Not that we merit this grace by our repentance; but becauſe by this meanes the Lord raiſeth vs as it were from death to life. To this repentance there is a promiſe added: whence we gather, that our requeſts are not in vaine, when we craue pardon for our ſinnes: prouided that our repentance be not hypocriticall.

Conuerſion a kinde of reſurrection from eternal death.

Repentance merits not remiſſion of ſinnes.

Now when the Lord ſaith, that hee will be mercifull to the Egyptians; hee therewithall ſhewes, that they ſhall obtaine fauour immediately after they be once conuerted. It ſhall be a true conuerſion then, when calling vpon the name of God ſhall follow it. But this inuocation cannot be without faith; for the wicked themſelues may haue ſome knowledge of their ſinnes; yet none of them will haue their recourſe to Gods mercy, neither ſhall they euer be truely reconciled vnto him, vnleſſe they bee touched at the heart with the true feeling of that repentance which is ioyned with faith: Rom. 10. 14.

Conuerſion and inuocation goe alwaies hand in hand.

And I will heale.] Hee repeates not that which he ſaid; to wit, the Lord ſhall ſmite Egypt, and heale it; but he promiſeth to heale it in another ſignification, that is, the Lord ſhal ceaſe to correct it. The healing whereof he made mention before, was inward: but this latter is referred to the puniſhments and afflictions. In a word, his meaning is, that God will prepare a ſpeedie remedie to heale all their diſeaſes. For as ſoone as we be reconciled vnto God, hee findes nothing in vs that deſerues to be puniſhed. Doe not chaſtiſements come for ſinnes? But ſinnes being pardoned, fo are alſo the corrections which they haue deſerued. And if ſo be we are chaſtiſed, it is a ſigne that our repentance is not yet ſuch as it ought to be. To bee ſhort, let vs keepe in minde this order which the Prophet here ſets before vs. Firſt, men are prepared to repentance by corrections. Secondly, they are healed, becauſe they are deliuered from eternall death. Thirdly, being brought to the knowledge of their ſinnes, they aske pardon. In the fourth place, God becomes gracious and fauourable vnto them. Laſtly, corrections ceaſe, hauing once obtained pardon of the Lord. Now I thinke there is no man which ought not to acknowledge theſe things which Iſaiah pronounceth here of the Egyptians in himſelfe, in whoſe perſon God ſets as it were a type and an example before the whole world.

The word Healing, taken heere in a double ſenſe.

Verſ. 23. In that day ſhall there be a path from Egypt to Aſſhur; and Aſſhur ſhall come into Egypt, and Egypt into Aſſhur: ſo the Egyptians ſhall worſhip with Aſſhur.

*Or, ſerue.

NOw the Prophet ſhewes how it ſhall come to paſſe that the Lord will ſhed this his bountie forth euery where: as if he ſhould ſay, This largeſſe ſhall not bee ſhut vp in ſome corner, neither ſhall it be felt of one people alone, as it was wont to be. Now he ſpeakes heere of two nations which were the ſworne enemies of the Church, and therefore ſeemed to be the furtheſt off from Gods kingdome of all others. For a man might haue had much more hope of nations further off, in regard that theſe two made warre, as you would ſay then, vpon God himſelf, and perſecuted his Church of ſet purpoſe. Oh Lord! if it be ſo that he ſhewes himſelfe thus mercifull to the capitall enemies of his Church, that paſſing by their ſinnes, hee adopts them for his children, what wil he then do to other Nations? Thus yee ſee a manifeſt vocation of the Gentiles, contained in this propheeie.

Note heere the patience and bounty of the Lord our God.

When he ſaith, The way ſhall be open, and there ſhall bee a mutuall acceſſe, ſo as one ſhall goe to another; hee therein notes their brotherly conference. Wee know that the Egyptians had warres with the Aſſyrians almoſt continually; ſo as they hated one another deadly. Now the Prophet proclaimes heere, that God ſhall turne their hearts, and reconcile them one one another in ſuch ſort, that they ſhall trade and traffique one with the other; & the paſſages which in times paſt were ſhut vp, ſhall now be ſet open. We are to note that in this place then, which we haue obſerued before in the ſecond Chapter; that is, when men are reconciled vnto God, they ought to nouriſh brotherly kindneſſe betweene themſelues; for all ſtrifes, debates, enuies, and grudgings, ought to ceaſe with vs, when God is at one with vs. Is it not to be meruelled at then, when he ſaith, that the way is open to goe out of Egypt into Aſſyria? But all this doubtleſſe ought to be referred to the Kingdome of Chriſt, ſeeing wee read not that the Egypuans had this agreement with the Aſſyrians till they came to the knowledge of Ieſus Chriſt.

Men being reconciled vnto God, ought to nouriſh brotherly kindnes betweene themſelues.

Shall ſerue.] This member may be tranſlated, They ſhall ſerue, or worſhip God: but becauſe this word God, is not heere expreſſed, it may be referred to the Aſſyrians, and indeed the Hebrew particle Eth, leades vs to thinke ſo. Thus you may expound it then; Thoſe which in times paſt burned with a deſire to doe hurt, ſhall change their mindes, and in ſtead thereof, ſhall deſire to doe good. In a word, you ſhall ſee in them the fruit of true repentance; becauſe whereas they had wont to ſpoile one another by often warres, they ſhall now take delight and pleaſure in one anothers company. And this ſenſe will ſute well to the ſcope of the Prophets words. And yet I reiect not the other interpretation which is followed of the moſt; to wit, that thoſe who erewhiles worſhipped many gods, ſhall now acknowledge but one God onely, and ſhall make one confeſſion of faith. Thus it ſhall be free for euerie one to follow which of the two expoſitions he liketh beſt. But if the laſt bee receiued, the Prophet then makes this brotherly loue to flow from the feare of God, as the riuer from the fountaine.

Verſ. 24. And in that day ſhall Iſrael be the third with Egypt and Aſſhur, euen a bleſſing in the middeſt of the land.

*Or, a third. *Or, ſhall be.

NOw Iſaiah ſets downe the concluſion of the promiſe heere, which hee had touched; namely, that the Egyptians and the Aſſyrians ſhall be bleſſed as well as Iſrael. For before, the grace of God was ſhut vp as it were in Iſrael, in regard the Lord had made a couenant with this people onely, and had ſpread out his cord vpon Iacob; as Moſes ſpeakes Deut. 32. 9. And Dauid ſaith, God hath not dealt ſo with euerie nation, neither had they knowne his iudgements: Pſal. 147. 20. To be ſhort, the bleſſing of God aboad in Iudea onely: but heere he ſaith, that it ſhall be communicated to the Egyptians and Aſſyrians: vnder which two names hee comprehends all nations beſides. They are not named heere by way of honour; but in regard they had been the perpetuall enemies of God, they ſeemed ſo much the further eſtranged from him, and to haue leſſe hope of fauour then any others. Wherefore howſoeuer he adopted to himſelfe the children of Abraham onely, yet now he is content to be called the father of all nations, indifferently. Some tranſlate, Iſrael ſhall be the third; which I approue not: for in as much as the nowne is of the ſeminine gender, it ſhould bee ioyned with the word Berachah: and this word bleſſing, is as much to ſay, as example, or mirrour of bleſſing.

Verſ. 25. For the Lord of hoſtes ſhall bleſſe it ſaying; Bleſſed be my people, Egypt and Aſſhur, the work of mine hands, and Iſrael mine inheritance.

HE comes againe to the reaſon and expoſition of the former ſentence: for he teacheth that the Aſſyrians and Egyptians ſhall be companions with the elect people by the free goodneſſe of God. And it is as much as if he had ſaid; Howſoeuer theſe titles appertaine onely to Iſrael, yet ſhall they be tranſferred notwithſtanding to another people, whom the Lord ſhall adopt to himſelfe. Now there is a mutuall correſpondency betweene God and his people, ſo as thoſe whom he pronounceth to be his people with his own mouth, may alſo anſwer, and by good right ſay, that he is their God. This priuiledge is indifferently granted both to the Egyptians and Aſſyrians. But although the Prophet meant to make theſe ſtrangers companions with the Iewes, which were the houſhold-people of God, yet he diſtinguiſheth their degrees by ſpeciall markes. For in calling the Egyptians Gods people, he meanes that they are partakers of that honour which God vouchſafed onely to the Iewes. He adornes the Aſſyrians with the proper title giuen to the Church, ſaying, that they are the worke of his hands.

The Church (as we haue ſaid elſewhere) is called the worke, or workemanſhip of God Eph. 2. 10. becauſe the faithfull are reformed by the ſpirit of regeneration, to the end they may beare the image of God. Thus by the worke of the hands, he meanes not our creation, as we are made men, but regeneration, as wee are created vnto newneſſe of life; that ſo being ſeparated from the world, wee may bee made new creatures. Whence wee perceiue, that in the matter of our new life, we ought to attribute nothing vnto our ſelues, becauſe wee are altogether the workmanſhip of God. But when the Prophet ſpeakes of Iſrael, he adornes him with his preheminence; to wit, that he is the heritage of God: to the end hee might ſtill retaine the right and honour of the firſt borne among his new brethren. For this word heritage, hath a greater emphaſis in it then we thinke commonly of. For queſtionleſſe that ſame couenant which God made firſt with them, gaue them ſuch a priuiledge, as could not be diſanulled by their vnthankfulneſſe; becauſe the gifts & callings of God, are without repentance: as Saint Paul teacheth, Rom. 11. 29. Epheſ. 2. 12. Which ſhewes, that they are the firſt borne in Gods houſe. Howſoeuer then that the grace of God bee now ſhed forth and ſpread abroad further of, yet ceaſe they not to hold the firſt degree, not by their merit, but by the ſtedfaſtneſſe of the promiſe.

The meaning of this phraſe, The worke of mine hands.

If our new birth be the workmanſhip of God, ought we to attribute any thing to our ſelues?

The Iewes.

THE XX. CHAPTER.

Verſ. 1. In the yeere that Tartan came to Aſhdod, (when Sargon King of Aſſhur ſent him) and had fought againſt Aſhdod and taken it.

IN the former Chapter Iſaiah propheſied of that calamitie threatned againſt the Egyptians, therewithall promiſing them Gods mercie: now repeating againe the ſame argument, hee ſhewes that Iſraell ſhall be confounded by this chaſtiſement of Egypt, becauſe they put their confidence in them. He alſo ioines the Ethiopians with him. Whence we may coniecture that the Ethiopians were ioined in league with the Egyptians: which I haue touched heretofore, and ſhall touch it againe in the 37. Chapter. Firſt, we are to note the time of this propheſie: for neceſſitie did preſſe preſſe the Iewes in ſuch wiſe then, that they were conſtreined to ſeeke help of other nations. The holie hiſtorie witneſſeth, that Tartan was one of the Captaines of Senacherib: for which cauſe we muſt needs acknowledge that this Sargon was Senacherib, who (as wee may ſee by this place) had two names. We are likewiſe to conſider in what caſe the ſtate of Iſrael was: for the ten Tribes had been led away captiue: and it ſeemed that the kingdome of Iudah was vtterlie waſted, in regard the whole Countrie was almoſt conquered, Ieruſalem excepted, which was beſieged by Rabſaces, Tartan, on the other ſide, laid ſiege againſt Aſhdod, 2. King. 18. 13. & 17. Now in the 17. verſe of the 18. Chapter there are three Captaines named: whence wee rightlie collect, that Sennacheribs camp at that time was diuided into three parts, that ſo at one inſtant all being amazed and troubled, and ſome put to their ſhifts, the reſt might haue no opportunitie to aid and ſuccour one another. The Iewes therefore had no other refuge but to ſeeke for help of ſtrangers. The Prophet in the meane while is ſent from God to tell them in flat termes, that it is but in vaine for them to depend vpō the ſuccour of the Egyptians, who were alreadie purſued euen by Gods immediat hand: and ſo farre was it off that they ſhould be helpfull to others, that they were ſcarce able to defend themſelues againſt their enemies. Thus the Iewes were to know for certaine, that they were iuſtlie puniſhed for their infidelitie, becauſe they left God, to flee for help to the Egyptians.

I

2. King. 18. 17.

Tartan, Rabſaris, and Rabſache.

The drift and ſcope of this propheſie.

We are heere then to obſerue the drift and ſcope of the text: for it is not Gods meaning to admoniſh the Egyptians, but to correct the infidelitie of his people: which infidelitie often caried them away to falſe and peruerſe hopes. That the Prophet might teach them therefore to reſt vpon God alone, he heere ſets before them what iſſue and ſucceſſe they ſhould haue frō theſe vaine helps which they ſo greedily ſought after. Now this admonition doubtleſſe was very ſeaſonable, becauſe the Egyptians had now begun to hinder the paſſage of the Aſſyrians, and had conſtreined them to returne from whence they came: which was the beſt newes the Iewes could poſſiblie heare tell of. But to the end they might not reioice too much in theſe goodly beginnings, he threatens that this ſuccor ſhall turne into ſmoke, becauſe the Ethiopians and Egyptians ſhall in ſhort ſpace be ouercome to their great diſgrace and confuſion.

Verſ. 2. At the ſame time ſpake the Lord by the hand of Iſaiah the ſonne of Amoz, ſaying, Goe, and loſe the ſackcloth from thy loines, and put off thy ſhooe from thy foote; and he did ſo, walking naked and bare-foot.

TO the end the Lord might confirme this propheſie by ſome externall ſigne, he commands Iſaiah to walke naked. For if the Prophet had done this of his owne head, he had iuſtlie deſerued to haue been mocked for his labor: but in regard he did it at Gods bidding, there is nothing to be ſeene in him which is not worthie of admiration, yea, of great feare. Vnder this nakednes, and ſuch other ſignes, there are weightie matters included beſides, God neuer did any thing either immediatlie by himſelfe, neither yet by any of his ſeruants, but the reaſon of it is forthwith declared. Thus Iſaiah walks not naked only, but ſhewes what his drift is, that is to ſay, why the Lord enioined him to do it; otherwiſe the falſe Prophets might imitate the ſeruants of God, changing themſelues into diuers fearefull formes to dazle the eies of ſimple people, and ſo get eſtimation: but ſuch ſignes are nought worth, becauſe God is not the author of them. Which we are diligentlie to obſerue, in regard of the Papiſts, who are readie to aduance and ſet vp new Ceremonies in ſtead of true Sacraments. This is the rule which we muſt oppoſe againſt them, to wit, if theſe Ceremonies of theirs be of God, then ought we to receiue them: if not, then is it lawfull for vs to reiect them; nay, we can in no wiſe approue of them, but we therein offer wrong vnto God, becauſe mortall men doe then vſurp that authoritie which vnto him belongeth.

Papiſts readie to ſet vp new Ceremonies, in ſtead of true Sacraments.

What rule muſt be oppoſed againſt papiſh Ceremonies.

Beſides, God impoſeth not, nor ſets ſignes before vs without the word: for what Sacrament would it be if wee ſhould only behold the bare ſigne? It is the doctrine only which makes the Sacrament. Let vs know then that there is nothing but plaine deceit when the word goes not before. The Papiſts do therefore fondlie impoſe the name of Sacrament to their vaine Ceremonies, when they are not able to confirme them by the pure Scriptures. Well, the Lord hath ſo ioined theſe things together, that none can ſeparate thē, but withall they offer violence to the order which he hath inſtituted.

When God impoſeth any Ceremonie, he addes his word vnto it.

Now in that Iſaiah is commanded to looſe the ſackcloth, the moſt of the interpreters gather that ỹ Prophet was at that time clothed with a mourning weede, in regard that he bewailed the calamitie of Iſrael: for ſackcloth was a mourning garment, as appeares by that which is ſaid in Ioel, Chap. 1. 13. They ſay then that this was done, that in bearing vpon him the garments of the guiltie or condemned, he might aske pardon of God: or, that it could not be that his apparell and countenance ſhould teſtifie gladnes, becauſe his heart was in heauines. And indeed it was vnpoſſible but he muſt needs be ſore afflicted in beholding ſo great and horrible calamities.

Some thinke it was his ordinarie apparell, in regard that the Prophets vſed to weare a mantle, as teſtifieth Zachariah 13. 4. But this is too weake a coniecture; neither hath it any ſhew of reaſon. It is more likelie that he was clothed with ſackcloth, to expreſſe his ſorrow. For thoſe of Iudeah were become ſo ſenſeleſſe, that they cared not awhit; neither thought they that this miſerie ſhould euer be able to come neere them: no not then when their poore brethren were miſerablie afflicted flicted and scattered before their eyes: nay, they rather thought themselues out of all danger, and made a mocke at the words of the Prophets, who threatned and foretold their ruine. This was the cause why Micha also complained, that none bewailed the calamitie of Israel. Mich. 1.11.

Some also aske whether this was a thing done indeed, or rather whether it were not a bare and naked vision, which hee was to set forth to the people. The most receiued opinion is, that the Prophet neuer stripped himselfe naked, but that it was shewed him by way of vision onely, and that but once. Their reason is, because he was not able to indure to goe naked the space of three whole yeeres, both in regard of the heate and cold, and of other incumbrances occasioned by the time. But what hurt is it if wee should say that the Prophet couered himselfe in his house, and abroad also; onely that he shewed this spectacle of nakednes to the people, when he was to performe his propheticall office? For I am not much moued with that reason, that hee could not indure the heate nor cold, because God who had inioyned him to doe it, was also able to arme and preserue him when hee did it. But they bring an other reason; to wit, that nakednesse had been vnbeseeming a Prophet? I answere, that this nakednesse was no more dishonest, then circumcision; which spectacle, (in the opinion of prophane men) was the most ridiculous thing that could be imagined; seeing the priuie members were then discouered. I doe not thinke, neither would I any should, that the Prophet stripped himselfe so naked, but that he couered those vncomely parts which would haue giuen but a foule and deformed spectacle to the beholders. It was sufficient that the people were taught what the Lord meant heereby, and that they might be moued with it, as a thing extraordinarie.

Whether the Prophet stripped himselfe naked, or not.

Vers. 3.

That also which moues mee to be of this iudgement, is that which is said here, By the hand, or, in giuing commission: for albeit this maner of speech be often found elsewhere, yet wee neuer meete with it in any place, but it imports some hidden vehemencie, by which the effect it selfe is noted out. The Prophet then sets himselfe before God, and in the middest of the Citizens, as the herauld of the calamitie that was to come; and that not by word onely, but euen by a visible signe also. It is to be obserued in like manner, that it is not noted in the text in vaine, that Isaiah did so.

When God inioynes vs any seruice, he therewithall furnisheth vs with abilitie to performe the same.

Thus haue you mine opinion; to wit, that the Prophet went naked as oft as hee preached: onely shewing those parts of his body, which might be seene without blushing. As touching the sackcloth, although priuate men were wont to confesse their sinnes in time of trouble in that maner; yet it is probable that Isaiah vsed this signe, both by reason of his office, as also to confirme his doctrine, and the better to rouse the people out of their securitie. If at any time it fall out that the Lord chastiseth either our selues, or our brethren, hee commands vs not to change our raiment, neither is it needfull: but we are altogether cruell and inhumane, if the afflictions of our brethren, & the subuersion of the Church moue vs not. And if it be our parts to mourne, wee ought also to stirre vp others to doe the like, and by our example, to prouoke them to feele the calamitie of the Church, that they may be touched with some compassion. Heb. 13.3. Rom. 12.15, 16.

Master Calvins iudgement touching the Prophets going naked.

Vers. 3. And the Lord said; Like as my seruant Isaiah hath walked naked and barefoote three yeeres, as a signe and wonder vpon Egypt and Ethiopia;

4. So shall the King of Assur take away the captiuitie of Egypt, and the captiuitie of Ethiopia; both young men and old men, naked and barefoote, with their buttockes vncouered, to the shame of Egypt.

THree yeeres.] Why puts hee this space of time? Because it was granted to the Egyptians and Ethiopians of the Lord, as a time of truce; to the end they might come to repentance: also that hee might thereby proue the faithfulnesse of his people, that without delay they might pull themselues backe from seeking all vnlawfull succours: thirdly, to the end the Egyptians and Ethiopians might know, that their ruine was not far off; howsoeuer they seemed to bee in a well setled estate. Moreouer, the Lord meant heereby to discouer the rebellion of the wicked; for doubtlesse many shewed their impietie in scoffing at the Prophets nakednesse: as on the contrarie, that the faithfull being moued with such a spectacle, might learne not to stay their mindes vpon faire words, although the prosperitie of the Egyptians were a very sweete allurement vnto them. As touching this nakednesse, we are not barely to consider of it alone, but rather the marke and end which the Lord had ingrauen in it: euen as in the visible Sacraments, wee ought to behold the things which are inuisible. These two words, captiuitie, and carrying away, are collectiues, and are taken for the troope of the captiues, and those that were carried away out of the Country. Lastly, he saith, that no respect should be had of age: for the old should be led into captiuitie as well as the young. Quest. Ans. 1 2 3 4 5

Isaiah his nakednesse not to be considered barely in it selfe, but the end wherefore it was inioyned him.

Vers. 5. And they shall feare and be ashamed of Ethiopia their expectation, and of Egypt their glory.

HE now shewes for whose sakes hee foretold that these things should befall the Egyptians and Ethiopians; to wit, to the end the Iewes might learne to hope in God in the midst of their afflictions, and might not call strangers to succour them; which the Lord had forbidden. He calles them their expectation, because the Iewes alwaies turned their eyes towards them, as oft as they were preſſed with any incombrance, putting their truſt in them. For wee are wont to caſt our eyes vpon that, from whence wee looke for ſuccour: and thence it is that to looke, is often taken among the Hebrewes, to hope. But they were to looke vnto God onely: ſo that their wandring lightneſſe is heere reproued. The like ought to happen vnto vs, and that iuſtly; that being made naked, and forſaken of all, we might be plunged in our owne ſhame and reproch; becauſe we refuſe the refuge which God hath ſet before vs, when he calles vs to himſelfe, hauing ſuffered our ſelues to be ſeduced by Satans illuſions.

their

Pſal. 34. 6. Iob 6.

Verſ. 6. Then ſhall the inhabitants of this Ile, ſay in that day; Behold, ſuch is our expectation, whither wee flee for helpe, to bee deliuered from the King of Aſſur: and how ſhall wee be deliuered?

HE calles not Ieruſalem an Ile onely, but the whole Country of Iudea. They thinke that this name is giuen vnto it, becauſe the Mediterraneum ſea inuirons it. For mine own part, I thinke he brings this ſimilitude for another reaſon; for it hath but a little portion of the ſea. But as an Ile is ſeparate from the dry lands: ſo had the Lord ſeparated Iudah from other Countries. For it was ſeparated from all thoſe nations which were the deadly enemies of the Iewes; becauſe there was a wall betweene them, as Saint Paul ſaith, Eph. 2. 14. which at the laſt was broken downe at the comming of Chriſt. Moreouer, Iſaiah here confirmes his prophecie: as if he ſhould ſay; Albeit you cannot now bee moued with my nakednеſſe, yet you ſhall in time know by the effects, that theſe things were not ſet before you in vaine. And God is wont to conſtraine the rebellious and vntractable at the laſt, to confeſſe their fault, that being aſtonied, they might learne to diſpute in themſelues, how their hardneſſe of heart coulde poſſibly blinde them ſo farre.

THE XXI. CHAPTER.

Verſ. 1. The burden of the deſert ſea. As the whirlewindes in the ſouth vſe to paſſe from the wilderneſſe, ſo ſhall it come from the horrible land.

The occaſion of this prophecie againſt Caldea.

THE Prophet hauing taught the people to put no confidence in the Egyptians, but in Gods mercy onely; & hauing threatned them with the calamities which ſhould happen to thoſe nations that ſuccoured them, whereupon they reſted and relied: he now addes a conſolation for the incouragement of the faithfull. For hee telles them that the Chaldeans, vnder whoſe power they were to be held captiue, ſhall be rewarded according to their deſerts: whence the Iewes were to gather, that God had a care as touching the wrongs which they ſuſtained.

By the deſert, hee meanes the land of the Caldeans; not it was inhabited, but becauſe that the Iewes had a deſert on that ſide very neere vnto them; as if we ſhould take the Alps for Italie, in regard they are neerer vnto vs; as alſo that it is our way by which wee goe into that Country. But the reaſon is to be marked; for he deſcribes not the nature of the Country, but telles the Iewes that the ruine of their enemies is at hand, and that it is as certaine, as if they ſaw it before their eyes; euen as this deſert was. Beſides, we may note that the Prophets are wont ſometimes to ſpeake ambiguouſly and darkly of Babylon; to the end the faithfull onely might vnderſtand ſuch ſecret myſteries. As for example, Ieremiah changeth the name of the King.

Now he ſaith, that this ſhall come from the South, becauſe the ſouth wind is tempeſtuous, and is moued with ſtormes and whirlewinds. Where hee addeth that ſuch tempeſts come from the deſert; it is by way of amplification: for if any tempeſt ariſeth in a place inhabited and frequented, it will not be ſo fearefull as thoſe which ariſe from the deſerts. That he might expreſſe the horrour then of this diſcomfiture, hee compares it to tempeſts which begin to make a noiſe in the deſerts firſt, and then take a violent courſe, and keepe a great and hideous thundering. Yet notwithſtanding it ſeemes the Prophet meant to ſay, that euen as the enemies ouerflowed from this ſide, as a tempeſt to ſpoile the land of Iudeah: ſo preſently after, there ſhould bee a whirlewind raiſed for their ouerthrow. For it had not been enough to haue ſpoken of the ruine of Babylon; vnleſſe the Iewes had therewithal been informed that it proceeded from God.

Wee haue ſhewed the reaſon in the 18. Chapter, why he calles it an horrible or terrible nation; to wit, becauſe after ſo many examples of Gods wrath executed vpon it, it was a terrour to all that beheld it, in regard of the deformitie thereof. For the circumſtance of the place will not beare y^t ſhould be called horrible, in regard of Gods power, which was the protection of it. Although then that Babylon was taken and ſpoiled by the Medes and Perſians, Iſaiah notwithſtanding pronounceth that the deſtruction thereof ſhall come to the eares of Iudah; becauſe the Lord will by this meanes bee auenged of the outrages done vnto his people, whoſe gardian he promiſed to be.

Verſ. 2. A grieuous viſion was ſhew-

ed vnto me. The transgresser against a transgresser, and the destroyer against a destroyer. Goe vp Elam, besiege Media: I haue caused all the mourning thereof to cease.

A Grieuous vision.] Seeing it is his purpose to asswage the sorrow of the people, it may seeme an improper speech to call that a grieuous vision, which was rather matter of ioy. But this is to be referred to the Chaldeans, who were puffed vp with their prosperitie, and feared no danger at all to be neere thé. For abundance ordinarilie begets pride and carelesnes: as if he should say, The Chaldeans make a buckler of their strength and riches in vaine: and the hard stone hath met with an hammer harder then it selfe wherewithall it is broken.

Abundance vsuallie begets pride and securitie.

The destroyer.] Because Babylon had obteined the Monarchie by pilling and wasting other nations, she seemed to be exempt from all danger. Albeit then that they were feared, and had exercised all maner of cruelties and hard dealing, yet must they at length be forced to suffer the same robbing and spoiling which they had executed vpon others. And to the end the Prophet might get credit to his speech, he admonisheth them it is iust, that violence should be answered with violence. Elam is a part of Persia, but is taken here for the whole Countrie: and for this cause also the Persians are called Elamites. But it is to be noted, that there was no appearance of any warre at all when Isaiah propheſied these things: yea, himselfe was dead an hundred yeares before there was any suspition of this discomfiture. Whence it sufficientlie appeareth, that he could no way attaine the knowledge of these things, but by the spirit of God: and this serues greatlie to confirme the certentie of this propheſie, as also to giue authoritie vnto it. Whereas he commands the Medes and Persians to performe this seruice, his meaning is, that such calamities should not fall out to the Babylonians by hap hazard, nor at random, but by a certaine decree and appointment of God; in whose name he proclaimes these things, and not in the name of a priuat man. Thus representing as it were the person of God, he might well command his souldiers to assemble thémselues together, and to make warre, as a Generall or Chieftaine. Now we haue alreadie shewed in the tenth Chapter how the Lord vseth the seruice of theeues, robbers, and such other wicked fellowes.

It is iust that violence should be payed home with violéce.

I haue caused all the mourning thereof to cease.] Some thinke this mourning whereof the Babylonians were the cause, ceased after they were subdued by the Medes and Persians. For their tyrannie had occasioned many to sigh and lament, which of necessitie befalles the wicked and tyrannicall rulers. But it may be others are neerer the true sense of the Prophets words, when they say, that the mourning ceased because the Babylonians found no mercie, in regard that themselues had shewed none to others. But yet I expound it more simplie, to wit, that the Lord stopped his eares at their mournings: as if he should say, their complaints and lamentations shall nothing auaile them. For as they had been vnkinde and cruell, it was iust they should receiue that measure which they had met vnto others.

Vers. 3. Therefore are my loynes filled with sorrow: sorrowes haue taken me as the sorrowes of a woman that trauaileth: I was bowed downe when I heard it, and I was amased when I saw it.

HEre the Prophet brings in the Babylonians, lamenting as if the thing had been presentlie acted: for it was not enough simplie to foretell the destruction of Babylon, vnlesse the people had beene therewithall so confirmed, as the matter might appeare to be finished alreadie as it were in the sight of the faithfull. This description then was necessarie: not that we should thinke the Prophet here discouers the affection of his heart, as if he had pitied the Babylonians: nay rather he takes the person of some Babylonian vpon himselfe, as we haue said in another place. It ought to content vs that the secret iudgements of God are thus presented before vs as in a looking-glasse, that the dulnes of our faith might be quickned and comforted. The Prophets do therefore more fullie and elegantlie describe and set forth these things, then can be any way comprehended by mans reason. Whilest Isaiah then thus expresseth his griefe, he therewithall teacheth the faithfull how seuere Gods vengeance should be vpon the Chaldeans; and what horrible punishment Babylon shall feele: euen as it fares with vs when some sudden feare surpriseth vs, or whé one brings vs some heauie tidings.

The reason why the Prophets are wont to speake of iudgements to come, as if they had bin alreadie present.

And he yet further expresseth his griefe, when he compares it to the sorrowes of a woman trauailing with childe: as one who being grieuouslie pained turnes this way and that way looking for succor with wringing the hands. The Prophets are faine to vse such kinds of speech because of our dulnes: for we perceiue not the iudgements of God, vnlesse they be pointed out vnto vs with the finger as it were, so as we may euen touch and feele them. But we are thus admonished of them before they come, to the end we may stand vpon our watch.

Vers. 4. Mine heart failed: fearefulnes troubled me: the night of my pleasures hath he turned into feare vnto me.

OThers translate not amisse, My heart hath wandred hither and thither, because the mind is almost besides it selfe when any great feare falles vpon it. Isaiah declares then the sudden destruction of Babylon, at which a man trembles much more then when it is foreseene, and meanes vsed to preuent it. Daniel recites how that which Isaiah heere foretold came to passe, and saw it with his eyes.

eyes. Balthezar in the night had prepared a ſtately banquet, and thought of nothing leſſe then to be put to death when the Perſians came in ſuddenly vpon him. Theſe delights were then ſuddenly changed into feares and terrours.

Verſ. 5. Prepare thou the table: watch in the watch-tower: eate, drinke: ariſe yee Princes, anoint the ſhield.

THis may be read otherwiſe: as if he ſhould ſay; When they made readie the table, and whileſt the watch-men were fitted for their places, whileſt they eate and dranke, behold they were ſuddenly ſurpriſed with feare and aſtoniſhment: one beganne to cry alarum, alarum, ye Princes ariſe, anoint the ſhield. Thus the Prophet ſets the matter forth in liuely tables, euen as if it were a thing then acted. Truely Xenophon deſcribes not the taking of the Citie more like an Hiſtoriographer then our Prophet heere doth. Whence we may diſcerne, that Iſaiah was not taught this prophecie by naturall coniectures, that hee could thus in liuely colours ſet forth that which was to him vnknowne, but that the Spirit of God was his ſchoolemaſter.

Xenophon.

A manifeſt proofe, that the Prophets writ as they were moued by the holy Ghoſt. 2. Pet. 1. 21.

Wee are further to note the time wherein theſe things were foretold: for the eſtate of the Kingdome of Babylon was then moſt flouriſhing, and ſeemed to bee inuincible; ſo as it feared no dangers. Iſaiah derides that vaine confidence of theirs, and ſhewes, that this greatneſſe can eaſily bee brought low. It ought not to ſeeme abſurd, that he brings in the watch-man ſpeaking: for albeit the ſiege laid againſt the Citie, yet nothing daunted this proud and witleſſe Tyrant from plunging himſelfe ouer head and eares in voluptuouſneſſe and exceſſe; and yet it is not to be doubted, but watches were ſet to keepe all ſure.

Princes were wont to haue a guard round about them, to the end they might the more ſecurely ouerflow in all wantonneſſe without feare: but the Prophet of ſet purpoſe mixeth the watches with the delicates of the Table; the more euidently to ſhew, that this wretched Tyrant was ſmitten with a ſpirit of ſenſeleſneſſe, before he beganne to drinke himſelfe drunke. The King of Babylon then banqueted and made great cheere with his Nobles, at the verie time when hee was ouerwhelmed with ſudden deſtruction, without taking any heede: not that he was out of danger before, but becauſe he was careleſſe, and ſcorned the enemie. A man would haue thought this impoſſible the day before it happened: for the conſpiracie of Gabrias and his faction, who betrayed the King, was not yet knowne. But who would haue imagined that ſo ſtrange a thing ſhould come to paſſe, had hee liued in the time when Iſaiah vttered this?

Verſ. 6. For thus hath the Lord ſaid vnto me; Goe, ſet a watchman to tell what he ſeeth.

THe Prophet is commanded to appoint a watchman to ſtand in the Tower, and to tell what he ſees afarre off; becauſe it could not yet be ſeene with the eyes, neither comprehended by coniecture. To the end then that euery one might vnderſtand that hee ſpake not at randome, he teſtifies, that he publiſheth the things which he cleerely and plainely knew by a propheticall ſpirit: for he is mounted aboue the reach of mans iudgement, to whom ſuch things are vnknowne and incredible. And this is diligently to be obſerued: for wee muſt not thinke that the Prophets foreſaw things by their owne induſtry, or learned that which they publiſhed, of men; but let vs know, that they were carried vp in the ſpirit farre aboue the reach of mans reaſon, to behold things afarre off, as if they had been in a watch-tower; for which reſpect, they were rightly termed Seers. For albeit we ſee, yet are we hoodwincked, and haue much adoe to perceiue that which lieth before our feete: yea, he that hath the cleereſt ſight, is oftentimes very blinde; becauſe he comprehends nothing but what hee can gather by reaſon. But the Prophets ſpake by the Spirit of God, as from heauen.

1. Sam. 9. 9.

The Prophets ſpake as they were moued by the holy Ghoſt.

The ſumme of all is, that ſuch ouerſhoote themſelues, as would meaſure this prophecie by their owne iudgement; becauſe it came from God, and therefore ſurpaſſeth our capacitie very much. There is alſo much more authoritie giuen to this prophecie, in that he ſets the watch in the name of God. If any obiect then, Thou telleſt things incredible, as if they were already come to paſſe. He anſwereth, I publiſh nothing at aduenture; for he which is appointed a watch-man by the Prince, ſeeth that a farre off, which is vnknowne vnto others. Thus Iſaiah perceiued thoſe things by the reuelation of the holy Ghoſt, which others knew not of.

Obiect. Anſ.

Verſ. 7. And hee ſaw a chariot with two horſemen: a chariot of an aſſe, and a chariot of a camell: and he hearkened, and tooke diligent heede.

8. And he cried, A lion. My Lord, I ſtand continually vpon the watch-tower in the day time, and I am ſet in my watch euery night.

THat which hee now addeth, containes a liuely deſcription of this diſcomfiture: for the Prophet publiſheth that which he vnderſtood from the watch-man, whom he had ſet in the tower by the commandement of God. He here brings in this watch-man looking a farre off, and reporting that which he ſaw: and as if hee had not ſeene cleerely enough at the firſt bluſh, he ſaith it was a chariot: but afterwards viewing it more circumſpectly, he ſaith there were two horſmen in this chariot. For our iudgement is darke and confuſed at the firſt, in regard of the nouelrie of the matter, or by reason of the distance of place; and afterward as the thing approcheth neerer, so we iudge better of it. Now it is no wõder that matters belonging to men should be referred either to the Prophets, or to the visions of God: for we know that God takes vnto him the affections of men, that he may the better applie himselfe to our weakenes.

Lastly, he saw a Lion: by which some thinke Darius should be signified, who conquered and sacked Babylon, as it appeares by the fifth Chapter of Daniel: Whereas the watchman saith he is continuallie vpon his watchtower day and night, it serues to confirme the prophesie; as if he should say, nothing is more certaine then this vision: for those whom God sends to watch, are neither blind, nor sleepie. In the meane while he exhorts and stirres vp the faithfull by this example to be as attentiue as himselfe; that by the light of the word they may discouer Gods power afarre off.

Vers. 9. And behold, this mans Chariot commeth with two horsemen. And he answered and said, Babel is fallen, and all the Images of her gods hath he broken vnto the ground.

BY this we plainly see that he brings not in the watchman of king Balthazar: for this kind of speech fits not such a person; the Prophet then by Gods commandement publisheth what should fall out. Now this may be referred vnto Darius, and also vnto God, as well as to the watchman; howbeit, there is no great difference: for Darius being Gods seruant in this behalfe, it is no absurditie to bring him in heere as his Herald. There would be better shew of reason to applie it vnto God, in regard that Darius thought nothing lesse then that he was Gods seruant, when he caused the Idols of the Babylonians to be broken downe. But the matter coheres better to referre it to the watchman, euen as if the Angell should adde an interpretation to this prophesie.

There is a close opposition in this place betweene the liuing God, and dead Idols. This phrase of speech also is to be noted, in that he calles them Images of God. For the Babylonians knew well enough (which all Idolaters doe in a manner confesse) that their Images were no Gods: notwithstanding, they attributed vnto them a diuine power. But when men are come to that passe, they turne the truth of God into a lye; yea, they vtterlie renounce him. But occasion will be offred vs hereafter, where we shall speake of this matter more at large. We heere see that the ruin of Babylon was as a iust punishment for her Idolatrie: for the Prophet shewes the cause thereof, when he saith, that God could not indure she should glorie in her Idols.

Vers. 10. *O my threshing, and the corne of my floore: that which I haue heard of the Lord of hostes the God of Israel, haue I shewed vnto you.

* Or, the sonnes.

BEcause the riches of this so mightie a Monarchie dazled the eyes of all, by the brightnes thereof, it might be esteemed but a fabulous matter whatsoeuer the Prophet foretold touching the destruction of it. That is the reason why he drawes the minds of the faithfull vnto God, that so they might know it is he alone who tooke in hand to roote Babylon out, and that such greatnes should not come to ruine at mens appetites, but by his power only. The threshing and sonnes of the floore, are taken for one and the same thing: for it is an vsuall phrase of speech among the Hebrues, who are wont to repeate one thing often.

This place is diligentlie to be noted, to correct a vice naturallie grafted in vs; namely, when we measure Gods power by our own ell. For his counsell not only farre surpasseth our weake reach, but we are also ill iudges, and deprauers of his works: neither can we be brought to see the greatnes of them further forth then our owne skill and wit stretcheth. But Gods infinit power ought alwaies to present it selfe before vs: and then especiallie when our own wit and reason is brought to the last cast: as when the Church is so oppressed with tyrants, that it seemes past hope of recouerie, yet euen then let vs know that the Lord will bring them to nothing; and by treading their pride vnder foot, and by breaking their power, will shew that it is his threshing. For ỹ Prophet foretold this of no mean or common person, but of the mightiest and most florishing Monarchie of the world. By how much the more then such are exalted, so much the sooner shall their destruction come vpon them, and the Lord shall send his threshers amongst them.

We must expect the restauration of the church when it seemes she is past recouerie.

We are also to know that the example of this incredible ruin which the Lord here sets before vs, appertaines to such as are partakers with them in their sinnes. When he saith he heard this of the Lord of hostes, it is as it were a seale to ratifie the prophesie: for he protesteth that he broached none of his owne coniectures, but receiued them of the Lord himselfe. Wherein we may note that Gods seruants ought to be furnished with this assurance, that they speake in the name of God, as the Apostle Peter witnesseth; Let him that speakes (saith he) speake as the words of God, 1. Pet. 4. 11. For seducers will brag much of the name of God, but his faithfull seruants are assured in their consciences that they haue published nothing but that which God hath commanded them. We may also obserue that this confirmation was exceeding necessarie, because the whole world (as it were) quaked vnder the puissance of so mightie a Monarchie.

But it is not without good cause that he adornes God with these two epithites, calling him the Lord of hostes, and God of Israel. As touching the first, it is true that it alwaies agrees vnto God: but doubtlesse the Prophet had had a speciall regard therein now vnto the present matter; opposing the power of God against all the forces of the Babylonians. For the Lord hath not one host alone, but infinit hostes for the bringing downe of his enemies. He is called the God of Israel, because he shewed himself to be the protector and defence of his people, in the destruction of the Babylonians: for the Iewes were then set at libertie, when this Monarchy was abolished. In a word, all things are done here in fauour of the Church; to which the Prophet hath a speciall eye. For he teacheth not the Babylonians, who would haue contemned these propheeies; but the faithfull, that they might be assured that God had a speciall care of them, howsoeuer the Babylonians molested them, and had scattered them here and there.

Vers. 11. The burden of Dumah. Hee calleth vnto me out of Seir; Watchman, what was in the night? watchman, what was in the night?

The cause of this prophesie against Dumah not certainelie knowne.

IT appeares by the 25. Chapter, vers. 14. of Genesis, that this people came of Ismaels sonne, to whom this name is giuen: for which cause his successors were called Dumeans. The certaine cause of the destruction which is here denounced against them, is not knowne: and this prophecie is so much the more obscure, by reason of the briefnesse of it. Yet we must alwaies remember what I touched before; to wit, that the Iewes were to be fortified against the horrible offences which were at hand. For when so many seuerall changes fall out, especially if the world be so moued, that all things are confused; we then begin to be troubled, doubting in our selues whether things fall out by chance, or whether they be gouerned by the prouidence of God. For this cause the Lord tells vs, that he is the authour of this change, and renueth the face of the world; to teach vs that nothing is permanent here below, that so wee might with our whole heart aspire to that Kingdome of Christ which onely is perpetuall.

The reason of it in respect of the Iewes.

In regard then that these changes were neere, it was needfull the Iewes should be aduertised of it aforehand, that when they saw them come to passe, these things might be called to minde, that therein they might behold the prouidence of God, and so gather increase of faith. Neither is it to be doubted but the Iewes were carried with diuers distractions of minde to and fro, in seeing the world so shaken on all sides, and therefore sought by all meanes they might, to auoid these waues and tempests. For it is our desire alwaies to be in such a place of safetie, as we may be free from all danger of gunshot, as they say. Some of them peraduenture then might seeke some other place of aboad, the better to prouide for their owne affaires: but when the mischiefe should presse them on euerie side, this might make them tarry at home; and admonished them that they could finde no better or safer habitation then in the companie of the faithfull.

By this example also many might be aduertised, who for feare of dangers, separated themselues from the Church; thinking they could finde none greater out of it. The Iewes then might be solicited with such thoughts: for we haue seene in the eight Chapter, that they had restlesse mindes. Seeing then they were thus in doubt, that they ranne to strangers for succour; they might easilie be out of heart. And therefore as I take it, this is the principall reason why Isaiah thus denounceth the ruine of the Dumeans; namely, that the Iewes might willingly put themselues vnder Gods protection, and aboue all things might recommend the safetie of the Church vnto him.

We ought to keepe our selues in the lap of Gods Church, though we see her suffer sundy trials. 1. Pet. 4. 17. 18.

Let vs hence learne to keepe our selues in the lap of Gods Church, be it that wee see her afflicted with diuers and sundry calamities; and let vs rather gladly susteine those louing chastisements which are proper to her children, then to wander abrode to drinke the lees and dregs which shall strangle and choke the wicked. For if the children be thus chastised, what shall become of the strangers and reprobates? It may be also that the Dumeans molested Gods people, whilest their neighbours assailed them on all sides.

Of Seir.] It was a mountaine of Idumea, as it appeareth, Gen. 14. 6. And vnder the name of this mountaine, hee comprehends the whole Kingdome. Now in this place he represents, as in a glasse, those things which had neede of words of vehemencie. And seeing the Idumeans asked the watchman what was in the night? it is very likely they were not farre off, and were in hazard of the common danger: for he brings them not in inquiring, as curious to know what newes; but they aske what the watch saw in the night: as when one inquires, then comes another; and the third will come and doe the like. Hereunto tends the repetition, that it was not one alone that inquired, but many; as men are wont to doe when things are doubtfull and perplexed, when euery one affrighted in himselfe, giues credit to nothing that is told them.

Vers. 12. The watchmen said; The morning commeth, and also the night: if yee will aske, enquire: returne and come.

HIs meaning is, that this feare shall not last a day onely, or some little space: as if the watchman should answer, I will tell you that to morrow which I told you to day; and if you feare now, you shall also feare to morrow. Now it is a most miserable condition, when men are so troubled, as they hang in suspence whether they shall liue or die; it being that extreme curse, wherewith the Lord threatens the wicked by Moses, Who will warrant me life till the euening? And when the euening is come, who will let mee see the morning? Deut. 28. 67. True it is, that the faithfull are inuironed about with many dangers:

gers: but they know that themselues and their liues are in the hand of God: and therefore they see life in the midst of the horrours of death; or at the least they asswage their feares and perturbations by hope and patience. But the wicked alwaies tremble, and are not onely vexed with feare, but they also consume away in their troubles.

The faithfull see life in the middest of the horrors of death.

That which is by and by added, returne, and come: may be expounded two waies; either that they shall lose their labour in running vp and downe without ceasing: or else thus, if any of you be better aduised, get you to Dumah, and there they shal meete with more feares then in the countrie, for they shall finde rest in no place whatsoeuer. Now in regard that God hath alwaies a care of his Church, wee shall finde no place of refuge more safe then there, yea, although we should compasse sea and land.

Vers. 13. The burden against Arabia. In the forest of Arabia shall ye tarrie all night, euen in the waies of Dedanim.

The reason of this burden against Arabia.

NOw he comes to the Arabians, foretelling that they also must keepe their turn in meeting with Gods iudgement, and all to the end hee might exempt no one region which were knowne to the Iewes. Now hee shewes that they shall be surprized with so great feare, that they shall forsake their owne houses to flie into the forests. Then he names the place whither they shall flee, to wit, Dedanim.

Vers. 14. O Inhabitants of the land of Tema: bring forth water to meete the thirstie, and preuent him that fleeth with his bread.

HE now amplifies that trembling, wherewith God had determined so seuerely to smite the Arabians, that they should thinke of nothing else but of their flight, so as they should not haue so much leisure as to prouide them of necessarie things for their voyage. Isaiah then tels them that they shall come into the region of Dedanim emptie and destitute of all things, not hauing any food at all to susteine their life. And therefore he exhorts the Inhabitants there to meete them with bread and water: for otherwise they should perish by reason of extreame want. I know that others expound this place otherwise; for they thinke the Prophet deuides the Arabians, who had bin curnish and cruell to the Iewes: as if he should say, you would now be glad to beare water to those that are athirst: but this exposition is too constreined. And yet I denie not but their crueltie was sufficientlie recompenced, when they were faine to run on this maner to and fro. Notwithstanding mine exposition is more simple, to wit, that the Arabians should be in so miserable a case during their flight, that they should not haue so much as a little water: and therefore must needs perish for thirst, vnlesse some came in time to succor them: and he also tels them that they should haue no lesse neede of bread then of water. He calles their neigbours to relieue them, not as exhorting them to doe their dutie, but that he might expresse the matter the more clearely. He commands then to bring forth their bread, not as though they deserued it, but because they stood in neede by reason of extreame want. Yet in as much as the law of nature requires this dutie, the Prophet closely intimates, that the vnworthie & hungrie are defrauded of their bread, whē men refuse to supplie their needs.

Vers. 15. For they flee from the drawne sword, euen from the drawne sword; and from the bent bow, and from the grieuousnes of warre.

HIs meaning is, that the calamitie shall be so fearefull, that the Arabians shall not flee without cause: the reason is, because the enemies shall pursue them so hotlie with swords and weapons, that they shall not be able to saue themselues by flight. It is manifest enough why he mentioneth this discomfiture: for the Iewes were to be admonished in time of that which was afterward to fall out, that they might know the world was gouerned by the prouidēce of God and not by chance: and that by other mens harmes they might learne to see God the Iudge of all nations which way soeuer they turned their eies. But it is not knowne, neither doe histories make mention whether the Arabians were the enemies of the Iewes or no. Howsoeuer it be, it is certaine that these things are set downe for the consolation of the faithfull, to the end they might behold Gods iustice executed vpon all nations, and might also acknowledge that his tribunall seate was erected and set vp in Ierusalem, from out of which he should passe iudgement against the whole world.

Vers. 16. For thus hath the Lord said vnto me, yet a yeere according to the yeres of an hireling, and all the glorie of Kedar shall faile.

HE also addes that the calamitie whereof he hath propheſied was neere to the Arabians, which serued greatlie for the consolation of the faithfull. For our passions do naturallie boile so within vs, that wee can not indure to be deferred any long time: the Lord therefore hath respect to our weaknes when he saith, that he will put his hand to the worke. For this cause the Prophet shewes that he foretels things which should not be long before they came to passe, that so the Iewes might with the more courage beare their afflictions, out of which they were to assure thēselues to be deliuered in short space. We haue spoken heretofore of the similitude of the yeres of an hireling, which he now addeth the better to expresse the matter: for it is all one in effect as if he had said, Be of good cheere, the time shall not be prolonged. The Chap. 16.14

prophane authors haue vſed this ſimilitude, when they would expreſſe a ſet and deſired time: as a place of Horace teſtifieth, where he ſaith; that the day ſeemes long to thoſe which labour, and are to giue vp an account of their taske.

Horace.

Verſ. 17. And the reſidue of the ſtrong Archers of the ſonnes of Kedar ſhall be few: for the Lord God of Iſrael hath ſpoken it.

And the reſidue.] He affirmeth that this calamitie ſhal not be as yet the end of their puniſhments; becauſe that which yet remaines to Arabia, ſhall vaniſh by little and little: as if he ſhould ſay; The Lord will not onely impoueriſh the Arabians by warre, but will purſue them to the vtmoſt, till all hope of ſuccour be cleane taken away from them, and that they be cut off. For ſuch are the iudgements of God which hee executes vpon the wicked. Whereas on the contrarie, he mitigates and tempers the ſtripes wherewith he ſmites his children, leſt they ſhould be quite out of heart. By the ſtrong, he meanes the warlike men that are fit to beare armes, ſaying; that euen they in the end ſhall drop away, although they eſcaped frō the firſt deſtruction. True it is that hee hath threatned the Iews heretofore with the like plagues; but he alwaies added ſome promiſe, either to aſſwage the burthen of them, or at the leaſt that they ſhould not bee too much out of heart. For it may fall out ſometimes, that the children of God ſhall be much more ſharply afflicted then the vnbeleeuers; but the hope of fauour which is ſet before them, puts a difference betweene them and the reſt of the world. Now when we heare that God executes ſuch horrible iudgemenes vpon the wicked; is it that we ſhould be troubled when we fall into ſore temptations? Nay, rather we ought to gather this conſolation, that he will chaſtiſe vs gently, and not condemne vs to death.

Though the faithfull are ſometimes more ſharply afflicted then the wicked, yet the hope of fauour puts new life into them.

The God of Iſrael.] The Prophet teacheth, as we haue heretofore ſeene, that we are not onely to know that theſe things fell out by the diuine prouidence; but that the God whom Iſrael worſhipped, had ſo ordained them to come to paſſe. For all men are ſometimes conſtrained to reuerence God, albeit they beare themſelues in hand, that things are guided by fortune; becauſe theſe thoghts enter now and then into the mindes of the moſt rebellious, as well in proſperitie as in aduerſitie, that certainlie there is a God in heauen: but yet they forge a kind of diuine power, according to their own fantaſie, whether in heauen or in earth. Becauſe then profane men imagine a God in their owne braine, therein ſhewing their vanitie and beaſtlineſſe; the Prophet brings backe the Iewes to that God whom they worſhipped, to the end they might acknowledge, that it was in him in whom their felicitie conſiſted, becauſe he receiued them into his ſafegard and protection. For it is not enough that we honour ſome God at randome, who gouernes the world; but wee ought to know the true God, who hath reuealed and manifeſted himſelfe vnto vs in the perſon of his Sonne Chriſt. Yea, we ought to note this diligently againſt all profane thoughts of many, who forge I know not what confuſed diuinity, becauſe they dare not plainely deny that there is a God.

THE XXII. CHAPTER.

Verſ. 1. The burden of the valley of viſion. What aileth thee now that thou art wholly gone vp into the houſe toppes?

Or, what haſt thou to doe here?

ISaiah prophecieth againe againſt Iudea: which he names the valley of viſion. And he rather attributes this title to whole Iudea, then to Ieruſalem, of which he will ſpeake afterwards: but now in the Preface hee comprehends the whole land. He calles it a valley for iuſt cauſe; for it was inuironed on euery ſide with mountaines. The ſimilitude receiued by many; namely, that Ieruſalem is called a valley, becauſe ſhe ſhould be debaſed from her dignitie, is ſomewhat too much conſtrained. It is well enough knowne why the word viſion is added; to wit, becauſe the Lord had inlightened all Iudea with his word: the Prophets were euer reſident there, who for that cauſe were alſo called Seers: 1. Sam. 9. 9. And herein there is a cloſe oppoſition; for there is leſſe light in the vallies, then in places that are plaine and open; becauſe the height of the mountaines hinder the light. Yet notwithſtanding all this, he ſhewes that this valley is more cleere, then thoſe regions that lie open on all ſides to the light of the Sunne; which doubtleſſe came to paſſe by the ſingular goodneſſe of God. For his meaning is not, that it was inlightened by the beames of the Sunne, but with the word of God. Beſides, no doubt but the Prophet meant to caſt downe that vaine and fooliſh confidence wherewith the Iewes were puffed vp, in regard that God had beautified them with excellent priuiledges aboue others: for they deceiued themſelues whileſt they thought, that becauſe they had the word and the propheties, they were therefore fenced againſt al dangers; notwithſtanding their diſobedience and rebellion againſt God. His meaning then is, that theſe viſions ſhould not hinder the Lord to auenge himſelfe vpon their vnthankfulneſſe: nay, by this note of thankfulnes, he aggrauates their crime; that in so great light of the heauenly trueth, they ceassed not to stumble, as if they had been vtterly destitute of it.

The reaſon why Iudea is called a valley.

The reaſon why it is called the valley of viſion.

What hast thou to doe here?] He now bends his speech to Ierusalem; not that this destruction concerned that Citie alone, but because the whole land thought themselues secured vnder the shadow of the Sanctuarie, which was in it: as also that the Iewes might thinke what was like to befall them, if this Citie which was so well furnished, should be thus dealt withall. He askes by way of admiration, whence it comes that euerie one left his house, fleeing to the tops thereof to saue their liues. Now the roofes of the Iewes houses were made otherwise then ours are: and thence it is that Iesus Christ saith; What I tell you in the eare, that preach you on the house tops: Mat. 10. 27. When the inhabitants of Ierusalem then fled to the tops of their houses, and left the houses themselues to the wils of their enemies, it was a signe that they were exceedingly frighted. They might all get vp thither to chase away their enemies with darts and arrowes: but his meaning rather is, that the enemie constrained them to runne vp thither, because they were not onely amased at their comming, but also fled for feare: yet so, as their flight should not saue them.

Vers. 2. Thou that art full of noise, a Citie full of brute, a ioyous Citie: thy slaine men Or, are not slaine. shall not bee slaine with sword, nor die in battell.

HIs meaning is, that it was peopled and full of inhabitants; because there is great noise where many people are gathered together, neither can the feare there be so great. Isaiah addes this by way of amplification; to wit, that whereas being a sufficient number, they should haue been vpon the walles and ramparts to defend the Citie, they like cowards gaue place to the enemies, and fled vp to the tops of their houses. He therefore presseth the Iewes the more neerely with these words, that they might duly weigh the iudgement of God: for when mens hearts are cast downe with so great feare, it is certaine that such an astonishment is sent of God. It is as much thē as if the Prophet had said, Whence comes it that thou hast no more courage to resist? Surely because the Lord himselfe chaseth and pursueth thee.

Now this doctrine is taken out of the 28. of Deuteronomie: for we haue often said, that the Prophets doe many times borrow sentences out of Moses, to serue their turne withall: onely the difference is, that they apply that particularly, which Moses spake in generall. The Prophet reprocheth the Iewes then with this their calamitie very iustly: for it was fit they should be touched to the quicke, to the end they might learne that all the trouble and euils which they indured, happened to them in regard of their trespasses and sins. For the Lord had promised them continuall assistance: but being now left of him, they were to confesse themselues vnworthy of his aid, and that they had caused the Lord to recoile backe from them by their rebellions.

The Lord neuer deceiues, neither promiseth he any thing in vaine: but these poore wretches are depriued of his loue and fauor by their owne default: which is yet better expressed by that interrogation which followeth; What hast thou to doe here? For it is as much as if by the present act, he shewed that Ierusalem is left destitute of her protectour and defender: because this manner of speech signifies as much as some strange and vnwonted thing. And to the end he might the better set forth the vengeance of God, hee tells them that those which were slaine, died not like valiant men in battell; but that they died onely for want of heart and courage: for this womanish and timorous heart, was a sure token to them that they were all left of God; whose assistance if they had had, they should boldly and manfully haue made resistance. So then hee not onely affirmes that this discomfiture was accompanied with shame and dishonour; but he also attributes the want of heart and courage to resist to the wrath and anger of God: neither is it to be doubted, but by the circumstance of this their flight, hee beates downe their vaine arrogancie and pride.

Vers. 3. All thy Princes shall flee together from the bowe: they shall bee bound: all that shall be found in thee, shall be bound together, which haue fled from farre.

THis verse is expounded diuers waies. The matter in it selfe is cleere enough: but there is some difficultie in the words. Now because the letter Mem signifies Before; some expound the word Meraiuk, They fled before others: who notwithstanding were neerer vnto danger, in regard they dwelt vpon the borders of the Country. Others thus, Although they were very far off from Ierusalem, yet they ranne away as men possessed with feare, who flee without stay, thinking that they haue the enemie alwaies at their heeles. But I take this sense to bee better agreeing; They ranne farre off: that is to say, those who fled to Ierusalem, as to a Sanctuarie, shall bee taken and bound by the enemies.

Now Ierusalem was as the common Citie of refuge for the whole Country of Iudea: and therefore after any warre was begun, the inhabitants on all sides drew themselues thither. But they were surprised, notwithstanding they thought it such a place of safetie. Some referre this to the siege of Senacherib: but I cannot be led by any meanes to expound it so, because hee speakes of the destruction of Ierusalem. But we know when it was besieged by Senacherib, the Lord deliuered it forthwith; neither was there any taken or bound, neither was any slaine there. These things fell out then a long time after the Prophets death: and the holie hiſtorie witneſſeth the ſame: as alſo that the Princes determined to flee when this calamitie hapned: but neither their flight to Ieruſalem, nor their running away from it did them any good at all, becauſe they fell into the hands of the enemies.

Prophets

In that he ſpeakes expreſſie of the Princes, it aggrauates the indignitie of the fact, for they ſhould haue been the formoſt in venting of their liues for the ſafetie of the people, no leſſe then if they had bin their ſhields and bucklers to fortifie and defend them.

1 But Ieruſalem being now in her floriſhing eſtate and in great proſperitie, theſe things might ſeeme incredible, becauſe it was a

2 ſtrong and well fenced Citie: beſides, it boaſted chieflie in this, that it was vnder Gods protection. For the people thought that God was faſt lincked (as you would ſay) to the Ier.7.4. Temple which was amongſt them, of which they bragged in ſuch wiſe, that they perſwaded themſelues they could not be hurt by any power or forces whatſoeuer, though the whole world ſhould conſpire their deſtruction. This propheſie therefore might ſeeme very ſtrange, to wit, that they ſhould become heartleſſe, and betake them to their heeles, and yet ſhould not eſcape this way neither.

Verſ.4. Therefore ſaid I, Turne away from me: I will weepe bitterlie: labour not to comfort me for the deſtruction of the daughter of my people.

TO the end the Prophet might affect the hearts of the Iewes the more with this calamitie he takes vpon him the perſon of a mourner: and not that only, but with bitter lamentation he bewailes the deſolation of Gods Church. For this place muſt not be expounded like the former, wherein he expreſſed and ſet forth the ſorrow and heauines of forreine nations: But in regard he ſpeakes heere of the afflictions of the Church whereof himſelfe was a member, he hath good cauſe to mourne in good earneſt, and to call vpon others to lament with him. That which happens to the Church then in generall, ought no leſſe to moue vs, then if each of vs felt the miſerie vpon himſelfe in particular: otherwiſe where ſhall this ſentence be verified, The zeale of thy houſe hath eaten me vp? Pſal.69.10. Now the Prophet mournes not

1 apart nor in ſecret without witneſſes, firſt, becauſe he meant (as I ſaid euen now) to prouoke others by his example not onely to mourne and weepe, but rather to repent, that ſo they might preuent the iudgement of God which hung ouer their heads, and might prouoke him no more for the time to come.

2 Secondlie, to the end that himſelfe who was as the herauld and meſſenger of God, might publiſh and declare the wrath that was like to fall vpon them; ſhewing by this his owne deed, that it was no vaine thing which he ſpake.

We may eaſilie gather from that which is added, that the Prophet ſpake that with his mouth which he felt in his heart when he ſaith, I will weepe bitterlie for the daughter of my people: for himſelfe being one of Abrahams of-ſpring, he could not but be touched to the quick with this common calamitie, and therefore teſtifies, ỹ he hath iuſt cauſe to mourne. He calles the daughter the aſſemblie of the people, according to ỹ vſuall phraſe. Whence wee may note, that when the Church is afflicted we ought to be moued with compaſſion by the example of the Prophet, vnleſſe wee be more then yron hearted. For wee are vtterlie vnworthie to be numbred among the children of God, or to be accounted among the communion of Saincts, vnleſſe our ſelues, with all we enioy, be in ſuch wiſe conſecrated vnto her, that nothing can ſeparate vs by any meanes from her. Therefore in ſeeing the Church ſo many waies, and with ſuch diuers calamities afflicted at this day, and an infinit number of ſoules to periſh, whom Ieſus Chriſt hath redeemed with his pretious blood, muſt we not needs be cruell and barbarous if we be moued with no ſorrow at all? Eſpeciallie the Miniſters of the word ought to be thorowlie touched with the feeling of this ſorrow: for as they are held for the watchmen, and therefore can ſee further off, ſo alſo ought they to ſigh when they perceiue the ſignes of a ſcattering of the ſheepe to be at hand.

We ought to be thorowlie touched with ſorrow for the Churches affliction, vnleſſe we will proue our ſelues yron-hearted.

Now the Prophets publike teares ſerued (as we haue ſaid) to breake the hearts of the people: for he had to doe with men of ſuch obſtinacie, as could not eaſilie be brought to lament. There is a place almoſt like vnto this in Ieremiah, where he bewailes the deſtruction and ſcattering of the people, ſaying, that his ſoule fainted with ſorrow, Iere.4.31. And in another place, Who will graunt that my head might be filled with waters, and that mine eies might be a fountaine of teares to weepe day and night for the ſlaine of the daughter of my people? Iere.9.1. When the Prophets perceiued they labored in vaine to breake the hard hearts of this people, ſurely they could not chuſe but be ouerwhelmed with griefe and ſorrow, and therefore they indeuored by all meanes to mollifie ỹ hearts of the obſtinate, that if it were poſſible they might be bowed and brought back againe into the right way.

Verſ.5. For it is a day of trouble, and of ruin and of perplexitie by the Lord of hoſts in the valley of viſion, breaking downe the Citie: and a crying vnto the mountaines.

HE againe ſignifies that the Lord is the Author of this fearefull iudgement: and to the end the Iewes might not gaze heere and there, wondring that the enemies ſhould get the vpper hand, he tels them plainely that they fight againſt God himſelfe. Now albeit we often meete with this doctrine in the holie Scriptures, yet notwithſtanding it is no way ſuperfluous, neither can it be ſo often repeated but we forget it when we are to practiſe it:

Though it be often told vs that God is the author of our afflictiõs, yet we forget it when we ſhould put this knowledge in practiſe.

it: thence it is that we humble not our selues before our Iudge, but cast our eyes rather vpon men and externall meanes, then vpon God, who would easilie remedie our euils.

By day, he meanes a time prefixed, according to the vsuall prase of the Scripture; because it seemes that God yeelds ouer his right for a time, when he winkes at mens wickednesse: but he forthwith recouers it againe in that season that himselfe hath appointed. Now it is not for nought that he names the valley of vision againe: for the Iewes thought themselues secured from all dangers, because it pleased God to inlighten them by his word. But because they did vnthankfully reiect the doctrine thereof, it was but a vaine confidence, to thinke the bare inioying of it should any way profit them: for the Lord not onely punisheth the infidelitie of those that are out of the Church, but that also of the Church it selfe. Nay, rather he begins to manifest his anger against it first; for he will not indure to haue his graces abused, nor that men should boast of his titles in vaine. That which is added touching

The cry of the mountaine, it may be referred to God, to the Caldeans, and to those also which fled; because the vanquishers raised vp a cry to augment the terrour: but the vanquished either cried for mercie and fidelitie, or else testified their sorrow by teares & weepings. The singular number may also be take for the plurall, or else it is meant of that side of the Citie in which the Temple was built. Both expositions agree to the text; and there
1 is no great difference whether we say, That the enemies cried from the mountaine of Zion,
2 to incourage one another: or that their cry was heard of the neighbour mountaines, when
3 they pilled and destroyed the Citie: or that the citizens themselues made their lamentations sound to the mountaines which inuironed the plaine of Iordan.

Vers. 6. And Elam bare the quiuer in a mans chariot with horsemen: and Kir vncouered the shield.

THe expositours are of opinion that this is a continued speech, & that the Prophet denounceth the same iudgement against the Iewes, that he had done before. But when I consider all things aduisedly, I am enforced to bee of the contrarie opinion: for I thinke the Prophet vpbraides the Iewes with their obstinacie and rebellion, for that they repented not, albeit the Lord had chastised them: and thus he repeates the historie of the time past, to put them in remembrance that God his chastisements had done them no good. Thus should these things bee distinguished from the former. In the other verses he foretold what should happen to the Iewes: but now he shewes that they are iustly punished, and that they haue deserued these violent blowes wherewithall the Lord smites them.
1 For hee had called them to repentance not
2 onely by his word, but also by most wofull effects: yet had they shewed none amendement at all, notwithstanding that their wealth was wasted, and the Kingdome weakened; but proudly persisted in their rebellion. There remained nothing thē but ỹ the Lord should bring heauie iudgements vpon them, seeing they thus persisted in their obstinacy and rebellion.

See the exposition of the eleuenth verse, for that giues light to this.

Now I haue translated this Hebrew coniunction Vau, by way of opposition; it being often taken in this sense. Those who thinke the Prophet threatens in the time to come, retaine the proper sense: as if the Prophet hauing made mention of God, should by and by adde the executioners of his vengeance. But I haue already shewed what exposition I haue approued; and it shall appeare hereafter by the course of the text, that mine opinion is not without good reason. In that hee names the Elamits, and the Kirenians, it agrees better, as I take it, to the Assyrians, then to the Babylonians. For although these nations did neuer make war vpon the Iewes by their owne instinct; yet is it very likely that they were in wages with the King of Assyria, and occupied a place in his host, when he besieged Ierusalem. Now we haue said alreadie, that by the Elamits are meant the Esterne people: and vnder the name of Kir, it is certaine that the Prophet comprehends the Kirenians. And because they bare shields, he saith, they discouered them; because they drew them forth of their cases, when they entred into the battell. Whereas some translate, In the chariot of horsemen; I reiect it not: yet had I rather render the words of the Prophet, word for word: for I thinke he meanes a chariot of warre. They vsed then two sorts of chariots; one serued to beare the baggage; and the other to fight in. Now the Prophet
1 speakes of those whereupon the horsemen
2 were mounted.

Vers. 7. And thy chiefe vallies were full of Chariots: and the horsemen set themselues in array against the gate.

Or, and that it came to passe, &c.

IF this be a threat, it should be expounded in the time to come; to wit, And it shall come to passe. But because the words following are put in the time past, and that it appeares the Prophet speakes of things alreadie fallen out, I haue not been afraid to appropriate this beginning to that which is by and by added.

The chiefe of the vallies, is taken for faire and fruitfull. Now he puts the Iewes in mind of these distresses, into which they were brought by Senacherib whilest hee besieged them, and whilest the enemies were before the gates of the Citie: for then ought they to haue fled vnto God for succour. But then did these poore Iewes runne so much the further away from him, and the more shamefully did they manifest their rebellion herein, shewing themselues vtterly desperate. Therefore is it that hee vpbraides them with this obstinate rebellion.

Vers. 8.

* Or, carried away.

Verſ. 8. *And he * diſcouered the couering of Iudah: and thou didſt looke in that day to the armour of the houſe of the forreſt.*

HE ſhewes in what anguiſh the Iewes were when they were thus hardlie beſieged. Some referre this ſpeech vnto God, others to the enemies, but I had rather take it indefinitlie: for he hath caried away, is a phraſe of ſpeech vſed of the Hebrues, that is, the couering of Iudah was caried away. By the word couering, all almoſt vnderſtand the Temple, or the name of God it ſelfe, vnder which the Iewes falſlie bragged. But for mine owne part I take it more ſimplie for their Armorie, wherein they ſhut vp (as in a moſt ſecret place) their inſtruments and furniture for the warre. For he calles it not a couering, as if theſe things were not diſcouered to all, but becauſe they were laid vp in a place put apart or conſecrate. And thus hee ſets that forth which we ſee to happen in great hurlie burlies, for then euery one runnes to his weapon, bringing out the munitions for war which were hidden before.

The latter member is ioined with this, to wit, that they then ſearched diligentlie euery place where they might get weapons in ſuch an extreame neceſſitie, becauſe the furniture for warre had been hid a long time whileſt they inioyed peace. Now the holie hiſtorie witneſſeth that Salomon had built this houſe of the foreſt, that all the armor and inſtruments of warre might be laid vp there. The change of the perſon in this word thou, darkens not the ſenſe, but rather confirmes that which I haue ſaid, to wit, that the Prophet recites after what maner the Iewes were letted in making preparations to defend the Citie.

Verſ. 9. And ye haue ſeene the breaches of the citie of Danid, for they were many: and ye gathered the waters of the lower poole.

HE cõtinues forth his diſcourſe, for whilſt matters go well, and that all things are in quiet, men care not greatlie neither for munition, nor for warlike furniture: nothing but neceſſitie awakens men, and makes them carefull: peace and reſt makes vs become lazie & ſlothfull. As long then as they thought themſelues free from gunſhot, they neglected to make vp the breaches of the walles: but when the drum once ſtroke vp, then they gaue themſelues to the care of theſe things, and to take order for letting the enemie frõ getting paſſage. By the Citie of Danid, hee meanes the middeſt of the Citie, which was deuided into two parts, which we may ſee in many Cities. Ieruſalem was enuironed with walles, and ditched round about: but this middle place was the ſtrongeſt fortreſſe they had, and it was called the Citie of Danid. The Temple alſo was fortified, ſo as the Citie was deuided as it were into three. Now Iſaiah meanes to ſay that the Iewes had almoſt loſt all hope of ſauing the Citie when they thus retired into the middleſt, which was ſtronger then all the reſt. And it appeares very well by the holie hiſtorie that their caſe was very deſperate. Thus wee may alſo gather, that the propheſies were not gathered in order, ſo as they which put them into one volume did not ſtand much vpon the circumſtance of the time. He addes, the waters were gathered for their neceſſitie, that the neceſſities of thoſe which were beſieged might be ſupplied therewith, and thus the poole ſerued them for a Ciſterne.

Neceſſitie is it which cõmonly awakens vs.

Verſ. 10. And yee numbred the houſes of Ieruſalem, and the houſes haue yee broken downe to fortifie the wall.

HIs meaning is, that they viewed the Citie narrowlie and on euery ſide, that no houſe nor building might annoy the defence of it. Others ſay that the houſes were numbred that they might haue watchmen out of them: but the firſt expoſition ſeemes the fitteſt, for it is confirmed by that which is added after, that there were houſes broken downe to repaire the walles of the Citie. We make no reckning of theſe things in the time of peace: and oftentimes men of meane eſtate will build houſes euen vpon the very ramparts, therefore they muſt be pulled downe in time of warre, that from thence they may fight and repulſe the enemie; and alſo leſt any ſhould haue any ſecret ſpeech with the enemie, if houſes were ſo neere the walles.

Verſ. 11. And haue alſo made a ditch betweene the two walles for the waters of the old poole, and haue not looked to the maker thereof, neither had reſpect vnto him that formed it. * Or, long ago.

THe firſt part of this verſe is conioined with that which hath been expounded heretofore; for his meaning is that they were put to their plunges, and ſo flighted with imminent danger, that they were driuen to vſe all meanes poſſible to fortifie themſelues againſt the enemie. In the ſecond part of the verſe he taxeth their ſenſeleſnes, in being ſo taken vp with ſeeking after worldlie helps, that they forſooke that which was the principall. For whereas they ſhould firſt haue had their recourſe vnto God, they neglected it, in contriuing of ditches, ramparts, walles, and other defences of warre, and yet did their chiefe defence all this while reſt in God. Now then it appeares that that which I ſaide in the beginning is true, to wit, that he foretels not heere the deſtruction of the Iewes, but only puts them in minde of that they had felt in former time: that from thence he might take occaſion to ſhew how iuſtlie the Lord was angrie with them, becauſe no chaſtiſement nor correction whatſoeuer could amend them. For their extreame dangers into which they were fallen, ought to haue admoniſhed them of their impietie and contempt of God, but they became ſo much the more hardened.

hardened. And yet there is ſcarcely any man
1 ſo obſtinate, who in time of aduerſitie, and
2 eſpecially in the middeſt of great dangers,
3 but comes to himſelfe, and by himſelfe alone
4 conſiders that he is iuſtly puniſhed, that hee hath offended God, and prouoked his wrath againſt him. But the Prophet ſaith, that not ſo much as one of the Iewes remembred God in theſe great calamities, and that therefore the Lord had good cauſe to leaue them, without thinking anie more vpon them.

From hence let vs gather, that it is a ſigne of a deſperate impietie, when men amend not for the rods and ſcourges which are laid vpon them. First of all wee ought to follow
1 God cheerefully, and to yeeld him voluntary
2 obedience: ſecondly, as ſoone as he chaſtiſeth and correcteth vs, we are forthwith to repent vs. But if his rod doe vs no good, what
3 remaines but that God muſt double his blowes, and make vs feele them in ſuch ſeueritie, that we at the laſt be brought to vtter deſtruction by them? This doctrine is moſt fitting for this ſeaſon, wherein God calles vs to repentance by ſo many of his ſcourges and afflictions. But ſeeing there is no repentance, what are wee to looke for, but that God ſhould vtterlie cut vs off, hauing before vſed all meanes poſſible?

To him that made it.] He cloſely cõfeſſeth by theſe words, ỹ God abſolutely condemns not ỹ care we haue to reſiſt our enemies, & to auoid dangers; but that falſe confidence which wee put in externall means. For our inconſiderate haſtineſſe is iuſtly condemned of diſloyaltie and high treaſon; when wee forſake God, to flie vnto ſwords and ſpeares, to fortreſſes and bulwarkes. Let vs learne then to flie to him alone when dangers inuiron vs on all ſides; and let vs runne with all the powers of our ſoule, to the aſſured fortreſſe of his holy name. This being done, then is it lawfull to vſe thoſe meanes which hee giues vs: but all things will worke to our deſtruction, vnleſſe we firſt of all put the hope of our ſafetie in his protection.

What courſe we ought to keepe in the time of peril.

Prou. 18.10

Hee calles God the workman and maker of Ieruſalem, becauſe hee had his habitation there, and would there be called vpon. Now ſeeing this citie was the image of the church, this title alſo belongs to vs: for the Lord is called the Creator of the Church in a ſpeciall regard. For howſoeuer this title appertaines to the creation of the whole world; yet this ſecond creation whereby he deliuers vs from death by regenerating and ſanctifying vs, is a benefit which is peculiar to the elect: others haue no part of this. Now this title imports not a ſudden act; but ſuch a one as is conſtant and perpetuall: neither is the Church created once, to be left by and by; but the Lord defends and conſerues it euen vnto the end: Thou wilt not deſpiſe the worke of thine hands, ſaith the Pſalmiſt: ſo Paul teſtifieth, that hee which hath begunne a good worke, will accompliſh it vnto the day of Chriſt.

The firſt creation belongs to all: the ſecond peculiar to the elect onely.

Pſal. 138.8. Phil. 1.6.

And beſides, this title containes in it a wonderfull conſolation: for if God be the maker, then neede we not to feare, if ſo be we depend vpon his power and goodneſſe. But we cannot caſt our eyes vpon him, vnleſſe we be indued with true humilitie & confidence; that being diſpoſſeſſed of all haughtineſſe, and ſo brought to nothing, we be readie to attribute the whole glorie to him alone. Now this cannot be done, vnleſſe herewithall we bee fully perſwaded that our ſaluation is in his hand, being aſſured ỹ we cannot periſh; no not although a thouſand deaths ſhould compaſſe vs about. Well, their fault then was the greater, in regard the prerogatiue of this Citie, which had been approued by ſo many euident ſignes, could not yet prouoke the Iewes to commit themſelues vnto Gods protection. As if he ſhould ſay; What folly is it for you to thinke to keepe the Citie, when you deſpiſe the workman that made it?

A conſolation.

Long ago.] The Hebrew word ſignifieth as well diſtance of place, as length of time. If we referre it to the place, the ſenſe will be, that the Iewes are double vnthankfull that they looked not vnto God; no not a farre off. Wherein we are to note, that we ought not onely to looke vnto God when hee is neere vnto vs, but alſo when it ſeemes hee is farre diſtant from vs. Now we thinke him abſent when we feele not his preſent helpe, and when he aſſiſts vs not as ſoone as we ſtand in neede. To be ſhort, he ſhewes what is the nature of true hope; for it is a groſſe and carnall kind of looking vnto God, when we acknowledge his prouidence no further then we can ſee it before our eyes; hope you know muſt mount aboue the skies. I grant the Lord is alwaies properly and truely preſent; but he is thought abſent and farre off in regard of the weakeneſſe of our ſight. This muſt bee conſtrued then according to our ſenſe, and not as the thing is indeed. Wherefore albeit that he ſeemes to be abſent in theſe calamities wherewith the Church is now afflicted, yet let vs lift vp our mindes vnto him; let vs awaken our hearts, and ſhake off all ſloth, that ſo wee may giue our ſelues to the calling vpon his name. But the other ſenſe agreeth better; to wit, that they looked not vnto God who created and made his Church; not yeſterday, or the day before it, but a great while ſince; as one who ſhewed himſelfe the maker of it many ages off. He is called then the ancient maker of his Church: becauſe that if the Iewes would but haue called to minde the long progreſſe of time; they ſhould haue knowne him to haue been a perpetuall conſeruer of his worke; wherein their ingratitude is yet the leſſe excuſable.

The nature of hope deſcribed.

Hope muſt mount aboue the skies.

Verſ. 12. And in that day did the Lord God of hoſtes call vnto weeping and mourning, and to baldneſſe, and girding with ſackcloth.

THe Prophet further amplifies this wicked rebellion of the people. For this circumſtance cuts off all replies: for in the middeſt of ſuch extreme dangers, they had deſpiſed the holy exhortations of the Prophes, and and had reiected the fauor of God, when he was readie to haue healed and reſtored them to their former happines. Here we ſee a ſigne of deſperate malice, when men are ſo beſotted that they proudly deſpiſe inſtruction and correction, kicking obſtinatlie againſt the ſpurre: then (I ſay) may we euidentlie perceiue that they are giuen vp into a reprobate ſenſe. Whereas he ſaith the Lord called them, we may expound it two waies: for although he ſhould not ſpeake at all, yet he calles vs ſufficientlie by his rods and chaſtiſements. Put the caſe we had no Scripture at all, no Prophets nor Teachers, and that there were none to admoniſh vs: yet doth God notwithſtanding inſtruct vs by afflictions and calamities, ſo as we may eaſily cõclude that euery chaſtiſement is a ſummons to repentance. But doubteleſſe the Prophet meant to expreſſe ſomewhat more, to wit, that in deſpiſing the holie admonitions which were ſent vnto them, they were not aſhamed to riſe vp as it were euen againſt God himſelfe, who after a fatherlie maner beckned them vnto him. There is yet greater weight in that he ſaith, it was in the day of affliction, wherein the danger preſſed hard vpon them: for they were admoniſhed both by words and blowes. The ſignes of Gods anger appeared, the Prophets cryed without ceaſing, and yet they became neuer the better.

Euery chaſtiſement a ſummons to repentance.

In that he names ſackcloth, and plucking of their haire, he notes our repentance by the ſignes of it: for it conſiſts neither in ſackcloth, in aſhes, nor in any externall thing, but it conſiſts in the heart. Thoſe who repent in good earneſt, and are diſpleaſed with themſelues, they hate their ſinnes, and are touched to the quick with ſuch a ſenſe and feeling of ſorrow, that they abhorre and deteſt themſelues and their life paſt: but becauſe this can not be done vnleſſe therewithall they confeſſe the ſame before men, therefore he names the outward ſignes, whereby wee giue teſtimonie of our conuerſion: now the Iewes vſed ſuch geſtures and cuſtomes at that time when they meant to ſhew ſignes of repentance. Iſaiah meanes then that they were called to repentance, to the end they ſhould firſt humble themſelues before God, and then that they ſhould therewithall ſhew teſtimonies of that diſpleaſure they had conceiued in themſelues before men. The ſignes indeed alone are nothing, ſeeing conuerſion begins at the heart: and to this purpoſe Ioel ſaith, Rent your hearts, and not your clothes: not that he would haue theſe ſignes neglected; but he ſhewes that they were not ſufficient nor acceptable vnto God of themſelues. Let vs hence gather what is our dutie when the ſignes of Gods anger appeare vnto vs, namely, that our repentance ought not only to be knowne vnto God, but alſo to men.

Repentance conſiſts not in outward Ceremonies, but in the heart.

These outward teſtimonies of repentance are not acceptable vnto God in themſelues.

The ceremonies indeed are indifferent; neither haue we any commandement to put on ſackcloth nor to pluck off our haire, but we ought willinglie and in good earneſt to put the truth of theſe ſignes in practiſe: to wit, an vnfeined diſpleaſure in our ſelues that wee haue ſo diſpleaſed God: a confeſſion of our offences; a broken heart, and a new life. For if wee iudge not our ſelues worthy of puniſhment, we cannot come into fauour with God. To be ſhort, euen as the poore malefactor bowes downe his face, and clothes himſelfe in vile arayment; to bow the heart of the Iudges, ſo ought we to runne in all humilitie to Gods mercy in our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, with vnfeined teſtimonies of our inward repentance.

Yet are we by the way, to note the profit of theſe outward ſignes of repentance, to wit, that they ſerue as goades to pricke vs forward to the acknowledgement of our guiltineſſe, and to the lothing and deteſting of our ſinne. And thus as they are ſpurres to quicken vs to this dutie, they may be called cauſes of repentance: and as they are ſignes, they may be called effects. For the tokens of our condemnation that wee beare vpon vs, prouoke vs to a more thorow acknowledgement that we are ſinners and guiltie perſons: and they are alſo effects; becauſe if repentance went not before, wee ſhould neuer be brought to vſe them of a ſincere affection.

How farforth theſe outward teſtimonies ar profitable.

Verſ. 13. And behold ioy and gladneſſe, ſlaying oxen, and killing ſheepe, eating fleſh and drinking wine, eating and drinking, for to morrow we ſhall die.

THe Prophet condemnes not ioy ſimply: for wee ſee that Saint Paul himſelfe exhorts the faithfull to reioyce with a true ioy; to wit, in the Lord: Phil. 4. 4. But hee here reproues that ioy which is contrarie to that ſorrow which proceedes of repentance; whereof alſo the ſame Apoſtle ſpeakes in the ſeuenth Chapter of the ſecond Epiſtle to the Corinthians: for indeede, none can bee touched with repentance, nor with the true feeling of Gods wrath; but being ſorrowfull, he willingly afflicts himſelfe. The ioy then oppoſite to this ſorrow, is naught; becauſe it proceeds from a brutiſh blockiſhneſſe, and is iuſtly reproued, becauſe the Lord accurſeth it.

Luk. 6. 25. Ioel 1. 14. & 2. 12.

Hence it appeareth then ſufficiently wherefore the Lord vpbraides them with the killing of oxen, and butchering of ſheepe: for this is not euill in it ſelfe, neither doth it diſpleaſe God: but becauſe faſting is a ſolemne part of repentance which wee ſhew before men; it is therefore a ſigne of obſtinacie and contempt of God, to kill beaſts, and to make great merriments when we ought rather to faſt. Thus do men deſpiſe Gods threatnings, and flatter themſelues in their vices: and this is the ſum of Iſaiahs ſpeech.

But the Papiſts are worthily reputed ridiculous, who thinke this place warrants abſtinence frõ fleſh. Why did they not aſwell forbid wine alſo, ſeeing the Prophet ſpeakes of that too? But they are ſo far from abſtaining from wine, that contrariwiſe they eaſilie permit men for want of fleſh, to recompence the ſame with taking in of their liquor. But let theſe toyes paſſe. For Iſaiah condemns neither the vſe of fleſh nor wine ſimply, but the abuſe; abuse; the dissolution and pride also whereby men so harden themselues, that with an obstinate heart they reiect al Gods threatnings, and iudge whatsoeuer the Prophets say to be but fables.

Papiſts ridiculous.

Iſaiah condemneth not the vſe of meates and drinks but the abuſe.

Wee are to obserue this point diligently: for albeit we put not on sackcloth, nor couer our selues alwaies with ashes; yet if true repentance be wrought in vs, we shall manifest the same by such fruits as it necessarily brings forth in them that haue it. In a word, as hee had described repentance by the signes, so hee now sets forth their inward obstinacie and hardnesse of heart, by the outward testimonies of it. For euen as we witnesse our sorrow for sinne by abstinence and other exercises; so by our dissolutiõs & superfluities, we shew euident signes of a stiffe neck, by which we prouoke Gods wrath more and more against vs: as we reade they did in the daies of Noah, Gen. 6.5. Luke 17.27. Therefore after the Prophet had taxed the excesse and intemperancie of the people in generall; he names eating and drinking, as the speciall: wherein the Iews wholly ouerflowed: as if by this meanes they had been able to giue God the repulse, and to tread his threatnings vnder foote.

For to morrow wee shall die.] This particle sheweth sufficiently why the Prophet so sharpely rebuked them for drinking wine, and eating of flesh; to wit, because they scoffed and turned all the Prophets threats into iests and matter of derision. Some thinke that S. Paul in alleadging almost the very same words in the first Epistle to the Corinthians, Chap. 15. had respect to this place: but I am not of their opinion. For he there recites the phrase of speech which Epicures vsed; who holding it as a principle to spend their time in iollitie whilest it lasted, neuer thought of life eternall: and therefore they said; we must be merry, and take our pleasure whilest life indureth. But Isaiah in this place brings in the wicked, who proudly contemned the Prophets menacings; neither could they indure that any should forewarne them of afflictions, banishments, slaughters, and ruines. For in scorne they tooke vp the Prophets words, and at their banquets would say in derision; Ho, we shall die to morrow: These Prophets foretell a speedie destruction that is readie to ouertake vs: well, let vs yet reioyce and make good cheere one day more.

Thus obstinate mindes cannot be touched with any remorse at all, but rather lift vp themselues against God & his Prophets, & so much the more ouerflow in all dissolutions and disorders. Truely it was a monstrous furie in them, thus to vomit forth these blasphemies in disdaine, indignation, and despight, which ought not onely to haue rent their hearts, but to haue shaken euen heauen and earth also. But it were to be wished, we at this day had not many such examples: for God no sooner threatens, but the most part spew out their poison, or else scoffe at all things which proceed out of Gods sacred and blessed mouth.

Vers. 14. *And it was declared in the eares of the Lord of hostes: Surely this iniquitie shall not bee purged from you till yee die, saith the Lord of hostes.

*Or, if this iniquitie shall be purdoned.

AS if he should say; Doe you thinke to play the bedlems, and not bee punished for it, seeing God by this meanes seekes to draw you to repentance? But some may imagine that the Prophet onely repeates the same thing he had said before: for doubtlesse all things are naked and manifest in his sight. But hee addes this as an alarum to awaken the blockishnes of ỹ wicked, who neuer durst aduance themselues thus proudly against God, but that they thinke they can beguile him: for whosoeuer knowes he hath God for a witnesse of his doings, ought of necessitie therewithall to confesse that the same God must be his Iudge. It followes therefore, that the wicked in their cups, doe quite and clean bereaue God of his power. What maruell is it then, if they be summoned to appeare before his tribunall seate, to the end they may know that there they must giue an account.

It is a terrible threatning when hee saith that this wickednesse shall neuer bee pardoned. Now the particle conditionall, If, containes a negatiue in the Hebrew tongue: as if the Lord should say; Thinke me not to be true, thinke me not to be God, if I be not auenged of so execrable an impietie. The cause why the Hebrewes conceale something in their othes, is to accustome vs to be modest and sober in this behalfe: for we therein craue that God would iudge and be auenged of vs, if we lie. Wee had neede of some bridle therefore to restraine vs from making othes rashly. The summe of the Prophets speech is to teach vs, that nothing is more displeasing vnto God then obstinacy, whereby wee treasure vp wrath against the day of wrath, as the Apostle saith, Rom. 2.5. and depriue our selues of all hope of perdition.

Othes must be vsed with feare and trembling.

Vers. 15. Thus saith the Lord God of hostes; Goe get thee to the treasurer, to Shebna the steward of the house, and say.

THis propheſie is particularly addressed against one man. For hauing spoken to all the people before, hee now turnes his speech to Shebna, whom hee will mention againe in the 37. Chapter. The Prophet giues him two titles, to wit, of Scribe, or Chancellour; and steward of the house: and whereas hee giues the title of steward here, he will call him by the name of Chancellour in the other place. And therefore some are of opinion touching these words, that he was put from his office of stewardship, and that Eliakim was put in his roome. But this is vncertaine: yet we may coniecture by the Prophets words, that Shebna was so carried away with enuie, that he indeuoured to supplant Eliakim. It is no lesse probable that this propheeie was written written after Ieruſalem was miraculouſly deliuered, and Senacheribs hoſt diſcomfited. In the meane while, many things doubtleſſe happened that are vnknowne to vs: and not vnlike but this perfidious wretch being in ſome credit, did his worſt to ſuppreſſe Eliakim. For it appeares by the hiſtorie of the ſecond booke of Kings, Chap. 19. 2. that Shebna was one of the principall Secretaries, whom we now call Chancellour. But there is yet a little more difficultie in the word Socen: for ſome thinke it ſignifies a Treaſurer, becauſe the verbe Sacan ſignifies to locke: but ſeeing he calles him Chancellour in an other place, I thinke he was not Treaſurer. Beſides, the Prophet doth ſufficiently witneſſe, that this man had ſuch cammand in his hands, that others in compariſon of him were little eſteemed. Now this authoritie and dignitie could not well agree to a Treaſurer: and therefore as I take it, the Prophet meant ſome thing elſe. For ſeeing this verbe ſignifies ſome times to entertaine, and to watne; it ſeemes the foreſaid word is taken for one that ſuſtaineth and vpholdeth, whom wee in our common ſpeech call an entertainer.

It is alſo certaine that this Shebna had intelligence with the enemie. In a word, he was a treacherous and ſubtile fellow: for he held ſecret amitie with the Egyptians and Aſſyrians, & complotted miſchieuouſly with them, to the end hee might make ſure on all ſides, for vpholding his owne authoritie. Others thinke it was a name of ſome of his predeceſſours, and that he was called Socnite, becauſe of the Citie wherein he was borne: for they ſay he was an Egyptian. I reiect not this opinion, but the other pleaſeth me better; the reaſon is, becauſe he plaid the Ambodexter in pleaſing both parts; thinking by this fetch to hold his owne, whatſoeuer ſhould fall out.

It may be cleerely diſcerned, that the particle Harzeh, is put for contempt: as if hee ſhould ſay; Goe to that ſame cunning and ſubtile fellow that workes vpon the vantage, holding with the hare, and running with the hounds, as they ſay. This word Socen, is taken in that ſenſe which I haue touched before in the firſt booke of the Kings, Chap. 1. 2. where there is ſpeech of a young virgin that ſhould bee brought to the King to cheriſh him. Notwithſtanding, if any had rather take it for a man that hurts and wrongs men, I miſlike it not, becauſe the verbe alſo ſignifies to impouerith.

You ſhall finde this verſe further expounded in the 17. verſe.

Verſ. 16. What haſt thou to doe here? and whom haſt thou here, that thou ſhouldeſt here hew thee out a ſepulchre, as he that heweth out a ſepulchre in an high place, or that graueth an habitation for himſelfe in a rocke?

THis Shebna cauſed a ſepulchre to be built in Ieruſalem, as if there he muſt of neceſſitie alwaies liue, and there bee buried alſo. The Prophet therefore askes to what purpoſe he had prepared himſelfe ſuch and ſumptuous a toombe in ſo high a place aboue others, as thoſe are wont to doe, which meane to eternize their remembrance in this world. Now hee ſeemes to taxe the ambition of a ſtranger, and one vnknowne, for deſiring to be thus honourably buried out of his owne country: and yet in the meane while, complotted with the enemie to deſtroy Iudea. What greater follie could be imagined, then to erect a ſepulchre in that land, whoſe ruine and deſtruction he practiſed? And therefore hee addes, Verſ. 17. Behold the Lord will carrie thee away with a great captiuitie, and will ſurely couer thee,

*Or, a notable ſhaking. *Or, thou ſhalt be wholly couered.

AS if he ſhould ſay; Thou ſhalt be driuen hence out of this place into a far Country, where thou ſhalt die ignominiouſly. It is better to tranſlate the Hebrew word Gaber, in the genitiue; namely, thou ſhalt be driuen hence with the caſting out of a man. Now becauſe this word alſo ſignifies a valiant and ſtrong man; ſome expound, Thou ſhalt bee driuen hence with a ſure and ſtrong ſhaking. Others take it in the vocative, O man; as if he ſhould ſay to Shebna by way of deriſion, O glorious fellow, that braggeſt ſo much of thy greatneſſe, it cannot be but thou taheſt thy ſelfe for ſome petty God! But the firſt reading fits beſt. And yet the expoſitours conſent not in this behalfe: for beſides mirie expoſition, they haue brought an other; to wit, That men ſhall be carried away further off, then the women. But I rather thinke he alludes to Shebnaes pride, who purpoſed to build ſo ſumptuous a ſepulchre, that after his death hee might be thought ſome excellent and worthy perſonage. As if hee ſhould ſay; Thou wilt bee taken for a noble man after thou art dead; but I will ennoble thee after another manner: I will carrie thee hence with a notable captiuitie into a farre Country, where thou ſhalt bee ſtrangely buried.

But firſt let vs note in this word, Intertainer, how much a double heart and a deceiuer, is diſpleaſing vnto God, who aboue all things recommends ſimplicitie and plaine dealing vnto vs. Shebna was called the Prouoſt, becauſe the glorie of his proſperous eſtate did dazle his eyes, in regard he was aduanced aboue others: which often befalles them, who being proud and puffed vp with their greatneſſe, feare no aduerſitie at all; as if they were exempt out of the common order of men. But the Lord ſhewes vs, that hee will be the Iudge of ſuch fellowes.

We muſt alſo conſider that Iſaiah could not publiſh this prophecy without incurring great ill will; eſpecially in regard he directs it to a mā ſo proud, & in ſo high place. Yet durſt he not refuſe this charge, neither made hee any difficultie to tell this man his owne, and to threaten him as God had bidden him.

As touching a ſepulchre, wee know that the care of burying the dead is not vtterly to be condemned: and albeit to be depriued of buriall, be a matter of no great consequence, as one saith; yet it is an honest thing to be interred, neither ought it to be despised. It was not the Prophets meaning then to reproue Shebna for his care to be honestly buried; but his ambition, in making himselfe so sumptuous a tombe; and herein he taxeth his desire and affectation of vaine glory.

There is yet one thing more to bee obserued in Shebna: for in as much as he was minded to deliuer the Citie into the Assyrians hands by treason, hee thought to raigne for euer: hoping by that meanes to receiue the gouernement of the Kingdome of the enemies, as a reward of his treacherie; if they became the stronger; and if it happened they had the repulse, he yet notwithstanding looked to continue in his dignitie and authority alwaies.

Shebnaes politike plot.

But this will be the better vnderstood by the words themselues; What hast thou to doe here? For he was a stranger borne. I deny not but he might well haue obtained fellowship with the people of God; yet in regard he was both a traitor and a stranger, he had no part nor portion in this region nor Citie, which God had specially assigned vnto his chosen. The Prophet askes him then; Whence art thou? Thou art linked with the people of God neither by blood nor affinitie; and yet thou wilt not onely raigne in this Country whilest thou liuest, but thou art also plotting how to stablish thy seat here, after thy death. Thou wilt deliuer vs into the hands of the Assyrians, and meanest to turne out the true Lords: so as thy selfe, which art but a stranger, mindest to enioy this land, in which thou hast not right to one pike of dust. Hence we may gather, that this ambition is exceedingly odious vnto God, when men are not content with the honours wherewith they were glutted whilest they liued; but they must build them perpetuall monuments of their name in the world when they are gone. For they couet to bee exalted after their death, and to liue againe as it were in the mouthes of men: and albeit things by death are abolished; yet are they besotted notwithstanding with this fooliih hope, that their memorie shall indure for euer. But the Lord auengeth himselfe of their pride and presumption, causing that which they erected for a witnesse and remembrance of their glorie, to turne to their dishonour and ignominie. For their very name is so accursed, that men can neither heare nor see any mention thereof, but it is with detestation. Nay, it sometimes falles out, that the Lord suffers them not to be buried in their tombes, but sends them to the gallowes, and to the rauens; of which wee haue many examples in the histories: neither want we some spectacles hereof euen in our owne times.

Shebna a stranger and a traitor to God and his Church.

Ambition a thing exceeding odious vnto God.

Hest.7.10.

But as often as I reade this place, a like example vnto this comes to my mind, and is the neerest in affinitie to it of all others; to wit, of one Thomas Moore, who had such an office as this Shebna had. For (as it is well knowne) he was Chancellor to the King of England: he was a sworne enemie of the Gospell, and persecuted the faithfull with fire and faggot. This man also meant to get himselfe a name, and to set vp a monument of his crueltie and impietie. To which end he caused the praises of his vertues, to be ingrauen in a faire sepulchre which was built in most stately manner. Then he sent his Epitaph, which himselfe had made, to Erasmus, to Basil, to get it printed; and withall, sent him a palfrey for a present. So couetous was he of glory, that hee meant to taste the renowne and the praises in his life time, which hee thought should haue lasted when hee was dead. Amongst other praises, this was the chiefest; that he had been a great persecutor of the Lutherans: that is to say, of Gods children. But what became of him? He is first of all accused of treason, then condemned, and lastly beheaded: and thus in stead of a tombe, hee had a scaffold. Would we desire a more manifest iudgement of God then these, by which hee punisheth the pride of the wicked; their insatiable desire of vaine glory; their brags that are so full of blasphemies? Truely wee ought no lesse to acknowledge and reuerence the admirable prouidence of God, in this cruell enemy of his people: then in Shebna, of whom the Prophet heere speaketh. This circumstance also that Shebna was a stranger, is to be obserued: for hence we may see, that all tyrants and enemies of Gods children, would with al their hearts roote out the right heires from off the earth, themselues being but strangers; that so they might raigne as Lords and Kings ouer the whole world. But the Lord in the end will chase them out, and depriue them of all possession: so as they shall not haue one foote of ground to be buried in. An infinite number of such examples are extant euerie where in histories. I grant it falles not out thus alwaies, but such examples as the Lord sets before vs, ought to draw our thoughts further off, to the end we may consider of his iudgements against tyrants and infidels; who when they thinke to exalt themselues to the highest estate of honour, are made famous by some notable kinde of death, that so their infamie may be admirable to posteritie. He then opposeth as it were vnder hand, that shame which was to follow, to that glory of this sumptuous tombe which Shebna caused to be made.

of England, and a sworn enemy of the Gospell.

How God is wont to meet with the proud enemies of his Church.

Thomas Moore Lord Chancellor

Vers. 18. Hee will surely roll and turne thee like a ball in a large Country: there shalt thou die, and there the chariots of thy glory shall be the shame of thy Lords house.

Isaiah continues the verie same speech still, in which he derided the pride of Shebna, who had been at such cost in building his sepulchre. For this verse depends vpon the first member of the verse before going, and as he said there, the Lord shall carue thee hence with a mightie shaking: so also he saith now, he will cast thee as a bowle in a plaine place. By this similitude ſimilitude his meaning is, that nothing ſhall hinder the Lord to carry Shebna away into a farre Country, how ſteadie ſoeuer he takes his ſtrength to be. And in as much as he had bin ſo carefull of his toombe, and had appointed it out; as if hee had been moſt certaine of the manner of his death, Iſaiah telles him, that hee ſhall not die in Ieruſalem, but in a ſtrange Countrie, whither hee ſhall bee driuen.

By the word chariot, hee comprehends all the glory and dignitie of Shebna: as if hee ſhould ſay; This ignominie ſhall bee famous among ſtrangers. Thus the Lord ſcornes the furious pride of thoſe which thinke onely of the world, iudgeing of their happineſſe according to the glory of things earthly and tranſitorie. Hee alſo calles it the ſhame of thy Kings houſe, either becauſe he had polluted that holy place, which was as the ſanctuarie of God; or elſe becauſe Ezechias had been vnaduiſed in promoting him ſo highly. And to the end the outward appearance of his dignitie might not obſcure this prophecie, Iſaiah expreſly noteth, that the place which Shebna occupied, augmenteth and makes his wickedneſſe the more deteſtable. And therefore Princes had neede to be carefull how they eſtabliſh officers, vnleſſe they meane to make themſelues and their houſes, matter of deriſion and ſcorne.

Princes muſt beware who they aduace.

Verſ. 19. And I will driue thee from thy [b]ſtation: and out of thy dwelling will he deſtroy thee.

[b] Or, eſtate.

HE pronounceth no new thing here, but concludes the former prophecie, albeit hee will mention Shebna againe in the laſt verſe: but now hee comprehends that in a briefe ſumme, which he had ſaid heretofore. Now Shebna thought nothing leſſe, then not to haue a ſure abode in Ieruſalem; euen as if it had been vnpoſſible for him to be driuen thence, whatſoeuer had happened: but the Lord telles him, that he will thruſt and driue him thence into a farre Country. And thus is the Lord wont to ouerthrow the thoughts of the wicked; who thinking to reſt vpon their policies and ſubtile wits, order the Commonwealth at their pleaſures. The change of the perſon, ſhewes that the Prophet ſpeakes ſometimes in the perſon of God, and another while in his owne.

And I will, &c.

Verſ. 20. And in that day will I call my ſeruant Eliakim, the ſonne of Hilkiah.

Eliakim.

IT is not certainely knowne in what time Eliakim was put into Shebnaes place: for in the 37. Chapter, verſe 2. we ſhall ſee that Eliakim was the ſteward of the Kings houſe, at that time when Shebna was Chancellor. Now it is hard to affirme certainly, whether anie change happened during this time. Yet it is moſt likely, as I haue touched heretofore, that Eliakim was depoſed from his eſtate, by the cunning dealing of this wicked Shebna, whoſe incklings were then diſcloſed and puniſhed when he made his triumphs: and being baniſhed Iudea, he fled to the Aſſyrians, and there receiued the reward of his treacherie. Which vſually befalles thoſe that are traiterous; who when they are vnable to performe that which they haue promiſed, become hatefull and odious to them whom they haue deceiued. For as they haue been raſh and bold in promiſing, ſo is it of neceſſitie that they bee found falſe and perfidious. The Iewes ſay, that in the end he was quartered for his treaſon: but this is not approued by any hiſtorie. But to let that hang in ſuſpence, it is certaine notwithſtanding, that he was baniſhed & expulſed into a forren Country, and there died ſhamefully; and not in Ieruſalem. Now it is very likely that after his baniſhment, Eliakim was placed in his roome.

I will call.] It is moſt certaine that all Princes and Magiſtrates are called by the Lord: yea, euen ſuch as are heathen and vnbeleeuing; for all power, as Saint Paul ſaith, is of God: Rom. 13. 1. But the Prophet ſpeakes here of a particular vocation, whereby the Lord manifeſts his goodneſſe towards his people, when he giues them ſuch gouernours; as this people might acknowledge that God himſelfe meant to bee ruler ouer them by their miniſterie: who alſo for their parts ought to be well aſſured, that the end wherefore God hath put them in that place, is to execute that office faithfully, which is committed vnto them. Shebna was called indeed for a time, but as he was Gods rod: becauſe he thought nothing leſſe then to ſerue God in that place. But it was farre otherwiſe with Eliakim: for he acknowledged himſelfe the ſeruant of God, and willingly obeyed his holy calling. So that, I will call him then, ſignifies as much as if hee ſhould haue ſaid; I will giue a ſigne to my ſeruant, whereby hee ſhall know that it is I who haue put him into this eſtate of honor. There is here then a particular relation betweene the Lord and the ſeruant; which at no hand belongs to the vnbeleeuers, becauſe they ſerue their owne imaginations and wicked luſts: but Eliakim acknowledged the Lord, and ſerued him truely. To be ſhort, this marke puts a difference betweene the true ſeruant of God, and the froward and hypocriticall, who climbes to honour by euill practiſes.

All Magiſtrates ordained of God.

Rulers ought to execute the charge which God hath committed vnto them with all faithfulneſſe.

Note this difference.

A particular relation betweene the Lord and the ſeruant.

Verſ. 21. And with thy garments will I clothe him, and with thy girdle will I ſtrengthen him: thy power alſo will I commit into his hand, and he ſhall be a father of the inhabitants of Ieruſalem, and of the houſe of Iudah.

HEe now more plainely expounds that which hee had ſet downe briefly in the former verſe; to wit, that Shebna ſhall be depoſed by Gods iuſt iudgement, to the end Eliakim may ſucceede him. Doubtleſſe God by his prouidence diſpoſeth of all the changes which happen in the world: for as Iob ſaith, he girdes the loynes of Kings with a girdle, and looſeth it againe when it pleaſeth him: Iob 12. 18. It was pleaſantly ſaid in old time of the Emperours of Rome; That it was the tragedie of Kings: for as players that repreſent ſome great perſonage vpon the ſtage, hauing ended their part, in ſtead of Kings become poore ſnakes, as they were before: ſo theſe being deiected from their high eſtate, are now and then led to ſhamefull deaths. And yet is it moſt certaine, that things were not then thus confuſed by hap hazard, neither yet by mens deuices onely, nor by the violence of men of warre; but by the counſell of God which ouerruleth all. The Prophet affirmes then, that men ſhal ſee a ſpecial note of Gods

1 iudgement in the baniſhment of this ſame
2 Shebna: and on the other ſide a right forme of gouernement in the reſtoring of Eliakim.

By the garments and girdle, are vnderſtood part of that attire which belong to Magiſtrates. The girdle was a kingly ornament: and no doubt but the chiefe gouernours ware it by a ſpeciall priuiledge of honour. But in Rome the Pretors vſed ſuch a kinde of ornament ordinarilie. Iob alſo ſaith (as wee alleadged before) that God looſeth off the girdle from Kings, when they are ſtripped out of their dignities. Now the Prophet foretold this, to the end euerie one might not onely behold the admirable counſell and prouidence of God in this example; but to the end they might alſo know, that this wretched fellow, who was thus aduanced by vnlawfull meanes, was iuſtly depoſed.

Hoſe. 1 3. 11 And he ſhall be a father.] No doubt but heathen Magiſtrates are eſtabliſhed by God; but ſo, as it is in his wrath: that is to ſay, when we are vnworthy he himſelfe ſhould beare rule
1 ouer vs. For hee giues the raines to Tyrants and Pagans; thereby auenging himſelfe vpon our vnthankfulneſſe: as if he reiected vs, and regarded not how nor by whom wee are
2 gouerned. Contrariwiſe when as good Magiſtrates beare rule, wee therein ſee God comming neere vnto vs, commanding vs that by them which himſelfe hath ordained. This is that which the Prophet meant now to ſay; to wit, that Eliakim will ſhew himſelfe a father, becauſe he ſhall be indued with the Spirit of God. In the meane while he admoniſheth all the faithfull, that it was their duties to ſigh earneſtly after the aduancement of Eliakim, in regard his preferment ſhould tend to the common good of the Church. By the name of father, he teacheth what is the dutie of a good Magiſtrate: and the verie profane authors haue affirmed as much; to wit, that a good King is in ſtead of a father. And when they would flatter tyrants which oppreſſed the Commonwealth, nature it ſelfe put this title of honour into their mouthes, to call them fathers of the Country. So likewiſe when the Philoſophers ſay that a familie is an image of a kingdome, they meane that a King ought to be a father to his ſubiects. The ancient titles alſo which they gaue kings wit-

Good Magiſtrates ought to be fathers of the Country.

neſſeth the ſame: as for example, Abimelec: that is to ſay, My father the King: and ſuch other like. Whereby is ſhewed, that the kingly power cannot bee ſeparated from the affection of a father. Let them then which would be eſteemed true and lawfull Princes, and would bee taken for Gods ſeruants, let them, I ſay, ſhew themſelues fathers of the people. Gen. 20. 2.

Verſ. 22. And the key of the houſe of Dauid will I lay vpon his ſhoulder: ſo hee ſhall open, and no man ſhall ſhut, and hee ſhall ſhut, and no man ſhall open.

THis is a figuratiue kinde of ſpeech; and therefore we ſhall not neede to ſeeke out an allegoricall ſenſe of it, as many do: for this phraſe is taken from the vſuall dealings of men. The keyes of the houſe are giuen to ſuch as are appointed the diſtributers of neceſſarie things; ſo as they open and ſhut at their pleaſure. The houſe of Dauid, ſignifies the kingly houſe: and this was a common ſpeech among the people, becauſe a promiſe was made to Dauid, that his kingdome ſhould laſt for euer: this is the reaſon why it was vſually called the houſe of Dauid. The word key is put in the ſingular number for many keyes. Now albeit they were wont to beare the keyes in their hands; yet it is ſaid here, that they were laid vpon his ſhoulder; becauſe he was to vndergoe an heauie burthen. And yet he meanes nothing elſe, but that the tuition and gouernement of the houſe is committed into Eliakims hands, to order it as he thinkes beſt. Wee alſo know, that to giue the keyes, ſignifies as much as to put one into poſſeſſion. Some referre this vnto Chriſt, but with what reaſon I ſee not: for the Prophet here compares two men together; namely, Shebna and Eliakim. Shebna was baniſhed, and Eliakim was placed in his roome: wherein doth this concerne Ieſus Chriſt? For Eliakim was no figure of him; neither doth the Prophet deſcribe ſome hidden myſterie here, but borrowes a ſimilitude from the dealings of men; as if one ſhould giue the keyes to ſome ſteward placed ouer his houſe, (as hath beene ſaid.) There is alſo the ſame reaſon to be giuen of it, where Chriſt calles the office of teaching, The keyes of the Kingdome of heauen: thoſe therefore that wearie themſelues to finde out ſome ſecret and hidden myſterie in this place, which is ſo plaine and manifeſt, ſhew themſelues but too ſottiſh and ridiculous, ſeeing there is no neede at all of any ſuch deuices. Why ſo? Becauſe the Miniſters open heauen by the preaching of the word, and bring men to Chriſt, who is the onely way. He takes the keyes in this place therefore, for the gouernment of the Kings houſe, in regard the chiefe truſt of it was committed to Eliakim in his time. 2. Sam. 7. 12. Pſal. 132. 11. Mat. 16. 19

Verſ. 23. And I will faſten him as a naile in a ſure place, and he ſhall bee for for the throne of glorie to his fathers houſe.

WEe muſt ſupply a particle of ſimilitude here, and therefore I haue put this word As, in the text. By faithfull, he means a ſure and firme place; for this word is deriued of the word Trueth, which is alwaies accompanied with ſtedfaſtneſſe and aſſurance. And for that cauſe the Hebrewes take Truth for a thing ſure and certaine. The Prophet vſeth an elegant ſimilitude, out of which the faithfull Magiſtrates (who are but a few) ought to gather a ſingular conſolation. For thus they may conclude with themſelues, that they are not onely raiſed by the Lord to this degree of honour, but that they are confirmed and faſtened in it, as if they were fixed thereunto by his immediate hand. And to ſay the trueth, looke where the feare of God beares ſway, there muſt needes be ſtedfaſtneſſe. For the power and thrones of Kings, is eſtabliſhed by iuſtice; as Salomon ſaith, Pro. 16.16. Neither doth it ſerue to comfort Princes onely, to the end they may bee able to paſſe thorow all dangers with a reſolute mind: but alſo that they may execute their office conſtantly, and without diſtraction, ſo as they neede not quaile nor faint for anie cauſe, nor to feare any danger.

But alas how few are there that taſte this doctrine truely? All are almoſt like Ieroboam, thinking that religion ought to ſtoope to them, which they like and allow of no further then they ſee it to be for their benefit: nay they ſticke not at all to diſguiſe and alter it at their pleaſure: as for God and his true religion, they ſet the care thereof in the laſt place. What wonder is it then that they are alwaies in feare of themſelues in their affaires, being neuer at peace and quiet: for they ſeldome or neuer ſet any time apart to thinke vpon him, from whom proceedes all ſtrength and power. Thence come treaſons, thence ariſe cruelties, auarice, violence, and all manner of fraudes and oppreſſions, wherein Princes now ouerflowe more impudently then anie other.

The cauſe of treaſons.

Yet are there ſome, in whom wee may perceiue that which is ſaid heere touching Eliakim: the Lord keepes, maintaines, and bleſſeth the duties of equitie and iuſtice, wherewith he hath adorned them. For if he ſuffer the very tyrants to raigne for a time, in regard they obſerue ſome forme of gouernement: how much more will he bleſſe Princes, when with a good and vpright heart they maintaine trueth and equitie, and promote Gods true worſhip and ſeruice? He that is the perpetuall maintainer of iuſtice, will hee not defend and eſtabliſh ſuch a Prince more and more?

If God ſeem to bleſſe tyrants in ſuffering them to floriſh for a time, much more ſuch as are nurſing fathers to his Church.

Verſ. 24. And they ſhall hang vpon him all the glorie of his fathers houſe, euen of the nephewes and poſteritie; of ſmall veſſels, from the veſſels of the cups, euen to all the inſtruments of muſicke.

THis is as much as if hee ſaid, that Eliakim ſhall diſcharge his dutie in good ſort, ſo as he ſhall not deale negligently in it. Whence we gather, that God aduanceth not Princes vnto honour, to the end they ſhould bee idle, and giue the reines to their luſtes and affections. For dominion and authoritie is a burden of great waight and labour, if ſo be men performe their duties as they ought to doe: farre from the practiſe of theſe dumbe idolles, who thinke God hath lifted them vp into the ſeate of honour, to no other end but to fare deliciouſly, and to wallow themſelues at their eaſe in all manner of pleaſures. But if a Prince will execute his office aright, hee muſt prepare himſelfe to vndergo much turmoile. Neither muſt we thinke that this ſimilitude of the naile, ſhould not ſute well in regard of gouernment: for hereby is ſignified, a burthen full of buſineſſes and troubles. I alſo know well enough, that ſimilitudes agree not alwaies in euery thing, but in the ſpeciall drift whereat they aime.

Princes are not aduanced to liue idly.

Dominion an heauie burden if men performe their duties.

Gouernment a burden full of buſineſſe.

Now in that hee ſpeakes of the houſe of his father; doubtleſſe Eliakim was of the royall blood. And therefore by ſucceſſours, I not onely vnderſtand his next kinſfolkes; but the whole familie of Dauid. He then ſhall haue the charge of all that ſhall bee in the Kings houſe. When he addes the childrens childrens, he therewithall teacheth, that this gouernement ſhall be of long continuance; ſo as it ſhall not laſt one mans life onely, but it ſhall be extended to thoſe that ſhall come a long time after. For good Princes not onely profit the Church and Commonwealth for their owne time, but thoſe alſo which come after them, to whom they leaue ſuch wholeſome lawes, ordinances, ſtatutes, and markes of good and iuſt gouernment; that the ſucceſſors dare not (albeit they be wicked) breake out into all licentiouſneſſe at the firſt; yea they are compelled in deſpight of them, to retaine ſomething that is good for modeſties ſake. This hee ſhewes ſhall come to paſſe in Eliakim, whoſe gouernment ſhall be ſo vpright, that his very ſucceſſors ſhall feele ſome fruit of it.

Princes ſhould not onely care for the welfare of the Church for their owne times, but for the poſteritie after them.

From the ſmaleſt veſſels.] Vnder a figure he ſhewes that iuſtice ſhall be adminiſtred with equitie, and the right aduanced: and it is as much as if he had ſaid, that Eliakim ſhall not onely deale well with the great ones; but that he ſhall haue reſpect to the meaneſt alſo. But becauſe this is very rare in a Prince, he is much more worthy of praiſe, then if he ſhould onely fauour the rich and mightie. For the rich haue meanes enough to keepe themſelues frō hurt, but the weakeſt are put to the walles, as they ſay; and the poore are a pray and ſpoile to others: and who is it almoſt that will defend the innocencie of their cauſe? By veſſels, the Hebrewes vnderſtand all manner of inſtruments: and this ſignification extends very far. When he mentiōs inſtruments of muſicke*, he explaines that which he had ſaid in a word: for this ſerues to the expoſition of the word small or little: as if hee should say, There is nothing so little or contemptible, which he will not haue care of.

Vers. 25. And in that day, saith the Lord of hostes, shall the nayle that is fastened in the sure place depart, and shall be broken and fall: and the burden that was vpon it shall be cut off; for the Lord hath spoken it.

THis might seeme to contradict that which hath been said heretofore: but he speakes no longer now of Eliakim, but returnes againe to Shebna, who should be put out of his office; as Isaiah had foretold. Otherwise what way or meanes were there left for Eliakim to come to this honour, vnlesse Shebna were put out? But he had laid his plot in such exquisite manner, that he neuer imagined any man whatsoeuer should bee able to supplant him. Thus when hee tooke himselfe to bee in best case, and furnished with manie meanes, so as it seemed he was furthest out of danger; euen then must hee be turned out of all, and Eliakim must succeed him. In that he calles it a faithfull or sure place, it must bee vnderstood as in regard of men; who thinke that things fortified on euerie side, must needes continue alwaies: but God with his onely blast ouerthrowes all these munitions. Hee speakes then by way of granting, when hee saith, that this was a sure and stable place. Whence we are to gather, how fondly such glorie and trust in their greatnesse, who are aduanced into high places of honour, seeing they may be stripped out of all, and abased in the twinckling of an eye.

It followeth, And the burden.] When the wicked begin once to fall, then those who were vpheld by their authoritie, must needes fall together with them. For is it not good reason that such as were brethren in euill with them, and had furthered this wretch as farre as they could, that they should also partake with him in his punishment? Verie hard it is for them then, who shrowd themselues vnder the protection of the wicked, and imploying all their meanes for their seruice; that such should not also therewithall be guiltie of their wicked courses: and be it they should be guiltlesse, (which yet falles out very seldome, or rather indeedd neuer) yet notwithstanding they are iustly punished, because they haue placed their hopes in the wicked, as in a sure fortresse, and haue wholly relied vpon their command and authoritie.

It is not safe to serue such masters as are not Gods seruants.

THE XXIII. CHAPTER.

Vers. 1. The burden of Tyre. Howle ye shippes of Tarshish: for it is destroyed, so that there is none house: none shall come from the land of Chittim: it is reuealed vnto them.

TYre was a verie rich Citie, and greatly renowned in regard of the traffique which all nations had with it, as also in regard of the townes of warre and Cities habitable which it built: as Carthage, which imitated the Roman Empire; Vtique, Leptis, Gades, and other Cities, who all sent their presents to Tyre; hereby protesting, that they acknowledged this to be the mother Citie. But Isaiah threatens it with destruction, because it wronged the people of God; as we may gather out of Ezechiel, 26. 2. For we are chiefly to consider the cause of this destruction, in regard it is the Prophets meaning to reueale Gods fatherly loue to his elect and chosen people, who meant to set himselfe against all their enemies. Some thinke that this should be referred to the siege of Alexander, who tooke Tyre with great difficultie. But this supposition is too weake, because Isaiah mentions Chittim, vnder which name the Hebrewes not onely comprehend the Macedonians, but other nations also, as the Greekes, and all those which are beyond the seas. Now King Nebuchadnezzer vsed the helpe not onely of the souldiers of his owne Country in this siege, but other strangers also which he had called from among the Greekes and other places. Besides, the Greekes are spoken of for another respect, as we shall see by and by after; namely, because in time to come, they should not bring their ships any more to Tyre, to trade there. Yet the end of this Chapter giues me occasion to be of a contrary opinion, because Isaiah speakes there of the restauration of Tyre, which was neuer repaired after Alexander the Great tooke it by force. Moreouer, when I conferre Ezechiels words with these, me thinkes they make but one prophecie. He speakes not then of Alexander, but of Nebuchadnezzer; and so doubtlesse it is to be expounded. Adde hereunto, that in the time of Ezechiel and Isaiah, this Citie was vnder the command of a king: but when Alexander took it, the histories say, it was brought into the forme of a Commonwealth. And if we shall consider the end of the prophecie, wee shall be sufficiently confirmed in this opinion: for his purpose was to comfort the Iewes, by threatning an inuitable punishment to the Tyrians, of whom they had been afflicted. For it had been a thing verie vnreasonable, for the Lord to haue chastised other nations, and that these in the meane while which had been no lesse enemies, should haue escaped scotfree, or should haue bin smitten fiue hundred yeeres after. All these coniectures then lead vs to expound this place of Nebuchadnezzer.

The cause of this prophecie.

Alexander.

Howle.]

Howle.] He inricheth the declaration of the ruine of this Citie with diuers figures: and it is his cuſtome ſo to ſpeake, that he might get the more authoritie to his prophecie. For to deliuer ſuch a thing in a plaine ſpeech, would haue been but cold; neither would it haue been ſufficiently effectuall to comfort the hearts of thoſe, who a long time had been weake and faint: and therefore he ſets it forth before them, as it were in freſh and liuely colours. And firſt he ſhewes that the deſtruction ſhall be very great, in regard that euen the regions farre off ſhal feele it: and he commands the ſhips to howle, becauſe they ſhall haue no imployment when Tyre ſhall be deſtroyed. Now he eſpecially names the ſhips of the Cilicians, becauſe they being neighbours, vſed to traffique much and often with the Tyrians: and the Hebrewes call Cilicia, Tarſhiſh. Neither could it poſſibly be, but the deſtruction of Tyre, muſt bring great detriment to this Country; not onely in that the vſuall traffiques ceaſed for a time, but alſo in regard that the Merchants goods, together with their bookes of accounts, were carried away, and ſcattered here and there; as it vſually falles out when the houſes of rich men are rifled.

Where I haue tranſlated, they ſhall come no more; others expound it, There ſhall bee no houſe remaining, by which you may enter: but I take it I haue faithfully rendred the Prophets meaning: not as if he thought that all paſſage ſhould be taken from the Cilicians and Greekes; but he meant rather to ſay, that they ſhall goe no more to Tyre, as they were wont in times paſt, becauſe the mart there ſhould ceaſe. Thoſe who thinke the Prophet ſpeakes of the diſcomfiture made by Alexander, diuide the clauſe of the verſe, From the land Cittim, and conioyne it thus, This was reuealed vnto them from the land of Chittim. But I rather render it thus; They ſhall come no more from the land of Chittim: that is to ſay, that the Greekes might neither goe nor come, as they were wont. For by Chittim, the Hebrewes vnderſtand the Greekes and Eaſterne people: and it is as if hee ſhould haue ſaid; The traffique of the Greekes ſhall ceaſe, ſo as their ſhips ſhall no more arriue there. And vnder it, he alſo comprehends the Egyptians, Cilicians, Italians, and other nations.

When he ſaith; This was reuealed vnto them: wee may fitly vnderſtand it as well of the 1 Greekes, as of the Tyrians. If it be referred to the Greekes, the ſenſe will bee, that as ſoone as newes ſhall come of the deſtruction of Tyre, they ſhall then ſaile no more thither as they were wont: for they ſhall flee this port with as much feare as if it were a rocke. And this ſenſe I doe more willingly receiue: notwithſtanding I reiect not the o-
2 ther, to wit, that the Prophet confirmes his prophecie: as when wee ordinarily ſpeake of a thing that ſhall ſurely come to paſſe, wee ſay; Looke to it, for this appertaines to thee.

Verſ. 2. Be ſtill, yee that dwell in the Iles: the Merchants of Zidon, and ſuch as paſſe ouer the ſea, haue repleniſhed thee.

HEe ſets forth the ruine of Tyre more at large. Now there is here a change touching the number, in the word Iles; for albeit he ſpeakes in the ſingular number, yet he vnderſtands thereby ỹ Iles of the Mediterraneũ ſea, & the people ỹ dwell beyond the ſea; but chiefly the borderers which ſailed often to Tyre, and vſually traded there. He commands them to hold their peace; and to be ſtill, becauſe they ſhall no more trauaile thither. His meaning is, that they ſhould be ſtill, as men confounded; in regard of the great calamity which ſhould befall thẽ, in ſuch wiſe, as they ſhould not dare to vtter one word. For it could not bee but thoſe nations which traded there, muſt loſe much, when a Citie ſo repleniſhed with marchandiſe was ſacked. As for example; if Venice or Antwerp ſhould bee now deſtroyed, would it not redound to the great of many nations?

The Prophet makes ſpeciall mention of the Sidonians; not onely becauſe they were neighbours, but becauſe theſe two cities had both one beginning. Zidon was greatly renowned; but yet it was much leſſe in quantitie then Tyre. It ſtoode vpon the edge of the ſea, and was two hundred *ſtades in diſtance from it. Now they ſeemed ſo neere one to an other, and ſo linked together in merchandiſe, that the Poets often take the one for the other. Wee neede not doubt then but the Zidonians gained much more then others, in ſelling and exchanging their commodities: firſt in regard they were neighbours: and ſecondly, becauſe of their continuall trading. For the wealth of the Tyrians ſo flowed in vpon them, that they were caried vpon their wings, after the common prouerbe. Thence is it therefore that their loſſe muſt be much greater then any others, in this deſtruction of Tyre. And that is the cauſe why the Prophet bids Zidon to bee aſhamed in the fourth verſe. He addes, which repleniſhed thee: ſpeaking either of all in generall, or becauſe it was filled with the glut and multitude of men, in regard that ſtrangers came thither from diuers Countries farre remote from them, or elſe becauſe thoſe which trauailed for gaine, did therewithall inrich the Citie.

The cauſe why the Prophet mentions the Sidonians.

*A Stade containes the meaſure of fixe ſcore and fiue paces, which was the length of a race, when they ranne for a price or wages.

Verſ. 3. The ſeede of Nilus growing by the abundance of waters, and the harueſt of the riuer was her reuenues: and ſhe was a mart of the nations.

THe Prophets meaning is, that the riches of Tyre ſhall not deliuer it from deſtruction. He therefore ſets forth the rich eſtate thereof ſo highly, to the end euery one might know, firſt Gods iudgement; and ſecondly, 1 that this was no ſmall plague that was light 2 vpon her. And in the third place, the worke 3 of God did appeare to be ſo much the more manifeſt, in regard that her deſtruction came ſuddenly, when ſhe thought on no ſuch matter. Moreouer, he deſcribes the wealthineſſe of Tyre elegantly: for becauſe Nilus furniſhed her with corne and other neceſſary proviſions, and that great quantitie of wheat was ſent thither out of Egypt; the Prophet ſaith, ſhee had her fieldes as it were, and her ſeede growing in the ſtreame of Nilus. The Venetians vſe to ſay; Their reuenue is in the ſea; becauſe nothing growes vpon the land: but they get all prouiſion of victuals by their trade of merchandiſe. And the Prophet ſaith the ſame of the Tyrians: for it was almoſt vnpoſſible they ſhould want food, becauſe Nilus furniſhed them therewith in great abundance. But he takes this prop away from them as a vaine hope; for they ſhall deſtitute them vtterly. Iſaiah therefore, as hath been ſaide, deſcribes theſe things, that all might the better perceiue the vengeance and wrath of God fallen vpon her.

A prouerbe of the Venetians.

Verſ. 4. Bee aſhamed thou Zidon: for the ſea hath ſpoken, euen the ſtrength of the ſea, ſaying; I haue not trauailed nor brought forth children, neither nouriſhed young men, nor brought vp virgins.

THis verſe is added by way of amplification. We haue told you the cauſe why he ſpake of Zidon thus in particular before. Now calles Tyre, Sea, by way of excellencie, as if ſhe alone raigned in the middeſt it. That which is by and by added, I haue not conceiued, is ſpoken in the perſon of Tyre: and thus he pleaſantly derides Tyre, who bragged of her Townes: for Tyre begat or built other Cities very renowned. She was in olde time much ſpoken of (ſaith Plinie) for the Cities which ſhe built; to wit, Leptis, Vtique, and this Carthage, the imitatrix of the Roman Empire; meaning to rule ouer all the world; and Gades alſo, which was built vpon the ſea. Now all her wealth conſiſted in purple and ſcarlet. The Prophet then brings in the Citie of Tyre, lamenting her ancient glorie and excellencie: Alas, I am now no longer a mother; and what hath it profited me that I haue nouriſhed ſo many children, and brought forth ſo many Cities? For Carthage was wont to ſend preſents to Tyre euerie yeere, by way of homage: and therein acknowledged her for her mother. Thus it ſeemes that Tyrus ſurmounted all other Cities in dignitie, ſeeing Carthage, which was the ſecond after the Roman Empire, did in ſome ſort ſubmit it ſelfe vnto her. But the Lord tooke all theſe ornaments from her in a moment, in ſuch wiſe, that ſhe laments, as if ſhee had neuer had children.

See verſ. 2.

Plin. lib. 5. cap. 19.

Carthage.

Verſ. 5. When the fame comes to the Egyptians, they ſhall be ſorie concerning the rumor of Tyrus.

BY this verſe hee ſignifies, that this fall of Tyrus ſhall touch the Egyptians alſo: and thus the expoſition which wee follow, is confirmed; to wit, that theſe things ought to bee referred to the firſt ſacking of it. For thoſe of Tyre were in league with the Egyptians, and both of them had their King: not as in the time of Alexander, at what time Tyre was a free Citie, and liued vnder her owne lawes. Now hee could no way better expreſſe the ſocietie that was betweene them of Tyre and the Egyptians: and the reaſon why he ſhewes that the Egyptians ſhall haue their part in this deſtruction is, becauſe they had ſolicited the Iewes to rebell, and had turned them away from truſting in God. Thoſe were open enemies: theſe vnder pretence of friendſhip, entertained poiſonfull hatreds. Both of them are iuſtly puniſhed.

God will puniſh as well the ſecret as the open enemies of his Church.

Verſ. 6. Goe yee ouer to Tarſhiſh: howle ye that dwell in the Iles.

HE ſpeakes not onely to the Tyrians, but alſo to the ſtrangers who were in league with them, in regard of their commerce: now hee commands that they get them to ſome other place, and to ſeeke out other hauens. And he names Cilicia, which was oppoſite to Tyre: as if hee ſhould ſay, This port which hath been ſo much frequented, ſhall hereafter be ſo forſaken, that the ſhips ſhall ſaile into an other quarter, quite an other way. For when Merchants ſee a port broken, or a mart aboliſhed, they are wont to ſeeke out others. He puts one Ile for many, as we haue expounded before; becauſe the change of the number is a thing common among the Hebrewes: and againſt theſe Iles he threatens, that they ſhall howle; becauſe their maintenance depended vpon this trade of merchandiſe. Beſides, their bookes of reckonings and accounts were mingled here and there.

Verſ. 7. Is not this that your glorious Citie? her antiquitie is of ancient daies: her owne feete ſhall leade her a far off to be a ſoiourner.

THe Prophet aduanceth his ſtile, and inſults yet further againſt Tyre. Hee diſdaines her pride, in that ſhee gloried in the antiquitie of her name: he is bold thé we ſee to confirme his ſpeech, which to any mans reaſon might ſeeme incredible. For who doubts but that this prophecie was ſcorned: firſt, the power and ſtrength of Tyre was inuincible, and her wealth as a wall of braſſe. Well, Iſaiah is ſo much the more bold and confident, and denounceth a certaine deſtruction to befall her: and albeit ſhee was the moſt ancient amongſt other Cities, and in regard thereof, euerie one applauded her: yet all this ſhould not preuent her certaine ruine and downefall.

No ſtrength able to match the power of the Almightie.

Now profane hiſtories doe fetch the originall ginall of Tyre, from time almoſt out of mind, and that ſo darkely and obſcurely indeede, that a man can ſcarcely vnderſtand their meaning: yet they ſay, that the Phenicians built it: ſo as they which glorie of antiquitie, may call themſelues children of the earth. But the Prophet to this antiquitie oppoſeth baniſhment; ſhewing that when the Lord is purpoſed to correct this people, they muſt needs ſtoope. For to goe whither the feete leades one, ſignifies nothing elſe but to wander and runne hither and thither. Although his meaning alſo is, that they ſhall wander thus deſtitute of their riches alſo; and in their exile, ſhall be in want of all things: ſo as they ſhall not haue ſo much as an horſe or wagon to carrie themſelues, or any thing of theirs vpon. Now when pouertie is ioyned with baniſhment, it is a very wofull condition: for a man will eaſilie beare his baniſhment, if hee haue wherewith to liue, and maintaine his eſtate: but to dwell in a ſtrange Countrie as vnknowne, with pouertie, is a miſerie of miſeries. And that hee may heape vp her afflictions to the full, hee addes, that ſhee muſt goe into a farre Countrie: now the further one is exiled, the harder the baniſhment is.

Phenicians.

Pouerty ioyned with baniſhment, muſt needes be dolorous.

Queſt.

Verſ. 8. Who hath decreed this againſt Tyrus, (that crownes men) *whoſe Merchants are Princes, whoſe Chapmen are the noble of the world?

*Or, crowning.

*Or, whoſe factors.

THe Prophet adornes this Citie with this title, who inriched many; as we may eaſilie gather from the drift of the text. For when he calles her Merchants Kings, he ſufficiently ſhewes, that by the word crowning, vnder a ſimilitude he meanes the magnificence of Kings. And thus their opinon is refuted, who refer this prophecie to other Cities. The ſumme is, that Tyrus inriched her Citizens, as if ſhe created euerie one of them Kings and Princes. Some thinke this verſe is to be added thus; as if the Prophet ſhould repreſent the perſon of a man aſtoniſhed with the deſtruction of Tyre, to make others afraid: as if he ſhould ſay; Is it poſſible that Tyre ſhould be ſo ſoone brought low, where there is ſuch abundance of riches, ſuch might, meanes, munitions; yea where there is ſo great glorie and maieſtie? And that he ſhould then at an inſtant pauſe a while, as men are wont to doe in things vnlooked for. But it is better to ioyne the verſe following to this, which takes away all difficultie; ſeeing the Prophet himſelfe forthwith anſwers this queſtion, by which he meant to ſtirre vp his auditors to the better attention. For he might plainely haue ſaid; Theſe things are done by the counſell of the Lord: but in regard wee are drowſie, ſecure, and ſenſeleſſe hearts would eaſilie haue ouerſlipped this without obſeruation: therefore hee awakens their ſpirits by this interrogation; to the end all might know that hee ſpeakes of no common thing, that therewithall they might take the matter the more to heart. And indeed, by how much the more the iudgements of God are aboue the reach of common ſenſe, ſo much the more are they worthy to be admired.

He ſpake to Egypt before, Chap. 19. in the ſame termes, ſhewing that her deſtruction ſhould not be ſorted with common and ordinarie changes. Now becauſe it was incredible that Tyre could bee ruinated by men; therefore the Prophet well concludes, that God himſelfe ſhall bee the author of it. And therefore hee calles it the mother and nurſe of Kings; that he might cauſe Gods iudgement to ſhine ſo much the more cleerely: for had it beene a Citie vnrenowned, fewer words would haue ſufficed touching the deſtruction of it: but being adorned with ſo high titles, who could imagine that this could otherwiſe come to paſſe, but by the counſell and decree of God? Hee calles the Merchants Princes: as at this day the Merchants of Venice thinke themſelues to ſurmount Princes in dignitie, Kings onely excepted: yea, and the factors alſo take themſelues for no leſſe then good Gentlemen. I haue heard alſo that there are factors at Antwerpe, who feare not to ſpend more then the richeſt Gentlemens ſubſtance can beare. Now we are wont to aske queſtions, when nothing can be anſwered, but what we pleaſe: which alſo is a ſigne of courage and boldneſſe.

See verſ. 9.

Verſ. 9. *The Lord of hoſtes hath decreed this, to ſtaine the pride of all glory, and to bring to contempt, all them that be glorious in the earth.

*Or, profane

The pride.] Or, the haughtineſſe: for we may reade it both waies, becauſe haughtineſſe begets pride; for it is very rare to finde humilitie of ſpirit in a haughtie minde. Notwithſtanding it is better to reade it pride, which is enough of it ſelfe to prouoke God to take vengeance, when men vnder pretence of their excellencie, aduance themſelues aboue meaſure. To profane, and diſhonour, are taken for one and the ſame thing: becauſe thoſe who are exalted to honour, ſeeme to bee as men conſecrate and ſet apart, conceiting I wot not what greatneſſe of themſelues; as if they were now quite exempt out of the common ranke of men. But God no ſooner ſtrips ſuch of their dignity, and brings them down, but hee forthwith makes them vile and contemptible. Let vs therefore learne from this place, ſo to conſider of Gods prouidence, that we giue that praiſe to his infinite power, which belongs vnto it for his ſo iuſt a gouernement. So then, albeit the iuſtice whereby it pleaſeth God to moderate his actions alwaies appeares not vnto vs; yet ought wee not therefore to ſeparate his power from his iuſtice. In the meane while, for as much as the Scriptures plainely ſhew, and often ſet before vs the end why God doth this or that; we ought to bee wiſe in obſeruing the cauſes of his works.

A rare thing to finde an humble heart in an haughtie minde.

Note.

Now this inuention of Gods abſolute power, which the Schoolemen haue forged, is a moſt execrable blaſphemie: for it is all one as if

if they should say, that God were a Tyrant, doing and appointing to bee done what himselfe liketh; and not that which is according to right and equitie. Their schooles are full of such blasphemies, and therein they imitate the Pagans, who say, that God sports himselfe in turning things vpside downe here below. But in the schoole of Christ wee are taught, that Gods iustice shines in all his workes, of what kind soeuer they be; that so all mouthes may be stopped, and glory may be giuen to him alone. The Prophet shewes then that the causes of such an horrible desolation shall be most iust; to the end wee should not thinke that God doth any thing without reason: for those of Tyre were proud, haughtie, couetous, vncleane in life, and dissolute. Riches and abundance of all things, vsually brings in these vices with them: and the Cities which stand vpō the trade of merchandise, are easily stained herewith. Therefore he teacheth, that God was so prouoked by these sinnes; that all others might learne by this example to look about them betimes, and not to abuse the blessiings of God in excesse and riot. And this is the fruit indeede which we are to gather of this; that so we may not imagine the Prophet sets a naked and bare historie here before vs. But will one say, Doth God hate the greatnes of Princes and Lords? Why he himselfe aduanceth them to that dignitie: by him great Lords and Nobles beare rule; and it is he that establisheth all the orders of Magistrates and superiours: how then can it be said he should hate them? I answere, that the dignitie whereunto Princes and great men are aduanced, is not hated of God, but accidentally, as they say; to wit, because being thus aduanced, they despise others, & thinke themselues to be no longer men, but some petty gods as it were. And thus pride alwaies for the most part, accompanies greatnesse; and that is it which God detests: must hee not then confound and ouerthrow that, whereof he professeth himselfe to be an vtter enemy?

Blasphemies rise among the schoolemen.

What sinnes vsually ouerflow in cities, which are maintained by the trade of merchandising.

Vers. 10. Passe thorowe thy land like a flood to the daughter of Tarshish: there is no more *strength.

*Or, girdle.

Some translate the word Mezach, Girdle; others, Strength. Those which turne it, Girdle, say; that Tyre shall be so spoiled, that there shall not be left so much as a girdle: and thus hee should allude to the great heape of merchandise: for the baseste of them sold of these girdles. But I thinke rather the Prophet had respect to the situation of the citie, which was fenced on all sides, and inuironed with ditches, ramparts, walles, & with the sea also.

Vers. 11. He stretched out his hand vpon the sea: hee shooke the Kingdomes: the Lord hath giuen a commandement concerning the place of merchandise, to destroy the power thereof.

Some thinke this prophecie of Isaiah touching the destruction of Tyre, should now be confirmed by examples, to wit, that the Lord hath shewed so many testimonies of his power in ouerthrowing great kingdomes, that it is no wonder if he now vtterlie roote out this Citie of Tyre, how florishing or rich soeuer it be. And this maner of teaching is often found in the Scriptures, because men acknowledge not the power of God, vnlesse it appeares by manifest examples and by the effects. Thus they thinke then that the Prophet heere calles to minde the deliuerance out of Egypt, when the Lord diuided the sea, and afterward hauing driuen out seuen Kings, he caused his people to enter into the land of Canaan. But viewing the Prophets words with mature iudgement, I had rather expound them as an appendance of that which went before; and that because hee speakes of Tyre heere (a coast towne) whose riches occupied all the sea. Exod. 14. 21.

Hee addes the kingdomes, in regard that it could not perish alone, but therewithall must needs pull ruin vpon many kingdomes besides. And thus this change was as it were the change of the whole world, as it appeeres by histories. Last of all, the Prophet concludes that it is God himselfe who hath giuen commandement touching the marring of these markets, as they say. The word Cheraam hath caused the expositors to thinke that the Prophet speakes heere of the Canaanites, as if he alledged the example of Gods vengeance against them. But this their supposition is too weake; for this word is often taken appellatiuely, as was the word Factors in the eight verse. For the riches of Tyre consisting in traffique and merchandise, Isaiah calles it by the name which it chiefly deserued. Now by the verb to decree, he sets out the prouidence of God, to the end the Iewes might know that whatsoeuer seemes of some continuance in this world, yet stands or falles at Gods pleasure, so as he needs no great engins of warre to ouerthrow any strong place, for the least signe he makes with his finger will suffice.

Vers. 12. And he said, Thou shalt no more reioyce (when thou art oppressed, o virgin daughter of Zidon: rise vp, goe ouer to Chittim: yet there thou shalt haue no rest.

*Or, he shall come no more at thee to make thee glad.

All these things tend to one and the same end: for if the Prophet had seene it fit to haue concluded the matter with a bare description, he would not haue confirmed this propheste with so many words. It was a thing almost incredible that so rich and strong a Citie, so well appointed and fortified, and confederate with so many nations, could haue euer been ouerthrowne and ruinated. When he saith he shall come no more at thee, his meaning is not to forestall them of the hope of restauration which he giues them hereafter, vers. 18. for this threatning ought to be restrained to the destruction of Tyre, as if he should say, Thou shalt not be such a wanton hereafter as thou wast wont to be in times past.

He

He calles her a virgin by way of ſimilitude, becauſe none had medled with the riches of Tyrus before this time; neither had ſhee yet ſuſtained any loſſe. He praiſeth not her chaſtitie then but he eloquently ſhewes, that the riches which had been hid ſo cloſe, ſhould be digged vp: as if he ſhould ſay; Thou reioicedſt heretofore as young virgins in the flower of their youth; but thy ioy ſhall come to an end when thou haſt been once deflowred. It is all one therefore for the ſenſe, as one ſhould call Venice a virgin Citie, becauſe it was neuer taken by force ſince it was built.

In what ſenſe this word Virgin is here to be taken.

Daughter of Zidon. He ſpeakes ſtill of Tyre; but he calles it ſo, becauſe the Zidonians had built it, albeit now the daughter was waxen richer then the mother, as it often falles out in worldly things. Now the commoditie and ſituation of the place, was the cauſe that the Tyrians grew the ſtronger: ſo as Zidon now depended vpon them. It appeares ſufficiently by the holy hiſtorie, that the Monarchy of Tyrus was very famous: but the Prophet in this place onely reſpects her beginning. In that he afterwards commands them to paſſe ouer to Chittim, he not onely driues them into Cilicia, but into the Countries further off: for vnder this word, he comprehends Greece, Italy, and other regions: as if he ſhould haue ſaid; When by baniſhment thou ſhalt be forced to change thy habitation, thou ſhalt finde no reſt among thy neighbours neere hand, but thou muſt wander vp & downe thorow-out the world; thou ſhalt bee brought into places vnknowne, neither yet ſhalt thou find reſt there. To be ſhort, his meaning is, that this deſtruction ſhall bee ſo fearefull and miſerable, that they ſhall finde reſt neither amongſt neighbours, nor yet amongſt ſtrangers, when they ſhall haue paſſed the ſeas.

1. King. 5. 1.

Verſ. 13. Behold the land of the Caldeans: this was no people: Aſſur founded it by the inhabitants of the wilderneſſe: they ſet vp the towers thereof: they raiſed the palaces thereof, and hee brought it to ruine.

NOw hee confirmes that which hee hath prophecied againſt Tyre by an example. For it could hardly ſinke into any mans head, (eſpecially into the Tyrians) that their Citie could bee ſurpriſed, they being ſecure and dreampt of no ſuch matter. I know this place is expounded diuerſly: but I will not now ſtand to confute other mens opinions: it ſhall ſuffice mee to lay forth the Prophets meaning, ſo farre forth as I can diſcerne. The people of the Caldeans were not. That is to ſay, had no name: for if wee ſearch for the originall, they deſcended from the Aſſyrians, as we may iudge by the 10 Chapter of Geneſis, verſe 11. Hee truely affirmes then that it was no people in the beginning; becauſe it was couered vnder the name of another: ſo as it was not a bodie at all of any Commonweale.

Whereas we haue tranſlated, The inhabitants of the wilderneſſe, others tranſlate Ships: but me thinks this expoſition is conſtrained. The firſt which I haue ſet downe, agrees better; to wit, that the Aſſyrians had eſtabliſhed and ſet vp a certaine eſtate among the Caldeans, who before wandred thorow the deſerts vnder tents of skinnes: but the Aſſyrians gathered them into Cities, and brought them to a better forme and manner of humane ſocietie. This hé ſhewes by the verbe Orru, to wit, that they edified and built Cities: for whereas ſome tranſlate, They threw downe: it cannot ſtand. What befell then? They brought Aſſur vnto deſolation, as the common prouerbe is, the daughter deuoured the mother: for the Caldeans deſtroyed the Monarchy of the Aſſyrians, albeit it was the moſt flouriſhing and the moſt mightie of all others. But what of all this? What doe theſe things appertaine to Tyre, will ſome ſay? Much; becauſe it ſhould be deſtroyed by the Aſſyrians and Caldeans. Seeing then that the Caldeans, which were nothing in times paſt, were able to bring downe and ſubdue the Aſſyrians; is it any wonder if theſe two nations being ioyned together, ſhould ſubdue Tyre? If the Lord hath ſhewed ſuch an example of his power in the Aſſyrians; why ſhould Tyrus truſt in her riches? Doubtleſſe ſhe alſo ſhall feele the hand of the Lord, and her power ſhall no way bee able to reſiſt.

Verſ. 14. Howle yee ſhips of Tarſhiſh, for your ſtrength is deſtroyed.

HEe repeates that which hee ſaid before, verſ 1. for the Cilicians ordinarily vſed traffique with the Tyrians, becauſe they were borderers. He commands their ſhips to howle; becauſe when this hauen was ſhut vp, the Merchants ſhould ſtand amaſed, in regard they ſhould neither goe nor come any more as they were wont. Now he calles this port to which they vſually came, their ſtrength; not onely becauſe the harbour and abode there was ſafe, but alſo becauſe the voyages by ſea could bring no profite vnto them without it.

Verſ. 15. And in that day ſhall Tyrus be forgotten ſeuentie yeeres, (according to the yeeres of one King) at the end of ſeuentie yeeres ſhall Tyrus ſing as an harlot.

THe Prophet hauing ſpoken of the ſurpriſing of Tyre, now therewithall ſhewes how long their calamitie ſhould indure. For it may come to paſſe, that ruinated Cities may be ſoone repaired and brought to their firſt eſtate: but the Prophet teſtifies that this Citie ſhall remaine deſolate without inhabitant, the ſpace of ſeuentie yeeres. When hee ſaith, it ſhall be forgotten; his meaning is, that traffique ſhall ceaſe, and that Merchants ſhall haue no ordinarie concourſe to and fro, as they were wont. Now, whereas ſome referre the dayes of a king to Dauid, it is too friuolous, for he takes it for the age of a man, as the Pſalmiſt ſhewes: The age of a man, ſaith he, is often limited to threeſcore yeares and ten, Pſal. 90. 10. But why mentions he a king rather then ſome other man? It is becauſe Tyre had a king, and therefore he counts the yeres by his life. This ſerued much therefore to confirme the certentie of this propheſie, for the Prophet could not know theſe things by any humane coniectures. By the ſong of the harlot, he vnder a fit ſimilitude meants merchandize, not that merchandizing is to be condemned in it ſelfe, for it is profitable and neceſſarie for a Common wealth: but he taxeth the deceits and guile wherewith it aboundeth, ſo as it may very well be compared to the art of harlotrie.

Verſ. 16. Take an harp, and go about the Citie (thou harlot that haſt been forgotten) make ſweet melodie, ſing mo ſongs that thou mayſt be remembred.

HE compares Tyre to an harlot, who hauing paſſed all her youth in whoredomes and filthines, at laſt becomming old (by reaſon whereof all forſake and deſpiſe her) yet can ſhe not forget her firſt gaine, nor her wicked prancks, but deſires to reuiue and refreſh her old ſpirits. And that ſhe may the better draw men out of all parts of the Citie vnto her, ſhe goes ſinging, and playing vpon Inſtruments, to delight her companions. For ſuch whores become mad as it were when they ſee themſelues deſpiſed becauſe of their age: we ſee alſo that the Poet Horace flouts an harlot called Lydia for the ſame cauſe. So Tyre, being deſtroyed and as it were buried in oblition, ſhall againe pluck vp her courage, vſing all her wits and deuiſes to recouer her firſt eſtate.

Horace. Lydia, an harlot.

By the harp and the ſweete melodie he vnderſtands the deceits, craft, entiſements and flatteries which are vſed in merchandiſe, by which Merchants ſerue their turnes to inueigle men, and to ſnare them in their nets. In a word, he ſhewes by what meanes the Cities which conſiſt of merchandiſe become rich, to wit, by craftie and vnlawfull ſhifts. For this cauſe it is that the Prophet ſaith, Tyre ſhall tickle mens eares with her ſweete melodie.

He further bids her to double her ſongs, as if he ſhould ſay, adde deceit to deceit, and flatterie to flatterie, till thou haſt drawne euery one vnto thee: ſteale into mens minds againe, and recouer thy firſt fame. To be ſhort, euen as an old harlot deuiſeth meanes how ſhe may get into fauour againe with men by painting, trimming, and decking her ſelfe in fine apparrell; alſo with muſicall Inſtruments and loue-ſongs: ſo Tyre ſhall riſe and inrich her ſelfe againe by the ſame meanes wherewith ſhe gat wealth before: not that he counſels or giues Tyre licéce by theſe words to enrich her ſelfe this way, but continues on his propheſie.

Verſ. 17. And at the end of ſeuentie yeares ſhall the Lord viſit Tyrus, * and ſhe ſhall returne to her wages, and ſhall commit fornication with all the kingdoms of the earth that are in the world.

* Or, but.

ALthough Tyrus ſhall ſeeme to be vtterlie deſtroyed when God ſhall afflict her, yet the Prophet ſhewes that ſhe ſhall obteine mercie, for after her calamities ſhe ſhall be reſtored to her firſt glorie. But it is rightlie ſaid that ſuch a reſtauration ſhall be brought to paſſe by the worke of the Lord, for otherwiſe Tyre muſt of neceſſitie feele that which Malachie pronounceth againſt the Idumeans, to wit, that the Lord would ouerthrow and caſt downe all that which they built and ſet vp, Mala. 1. 4. They had neuer recouered their firſt eſtate then vnleſſe the Lord himſelfe had been the author of it.

Now frō hence we may gather a very profitable doctrine, to wit, ỹ albeit God be a iuſt & ſeuere Iudge againſt ỹ wicked, yet he giues place to his mercie, and is neuer ſo ſharp in making the wound, but he is as gentle in aſſwaging ỹ ſmart of it, and in the end takes it cleane away. Now if he be ſuch a one towards the godleſſe & reprobates, what a one will he be to thoſe whom he hath adopted in Chriſt Ieſus for his children, vpō whom he wil powre out his goodnes? When Kingdomes then are reſtored, when Cities are peopled afreſh, and that men recouer their liberties, all comes to paſſe by the only prouidence of God, who caſts downe the higheſt things when it pleaſeth him, and on a ſudden ſets vp and plants that which he had caſt downe.

That which followes, to wit, and ſhe ſhall returne, ſhould be read, But ſhe ſhall returne: for the meaning is, that Tyrus ſhall not become the better nor the wiſer by ſuch a tedious chaſtiſement, but ſhall by and by returne to her old bias againe, for in theſe words he taxeth her ingratitude. We euery day behold ſuch examples, for there is almoſt no corner in the world in which the Lord hath not ſet the print of his iudgements. Sometimes he giues thoſe whom he hath corrected a breathing time; but doe they become euer the better? No, the Prophet ſaith then that Tyre ſhall be ſuch a one, ſhe ſhall be neuer awhit reformed, but ſhall rather returne to her vomit againe; ſhe ſhall play the harlot as ſhe was wont to doe. It is not to be doubted but he ſpeakes of her merchandizing, but he continues on his ſimilitude which he had taken vp before, not meaning thereby vtterlie to cōdemne the trade of Merchants, as we haue ſaid, but becauſe amongſt ſo many corruptions as men haue mingled therewith, it very fitlie reſembles the prancks of harlots, for it is repleniſhed with ſo much cunning, ſecret packing, and ſuch ſubtle conueyances (as wee may now ſee in the world) that it ſeemes it was only deuiſed to ſnare and beguile the ſimple. How many new and vnknowne practiſes doe they inuent euery day to gaine and take vp on Vſurie? which yet none can perceiue vnleſſe of long time he hath frequented the Schooles of the Merchants. Wee neede not marueil then if the Prophet hath taken vp ſuch a ſimilitude; whereby he meant to ſhew, that Tyrus ſhould be no leſſe deceitful in the trade of merchandiſe, then ſhe was before.

[a] Or, but in the end.

Verſ. 18. [a] Yet her occupying and her wages ſhall be holy vnto the Lord: it ſhall not be laid vp nor kept in ſtore; but her merchandiſe ſhall be for them that dwell before the Lord, to eate ſufficiently, and to haue durable clothing.

THis was an other fauour of God towards Tyre. After ſhe was reſtored, ſhe yet conuerted not to the Lord, but went on in her ſubtile dealings: for which ſhee deſerued vtterly to periſh. And indeede ſhe was miſerably puniſhed when Alexander tooke her by force: yet notwithſtanding the kingdome of Ieſus Chriſt was ſet vp there, as S. Luke witneſſeth, Acts 21.4. This verſe then muſt bee oppoſed to the former: as if he ſhould ſay, Yet ſhall the merchandiſe of Tyre be conſecrated to the Lord. Here we haue a wonderfull example of Gods goodneſſe, which ſtined euen into this vile brothelhouſe, and as you would ſay, euen into hell. This reſtauration of Tyre then muſt be attributed to the bountie of the Lord: but this firſt benefit was nothing in compariſon of the ſecond, when the Lord ſanctified and ſet it a part for himſelfe. But

Obiect. will ſome ſay, might that bee offered vnto God in ſacrifice, which the Tyrians had

Gen.17.1. ſcraped together by polling and vnlawfull ſhifts? For the Lord deteſts ſuch offerings; becauſe hee requires a pure conſcience, and innocent hands: Pſal.24.4. Now in regard of this queſtion, many trouble themſelues about the expoſition of this place, but to ſmall

Anſ. purpoſe: for it is not the Prophets meaning that the merchandiſe of Tyre ſhall be conſecrated vnto God whileſt ſhe continues in her whoredoms, but notes the time to come; namely, after her repentance and conuerſion. Shee ſhall not then gather treaſures, and heape vp wealth by hooke and by crooke, but ſhall imploy them in the ſeruice of God, and lay out the profit of her trading, for the comfort of the faithfull in their neede. Now albeit hee hath vſed an vnſeemely word, it is in regard of the time: ſignifying thar ſhe ſhall forget her wicked practiſes, and ſhall change her old cuſtomes.

They ſhall not be laid vp.] Thus in few words hee deſcribes the repentance of Tyre, which although in times paſt, was addicted to couetouſneſſe; yet being conuerted to Chriſt, ſhe ſhall not ſtudie to hoord vp riches, but ſhall imploy them for the reliefe of the poore and other good vſes. This ought to be the fruit of repentance, as S. Paul admoniſheth; Let him that ſtole, ſteale no more; but let him rather labour with his hands the thing that is good, that he may be able to giue to him that needeth: Eph.4.28. Whereas the Tyrians then in times paſt deuoured riches on all ſides, with an inſatiable deſire: Iſaiah ſaith, that now they ſhall bee readie to giue as faſt out, becauſe their inordinate deſire of gaine ſhall ceaſe. This is then a note of charitie to helpe 1
we ſuffer them to want; eſpecially when God lades vs with plentie.

He addes the right way of doing good, to wit, they ſhall beſtow their goods vpon the ſeruants of God. Now albeit he comprehends all the faithfull, yet hath he a ſpeciall reſpect to the Prieſts and Leuites, of whom, ſome ſacrificed, ſome made readie the beaſts that were to be ſacrificed, & others watched: in a word, all were readie to doe their office; and for that cauſe it is ſaid, that they dwelt before the Lord. The like, by as good right, is to be ſaid of all the Miniſters of the Church. Moreouer, in as much as all the faithfull, of what condition ſoeuer they be, belong vnto the ſanctuarie of the Lord, and are made one royall Prieſthood by Chriſt, to dwell before him: I willingly referre theſe words to all the houſhold of faith, of whom wee ought to be moſt carefull: for S. Paul giues vs ſo in charge, and would haue them relieued before any other: Gal.6.10. For if the common bond of nature ought to moue vs to hold an eſtimation of our owne fleſh, how much more ſhould the Chap. 58.7.
vnion of Chriſts members which is much more holy and ſtraight, then all the bonds of nature, mooue and prouoke vs thereunto?

We ought alſo to obſerue in this phraſe of ſpeech, to dwell before the Lord, an other point: for albeit we haue not now the Arke of the couenant, yet by the benefit of Chriſt, we aproch neerer vnto God then the Leuites in old time did. And therefore we are commanded to walke before him no otherwiſe then if he looked vpon vs; to the end we may in all good conſcience giue our ſelues to holineſſe and righteouſneſſe; for wee are charged to walke alwaies as in his ſight, and to behold him as one that viewes all our waies, that ſo we may keepe iuſtice and iudgement.

That they may eat their fill.] The Prophet meanes, that wee ought to ſuſtaine our brethren much more largely and liberally then men are wont to doe: becauſe wee are wonderfull niggards and pinchpennies, when we are moued to relieue the poore. There are verie few that will venture their almes for nothing, and giue with a franke and willing heart: for they thinke that that which they giue to others, is loſt, and is but a leſſening of their ſtocke. The Lord therefore greatly commends a cheerefull heart, Rom. 12. 8. the rather to correct this vice of niggardlineſſe: and albeit the place in the Romans be chiefly directed to the Deacons, yet it ought to be applied to all. An other ſentence alſo muſt be kept in minde, which teſtifieth that God loues a cheerefull giuer: 2.Cor.9.7. Let vs alſo note that the Prophet affirmes, that whatſoeuer is giuen to the poore, is conſecrated vnto God: which the holy Ghoſt alſo in an other place teacheth; With ſuch ſacrifices God is pleaſed: Heb.13.10. For he neuer commanded men to offer ſacrifices, as if they benefit him; no, he needed them not; but he only appointed them theſe exerciſes of pietie vnder the law: now, vnder the Gospell he commands vs to distribute something to our neighbours of that we possesse; testifying that whatsoeuer wee employ for the reliefe of our brethren, is to him a sacrifice of a sweete smell. And it ought greatlie to kindle the loue of bountie and liberalitie in vs, when we heare that our almes are so highlie commended, and that our hands together with our gifts are consecrated vnto God.

THE XXIIII. CHAPTER.

Vers. 1. Behold, the Lord maketh the earth emptie, and he maketh it waste: he turneth it vpside downe, and scattereth the Inhabitants thereof.

THis propheſie as I take it, is as it were ſ shutting vp of all thoſe things which haue bin deſcribed frō the thirteenth Chapter vnto this, wherein Iſaiah hath not onely foretold the ruine of the Iewes and Iſraelites, but alſo of the Moabites, Aſſyrians, Egyptians, and others. In a word, he heere comprehends all in a ſhort ſumme, as if he had viewed all the neighbour countries that were knowne to the Iewes. Some referre this to the Iſraelites, others to the Iewes, thinking the Prophet ſpeakes of their deſtruction: but ſeeing he makes mention of the world, I can not be drawne to take this place in any other ſenſe, but that he now in a few words comprehends all that which he hath ſaid of many particulars, and thoſe belonging to diuers times. Whereas he in the next verſe makes mention of the Prieſt, it contradicts this that I ſay nothing at all, although it might thereby ſeeme that theſe things ſhould only appertaine vnto the people of God: for albeit he ſpeakes of all nations, yet the Iewes alwaies deſeruing to be preferred in the firſt place, Iſaiah was to regard them chiefflie and principallie, becauſe it was theirs by right. For he ſpeakes of others accidentallie as you would ſay: no maruell then if hauing touched them, he mentions his owne people in a particular maner.

Others vnderſtand this place of the whole world in generall; yet ſo as they referre it to the laſt day: which me thinks is too ſtrict: for the Prophet hauing threatned the Iewes and other nations, in the end addes a conſolation, to wit, that the Lord will once againe raiſe vp his Church, making her to flouriſh more then euer it did: now how can this agree to the laſt Iudgement? By the word earth, I thinke the Prophet meanes not the whole world, but thoſe regions which were well knowne to the Iewes: as for example, if we at this day ſhould ſpeake of things which happen in the world, we ſhould hardly paſſe beyond Europe, much leſſe ſhould we thinke of that which is done in India, becauſe the parts on this ſide is our world as it were. In the ſame ſenſe Iſaiah ſpeakes of the earth, and of the Inhabitants of the Countries adioyning, which he, and thoſe to whom he ſpake, knew. To conclude, we may limit this world whereof the Prophet ſpeakes in this place, within the confines or bounds of the Aſſyrians, Egyptians, Moabites, and other nations, as if he ſhould ſay, Hitherunto I haue ſpoken of diuers calamities which then were like to fall vpon many people, and do yet threaten many others in particular: but now behold the concluſion, The Lord will ſpoile and ouerthrow the face of the earth, with all the beautie of it.

Others expound the verb Bokak, he opens the earth, that the enemies may the more eaſily enter into it: but I had rather expound it, He vncouers the earth, becauſe they vſe to ſay, The earth is couered or clothed all the while great multitudes of people inhabit it; as alſo whē it abounds with beaſts and fruits: contrarywiſe, it is ſaid to be vncouered and made bare when it hath loſt her inhabitants, for ſo ſhe is ſtripped of her garment, euen as if a man ſhould be ſtripped out of his coates and other apparell. Now this was to happen to the Aſſyrians, Egyptians, and other nations which he mentioned before, as well as to the Iewes, and therefore he wraps them vp altogether in one iudgement.

Vers. 2. And there ſhall be like people, like prieſt, and like ſeruant, like maſter, like maid, like miſtris, like buyer, like ſeller, like lender, like borower,* like giuer, like taker to vſurie.*

* Or, and the prieſt ſhalbe like the people, &c.

* Or, the borower, like the lender.

AND there ſhall be like prieſt.] By theſe words he ſignifies an vtter ruine, where all order, gouernment, and policie ſhall ceaſe: for whileſt any Commonwealth flouriſheth, there is alwaies a certaine difference betweene the people and the prieſts: well then, he notes an horrible confuſion. Now vnder this word prieſt, he puts the particular for the generall, taking a part for the whole, which is a thing very vſuall in the Scriptures: although we may take the word Cohenim for thoſe which are placed in any dignitie whatſoeuer: becauſe the Hebrues ſometimes giue this name to Princes, but ſpeciallie to ſuch as are of the blood Royall: notwithſtanding I willinglie receiue the figure Synecdoche before mentioned. Now ſithence the Prophet puts this confuſion of eſtates among the catalogue of Gods curſes, ſhewing that when they be thus turned topſie turuie, it proceeds from his fearefull indignation: we ought on the contrarie to gather how well-pleaſing policie, and the well ordering of all things is vnto God; as alſo what a great fauour we receiue from him when ſuch good order is preſerued

Good order in a Commonwealth, a ſinguler teſtimonie of Gods fauor.

and continued amongſt vs. For it being gone, our life differs nothing from that of brute beaſts. Wee are therefore not onely to acknowledge it to be an heauie hand of God vpon vs, but alſo to confeſſe our owne ſinnes to be the cauſe, when hee confounds eſtates, depriues vs of the word, and of iudgement ſeates: which being once put downe, the comfort of our life therewithall is fallen to the ground.

We may alſo obſerue hence, that the Lord in executing his iudgements, ſpares not mens perſons, of what calling ſoeuer they be. What an holy calling was the prieſthood which the Lord had conſecrated to himſelfe, and adorned after a glorious manner? How much did the people alſo glorie in it; as if the continuance thereof had been vnchangeable, and to haue indured for euer? Yet notwithſtanding euen this honourable order of men, is wrapped in amongſt the iudgements of God; becauſe he reſpects no perſons. Nay, the more fauours wee haue receiued from him, and the greater our aduancement is, the more ſeuerely will hee correct vs, if wee proue vnthankfull, and abuſe his benefits.

To this appertaines that which is here added touching maſters and ſeruants, buyers and ſellers: for wee know that theſe callings are lawfull, and are not iumbled together, vnleſſe it bee when God ſmites his people in iuſtice; as we haue ſaid before: for in a State well managed, men put a difference betweene the maſter and the ſeruant. Neither can a Commonwealth long ſtand without buying and ſelling: now to make the poore equall with the rich, what is it elſe but to ouerthrow all humane ſocietie? We haue the Prophets meaning then, as if he ſhould ſay; All policie ſhall be aboliſhed, becauſe in theſe ruines, the rich ſhould be brought into extreme pouertie. To conclude, he here ſets forth an horrible deſtruction, after which ſhall enſue a wonderfull change.

The confuſiõ of eſtates in a kingdome, a forerunner of very ſtrange alterations.

Verſ. 3. The earth ſhall bee cleane emptied and vtterly ſpoiled: for the Lord hath ſpoken this word.

HE confirmes that which hee ſaid before: and withall admoniſheth them, that theſe changes ſhall not fall out by haphazard, as they ſay; but that it ſhall come to paſſe by the prouidence and worke of the Lord. He ſaid expreſly in the firſt verſe, that the Lord was determined to empiie the earth: now he tels thẽ, that it ſhall ſo come to paſſe, adding a reaſon of it; to wit, becauſe God had ſpoken the word: and therefore it could not be called backe againe.

Verſ. 4. *The earth lamenteth and fadeth away, the world is feebled and decayed; the proud people of the world are weakened.

*Or, high.

THe Prophet holds on his ſpeech ſtill: for all theſe words ſerue to lay forth the manner of the ruine of the whole earth, that is to ſay, ſo much as was knowne to the Iewes. Now hee ſets out this iudgement of God, vnder borrowed ſpeeches more familiarly, that he might awaken the drowſie; as hee is wont to doe.

By the high people, we may vnderſtand thoſe which were more excellent then others: for that was a matter of greater wonder, then if ſome people of a baſe condition had been deſtroyed. Notwithſtanding, if any be pleaſed to expound it particularly of the Iewes, I will not gaineſay them: for albeit the Aſſyrians and Egyptians exceeded them in riches and power; yet notwithſtanding the Iewes were higher then they, in regard that God had adopted them for his owne. Yet the other expoſition pleaſeth mee better: for ſo his meaning is; that God will not onely puniſh them of meane eſtate, but thoſe alſo that are aduanced to honour and dignitie aboue others.

Verſ. 5. The earth alſo deceiueth, becauſe of the inhabitants thereof: for they tranſgreſſed the lawes, they changed the ordinances, and brake the euerlaſting couenant.

OThers tranſlate, The earth is polluted; becauſe the verbe Caneph, ſignifies to be wicked: both ſenſes may agree, but the verſe following requires that wee expound it; The earth deceiueth. For hee ſeemes to amplifie it further by and by after; when hee ſaith, Verſ. 6. that the curſe hath deuoured the earth. There is no great hardneſſe in the word Tacah, whether we tranſlate it Vnder, or, Becauſe of her inhabitants. Now there is a mutuall traffique, as it were, betweene the earth, and thoſe that labour in it: ſo as ſhe ought to render thẽ that which ſhe hath receiued into her bowels, with vſurie; for otherwiſe ſhee deceiues them: but ſhe yeelds a reaſon why ſhe deceiues, when ſhee laies the blame vpon the inhabitants: for themſelues haue made her barren by their wickedneſſe. Our ſinne is the cauſe why the earth ſuſtaines vs not, nor brings forth her increaſe as God hath ordained by the courſe of nature. His will is, that ſhee ſhould be a mother vnto vs, to the end ſhe may yeeld vs food: now if ſhe change her nature and courſe, or degenerates from her fruitfulneſſe; let vs impute that to our owne wickedneſſes, becauſe we our ſelues ouerthrow that order which God hath ſet: for otherwiſe the earth would neuer deceiue, but would alwaies render vs that which ſhe ought. The cauſe is by and by added, why the earth is become vnfaithfull and deceiues her inhabitants: for is it not good reaſon they ſhould be defrauded of their prouiſion of food, that will defraud God, their Father and ſuſtainer of his honour? Now he taxeth the reuolt of his nation heere in a particular manner: for their fault was much more heinous, and leſſe excuſable, then all the ſinnes of thoſe which were neuer taught in God his ſchoole.

Mens ſinnes the cauſe of the earths barreaneſſe.

1 The word Thorah is transferred to the law, becauſe it ſignifies doctrine: but it is heere put in the plurall number, and ſignifies all the doctrine that is comprehended in the law. Now becauſe the Law conſiſts as well in Commandements as promiſes, the Prophet addes two other words or parts of it, to make his meaning the more plaine.

2 The word Chok, ſignifies an Ordinance, and by it ſome vnderſtand the Ceremonies, others Maners. Wee may tranſlate it Inſtructions: for I take it not only for Ceremonies, but for all things that belong to the rules of good life. Thirdly, he puts the word Berith, which ſignifies a bargaine or couenant. This word is to be reſtrained to the couenants whereby the Lord adopting his people, promiſed to be their God. He reprocheth their vnthankfulnes then, becauſe that albeit the Lord had manifeſted himſelfe vnto them diuers waies, and had giuen them ſingular teſtimonies of his loue, yet were they rebellious and wanton, tranſgreſſing his lawes, and violating his holy couenant.

Queſt. Anſ. But why directs he his ſpeech to the Iewes? Becauſe he knew that he was ſent vnto them as their Prophet to teach them. Hence wee

1 The rule of a well ordered life deſcribed. may gather what the rule of a well ordered life is: for it is conteined in the Law, which we muſt preciſely follow if we will approue our doings vnto God, if we turne from it to the right hand or to the left, we are guiltie of

2 tranſgreſſion. Wee may alſo obſerue that God would not only haue vs to thinke vpon his Lawes and Commandements in his word, but alſo vpon his Couenant: for the principall part of the word conſiſts in the promiſes by which hee adopts and receiues vs for his people. Now it is not to be doubted but in theſe varietie of words the Prophet meant to amplifie the matter: as if he ſhould ſay, You are wholly corrupt, nothing remaines ſound amongſt you.

The principall part of the word conſiſts in the promiſes.

Why he calls it an euerlaſting couenant. He calles it the euerlaſting couenant, becauſe it ought to be perpetuall, inuiolable, and to indure for euer, for it ought to continue alwaies from the father to the ſonne, that the memorie of it might neuer be loſt, but might be preſerued ſtedfaſt in all ages. He laies forth their diſloyaltie then and malice, in that they durſt violate the Couenant made betweene God and them, and ouerthrow the things which the Lord would haue kept ſure and ſtedfaſt. This was odious: no maruell then if the earth auenge her ſelfe of ſuch an impietie, by denying men their ſuſtenance.

Verſ. 6. Therefore hath the curſe deuoured the earth, and the Inhabitants thereof are deſolate: Wherefore the Inhabitants thereof are burned vp, and few men are left.

OThers tranſlate Forſwearing: but becauſe this word alſo ſignifieth to curſe, I doubt not but it is taken here for curſing, the Prophet hauing an eye to thoſe curſes which Moſes denounceth in the Law againſt the wicked that tranſgreſſe it: Iſaiah teſtifies then that all the calamities which ſhould come to paſſe, proceeded from the curſe of God. We know that the earth was curſed becauſe of the tranſgreſſion of the firſt man, ſo as it brought forth thiſtles and briers in ſtead of good fruites, Gen. 3. 17. 18. and yet notwithſtanding the Lord hath ſo moderated this curſe, that it ceaſeth not to yeeld men foode, although in regard of their vnthankfulnes they be vnworthie of it. If we then ceaſe not to offend God, adding ſinne vnto ſinne; is it not good reaſon that wee ſhould feele this curſe to prick vs to the quick, and that the earth ſhould waxe barren and vnfruitfull?

The cauſe why the earth is curſed.

I thinke the verb Aſham, ſhould rather be taken to deſolate, then to tranſgreſſe; and the ſcope of ỹ text alſo leades vs vnto it, therfore I haue tranſlated, they are deſolate: vnleſſe any had rather take the coniunction for a particle of ſhewing the cauſe, in this ſenſe, The earth being curſed of God, is withered, becauſe the inhabitants thereof are wicked. The verb Charn may be take by way of ſimilitude, which I approue beſt of, to wit, that thoſe whom the wrath of God hath deuoured, were burned, for deſtruction is often compared to the burning of fire.

Now whereas in the end he addes, that a few men ſhall be left, thence we may perceiue, that this propheſie can not be expounded of the laſt Iudgement: for the Prophet rather foretels and confirmes the certentie of thoſe calamities which he had threatned to befall ſundrie nations, that by this meanes the faithfull being now readie to indure many afflictions, might feare, and be drawne to repentance.

Verſ. 7. The wine faileth, the vine hath no might: all that were of merry heart, do mourne.

8. The mirth of tabrets ceaſeth: the noyſe of them that reioyce endeth: the ioy of the harp ceaſeth.

HE continues on the ſame matter ſtill, but in a more particular maner, foretelling the deſolation that ſhould happen to the land of Iudea. Now he vſeth a large deſcription, that he might touch them the neerer to the quick, and wound them with the ſenſe of Gods iudgement. He alſo taxeth their exceſſe, intemperancie, and wantonnes, becauſe that in ſo great abundance of all things they rebelled againſt God.

But this ingratitude is not the ſinne of the Iewes only, nor of that age alone, but it may be ſeene euery where, that the more men are glutted with the bleſſings of God, the more proudlie they aduance themſelues againſt him, and giue themſelues the raines too much. For this cauſe the Prophet reproues thē, as if he ſhould ſay, Hitherunto you haue plunged your ſelues in delights and pleaſures, but the Lord is determined to cut you ſhort. Now Iſaiah ſpeakes of the thing to come, as if it were alreadie preſent, the better to paint it out as it were before their eyes.

Wofull effects proceeding from ſo gracious a cauſe.

Verſ.

Verſ. 9. They ſhall not drinke wine with mirth: ſtrong drinke ſhall be bitter to them that drinke it.

*Or, with ſongs.

IT is not a thing euill in it ſelfe to drinke wine; for God hath ordained it for mans vſe: but the Prophet here deſcribes the banquets of drunkards, in which nothing is to be ſeene but exceſſe, diſſolutions, and diſhoneſt ſongs. Moreouer, becauſe they had abuſed their abundance, hee threatens them with want; which men draw into their houſes, when they abuſe Gods bountie by their riot. He addes further, that if they ſhall drinke ſtrong drinke, it ſhall be bitter vnto them: for ſorrow makes vs feele no taſte either in meate or drinke. The ſumme is, that God will depriue them of the vſe of wine, notwithſtanding they haue plentie; becauſe the ſorrow wherewith they ſhall be ouerwhelmed, will cauſe them to loſe all taſte and ſauour therein. Strong drinke ſhall be bitter: that is to ſay, you ſhall not inioy theſe pleaſures and delights, in which you haue ſoaked your ſelues, any longer.

Abuſe of Gods benefits pulles want into our houſes.

Sorrow cauſeth ſweete things to become bitter to our taſte.

Verſ. 10. The Citie of vanitie is broken downe: euery houſe is ſhut vp.

I Willingly agree, that this be particularly referred to the deſtruction of Ieruſalem; although from the ſcope of the text wee may gather, that it alſo extends it ſelfe to other Cities; becauſe he will by and by ſummon the nations in the plurall number, to appeare before the iudgement ſeate of God. But in regard that Iſaiah principally reſpected his Citizens; wee may well take it, that this Citie of vanitie is Ieruſalem: either becauſe there was no true vertue in it, or becauſe it was deſtroyed.

Wee may referre the word Tohu, to the deſtruction it ſelfe, or to the ſinnes by which they had prouoked the wrath of God againſt them. If we referre it to their iniquities; his 1 meaning is, a Citie wherein there is nothing but diſorder: & this ſenſe pleaſeth me beſt, al- 2 beit it may alſo be referred to the deſtructiō. For as I take it, he ſhewes the cauſe of the ruine wherewith he threatens the Citie; to wit, becauſe iuſtice and equitie were baniſhed out of it. The houſes ſhut vp, ſignifie that there ſhall bee great ſolitarineſſe: for this is added onely to exemplifie the deſolation of this Citie.

Verſ. 11. There is a crying for wine in the ſtreetes: all ioy is darkened; the mirth of the world is gone away.

HIs meaning is, there ſhall be great ſcarcitie of wine. Now where want and famine is, there are innumerable complaints; not onely in corners, but in publike places alſo. He expreſſeth theſe complaints and lamentations then; but withall he taxeth their exceſſe and intemperancie, in that they contented not themſelues with things neceſſarie, but ſoked themſelues in an ouerflowing of drunkenneſſe and all voluptuouſneſſe. For wee ſhould ſupply an antitheſis that is wanting here; to wit, You hitherunto abounded in wine and good cheere, through which you haue taken occaſion to waxe wanton and proud againſt God: you ſhall therefore bee iuſtly depriued of them, ſo that in ſtead of your rioting, ſhall bee heard cries and ſighings.

Wee muſt alſo note a ſimilitude in this ſecond member: for as we are wont to ſay, Ioy then ſhineth in her brighteſt colours, when we haue matter of ioy: the Prophet therefore ſaith, that it is darkened; becauſe ſorrow is as a cloud put betweene. To reioyce, is a thing lawfull in it ſelfe, as alſo to drinke: neither doth the Prophet reproue it; onely that immoderate and inordinate ioy: for men ſeldome keepe compaſſe, by reaſon of that lawleſneſſe which is in them. For as much as the Iewes then had proudly giuen vp themſelues to all diſſoluteneſſe of life, he ſets Gods iuſt iudgement before them: for ioy is then iuſtly cut off from vs, when we know not how to entertaine the benefits of God with thankfulneſſe, nor know not how to reioyce in him. Hee is inforced then to take our delights and pleaſures from vs, and then to compell vs to mourne and ſigh.

When ioy is iuſtly cut off from vs.

Verſ. 12. In the citie is left deſolation, and the gate is ſmitten with deſtruction.

BY an elegant manner of ſpeech hee deſcribeth the deſtruction of Ieruſalē, or of many other Cities together. The beautie and perfection of Cities, conſiſts in the multitude of inhabitants: they are therefore called deſerts, when none are left to dwell in them. Now the Prophet tauntingly ſaith, that deſtruction ſhall dwell in the Citie. True it is that ſome tranſlate the word Shaamah, Deſolation: but both the words come all to one ſenſe. He makes mention of the gate, becauſe a man might perceiue by them, whether the Citie were full of people or no; for thither they all came, and there iuſtice was adminiſtred. Firſt then he ſpeakes of the whole Citie in generall; and then notes one particular for amplifications ſake: for albeit Cities be deſtitute of inhabitants, yet ſome may bee ſeene at the gates: but if they be emptie, the deſolation muſt needes be great thorowout the Citie.

The beautie of Cities.

Verſ. 13. Surely thus ſhall it bee in the middeſt of the earth among the people, as the ſhaking of an Oline tree, and as the grapes when the vintage is ended.

Chap. 17. 6.

IN as much as this ſentence comes in betweene the threatnings and the conſolation, it ſeemes hee ſhould onely ſpeake to the elect, and not to all the people indifferently:

vnleſſe we will ſay that he deſcribes that ſcattering whereby the Iewes were diuided as it were into many nations. But becauſe this ſhould be too ſtrict and harſh, I expound it ſimplie, that ſome hope is left to the other forelorne nations. And trulie this propheſie doth indeede properlie belong to Chriſt, through whom it is no maruel if the Gentiles haue ſome part of the promiſe of ſaluation. The Prophet hath alreadie vſed this ſimilitude, Chapter 17.6. but there he only mentioned the church of the Iewes, telling them that a ſmall remnant ſhould ſtill remaine of the holy ſeed, leſt the faithfull might thinke the Church vtterlie rooted out. For as when an olive tree is ſhaken there will alwaies be ſome left heere and there, and likewiſe grapes vpon the vine, ſo ſhould there remaine an after gathering as it were of the faithfull in that great deſtruction wherewith the Church ſhould be oppreſſed. But in this place he extends this promiſe vnto other parts of the world, according as they ſhould partake in the ſame grace, by the meanes of Chriſt. Yet he therewithall addes a menace or threatning, as if he ſhould ſay, the earth ſhall be left bare of her Inhabitants, euen as trees and vines are of their fruit.

God is wrath remembers mercie.

Verſ. 14. They ſhall lift vp their voice: they ſhall ſhout for the magnificence of the Lord: they ſhall reioyce from the ſea.

HE now goes on and amplifies the conſolation which he touched before: for as he ſaid in the tenth Chapter, verſ. 22. that of this great multitude there ſhould remaine a little handfull which ſhould couer the whole earth; ſo now he ſhewes that this ſmall number of the faithfull which ſhall be left of this great vintage, ſhall reioyce notwithſtanding, and ſound the ſame ſo loude, that it ſhould be heard vnto the furtheſt regions. This is done by the preaching of the Goſpell: for as touching the eſtate of Iudea, it ſeemed to be ouerthrowne, in regard that the politique gouernment was aboliſhed: warres without, and ſeditions within, had ſo waſted it, that it was vnpoſſible euer to be recouered. The reſt of the world alſo was no leſſe dumb in vttring theſe praiſes of God, then deafe in hearing the ſound thereof. Now becauſe the Iewes were the firſt fruits of ỹ beleeuers, I willingly grant that they be placed in the firſt rank.

A Conſolation, fitting the times of the Churches deſolation.

Hence we gather a ſingular Conſolation, to wit, that the Lord in a moment can reſtore his Church vnto a moſt floriſhing eſtate, yea and create it of nothing; for out of death he drawes life euen as often as it pleaſeth him. But is it not a wonder and aboue the order of nature that ſo ſmall a remnant in lifting vp their voyce, ſhould be heard ſo farre off? for where few are, there is ſilence; and great noiſe is wont to be where great multitudes are gathered together. This then is the worke of God which farre ſurmounts nature, and whatſoeuer faculrie elſe is in man: otherwiſe it ſeemes the Prophet ſhould contradict himſelfe; to wit, that all Iudea ſhould be waſted, and all the world brought to nothing, and yet that their crie ſhould be heard euery where. This in it ſelfe is incredible, or rather ridiculous, if we meaſure the thing by carnall ſenſe: it is therefore, as we haue ſaid, to be aſcribed wholly to the admirable power and worke of God.

See verſ. 16.

By their crie he not only meanes the voyce of gladnes which is expreſſed by mirth and reioycing, but he alſo comprehends vnder it truſt and confidence, becauſe they ſhall freelie, boldlie, and with a loud voyce publiſh the praiſes of the Lord. Now herewithall he admoniſheth the faithfull that it is their dutie to cauſe Gods graces in them to be magnified, and not their owne. By the Sea, it is well enough knowne that the Iewes meane the regions farre off, which lie beyond the ſame.

Faith the ground of true ioy.

Gods mercies muſt not be concealed.

Verſ. 15. Wherefore praiſe ye the Lord in the valleys, euen the name of the Lord God of Iſrael, in the yles of the ſea.

GOds benefits ought to prouoke vs to giue him thanks, which we then teſtifie, when we vtter forth his praiſes. What thanks ſhall I render vnto the Lord, ſaith Dauid, for all the benefits he hath beſtowed vpon me? I will euen take the cup of thankſgiuing for his ſaluation, and call vpon his name. This order the Prophet keeps in this place: for hauing ſpoken of the reſtauration of the Church, he forthwith exhorts vs to offer the ſacrifice of prayſe. By the valleys, he meanes thoſe Countries that are ſcattered and diuided as it were from the reſt: for thoſe which are inuironed with mountaines, are diſtinct and ſeuerall naturallie. Thence it is that the inhabitants of the valleys are rude and barbarous, becauſe they ſeldome conuerſe with others. It is then as if the Prophet ſhould haue ſaid, There is no corner of the world be it neuer ſo obſcure and intangled, but the praiſes of God ſhall be heard there.

Pſal.116.

He hath expreſſed the God of Iſrael, to ſignifie that all nations ſhould call vpon the name of the true God. For though all men haue a certaine knowledge of God, and that ſome ſeede of religion be rooted in their hearts, yet when the queſtion is of worſhipping the true God in a right maner, it either vaniſheth to nothing, or elſe they eaſilie fall to Idolatrie and ſuperſtitions. Now the Prophet heere ſpeakes of the true religion which ſhould be ſpread thorow the world: whence yet againe it appeares, that he propheſieth of the kingdome of Chriſt, vnder whoſe reigne the ſincere truth was reuealed to forreine and profane nations.

Verſ. 16. From the vttermoſt part of the earth we haue heard praiſes, euen glory to the iuſt. And I ſaid, My leannes, my leannes, woe is me: the tranſgreſſors haue offended: yea, the tranſgreſſors haue grieuouſlie offended.

THis verſe containes two ſentences, which in appearance ſeeme to croſſe one another: for the firſt conteines a ioyfull argument ment of Gods praiſes; & preſently he breaks out into lamentations: wherein he bewailes the diſloyall behauiour of the wicked, who made ſhipwracke of all religion and godlineſſe. As touching the praiſes of God, wee haue alreadie ſaid, that hee can neither bee praiſed nor called vpon, till hee haue made himſelfe knowne vnto vs by giuing vs ſome taſte of his goodneſſe, whereby we may conceiue good hope and aſſurance of ſaluation. From thence come theſe ſentences of Dauid, Lord, who ſhall praiſe thee in the graue? In death who ſhall confeſſe thee? For as long as we onely feele the wrath of God, we cannot vtter his praiſes: and therefore when the Prophet ſaith, they ſhall be heard; he giues vs to vnderſtand, that the Goſpell ſhall be publiſhed thorowout the world, to the end men may acknowledge God for their Father, and wholly giue ouer themſelues to ſet forth his praiſes.

Pſal.6.6.

It is to be noted that he ſaith from the ends of the earth; becauſe the praiſes of God were then bounded within Iudea, and were not heard farre off: but afterward, they ſounded euerie where. When he addes, glorie to the iuſt: ſome take it as belonging to the perſon of all the faithfull in generall; as if the meaning were, that God ſhall be glorified, becauſe of his iuſtice. Others reade it together thus; We haue heard glory giuen to the iuſt God. Thoſe who thinke the Heralds of theſe praiſes are called iuſt, doe gather a good ſenſe; but they conſider not the word glorie: or at the leaſt they are conſtrained to put the word Reioycing, in the ſtead of it. Whereas he puts the verbe, we haue heard, in the preter-perfect tence, and not in the future; I make no doubt but he meant to reuiue the hearts of the faithful by this conſolation; to wit, We ſhall againe heare the praiſes of God: for it imports more then if he had ſaid, The praiſes of God ſhall be heard. He alſo ſpeakes in the firſt perſon, that hee might comprehend the whole body of the Church, and ſo drawes the faithfull to a more diligent attention. We often finde the epithite iuſt, in the Scripture, which he here applies vnto God: but it belongs vnto him after another ſort then it doth vnto men; who are called iuſt, in regard of that righteouſneſſe which is communicated vnto them: for God is called iuſt, by the effects; becauſe he is the fountaine of it. Let vs now ſee then the ſubſtance of this congratulation and thankſgiuing; to wit, we praiſe this iuſt God, becauſe we haue life and ſaluation, by the imputation of this iuſtice vnto vs. Where the iuſtice of God is felt then, there muſt praiſes and thankes needes follow.

Where the imputation of Chriſts righteouſneſs is felt, there muſt the praiſes of God needes ſound forth.

But how incredible did theſe things ſeeme when the Prophet foretold them? for the Lord was only knowne and praiſed in Iudea. Their deſtruction is denounced, and then followes the publiſhing of Gods word and praiſes, which ſhould ſound thorowout the world. Now how could theſe things come to paſſe, when the people of God were deſtroyed? Surely we may well conclude, that few at that time beleeued theſe prophecies. But now that theſe things are come to paſſe, is it not our duties to admire ſo great a miracle? The Iewes were not onely ſcattered, but almoſt brought to nothing; yet notwithſtanding one ſmall ſparkle hath been ſufficient to giue light to the whole world: ſo as whoſoeuer hath been truely inlightened therewith, hath made bold and conſtant profeſſion of the trueth.

My bowels.] This place is diuerſly expounded: for ſome tranſlate the word Rezi, Secret, others tranſlate, Leanneſſe. Thoſe who turne it, Secret, thinke the Prophet meant that a double ſecret was reuealed to him; to wit, that the Lord was purpoſed to reward the good, and to be auenged on the wicked. For whileſt men looke to the outward appearance, and ſee the wicked haue all they can wiſh, and the godly ouerwhelmed with miſeries; they are troubled and doubt in themſelues, whether the matters of this preſent life are gouerned by the hand of God, or whether all things are guided by Fortune. But ſuch thoughts are nothing but the ſeedes of impietie; as Salomon ſhewes, Eccleſ.8.11. This therefore made the Pſalmiſt enter in the ſanctuarie of God, to conſider of this thing, rather then to conſult with fleſh and blood about it: Pſal.73.17. Now if we follow this interpretation, the ſenſe will bee; Although the iuſt ſeeme to haue loſt all their labour: yet this ſecret doe I retaine in my breaſt, that it ſhal be well with them notwithſtanding in the latter end: and albeit the wicked thinke to eſcape, yet am I aſſured they ſhall not goe ſcotfree. But in regard this ſubtiltie ſeemes farre fetched, I had rather expound it more ſimply: and ſeeing the particle of expreſſing anguiſh, is alſo by and by added; who ſhould let me to thinke, but that Iſaiah ſpeakes here of the iuſt, or of their reward?

Others expound it Leanneſſe; as if hee ſhould ſay; I languiſh and am euen dried vp with ſorrow: for as the proſperitie and floriſhing eſtate of the people, did as it were baſton him; ſo their miſerable and wofull eſtate was his leanneſſe. For the Prophet here ſuſtaines & repreſents the perſon of the whole ſtocke of the Iewes: and becauſe the Lord had cut it off, hee had iuſt cauſe to bewaile the leanneſſe of it. This interpretation hath ſome probabilitie, as I haue ſaid; becauſe Iſaiah had good cauſe to lament the diminiſhing of his people, which he ſaw was at hand. And wee know, that when the grace of God beganne to be publiſhed in all places, then the Iewes decreaſed; yea the ſucceſſors of Abraham were as good as extinguiſhed.

But let vs ſee whether the Prophet hath not a further drift then to the reiection of his owne nation, ſo as he rather bewailes the inward euils wherewith he foreſaw y Church ſhould be afflicted. For we may well affirme that the Hebrew word which others haue tranſlated Secret, ſignifies alſo whatſoeuer is within the bodie. And thus it is an exclamation, to wit, my inward parts, or my bowels paine me: neither is it any abſurditie to ſuplie a verb, in a paſſionate and vehement speech. When the Lord plants his Church it seemes to florish and to be out of all perill: but when her owne bowels, that is to say, her children trouble her, then is she the most grieued: hypocrits aduance thémselues, which toucheth her neerer then all the malice of those that are without. To this appertaines these complaints, Alas, Alas! for that doubtlesse was the Prophets meaning, to the end the faithfull might not thinke their felicitie consisted in the things of this life, but might rather know that they were to susteine continuall combates; yea euen then when they imagined nothing could hinder them from inioying most sweet peace and tranquillitie. His meaning is then to expresse an extreame passion of sorrow wherwith ỹ Church should be inwardlie touched, that is to say, euen in her bowels: and so much the more cause had she to lament, because she could not auoid it. For as one saith, The Church can not flee from her home enemies, neither can she rid her selfe of them. This is the cause why the Prophet wants words to expresse his miserie.

A true saying.

When he speakes in the next place of the disloyall, it is a sufficient confirmation of this exposition. We haue too much experience, and shall feele more and more euery day how great and wofull this calamitie is. Whence came Poperie and all the filthie puddle, but from this inward plague? It is an impostume bred in the bowels of the Church, which at length hath broken forth and annoyed vs with the corruption and stinch of it. Whence is it also ỹ in these beginnings of ỹ Church, which is but now in the swadling clouts as it were, we see the true doctrine corrupted, the discipline adulterated, not only by the common people, but by them also which from their good example ought to be guides vnto others? Is it not because the Church hath alwaies been subiect to this euill?

The bane of the Church bred within her owne bowels.

Discipline.

Verſ. 17. Feare, and the pit, and the snare are vpon thee, ô Inhabitant of the earth.

18. And he that fleeth from the noyse of the feare shall fall into the pit, and he that commeth vp out of the pit shall be taken in the snare: for the windowes from an high are open, and the foundations of the earth do shake.

See verse 14. 15. 16.

THe Prophet heere expostulates with the people because of their sinnes. Before he said, that not one, but many nations farre remote, should haue cause to sing; now hee comes to doctrine: for I thinke this should be seuered from the former, because Isaiah threatens the wicked againe, to the end they might know that in the greatest felicitie of the Church they should continue to be accursed. For such are wont falsly to challenge vnto themselues the promises of God, when as they appertaine nothing at all vnto them: this is the cause why the Prophets are wont to mingle threatnings with consolations. It may be for ought we know that the Prophet made this sermon apart, vpon some other occasion. For neither did the Prophets themselues, nor other learned men for them distinguish the Chapters: we haue diuers times seene sundrie sentéces ioined together which should be separate; & many separated which should be ioined. What was the cause thereof but ignorance? Be it as you will; the Prophet directs his speech againe to the wicked, and threatens them with an horrible iudgement.

Now this description of feare, pit, and snare, is set before them to worke vpon their affections: for had he in one word told them that destruction was at hand, they would haue bin little moued with it. But the doubt is whether he speakes to the Iewes only, or no? for mine owne part, I meane not to contend much about it; and yet it is most likely vnto me, that it appertaines also to other nations, yea euen to the whole earth, whereof he had prophesied before. By the earth, wee vnderstand those regions which were knowne to the Iewes, as we touched in another place. The sense then is, Thou shalt be pressed with so many miseries, that thou shalt not know which way to turne thee: as also is is written in Amos, He which flies for feare of the Lion, shall meete a Beare, Amos 5. 19. And if he go into his house, when he leanes against the wall, a serpent shall bite him. And in the 15. Chapter of this booke Isaiah told vs, that Lions should be sent against those Moabites that escaped the warre. For God hath a store-house of infinite plagues wherewith to punish the wicked. It is as much therefore as if the Prophet had said, Be it knowne vnto you, that you can no way winde your selues out of Gods hands: for he hath mo wayes then one to auenge himselfe vpon you for your iniquities; and hath skill enough to snare them that thinke by subtletie to steale away in the darke from him. He that scapes the sword shall be vexed with famine, and if he die not of that, he shall be pressed with some other, euen as if nets were euery where spread to catch you.

See verſ. 1. 6.

Verſ. 1.

The sense of this place.

God hath a store-house of infinite plagues wherewith to punish the wicked.

The reason which is added in the latter end of the 18. verse confirmes this exposition, to wit, that they can no way preuent Gods vengeance. Why so? for all things are at his beck from the highest heauens, to the lowest depths of the earth. Some are of opinion that the Prophet alludes to the deluge; but as I thinke the very meaning is, that Gods wrath shall be reuealed both from aboue, and below; as if he should say, The Lord will arme heauen and earth on his side to execute his wrath vpon the sonnes of men, that which way soeuer they turne their eyes, they may see nothing but ruine and destruction.

Verſ. 19. The earth is vtterlie broken downe: the earth is cleane dissolued: the earth is moued exceedinglie.

20. The earth shall reele to and fro like a drunken man, and shall be removed as a tent, and the iniquitie thereof shall be heauie heauie vpon it; ſo that it ſhall fall, and riſe no more.

1 HE amplifies theſe puniſhments by diuers phraſes of ſpeech. Now in the 20 verſe he will ſhew the cauſe of this calamitie; to wit, that men haue pulled it vpon their owne heads by their ſinnes: in all the reſt of the 2 words he ſhewes, that the miſchiefe is deſperate and incurable. We haue ſaid before, that the Prophet vtters one and the ſame thing in diuers manners of ſpeech, to the end hee might awaken and wound the hearts of the people, which naturally were too ſecure. For there is a careleſneſſe in our fleſh, which begets a contempt of God; and of this, euerie one of vs hath too woefull experience, both in himſelfe and in others. That the Prophet then might rouſe vp thoſe that were drowſie and rocked aſleepe in their ſinnes, he garniſheth his words, (not as one affecting eloquence, to procure credit vnto himſelfe) but to gaine attention of his hearers, & to cauſe the ſame to ſink the deeper into their hearts. Thence proceedes all theſe alluſions wherewith theſe verſes are repleniſhed: thence 1 2 flowes this deckingof his ſpeech with figures: 3 thence is it that theſe threatnings and terrours are ſet forth in ſuch varietie of words, namely, euen to awaken the dull and dead hearts of his auditors.

A careleſnes rooted in our fleſh, which begets a contempt of God.

Now this doctrine ought to be reſtrained to the wicked; not that the faithfull were exempt from theſe calamities, for they often ſuffer with others: but hauing their recourſe vnto God, and reſting themſelues wholly vpon him, they are not ſo appalled, but they get the victorie ouer all aſſaults whatſoeuer. But the wicked, which deſpiſe the iudgements of God, and take a raging libertie of ſinning to themſelues, ſhall alwaies be vexed and terrified without any eaſe or reſt.

Where he ſaith, the earth ſhall be ſhaken; it is not meant, as though it ſhould be carried out of one place into ſome other: but this, as we haue ſaid, is to be referred vnto men: and it is as if he had ſaid; There ſhall be neither kingdome nor gouernement. In a word, his meaning is, to ſet forth thoſe changes whereof he ſpake in the tenth Chapter.

Now it is not without cauſe that he ſaith, the earth is laden with iniquitie; for thereby we perceiue, that God is neuer diſpleaſed with men, but wee our ſelues are the authors and cauſes of all the euill we indure. God is naturally inclined to pitie and compaſſion, and loues vs with a fatherly affection: our ſinnes are the cauſe why hee deales roughly with vs, and we haue no reaſon at all to accuſe him that ſmites vs. The Prophet againe tels them that there is no recouerie: and ſome are of opinion, that this was ſpoken to the Iewes, whoſe commonwealth was vtterly aboliſhed; ſo as being ſcattered here and there, they were ſcacely reputed or held for men of like condition with others. But I extend it further; to wit, that the calamities ſhall be ſo great in the world, that it ſhould neuer bee reſtored to his firſt beautie: for men labour tooth and naile to reſiſt aduerſities, and are foolehardy vpon a falſe confidence. When they haue indured ſome corrections, they thinke leaue ſhall bee giuen them to take breath; feeding themſelues with a vaine aſſurance, which the Prophet labours to depriue them of; to the end their fond hopes might not beguile them. It is alſo to be noted, that this generall ſentence takes not away the exception which Iſaiah ſpake of before, verſ. 13.

Our ſelues the authors of our owne euils.

Men are readie enough to feede themſelues with vaine hopes.

Verſ. 21. And in that day ſhall the Lord viſit the hoſte aboue, that is on high heuen the Kings of the world that are vpon the earth.

THis place hath troubled many mens heads; ſo as euery one hath deſcanted vpon it druerſly. Some thinke it to be meant of the Sunne and ſtarres: others, of the diuels, which ſhould be puniſhed with the wicked: others referre it to the Iewes, whom God had beautified with a ſpecial priuiledge: but I can receiue none of theſe interpretations. The true and naturall ſenſe as I take it is, that there are no powers ſo high, that ſhall be able to free themſelues from theſe ſcourges of God; for let them ſoare aboue the cloudes, yet euen there ſhall the hand of God reach them, as it is ſaid in the Pſalme; Whither ſhall I goe from thy preſence? whither ſhall I flee from thy Spirit? if I goe vp into heauen thou art there: if I take the wings of the morning, and flie to the vttermoſt parts of the ſea, yet thither wilt thou purſue mee. Pſal. 139.

For Iſaiah calles Kings and Princes, the hoſt from aboue, by way of ſimilitude; and himſelfe ſo expounds it cleerely, when he addes, Vpon the kings of the earth. For I am not of the mind that the words ſhould bee ſeuered, as if hee ſpake of diuers things; but it is rather the repetition of the ſame thing againe, ſo as the latter expounds the former: vnleſſe any had rather expound it thus; He will come in viſitation vpon the kingdomes of the earth; yea, euen vpon them which ſeeme the higheſt exalted aboue the common condition of men. Some are ſo aduanced aboue others, that they ſeeme petty Gods rather then men. Now the word viſit, muſt bee referred to the puniſhment, as it appeares ſufficiently by the text.

Verſ. 22. And they ſhall be gathered together as the priſoners in the pit: and they ſhall bee ſhut vp in the priſon; and after many daies ſhall they bee viſited.

HEe continues on his purpoſe in the beginning of the verſe, vſing a phraſe of ſpeech by way of ſimilitude; for all were not priſoners: but the Lord brought them all into ſeruitude, as if one ſhould keepe his enemies in ſafe cuſtodie which he had ſubdued. The Prophet brings in the Lord then like a Conquerour, which holds his enemies in priſon.

For

For men are wont to lay them fast, whom they haue taken. We know that men flee the presence of God, & despise him all ỹ while he spares, or giues thé any truce: for this cause Isaiah saith, that they shall be shut vp in prison by heapes, that so their reioycing in their multitudes might cease.

Where he saith, they shall be visited after many dayes, we are not to take it simplie as a promise, but as a threatning also included vnder it; and that in this sense, O ye Iewes you haue a long time dallied with your God by your rebellion, and haue prolonged your trading in sinne too long; so, God will now prolong his chastisements till he haue in the end brought you (though very late) to a sight of your misdeeds. And this course we see the Iudges of the earth often take with malefactors with whom they are displeased: they admit thé not to their presence the first day, but humble them first by throwing them into stinking dungeons, and into miserie, that they may thereby breake the pride of their hearts.

Simile.

God is said to visit the world two waies.

But God is said to visit the world two waies, first, in punishing the wicked, secondly, when after some chastisements he shewes his elect some tokens of his fatherlie kindnes. The word visit in this place is taken, To behold: and thus the Prophet mitigates the rigor of his menace or threatning. For the hearts of the faithfull in these cases haue need of comfort, lest they should quaile, and be discouraged: in regard of them therefore it is that the Prophets are wont to mingle consolations after their denunciations of iudgements. Seeing these things serued then to cheere vp the faithfull, no doubt but they were specially directed to the Iewes, among whom faith had her speciall residence, in regard that it appeared in none but them. But yet we are once againe to obserue these words, after many dayes, for this is added to exercise the faith of Gods children: we often run headlong in our desires, and would haue God accomplish his promises by and by: we grudge that he delaies so long, and wax so impatient that we can no longer indure. But we must learne in humilitie to wait and looke long for the saluation and mercie of our God, and not be discontented how long soeuer he deferre, for certainly he will come, and he will not tarrie. But herewithall wee must note, that God speakes not heere of all, for as we haue seene in the 13. verse, he was determined to saue but a few: and this ought so much the more to whet our appetites, to the end after we haue been long exercised vnder sundrie calamities, we may meete the Lord that smites vs by vnfeined repentance.

The cause why the Prophets are wont so often to mingle consolations with their denunciatiõs.

Vers. 23. Then the Moone shall be abashed, and the Sunne ashamed, when the Lord of hosts shall reigne in mount Zion, and in Ierusalem: and glorie shall be * before his ancient men.

* Or, euen in the presence of his &c.

MAny thinke that the Prophet vseth this vehemencie against the Iewes, as if he said, The Sunne, Moone, and Starres are ashamed of your incredulitie, so that you are a detestation not to men only, but euen to the insensible creatures: but this seemes vterlie wide frõ the Prophets purpose. I make no doubt but he continues on that consolation which he touched in the former verse; as if he should say, When the Lord shall visit his people, and purge his Church, he will establish such a glorious kingdome, that it shal darken the light of the Sunne and Starres. And this maner of speech is very vsuall among the Prophets, we also haue seene it before in this prophesie. Now Isaiah speakes not here alone of the head, but also of the whole bodie of the Church: when the Lord then shall settle his kingdome vpon mount Zion, his glorie in the restauration of the people shall be so great, that that which seemes bright and glorious in mens eies, being compared with this, shall be but darkenes. And the better to expresse it, he names the greatest lights in the firmament.

Some improperlie draw the verb To reigne, to Gods vengeance: for albeit God reignes when he iudgeth the world, yet this maner of speech linked thus together, God shall reigne in Mount Zion, alwayes notes mercie and saluation. For he speakes of the restauration of the Church: whence we gather, that these things are not accomplished but in Christ.

In mentioning of the Ancients he vseth a figure called Synecdoche, a figure often vsed in scripture, taking the chiefe part of the Church for the whole bodie, and yet not without a speciall cause. The ancient men, are heere taken then not only for the Priests, but for those gouernors which haue the ouersight of maners and discipline, to wit, such as ought with wisdome and discretion to gouerne others. And vnder these names he comprehends all the people, not only because they represent the whole bodie, the common people being hid as it were vnder the shadow of their wings: but also that the faithfull might haue good hope of a future restoring, otherwise it were to little purpose that a scattered multitude should be left like a crased bodie, or a confused lump.

Priests, and gouerning Elders.

It is not without cause that the particle, euen before his ancient men, is added, to the end the Iewes might know that Gods power should be glorious: not that it can be comprehended with the eies of flesh, but by faith: for he so reignes, that we effectuallie feele his strength in our weakenes. And if we apprehend not this, we shall neuer receiue any comfort.

In stead of glorie, some reade gloriouslie, others glorious: I had rather take it in the substantiue, although it be not much materiall as touching the sense. For he shewes how great Gods glorie and magnificence should be when Christes kingdome shall be set vp: all glorie then must be turned into darknes, that his glorie alone may shine and surmount all things. Whence it followes, that God then inioyes that which belongs vnto him in ỹ middest of vs, and that honor which none ought to depriue him of, when all creatures are brought within compasse, and that he alone shines, and is the light of our eyes.

CHAP.

THE XXV. CHAPTER.

Verſ. 1. O Lord, thou art my God: I will exalt thee, I will praiſe thy name: for thou haſt done wonderfull things, according to the counſels of olde, with a ſtable trueth.

HItherunto Iſaiah hath prophecied of Gods iudgements, which hung not ouer the head of one people alone, but almoſt of the whole world. Now it was impoſſible that the conſideration of ſo many calamities which hee foreſaw would fall vpon them, ſhould not worke great ſorrow and trouble of mind in him. For thoſe that are of an vpright heart, deſire that all the world might bee ſaued. And as they thirſt after Gods glory, ſo they cannot but loue all the works of his hands: by how much the more then a man is poſſeſſed with the true feare of God, the more neerely is hee touched to the quicke with the feeling of his iudgements. In the meane while, the wicked are beſotted when he manifeſts the ſame, and will not be moued for any terrours whatſoeuer: the godly on the contrary quake at the leaſt ſigne of his diſpleaſure. If wee haue experience of this, what thinke we the Prophet felt, who ſaw all theſe calamities which hee foretold, before his eyes as in a glaſſe? For the Miniſters of the word muſt needes bee much more effectually affected with the ſight of ſuch things, then the common ſort, that the ſame may be as it were a ſeale vnto them of the trueth of their doctrine.

The Lord then hauing ſet theſe horrible deſolations before the Prophet as in a table, it was neceſſarie, that being moued with ſorrow and griefe, he ſhould turne his eyes vnto the Lord; for otherwiſe hee might haue been intangled with confuſed paſſions, and great diſquietneſſe of minde. And therefore being aſſured that the Lord would prouide for his Church in the middeſt of theſe tempeſts, and that hee would gather in thoſe vnder the wings of his power, which before were ſcattered farre off, hee takes courage vnto him. Wee ſee then that Iſaiah continues conſtant in his vocation, without being daunted or any way diſcouraged: but rather relying alwaies vpon the aſſurance of obtaining mercy; and therefore hee continues to celebrate the praiſes of the Lord his God.

By this we may ſee, that this thankſgiuing depends vpon the former prophecies; and that Iſaiah reſpects not that which hee hath foretold alone, but alſo what end the Lord aimed at, in this execution: that is to ſay, why he afflicted ſo many nations with ſuch diuerſities of puniſhments; namely, that he might bring vnder thoſe which were before vnrulie, and ouerflowed in a brutiſh ſenſualtie; who as they had no feare of God before their eyes; ſo had they no ſenſe of religion or godlineſſe at all.

Thou art my God.] Being perplexed and confounded in himſelfe, he ſuddenly turnes his thoughts vnto God, as we haue ſaid. Whence we may gather a very profitable doctrine; to wit, that when our mindes are toſſed to and fro with diuers cogitations, in regard of the many miſeries and calamities which daily happen; that we by and by flee vnto God, reſting our ſelues vpon his onely prouidence: for we ſhall be at our wits end euen for the wagging of a ſtraw, if wee haue not this doctrine for our refuge, by ſuſtaining our hearts therewith. But the better to ſee the Prophets meaning, wee may well adde a particle aduerſatiue here, in this ſenſe; Although I be now oppreſſed with many temptations on euery ſide, yet will I ſtill acknowledge thee to be my God. And thus he voweth to giue vnto God that praiſe, which vnto him appertaineth; which none of vs can doe, vnleſſe an aſſured perſwaſion of Gods grace doe raigne and beare ſway in our hearts: from whence ſprings that ioy, which affords vs exceeding ample matter of praiſes, when being certaine of our ſaluation, we are aſſured that the Lord is our God. For all thoſe that are not caried with an affection to magnifie Gods goodnes in the middeſt of their ſorrowes, know not what faith is, neither yet did they euer taſte the ſweetneſſe of his mercy: for if wee haue a ſure confidence in God, we muſt of neceſſitie extoll his name with ioy and gladneſſe of heart.

What ought to be our refuge in time of deep diſtreſſes.

The aſſurace of Gods ſauour giues vs ample matter of ioy and reioicing, euen in the greateſt troubles.

A wonderfull thing.] The ſingular number is put for the plurall. Now the Prophet reſts not in the contemplation of preſent things, but rather lookes to the end of them: for you ſhall haue euen profane men that will be affected at the wonderfull euents of things which fall out in the gouernement of the world, and will ſtand amazed thereat; as no doubt the Tyrians, Sidonians, Babylonians, and Moabites did. But none could benefit themſelues by this ſight, but ſuch as therewithall had a taſte and feeling of Gods wiſdome and goodneſſe: for without that, men doe rather ſcorne and deſpiſe ſuch workes, then apprehend the excellencie of them: becauſe they looke not to the end that God aimeth at; to wit, that by drawing light out of darkneſſe, he is wont after a wonderfull manner, to raiſe vp and reuiue his Church in the middeſt of death; orders and diſpoſeth rightly and to good vſe, thoſe things which the wit of man conceiues to be exceedingly confuſed.

The faithfull may bee daunted for a time, but faith gets the victorie.

Who they are that profit by the view of Gods works.

1. Cor. 4. 6.

How God is wont to deale with his Church.

But the better to ſet forth the commendation of Gods prouidence, he addes, The counſels ordained of old: as if he ſhould ſay, Nothing falles falles out ſuddenly, or at randome, in reſpect of God. And indeede, albeit to vs it often ſeemes he doth things vtterlie at vnawares, yet is it moſt certaine that he hath foreſeene and appointed all of thē ſo to come to paſſe before the creation of the world. By theſe words then the Prophet meant to ſay, that all the wonders which happen beyond the expectation of men, flow from the order of this moderation which God keeps in the gouernment and diſpoſition of all things from the beginning, vnto the end.

Now becauſe we are not able to attaine to his ſecret counſels, and that our wits can not mount ſo high, we muſt be brought to the manifeſtation of that which for the preſent is hidden from vs, and is aboue our reach, till ſuch time as the Lord diſcouer the ſame vnto vs by his word: by which he applies himſelfe to our weakenes, becauſe his ſecret counſell is incomprehenſible. Iſaiah therefore deſcends by and by from theſe hidden ordinances of God to the doctrine of the word and the promiſes therein cōtained, which doubtleſſe he comprehends vnder the word Truth. For this repetition ſhould be to little purpoſe vnleſſe he had had ſome relation in this word: for after God hath by it reuealed his counſell vnto vs, then he properlie appeares to be true if we beleeue and credit his ſayings. Thus then the Prophet commends the ſtablenes and certentie of the word when he calles it a ſtable truth, as if he ſhould ſay, All things which God pronounceth, and proceed from him, is ſtable and immoueable.

Iſaiah deſcends from Gods ſecret will to his reuealed will.

Verſ. 2. For thou haſt made of a Citie an heape, of a ſtrong Citie a ruine: euen the palace of ſtrangers of a Citie, it ſhall neuer be built.

SOme referre this to Ieruſalem: but I rather thinke it to be a change of the number only, which is a thing very vſuall among the Prophets: for Iſaiah ſpeakes not of one Citie alone, but of many, which he foretels ſhould be laid vpon heapes. Whereas others take it, that Ieruſalem ſerued for a palace to the Romanes, they come nothing nigh the Prophets meaning; which will plainely appeere if we call to mind what hath been ſaid before, to wit, that the Prophet buſies not himſelfe in thinking of the ſcourges wherwith God hath afflicted diuers nations, but rather aimes at the end and iſſue of them. For by them the Lord purpoſed to ſubdue and tame the pride and rebellion of men, whom he could neuer haue ſubdued vnto himſelfe, vnleſſe they had been ſmitten with diuers calamities. Moreouer, Iſaiah ſaith not only that ſtrangers ſhall inhabit the ſurprized Cities, out of which they were driuen that dwelt in them: for ſo that which he by and by addes would not agree, to wit, that the palace ſhall be no more a Citie: but his meaning is, that vagabonds who ſhould haue no place of abode at all, ſhall find ſufficient roome there, becauſe the inhabitants ſhal betake them to their heeles. Now becauſe Armon ſignifies goodly houſes, he ſaith by way of deriſion, that theeues ſhall dwell there as in Palaces, in regard of the great ſpace which ſhould lie waſte like vnto a deſert.

Verſ. 3. Therefore ſhall the mightie people giue glorie vnto thee: the Citie of the ſtrong nations ſhall feare thee.

SEe heere the end, whereof I haue ſpoken in the firſt verſe: for if the Lord ſhould deſtroy the world, no fruit would come of it, ſuch a deſolation could ingender nothing but horror; neither would it euer bring vs neeter vnto God to praiſe him: nay contrariwiſe we muſt needs remaine as blocks whē we only feele his wrath: for praiſes proceed from the feeling of his fauor and goodnes. It is all one then as if he had ſaid, Lord, thou wilt not only ſmite and afflict, but wilt alſo effect, that ỹ wounds which thou makeſt ſhall not be without fruit. For by them thou wilt beate downe the pride of men, to the end that thoſe which in times paſt were ſtrangers frō thee, may now ſtoope vnder thine obedience. Hence we learne how neceſſarie chaſtiſements be, for by them we are taught to glorifie God; whereas proſperitie puffs vs vp in ſuch wiſe that we diſhonor him, and thinke we may doe what we liſt: we alſo runne out and range ouer all the fields whē God deales louinglie with vs. The neceſſitie of afflictions.

The Prophet addes the word feare, to ſhew, that this praiſe conſiſts neither in words nor outward geſtures, but in the ſound and ſincere affection of the heart. Whence wee gather, that he heere ſpeakes of the whole worſhip of God. Now becauſe many thinke themſelues well diſcharged when they haue made confeſſion with their lips only, Iſaiah the better to expound his owne meaning addes, The nations ſhall feare thee. Now in calling them ſtrong and mightie, by ſuch epithites he meanes the pride and loftines of thoſe who are puffed vp with their proſperitie: for they exalt themſelues againſt God, ſo as they can not poſſiblie be humbled and brought downe, vnleſſe they be quite ſtripped of all things. You ſee now whether our thoughts are to retire in ỹ calamities which we ſee to fall out dayly: mens pride muſt needs be repreſſed and abated, that they may be prepared to imbrace holy doctrine, and to walke in ſound obedience. Whileſt they are beſotted with their riches and vaine hopes, they feare not to contemne the iudgements of God, and hold him out at the ſtaues end, as they ſay. We muſt reioyce in trembling, Pſal. 2. 11. & 5. 7.

Verſ. 4. For thou haſt been a ſtrength to the poore, euen a ſtrength to the needie in his trouble, a refuge againſt the tempeſt, a ſhadow againſt the heate: for the blaſt of the mightie is like a ſtorme againſt the wall.

BEhold here the fruit of conuerſion. How? The Lord raiſeth vs from death, deliuers vs from the graue, by ſtretching out his hand from heauen to pluck vs out of the iawes of hell, hell. This is the firſt entrance he giues vs, for hee findes nothing but our miſerie for his mercy to worke vpon. Wee muſt therefore feele our ſelues poore and helpleſſe, before we can ſee what neede we haue of his power: yea, it is neceſſary that we be ſtripped of all confidence and ſelfe truſt, before he will reueale his ſtrength in vs. For this cauſe he firs and frames vs by rods and chaſtiſements, as by inſtruſtions, to come to the feeling of his fauour and aſſiſtance. It is not without good cauſe then that Iſaiah deckes this deſcription with ſo many ſimilitudes: for hee thereby meetes with many and great temptations, vnder which weake man would neuer be able to ſtand, were he not fortified and ſuſtained with ſuch props.

And therefore hee ſaith, that God will bee ſtrength to the poore, a refuge againſt the tempeſt, and a ſhadow againſt the heate: for what dangers ſoeuer befall vs, the Lord wil defend his owne againſt them, and will arme vs with all kinds of armour to reſiſt them. The Spirit in this place, as in many others, ſignifies winde, and it is taken for a violent ſtorme wherewith the wicked are carried to ruſh againſt the children of God: for they not onely threaten and terrifie, but alſo ſpit out fire it ſelfe, as to conſume them all. Hereunto appertaines that which is added of the tempeſt, or, ouerflowing againſt the wall: by which figure his meaning is, that the wicked runne with ſuch force, when they haue libertie to doe euill, that they ouerthrow whatſoeuer ſtands in their way: for it is a greater matter to breake downe and ouerthrow walles, then if water ſhould onely ſpread it ſelfe ouer the earth.

Verſ. 5. Thou ſhalt bring downe the noiſe of the ſtrangers, as the heate in a dry place: he will bring downe the ſong of the mightie, as the heate in the ſhadow in a cloud.

IF the Lord were not on our ſide, when violent men ſet themſelues againſt vs, wee ſhould be vtterly ſwallowed vp: for wee ſee how great the rage of the wicked is. Alas, if they be able to ouerturne ſtout walles, how can a poore man bee able to ſtand againſt them? This is added then to ſet forth the goodneſſe of almightie God, that we might know in what an ill caſe wee ſhould be in, if God did not ſuccour vs. The expoſitours take the ſimilitude two waies: ſome thinke that as the vehemēt heat burnes vp the fields, which of themſelues are dry and barren; ſo the wrath of God ſhall conſume and burne vp the wicked: others tranſlate, As the heat; and then the ſenſe is; Howſoeuer the wicked relie vpon their power, and therefore are thus boiſterous, the Lord notwithſtanding will bring them downe in a moment, as if they were ſurpriſed with heat in a dry place.

But I take the ſenſe to be otherwiſe: for hauing ſhewed how great the rage of the wicked is againſt the faithfull, he addes, Lord thou wilt humble them. But how? He alludes vnto the deluge; which ſimilitude he vſed before, Chap. 24. 18. Thou wilt bring downe their heat, ſaith hee, which otherwiſe muſt needes conſume vs: euen as the raine falling from heauen, cooles the heate which would burne vp the fields for want of moiſture. And thus the text hangs well together; whereas the other expoſition is conſtrained, and offers violence to the very letter, as they ſay.

The latter part of the verſe is expounded diuers waies: ſome tranſlate the word Zemir, Seede: others, a Roore: as if the Prophet had ſaid, The Lord will not onely cut off the wicked, but will plucke them vp by the verie rootes. This were probable, if the ſimilitude of heat would beare it: and therefore thoſe who turne it ſong, cry, or, waſte; in my iudgement, doe come neereſt the Prophets meaning, albeit they touch it not fully. Well, he confirmes the former ſentence; to wit, that the violence or cry of the wicked, who proudly exalt themſelues, ſhall ſuddenly fall, euen as the heat of the Sunne when anie raine followes: which is ſignified by the ſhadow of the cloud.

Verſ. 6. And in this mountaine ſhall the Lord of hoſtes make vnto all the people a feaſt of fat things, euen a feaſt of fined wines and of fat things full of marowe, of wines fined and purified.

THey alſo diuerſly interpret this place: for ſome thinke the Prophet threatens the Iewes, and that in ſuch ſort, as if he called diuers nations to the feaſt: which phraſe of ſpeech is often found in other places; becauſe it is ſaid, that the Lord feedes the wicked fat againſt the day of ſlaughter. They thinke then that the Gentiles are called to the banquet, the Iewes being made their pray: as if the Lord ſhould ſay; I haue prepared a goodly banquet for the Gentiles; to wit, the Romans ſhall ſacke and ſpoile the Iewes. But as I thinke, this ſenſe cannot ſtand, neither ſhall there neede any long refutation, when I ſhall haue acquainted you with the true meaning. Others expound it, as if Iſaiah ſhould ſpeake of Gods wrath thus; The Lord will make a feaſt to all people, he will make them drinke the cup of his wrath, till they be drunken therewith. But the Prophet meant nothing leſſe: for he goes on ſtill to ſet forth the grace of God, which ſhould be manifeſted at the comming of Chriſt. Vſing the verie ſame ſimilitude with that in the 22. Pſalme, verſ. 26. where Dauid deſcribes the Kingdome of Chriſt, ſaying; that the poore as well as the rich, ſhall partake of this banquet, and ſhall eate their fill: by which, hee ſignifies that no nation ſhall be exempt from hauing part in this benefit. At the firſt, it ſeemed that the Lord onely feaſted the Iewes, becauſe they alone were his adopted people, and entertained at this banquet as thoſe of his owne houſhold: but now he accepts of the Gentiles alſo, and ſheds forth his graces vpon all nations. There is here then a cloſe oppoſition when he ſaith to all people, for formerlie he was knowne but to one nation.

The Iewes were firſt feaſted alone.

But now the Gentiles are partakers thereof with them.

The feaſt of fat things is to be vnderſtood of fat beaſts. Some tranſlate the word Shemanim, lees, or dregs, but very improperlie: for by this word he meanes old wines, which we commonlie call old ſtore, which are better then ordinarie, but ſpeciallie in ỹ Eaſt, where they beare their age beſt. He calles the liquors wherein no lees appeere, neate and fined wines. To be ſhort, it appeares ſufficientlie that neither Iewes nor Gentiles are threatned in this place, but that both of them rather are inuited to a goodly banket. This may the better be vnderſtood by the words of Chriſt himſelfe, where he compares Math. 22.2. the kingdome of heauen to a Mariage feaſt which the King prepared for his ſonne, vnto which all were indifferentlie called, becauſe they which were bidden before would not come. For mine owne part, I make no queſtion but Iſaiah ſpeakes here of the preaching of the Goſpell. Therefore in as much as the doctrine thereof came from the mountaine of Zion, he ſaith, that all nations ſhall come to feaſt there: for when God offred the heauenly food wherewith mens ſoules are fed, vnto all the world; it was as if he had erected a table for all commers.

The Lord now dayly inuiteth vs to fill and inrich our ſoules with all good things: and to that end he raiſeth vp faithfull teachers, 1 by whoſe miniſtrie he prepares his dainties 2 for vs, and withall giues force and power to his word, that we might be repleniſhed and ſatisfied. As touching the word Mountaine, albeit Gods meſſengers come not from Mount Zion to giue vs food, yet by this word we are to vnderſtand the Church, out of which none can partake of theſe benefits; for ſuch dainties are not to be found in the ſtreets nor hie waies; this table is not ſpread euery where, neither doth euery place afford vs this banket. The Church is the place then where we muſt come to keepe this feaſt. Now the Prophet notes this mountaine eſpeciallie, in regard God was there worſhipped, & no where elſe: yea both theſe reuelations, as alſo the Goſpell came from thence. Whereas he ſaith this banket ſhall be ſumptuous and royallie furniſhed, it appertaines to the praiſe of the doctrine of the Goſpell; for it is a ſpirituall food to nouriſh and refreſh our ſoules, yea, ſo wholeſome and excellent, that we neede ſeeke no further.

Verſ. 7. And he will deſtroy in this mountaine the couering that couereth all people, and the vaile that is ſpread ouer all nations.

THe interpreters alſo varie vpõ this place, for ſome by the word couering vnderſtand the ſhame wherewith the faithfull are ſo couered in this world, that the glorie of God ſeemes not to ſhine in them: as if he ſhould ſay, Albeit the faithfull be ouerwhelmed with many diſgraces, yet the Lord will deliuer them from them all, and make their eſtate glorious. I let paſſe other expoſitions: but the true meaning as I thinke is, that the Lord here promiſeth to take away that vaile which held them in ignorance and blindnes. Theſe obſcurities then were ſcattered and driuen away by the light of the Goſpel. Now he ſaith that this ſhall be done in the mountaine of Zion, whence the light of the word in very deede ſhined thorowout the world, as wee haue ſeene heretofore.

The light of the Goſpell ſcatters the darknes of ignorance.

Chap. 2.3.

This text then muſt be referred to the kingdome of Chriſt: for the light ſhined not vpon all men till Chriſt the ſunne of righteouſnes aroſe, who tooke away all vailes, couerings and wrappings. Here we haue then another commendation or praiſe of the Goſpell, to wit, that all darknes ſhall be diſperſed by the light thereof, yea and all vailes of error ſhall be taken from our eyes. Whence it followes that we are enwrapped and blinded with darknes of ignorance till we be inlightened with the doctrine of the Goſpell, which only is of force to giue both light and life, and perfectlie to frame vs new. This place alſo confirmes the calling of vs Gentiles: for the Iewes are not only bidden to this banquet, but all nations, who before were ouerwhelmed as it were in all maner of errors and ſuperſtitions.

Mal. 4.2. Chriſt the Sunne of righteouſnes.

We remaine in darknes and in the ſhadow of death till the light of the Goſpell ſhines vpon vs.

Verſ. 8. He will deſtroy death for euer: and the Lord will wipe away the teares from all faces, and the rebuke of his people will he take away out of the earth: for the Lord hath ſpoken it.

THe Prophet goes on ſtill with the matter in hand, for in ſumme, he promiſeth that there ſhal be perfect felicitie vnder the kingdome of Chriſt. And the better to expreſſe it, he vſeth many figures very fitting and agreeable for his preſent purpoſe. True felicitie ſtands not in earthlie nor tranſitorie things, but in that which can not be taken from vs by death: for in the chiefeſt delights the pleaſure thereof is much diminiſhed, becauſe they can not laſt always. He ioines two things together then which make happines full and compleate: firſt, that a man may liue euer (for it is a miſerable thing for them to die which otherwiſe were once happie for a time) ſecondly, that this life be ioined with ioy, for without that death ſeemes better then a life full of trouble & calamities. Further he adds, that all rebuke being taken away, this life ſhall be glorious: for otherwiſe the wofull oppreſſion of the people which they indured might haue ſeemed to contradict this propheſie. But ſome may aske to what time theſe promiſes ſhould be referred: for whilſt we are in this world we muſt fight againſt many aſſaults, and that without any intermiſſion: ſo as we are not deſtinate to die once only, but euery day. To which purpoſe S. Paul complaines, that he and the chiefe pillars of the Church in his time were gazing-ſtocks vnto

Wherein true happines conſiſts.

all

all the world ſuſtaining all ſorts of reproches, being eſteemed no better then the offcouring and refuſe of the ſame. In what time, or when are theſe things fulfilled then? No doubt they are to bee referred to the whole Kingdome of Chriſt: and I doe expreſly ſay to his whole Kingdome, becauſe we muſt not onely conſider the beginnings of it, but alſo the end and full accompliſhment thereof. So that we are to ſtretch theſe promiſes vnto the ſecond comming of Chriſt, which for this cauſe is called the day of redemption; and of reſtauration; in regard that thoſe things which as now ſeeme confuſed, ſhall then bee reſtored to full perfection, and ſhall put on a new forme.

Anſ.

These and the like promiſes muſt be applied not onely to the beginnings, but to the whole progreſſe of Chriſts kingdome. Luk. 21. 28. Rom. 8. 23. Acts 3. 21. Eph. 4. 10. Pſa. 126. 5.

I grant that it appertained alſo to the deliuerance from Babylon; but in as much as that was but the beginning and entrance into this, it is certaine that this promiſe muſt be prolonged till the laſt day. Let vs bend all our ſenſes and hopes vnto that then, and we may be well aſſured that the Lord in the end will perfect all things in vs, after we haue finiſhed our courſe. Be it that we now ſowe in teares, we ſhall then doubtleſſe reape with ioy and gladneſſe. Let vs not feare the ſcornes nor threats of the mightie ones; for God vſeth this as a meanes by which in the end he will bring vs vnto eternall glory. And ſeeing we haue here already taſted the beginnings of this felicitie and happineſſe, as ſoone as God adopteth vs, and that we begin to beare the image of Chriſt; let vs with conſtancy and patience wait the accompliſhment thereof till the laſt day.

As we haue taſted the beginnings of this happineſſe, ſo muſt our hope hold on till we ſee the accompliſhment thereof in the laſt day.

But in regard the matter might ſeeme incredible after ſo many horrible calamities, Iſaiah tels them that this proceeded not from man, but from God. For after the Temple was raced to the ground, Ieruſalem deſtroyed, the ſeruice of God aboliſhed, and the ſmall remnant of the people that remained were oppreſſed vnder tyrannie; who would euer haue beleeued that theſe things could haue been reſtored to their firſt perfection? Hee preuents this incredulitie therefore, vnto which men are ouermuch inclined, and confirmes, yea and ſeales vp theſe promiſes with this concluſion; Know ye for certaine, that the Lord is the author of this my meſſage: in him therefore repoſe all your thoghts, & not vpon me: reſt your faith on him, who neuer was, nor neuer will bee found falſe of his word: Tit. 1. 2.

The word of the Lord a ſolid foundation for our faith to reſt vpon.

Verſ. 9. And in that day ſhall men ſay; Loe, this is our God: wee haue waited for him, and hee will ſaue vs: This is the Lord, wee haue waited for him: wee will reioyce and bee glad in his ſalvation.

AND they ſhall ſay.] The verbe is indefinit, and ſhould be tranſlated, He ſhall ſay: but becauſe he ſpeakes of that which All, and not one or two, ſhould ſay: I had rather turne it, Men ſhall ſay. This is a very good concluſion, ſeeing thereby they ſhew that theſe benefits of God are not ſtinted nor ſcanted to a few, but that men both receiue and feele them by effect. His meaning is then, that God prepares not this banquet (mentioned verſ. 6.) in vaine; in regard men are ſatisfied therewith, and reioyce with an eternall ioy. For this gladſome voyce which he foretels ſhould be publike, is a reall ſigne and teſtimonie) as you would ſay) of Gods grace. This place ought to be diligently obſerued of vs; for the Prophet therein ſhewes, that there ſhall bee ſuch a manifeſtation, that it ſhal retaine mens mindes in the word of God, ſo as they ſhall wholly reſt in it, without any doubting at all.

But if theſe things appertaine to Chriſts Kingdome, as they doe indeed, wee receiue great fruit thereby. What? Chriſtians haue now that certaine trueth, in which they may boldly reſt; vnleſſe they forget themſelues, and reiect the grace of God. For it is manifeſted vnto all, & hath taken frō them all occaſion of doubting; ſo as they may ſafely boaſt, that they truely know what his will is: yea, we may ſay, and that truely, as Ieſus Chriſt ſaid to the woman of Samaria, We worſhip that which we know: Iohn 4. 22. Therefore, in as much as we are aſſured by the Goſpell, of that grace which is offered vs in Ieſus Chriſt, we wander not any more in vncertaine coniectures, as many doe, but we imbrace God and his pure ſeruice; ſo as we boldly bid adiew to all humane inuentions.

What vſe we are to make of this certeintie of trueth, now reuealed vnto vs in the Goſpell.

The oppoſition alſo is to bee noted betweene the little and obſcure knowledge which the Fathers had vnder the Law, and that fulneſſe of knowledge which ſhineth now in the Goſpell: for albeit God vouchſafed the people of old, the light of his heauenly truth; yet it did appeare more familiarly by Chriſt, as it is ſaid in the firſt of S. Iohn, verſ. 14. 18. The Prophet therefore now extols and ſets forth that aſſured confidence which the onely Sonne of God reuealing his Father, hath brought vnto vs at his comming. Beſides, as in this behalfe we haue a much greater prerogatiue then the ancient people had, in regard that the reconciliation made by Chriſt, ſets the Lord more at one with vs: ſo God cannot bee otherwiſe knowne but in Chriſt, who is his liuely image, and the ingrauen forme of his ſubſtance: Heb. 1. 3. He that knowes not the Sonne, the ſame knowes not the Father. Howſoeuer the Turkes, Iewes, and other infidels boaſt, that they worſhippe God the Creator of heauen and earth; yet in ſo doing, they worſhip nought but the deuice of their owne braine. And albeit they be obſtinate, yet they follow nothing but vncertaine and falſe opinions, in ſtead of the truth: they grope in darkeneſſe, and worſhip their owne imaginations in ſtead of God. In a word, all religion out of Chriſt is falſe and deceitfull; all ſeruices are deteſtable, & ought boldly to be condemned.

God cannot be knowne but in Chriſt Ioh. 14. 7.

Turkes and Iewes not acknowledging God in Chriſt, worſhip their owne imaginations in ſtead of God.

All religions out of Chriſt deteſtable.

But it is not without cauſe that the Prophet vſeth theſe two wordes, Behold, this is, &c. For therein he teſtifies, that God is ſurely preſent, and a little after, in mentioning faith, and assurance, he sets forth the constancie of those who worship God in Christ. It is certaine that we can not comprehend the Lord in his Maiestie, for he dwels in light which no man can attaine vnto, the which would certainly ouerwhelme vs, if we should presume to aspire thereunto. And therefore he applies himselfe to our weaknes, communicating himselfe vnto vs in Iesus Christ, by whom he makes vs partakers of his wisdome, righteousnes, and all other his benefits.

Note also, that the Prophet doubles his speech, This is our God, This is the Lord.

This is also an excellent point, for in calling Christ the God of the faithfull, he giues him the title of The eternall: whence we gather, 1 that the true eternitie of God is comprehended in his person. Moreouer, seeing Christ is 2 thus manifested by the Gospell, it reproues the wicked vnthankfulnes of those who being discontented with this perfect manifestation of him, haue dared to adde vaine speculations of their owne, as we may see in the Papacie.

We haue waited for him.] Now hee expresseth that constancie and perseuerance which those should haue that haue once imbraced God in Christ: for this was not to be a temporarie knowledge, but such, as wherein we must stedfastlie perseuere vnto the end. Now Esaiah speakes in the person of the auncient Church which then had her proper seate only among the Iewes. And therefore contemning all other gods which were worshipped in other places, he confidentlie affirmes that he only which was manifested vnto Abraham, and published in the Law by the ministrie of Moses, is the true God: for other nations which were plunged in darknes and ignorance waited not for him: in regard that this waiting proceeds from faith, which is accompanied with patience; and faith is neuer separate from the word. He admonisheth the faithful then that their saluation hangs vpon expectation and hope, because the promises of God were somewhat deferred till Christes comming. Furthermore we haue also to consider what the condition of these times were, for it seemed that Gods promise was either disanulled; or that he had reiected the posteritie of Abraham. Truely, howsoeuer they beheld the promise a farre off, yet God did in no sort reueale himselfe vnto them at that time: it was needfull therefore that they should be endued with a wonderful patience, to sustaine so heauie afflictions and temptations. This is the cause why he commands them to wait patientlie for the comming of Christ, for then they should perfectlie feele how neere the Lord is to thé that serue him.

Gen. 15. 1. Exod. 20.

Now this very doctrine ought to quiet and calme our troubled spirits at this day, to the end we may wait for the Lord with a sure and inuincible hope; although our saluation be yet hidden, and that we say of him when he seemes to be far off, Behold him. Let vs learne also in the midst of the greatest confusions, to discerne him by this marke, This is the Lord. For the words thémselues, although he speakes in the time past, to wit, We haue reioiced, and are glad, yet the words import a continuall act: and a little before he spake in the time to come, He will saue vs. The summe is, that Christ will neuer disappoint those that are his, of their hope, prouided that they call vpon him with calme and quiet affections.

Christ neuer disappoints his of their hope, if with calme affections they call vpon him.

Vers. 10. For in this mountaine shall the hand of the Lord rest, and Moab shall be threshed vnder him, euen as straw is threshed in * Madmenah.

* Or, In the dunghill.

I Doubt not but the Prophets intent in the beginning of this verse is to comfort the Iewes: who wanting this, might haue thought that God had vtterlie forsaken and cast them off. For whereas some expound it of the affliction which the Lord would bring vpon the Iewes, I see no reason of it at all. But it is rather as if the Prophet should say, The Lord will alwaies assist his Church. I know well that the hand of the Lord is also said to rest vpon the reprobate, when without ceasing he continues to presse them with his vengeance till he haue vtterlie ouerthrowne them: but hand in this place is rather taken for succor, then for corrections: for the verb, shall rest, signifies a perpetuall watch and defence.

Hence wee gather a very profitable doctrine, to wit, that albeit God do shed forth infinit store of his benefits ouer all the earth, so as the vnbeleeuers themselues haue their part of them, yet notwithstanding his hand helps not continuallie, neither doth it rest any where but vpon his holy Mountaine, that is to say, vpon his Church where he is serued and worshipped. We are also to obserue, that Ierusalem was brought vnder the rod before she felt these graces: for before he denounced the iudgements of God against her; and now he addes a consolation thereunto.

A doctrine of singular fruit.

Gods continuall help proper only to his Church.

The Prophets mingle consolatiõs with denuntiatiõs.

In the second part of the verse he redoubles this mercie of God as it were. Why? Because in correcting the enemies of his Church he testifies how deere and pretious the saluation thereof is vnto him. The Iewes had scarcely any greater enemies vnto them then the Moabites, as may be seene thorowout the bookes of the Prophets; notwithstanding there was some alliance betweene them. Now vnder the name of the Moabites he cõprehends all the enemies of ẏ Church, but speciallie those with whom they had any affinitie, which commonlie proue the worst of all. He shewes then, that albeit for a time they plaid rex, and oppressed the Church by tyrannie, yet themselues at last should be brought downe. His purpose in this is to preuent the worst, lest the faithfull should be discouraged in aduersitie, thinking their case miserable whilest the wicked euery way triumphed ouer them: for the threshing whereof he heere speakes, shall follow soone after. If we therefore at this day see the Church of God afflicted and troubled by those that in shew haue some acquaintance and league with vs, yea such as take vpon them the name and title of the Church, yet let vs susteine and comfort our hearts by this promise.

Whereas we haue turned the Hebrew word Madmenah, a Dunghill; some take it to be the name name of a Citie; whereof Ieremiah makes mention, Chap. 48.2. But what if wee ſay, that the Prophet alludes to this Citie, which ſtood (as it is verie likely) in a fat and fertile ſoile, and that hee thus gaules and preſſeth the Moabites the more? as if hee ſhould ſay; Euen as ſtraw is threſhed in their fields, ſo the Lord will threſh the Moabites. I reiect not the other interpretations; yet I ſee no inconuenience if we ſay, that he had reſpect to the fruitfulneſſe of the land in which this Citie ſtood. And in reading it ſo, I haue not feared to follow the common conſent.

Verſ. 11. And hee ſhall ſtretch out his hand in the middeſt of them, (as hee that ſwimmeth ſtretcheth them out to ſwimme) and with the ſtrength of his handes ſhall hee bring downe their pride.

NOw the Prophet both expounds and confirmes the former ſentence; yet it is by way of another ſimilitude: whereby hee giues them to vnderſtand, that the Lord will ſtretch out his hand into the verie middeſt of Moabs Country, and will not lightly touch ſome corners or out places thereof. Some expound this ſimilitude thus; Euen as men ſtretch forth their armes in ſwimming, ſo the Lord will chaſtiſe the Moabites on this ſide and on that.

Others thinke he ſpeakes of inflicting manifold puniſhments vpon them: as if hee ſhould ſay; The Lord will not correct the Moabites once onely, but will bee reuenged on them the ſecond, yea the third time, for the crueltie which they exerciſed vpon his children. But we may expound this ſimilitude another way; They that ſwimme we know vſe not to caſt themſelues in violently, but they goe gently to worke, and ſpread out their armes very ſoftly; and yet in the meane while, they cut and paſſe thorow the water: So the Lord will not often vſe his greateſt forces to confound the wicked, but wil eaſilie, without weapõs or great tumults, bring thẽ to deſtruction, how valiant or well furniſhed ſoeuer they ſeemed to be. This expoſition of the ſimilitude pleaſeth me beſt, becauſe it doth in nothing depraue the former ſenſe, & giues vs to vnderſtand, that God oftentimes brings the wicked to nothing by his power, although he doe not euer and anon thunder from heauen in the ſight of all the world. Whereas he ſaith, he will doe this in the middeſt of it, he ſhewes that there is no corner ſo cloſe, into which this vengeance of God ſhall not pierce.

Verſ. 12. The defence alſo of the height of thy walles ſhall he bring downe and lay low, and caſt them to the ground, euen to the duſt.

NOw hee directs his ſpeech againſt the Country of Moab. Moab was well fortified and ſwelled with pride, in regard of their walles and bulwarkes: therefore he ſaith, that the high towers, and other ſtrong and impregnable places ſhould ſerue them to no purpoſe. They of old vſed another kinde of fortification then we doe now at this day, as is well knowne. It is not without cauſe that he here vſeth three words for the better expreſſing of his owne meaning; to wit, I will bring downe, lay low, and caſt to the ground: for it was needfull that this pride of the Moabites wherewith they were puffed vp, ſhould bee beaten downe, becauſe they were become intollerable; as we haue ſeene in the 15. Chapter, verſ. 6. The Prophet then derides them: as if he ſhould ſay; Oh, it ſeemes the Lord cannot bring downe this height of yours, in which you ſo much glory. The particle, To the duſt, is as much as if he had ſaid; He will not onely race to the ground, but will bring it to duſt, that there ſhall not remaine ſo much as any mention of the old ruines. This place A conſolatiõ. containes in it therefore an excellent and verie apt conſolation: for our enemies at this day are ſo bold, that they deſpiſe not men alone, but euen God himſelfe: they are ſo proud, and ſo puffed vp in regard of their power, that they thinke themſelues inuincible. But it is our parts to oppoſe this ſentence of the Prophet againſt them and all their forces and munitions; to wit, the Lord will eaſilie bring all theſe things to nought. In the meane while, wee muſt patiently beare the hurt that comes vnto vs by reaſon of their power and ſtrength, vntill the certaine and prefixed time of their ruine approcheth. Let Patience haue her perfect worke.

THE XXVI. CHAPTER.

Verſ. 1. In that day ſhall this ſong be ſung in the land of Iudah: Wee haue a ſtrong Citie, ſaluation ſhall God ſet for the walles and bulwarks.

THE Prophet begins againe in this place to ſhew, that God will hold the people in his protection, after their returne out of captiuitie, and that Ieruſalẽ ſhal be inſafetie vnder his cuſtodie, no leſſe then if it were cõpaſſed about with fortreſſes, tamparts, ditches, & double wals; ſo as the enemies ſhould enter no waies to hutt it. But the time is to be noted when this ſong was publiſhed. The Prophet had foretold what calamities ſhould fall vpon the Church, which as yet were nothing neere, but came to paſſe after his death. Doubtleſſe the people might haue deſpaired in their captiuitie, if theſe promiſes had not vpheld them. To the end the Iewes then might haue ſome aſſurance of their deliuerance, and in the middeſt of death might espie life approching: the Prophet composed this song before the troubles happened: why? that they might learne betimes to beare their miseries patiently, and to hope for better things. For it was not penned onely (as I thinke) for a thanksgiuing which the Iewes should sing after their deliuerance; but also that in their captiuity it selfe, they might confirme their hearts with confidence of future comfort, and might teach their children to hope for it, leauing these promises as it were from hand to hand, to their posteritie, although for the present they seemed but dead men.

We haue told you in the 5. Chapter, why the Prophet composed these and the like songs in verse; to wit, that euery one might the better remember them by daily recording of them. Although they wept then in Babylon, and were almost ouerwhelmed with sorrow, as these words shew, How shall wee Psal. 137.4. sing the Lords song in a strange land? yet they were to hope, that after their returne into Iudea, they should giue thanks to the Lord, and sing forth his praises. The Prophet therefore shewes them their deliuerance a farre off, that they might cheerefully wait for it.

A strong Citie.] By these words the Prophet promiseth an ample and full restauration of Ierusalem, and of the people. How so? God will not onely redeeme the captiues, and gather together the dispersed, but he will also keepe them safe and sound, after hee hath brought them home. But the faithfull notwithstanding forthwith saw the destruction
2. Kin. 25.9. both of the Citie and Temple: and being
2. Chr. 36.19. come home, they could perceiue nothing but Chap. 22. those fearefull ruines which Isaiah had foretold. It was needfull then that they should behold this restauration of Ierusalem by the eye of faith, as from an high beacon or turret.

Now after these things, the Prophet shewes what the strength of this Citie shall bee; namely, The protection of God shall be in stead of walles, towers, ditches, and forts: as if hee should say; Let other Cities trust in their defences; God onely shall be the best defence that we can imagine. I reiect not their aduice who say we should reade; Hee hath set walles and bulwarkes for saluation: but in regard the Prophets wordes being simply vnderstood, containe in them a more ample and stable doctrine, what neede is there to wrest in a constrained exposition, when the true and naturall sense runnes very well; to wit, that Gods protection is more sufficient then all defences? according as it is said, Psal. 63. Thy goodnesse, Lord, is better then life: for as Dauid there confesseth, that he rests in greater securitie vnder the shadow of Gods wings, then if hee were furnished with all the succours the world could afford him: so in like manner Isaiah saith in this place, that there shall bee iust occasion of securitie, when God shall vndertake the safegard of his people.

Now in as much as this promise extends it selfe to the whole course of our redemption, we must here obserue also, that hee is at this day the protector of his Church: and that his defence therefore who keepes it, is stronger then if it were compassed about with humane helpes. If we therefore meane to rest safely, let vs dwell in the Church. And albeit we be destituted of outward munitions, yet let vs content our selues with the Lord and his vndoubted saluation, which is farre more excellent then all worldly fortresses.

Gods sole protection of his Church, stronger the all humane helpes.

Vers. 2. Open yee the gates, that the righteous nation that keepeth the trueth, may enter in.

NO doubt but many despised this song when Isaiah first published it: for in his time Ierusalem was full of bad companions, and the number of the godly were very few. But after the Prophets death, they were chastised for their impietie; for then they had some inckling that the Prophet had not foretold these things in vaine. For whilest the wicked are in prosperitie, they feare nothing, and beare themselues in hand, that they cannot be tamed. And thus the Iewes thought they could neuer be driuen out of Iudea, nor led captiues: nay, they imagined they should dwell there euer. It was needfull therefore that all occasion of swelling pride should be taken away from them: hereunto tend the Prophets words, when he saith, that the inhabitants of the new Citie shall be vnlike the first: for they shall bee faithfull and iust.

Moreouer, this promise might haue seemed ridiculous; because those which were banished and led into captiuitie, had no matter at all to reioyce of. Therefore after the destruction of the Temple and the Citie, and the ouerthrow of all estates, they might obiect, where are those gates which he commands vs to open? or where are those people that should enter in at them? And yet notwithstanding, we see these things came to passe; neither was there any thing foretold, which the Lord did not performe and accomplish. Wee ought therefore to set these antient histories before our eyes, to arme our selues with the examples contained in them, and in the middest of this confused estate in which we now see the Church to be, to hope notwithstanding that the Lord will restore it.

God is alwaies as good as his word, howsoeuer our passiõs boile within vs. What course we are to take when the Church is in a confused state.

When the Prophet mentions the iust nation that keepes the trueth; hee not onely shewes (as I haue said heeretofore) who they are to whom this promise appertaines; but therewithall, the fruit of that should come by this chastisement: for the Church being once purged from her filthinesses, her righteousnesse and holinesse should shine so much the more right. For when the Prophet wrote this song, the wicked reigned, and the good were verie thin sowen, and those also were mingled amongst the multitude, as the wheat in the chaffe. It was needfull therefore that this great troope, who had neither religion nor any feare of God should bee cut off: to the end the Lord might gather in the remnant of his Church. See now how the Lord recompenced this ruine of Ieruſalem. For whereas her citizens were before defiled with impietie, now they were conſecrated anew vnto God; elſe it had been to little purpoſe for them to haue recouered a floriſhing outward eſtate, if newnes of life, pietie and vprightnes had not alſo floriſhed amongſt them. Now as the Prophet in theſe words ſets forth the grace of God, ſo he alſo exhorts theſe redeemed people therewithall to giue themſelues to integritie of life. In a word, he teſtifies that theſe promiſes ſhall ſtand hypocrits in no ſtead, for the gates ſhall not be ſet open for them, but only for the iuſt and holy.

The Church hath alwaies been like the corne floore. Math. 3.12.

I grant the Church hath alwaies been like the corne-floore, wherein there is chaffe mingled amongſt the good corne, or rather the wheat is couered with chaffe: yet it is not to be doubted but the Church was purged in better meaſure then it was before, when the Iewes returned home out of captiuitie. For it could not be but thoſe which came back againe were led with a good and zealous affection in regard the iorney was long and tedious, as alſo, that they were ſubiect to many inconueniences and dangers in the way: In the meane while many of their nation choſe rather to continue in bondage then to goe home, thinking their eſtate who remained in Babylon much more quiet and peaceable then theirs who returned into Iudea. It muſt needs be ſome ſeed of godlines then which forced them to come and take the inioying of thoſe promiſes that were made to their fathers. But albeit the Church was then ſtained with many imperfections, yet this which the Prophet here affirmes was true in part: for the moſt of the of-ſcouring, which were mingled with them before, came not back againe; and thoſe that remained had ſomewhat profited vnder Gods corrections.

Some diſtinguiſh this ſentence thus, The iuſt nation before God, and the vpright before men. But I take it more ſimplie, to wit; After the Prophet hath mentioned the righteous nation, he by and by ſhewes that this iuſtice conſiſts in the integritie of that heart which is without fraud or guile: for nothing is more contrarie to iuſtice then hypocriſie. Now albeit the man can not be found who hath ſo well profited as to keepe iuſtice in euery reſpect perfectlie, yet we may ſay that Gods children, who aſpire vnto this vprightnes with their whole hearts, are notwithſtanding keepers of it. Vnleſſe any had rather vnderſtand it thus, that true iuſtice is here ſet forth vnder one of the parts by the figure Synecdoche, to wit, when men walke ſimplie and plainelie one with another, hauing firſt of all abandoned all naughtie and wicked practiſes.

They that aſpire to vprightnes of heart are keepers of iuſtice.

Obiect. Anſ.

But if any vpon this place ſhould go about to eſtabliſh the doctrine of merits, we ſhall eaſily anſwere them: for the Prophet ſpeakes not here of the cauſe of ſaluation, neither yet what men are by nature, but what God makes them to be by grace, and what Citizens he meant to haue in his Church; for of wolfes he can make lambs, as we haue ſeene in the 11. Chapter. But whileſt we liue in this world, we are alwaies farre off from that perfection which God requires, and therefore we ought dayly to aime ſtill vnto it: but the Lord eſteems vs only according to that good worke which he hath begun in vs, and accounts vs iuſt after he hath once brought vs into the paths of iuſtice. For when he hath begun to correct and change our hypocriſie, he doth therewithall call vs faithfull and vpright.

The Lord accounts of vs according to that which himſelfe hath wrought in vs.

Verſ. 3. * By an aſſured purpoſe thou wilt preſerue perfit peace, becauſe they truſted in thee.

* Or, It is an aſſured thought: thou wilt keepe peace, peace I ſay, for they truſted in thee.

BEcauſe the Hebrue word Ieſer ſignifies a thing made, created, or a thought, ſome tranſlate thus, Thou wilt keepe peace with an aſſured foundation: as if the Prophet meant, that thoſe who continue conſtant in the tempeſts of this world, becauſe they reſt vpon God, ſhall alwaies continue in ſafetie. Others turne it, Thou wilt keepe peace by an aſſured purpoſe, which comes almoſt to the ſame ſenſe, to wit, that thoſe who haue fixed their hearts vpon God alone ſhall be happie and bleſſed at the laſt. For God promiſeth not to be the protector of his Saincts further then they quietlie reſt vpon his good pleaſure, without wauering. But becauſe the Prophet in one word ſaith, It is a ſtable or ſtedfaſt decree, let the readers conſider, if this be not more fitlie applied vnto God: ſo as the ſenſe will be, The peace of the Church is built vpon the eternall and immutable counſell of God. For the very principall point is, that the faithfull ſtay themſelues vpon this heauenlie decree, leſt they ſhould be ſhaken by ſo many changes as dayly fall out in the world.

It is ſure that wee ought alwaies to hope ſtedfaſtlie in God, to the end wee may euermore feele his faithfulnes in keeping vs: it is requiſite alſo that the faithfull be neuer turned aſide for any doubtfull or perplexed accident, but ought to ſtick cloſe to God only: notwithſtanding the fitteſt ſenſe, and that which agrees beſt with the Prophets words is, that God hath purpoſed by an aſſured and immutable decree that all thoſe which hope in him ſhall enioy euerlaſting peace. For if this ſtedfaſt purpoſe ſhould be taken for the ſetled conſtancie of the faithfull, it were in vaine for the Prophet to adde that reaſon to his ſpeech which followeth, for they truſted in thee. Againe, both kinds of ſpeech would be improper, to ſay that a cõtinuall peace ſhould be forethought of in the conceit. But this agrees very well, that God will neuer deceiue vs of our hope when we truſt in him: Why? Becauſe he hath decreed to keepe vs for euer. Wence it followes, that ſeeing the Church depends not vpon the brittle eſtate of the world, it is not therefore ſhaken nor toſſed vp and downe by the ſundrie changes which fall out euery day; but is ſtayed vpon a rock firme and immoueable: to wit, the conſtant decree of God; ſo as it can neuer be moued.

A close opposition betweene Gods setled purpose, and our wauering thoghts.

And thus, as I take it, here is a close opposition betweene the setled purpose of God, and our vnsetled and wauering thoughts: for it happens euer and anon, that any new assault drines our thoughts hither and thither; yea there is not the least change which brings not his doubtings with it. It is good therefore wee should hold this principle; to wit, that we doe amisse to measure Gods immutable counsell by our tottering deuices: for it is said, as we shall see Chap. 55. That as farre as the heauens are higher then the earth, so much higher are my thoughts from yours, O yee house of Israel, saith the Lord.

Our saluatiō not subiect to change, because the counsell of God remains sure.

First then, let vs hold this for certaine, that our saluation is not subiect to change; because the counsell of God remaineth sure. Therefore it is the Prophet repeates it, Thou wilt keepe peace, peace I say: thereby shewing, that it shall continue and last for euer. Now by the word peace, he not onely meanes peace of conscience, but all kinde of felicitie: as if hee should say; Gods grace alone shall suffice to maintaine you in all happinesse and prosperitie.

By peace, is meant both inward and outward felicitie.

Vers. 4. Trust in the Lord for euer: for in the Lord God is strength for euermore.

SOme reade the second member of the verse; Hope in the strong God, Lord of the worlds: but in regard the word Tsur, is not alwaies put for an epithite, but signifies Strength, I reiect that exposition, because it is constrained; neither sutes it to the matter in hand, as we shall see anon. There is also as little stedfastnesse in their curiositie, who from hence would proue the Diuinitie of Christ: as if the Prophet should say; The Lord Iehouah is in the Lord Iah. For Vsaiah hath put the name of God twice, onely to amplifie his power. He therefore exhorts the people to repose themselues vpon God: first then he laid downe doctrine; and in this verse hee comes to exhortation. For it were in vaine to tell vs our peace is in the hand of God, and that he will faithfully keepe it, vnlesse after such instructions & doctrines, we were stirred vp and prouoked to haue our parts therein by exhortations.

Doctrine laid downe in the 3. vers. in this he comes to exhortation.

Doctrine & exhortation must goe together.

Now he not onely wils vs to hope, but to perseuere in it: this sentence therefore belongs properly to the faithfull, who haue alreadie learned what it is to hope in God. And yet they haue neede to be daily confirmed, because they are weake, and readie oftentimes to slip, according to the sundrie occasions of distrust with which they haue to fight.

We must not onely trust, but it must continue for euer.

Our faith ought to answer Gods power.

He commands vs not barely to trust in the Lord then, but that we perseuere constantly in hope and assurance for euer. The reason which he addes likewise is to be noted; to wit, that as Gods power, which is the obiect of faith, indures for euer; so our faith should still looke to this perpetuitie. For when the Prophet speakes of the power and strength of God, he meanes not any idle power, but such as is effectuall and operatiue: shewing and manifesting it selfe really in vs, following and bringing to a good end that which it hath begun. And yet this doctrine hath a further scope; to wit, it teacheth vs at all times to consider the nature of God. For as soone as wee doe but turne our eyes in the least measure aside, we can see nothing but that which is earthly and vanishing: and must wee not then be forthwith out of heart? Faith therefore ought to surmount the world with continuall increases: why? because the trueth, iustice, and goodnesse of God is not temporall and vanishing, but God alwaies continues like himselfe.

We must alwaies fixe the eyes of our faith vpon Gods nature.

Vers. 5. For hee will bring downe them that dwell on high: the high Citie will hee abase; euen vnto the ground will hee cast it downe, and bring it vnto dust.

6. The foote shall treade it downe, euen the feete of the poore, and the steps of the needie.

NOw he more fully shewes what this power of God is, whereof hee spake; to wit, euen that whereof we shall haue experience, and that for our good. These two sentences then depend one vpon another thus; to wit, That the proud are cast downe by the power of God, who stablisheth the humble and those that are despised, in their stead. For whereas in the first place hee teacheth that the proud shall be brought downe: it would not suffice for giuing a full and perfect consolation, vnlesse he had also added, that the poore and humble should bee exalted to haue the dominion ouer them. This we know by experience, that God is wont to worke powerfully for our saluation; and this giues vs matter and occasion of good hope. Vers. 5. Vers. 6.

By the high places, he meanes all manner of munitions & defences, (for in old time they were wont to build Cities in high places) as also their glorie and riches. His meaning is then, that there shal be no fortresse so strong, which shall let God to abase and bring downe the wicked. Towers and Castels are not displeasing vnto God in themselues; but because it often falles out, that the strong and mightie brag and glory in them: therefore this dwelling on high, is often taken for pride it selfe. Now it is not to bee doubted but hee speakes here of the wicked, who with their forces, wealth, and treasures, thinke themselues able to make their partie good against God. He also comforts the Iewes (as wee haue said) in regard they might bee terrified and despaire in themselues, by seeing Babylons power to bee inuincible, vnlesse God had vpheld them by this particular promise. As if hee should haue saide; You neede not feare eyther the greatnesse or power of the Babylonians: why? for it shall easilie bee brought downe, and shall not bee able to resist the power of the most high. Chap. 13. 1.

Vers. 7.

*Or, vprightneſſes are the path of the iuſt.

Verſ. 7. The way of the iuſt is righteouſnes: thou wilt make equall the righteous path of the iuſt.

HE praiſeth not the iuſtice of the faithfull here, as ſome haue falſlie imagined: but only teacheth that God by his ſingular bleſſing will giue them an happie and proſperous ſucceſſe thorowout the whole courſe of their liues. But becauſe in the beginning of the verſe he had ſaid only in a word, That the way of the iuſt is plaine and equall: in the ſecond part hee expounds himſelfe more clearely; attributing it vnto the grace of God that they perſeuere thus in their good courſe vnto the end, euen as it were thorow a ſmooth and plaine field. For in the verb, to make equall, there is a ſimilitude, namely, that God will poiſe as with iuſt and equall weights and ballance thoſe things which in themſelues were very vnequall.

There is ſome ambiguitie in the Hebrue word Iaſhar, becauſe it may be attributed as well to God, as to the way. Some therefore tranſlate, Thou which art iuſt wilt make the way of the righteous equall: and God is thus called in other places. The alluſion alſo would be very fitting to ſay, that the vprightneſſes of which he ſpeakes proceed from God, in regard that he only is vpright or iuſt: notwithſtanding the other reading ſeemes leſſe conſtreined.

Deut.32.4. Pſal.25.8.9.

In ſumme, the Prophet promiſeth that God will haue care of the iuſt, and that in ſuch wiſe, as he will leade them by the hand. For we often thinke that all things run confuſedlie together here below whileſt the vngodlie are at their eaſe, and the good in the meane time are oppreſſed. Yea and albeit the holy Scripture teacheth, and ſo often confirmes it vnto vs that God hath care of his Church, yet notwithſtanding it is an hard matter to keepe our thoughts ſteadie, but we by and by wauer whē we ſee all things which the wicked take in hand to proſper. And yet it is moſt certaine that God by his ballance poiſeth the waies of the iuſt how vneuen or ragged ſoeuer the ſame ſeeme to be: yea, he hath giuen his Angels charge to keepe thoſe that are his, that they ſhould not ſtumble or hurt their foot againſt a ſtone, Pſal.91.11. otherwiſe there is not the leaſt offence which would not eaſily ouerthrow them and make them quaile: much leſſe ſhould they be able to paſſe thorow ſo many briars and thornes; ſuch crooked by-waies; dangerous gulphs, and ſtreit paſſages, vnleſſe the Lord ſhould draw them out, and in the end deliuer them.

Let vs therefore learne to commend our ſafetie into the hands of God, and to follow him for our guide: and in thus doing we ſhall be well directed; yea we ſhall alwaies eſcape, although we were inuironed on euery ſide with ambuſhes, the cunning deuices and the innumerable dangerous plots either of Satan, or the wicked which are his inſtruments. And haue not wee ſufficient proofe of that which the Prophet here ſaith? Are not our waies made plaine and ſmooth in the midſt of the deepeſt gulphs, ſo as our courſe can not be ſtopped nor ſlacked by any hindrances whatſoeuer? Truly experience it ſelfe teacheth, that if we were not conducted and gouerned by Gods hand, it were but in vaine for vs to attempt to walke thorow ſuch vnknowne paſſages: for alas ſuch is our weakenes, that we would ſtumble at the leaſt ſtone we ſhould meet withall in the way. Satan and the wicked on the other ſide would not only intangle and intrap vs in many of their nets; neither would they thinke it ſufficient to caſt ſome ſmall ſtumbling-blocks in our way: but one while they would driue vs vpō the rocks, another while into bottomles depths of miſeries, out of which the whole world with all the power it hath could by no meanes eſcape.

Our help ſtands only in the name of God.

Let vs acknowledge then how neceſſarie it is for vs to looke for our direction from heauen: yea, let vs confeſſe with Ieremiah, O Lord, I know that the way of man is not in himſelfe: and that it is not in man to walke, nor direct his owne ſteps, Iere.10.23. Let vs not be puffed vp then with vaine confidences as if we had the euents of things at our beck. Neither let vs boaſt that we will do this or that, like thoſe raſh heads who think themſelues able to accompliſh all their luſts: for if we haue not ſo much power as to moue our tongues to giue an anſwere; much leſſe can we of our ſelues bring greater enterpriſes to paſſe. It is in vaine for men then to purpoſe, determine, and to diſpoſe of their waies, vnleſſe God guide them by his hand.

Lam.4.13. Prou.16.1.

But this his hand he reacheth forth to the iuſt, and of them he hath a ſpeciall care. For if ſo be the prouidēce of God extends it ſelfe generallie ouer all creatures; and that he prouides for the neceſſities of the yong Rauens, Sparrowes, and the leaſt worme that creepes vpon the ground: much more hath he a fatherlie care of the faithfull to deliuer them out of the dangers and ſtreits into which they are plunged.

To whom God reacheth his directing hand.

Verſ. 8. Alſo we O Lord haue waited for thee in the way of thy iudgements: the deſire of our ſoule is to thy name, and to the remembrance of thee.

THis verſe conteines a moſt excellent doctrine, without which the former things might ſeeme to haue been ſpoken in vaine: for the Prophet hauing ſaid that God will be our leader all our liues long, ſo as we ſhall neuer erre nor ſtumble; and yet in the meane while we ſee our ſelues brought into ſo many extremities, that in our iudgements all theſe promiſes are meerely vaine: when (I ſay) he thus exerciſeth our patience, it ſtands vs vpon to wraſtle manfullie, and yet to hope in him notwithſtanding. Of this the Prophet here giues vs warning, namely, that although we alwaies ſee not this ſmooth and goodly plaine; and that the way is not made ſo euen vnder our feete but that we muſt preſſe thorow many ſtreits, yet muſt wee ſtill giue place vnto hope and patience.

Though Gods promiſed aſſiſtance comes not when we would, yet muſt we ſtill giue way vnto hope and patience.

By the way of the iudgements, he meanes aduerſities: for ſo this word is often taken in the 1 A note to discerne true Christians from hypocrits.

the Scriptures. This is the marke then whereby true Christians are discerned from the false: for whilest hypocrits inioy all things at their desire, they bleſſe God, and highly extoll him; but in aduerſitie, they murmure and blaſpheme him; thereby plainely ſhewing, that they neuer truſted in him at all; and therefore they ſerue God no longer then he ſerues their turnes in al things. Contrariwiſe, when the faithfull are exerciſed vnder diuers croſſes and calamities, they are prouoked thereby to draw neere vnto God, and to truſt in his helpe. The particle Alſo, therefore hath great weight in it; for it is as much as if the Prophet had ſaid, The faithfull ſerue God cheerfully, not onely when hee vſeth them gently, but euen then alſo, when hee deales roughly with them: neither faint they vtterly, becauſe they are ſuſtained by hope. Wherein cõſiſts the true triall of ſound godlines then? Truely in this, that we truſt in God, not onely when hee filles vs abundantly with his benefits, but then alſo when hee withdrawes the light of his countenance; yea, when he afflicts vs, and ſhewes vs nothing but the ſignes of his wrath and heauie diſpleaſure.

2 A triall of a ſound heart.

Let vs learne therefore to apply this doctrine to our vſe, as often as the calamities of this preſent life doe preſſe vs: and let vs not ceaſe to hope in him, although all things ſeeme vtterly deſperate. If he ſhould kill me (ſaith Iob) yet would I truſt in him: Iob 13.17. And Dauid proteſts, that hee will not feare, though he ſhould walke thorow the valley of the ſhadow of death. Why ſo? becauſe hee knew that God was with him: Pſal. 23.4.

In thy name.] In theſe words the Prophet meant to ſhew from whence this magnanimitie of minde in the faithfull proceedes; which ſuffers them neither to faint nor to fall vnder the greateſt aſſaults: ſurely it is in reſpect that being looſed from thoſe profane deſires, wherein the wicked are intangled, they euen in their greateſt diſtreſſes herewith they are compaſſed about, haue freedome and libertie of ſpirit to ſend forth their grones and cries boldly into the preſence of God. Naturally I confeſſe our deſires are diſordered, and the cares of this life doe as it were glew vs to the earth; our thoughts ſloat vp and downe, or elſe are ſo beſotted, that they cannot freely aſpire vnto God. The eſſence of God in like manner is hidden from vs, whereby wee wax the more ſlow and dull in ſeeking of him. For theſe reſpects therefore the Prophet brings vs backe from this hidden & incomprehenſible eſſence of God, to his name. As if he ſhould ſay; Content your ſelues with that manifeſtation of him which you find in his word: for there he ſets before vs as much as is expedient; to wit, his iuſtice, wiſdome, and goodneſſe; yea and his very ſelfe alſo.

It is not without cauſe alſo that he addes this word remembrance: for thereby he ſhewes, that the firſt apprehenſion or thought of Gods name ſufficeth not; but that wee ought to meditate thereon continually; becauſe without this helpe, all light of doctrine would by and by vaniſh. For the trueth is, the light and ſound knowledge of God muſt needes inflame our hearts with a deſire after him: yea, more then that, it prouokes vs to an inſatiable thirſt after profiting, euen as oft as we remember him. The knowledge of God then goes before: and in the ſecond place we ought to exerciſe our ſelues much in the meditation of it: for it is not enough once to haue had ſome little taſte thereof, vnleſſe therewithall a loue and deſire after the ſame bee increaſed by a continuall meditation. Hence wee may learne then, that the knowledge of God is no idle nor dead imagination.

Meditation a ſpeciall helpe to maintaine

Verſ. 9. With my ſoule haue I deſired thee in the night, and with my ſpirit within mee will I ſeeke thee in the morning: for ſeeing thy iudgements are in the earth, the inhabitants of the world ſhall learne righteouſneſſe.

SEe yet a more ample expoſition of the former ſentence: for before, ſpeaking in the perſon of all the faithfull, he ſaid, that the deſire of their ſoules was to the name of God: but now he brings in himſelfe ſpeaking; My ſoule hath deſired thee, ſaith hee. As if hee ſhould ſay; All the powers of my ſoule are buſied in ſeeking of thee and thy name.

How ſoule and ſpirit is taken here. The vnderſtanding and will, two principall parts of mans ſoule.

The word Nepheſh, is often taken for the vitall ſpirit: but becauſe the Prophet vſeth two ſundry words here, I ſo diſtinguiſh them, as that the ſoule ſhall ſignifie the deſire and the will; and the ſpirit, the intellectiue part. For we know that the vnderſtanding & will, are the two principall parts of mans ſoule: and God will haue both of them; as good reaſon is he ſhould. And hereunto appertaines that Commandement, Thou ſhalt loue the Lord thy God with all thine heart, and with all thy ſoule, and with all thy ſtrength: Matth. 22.37. The Prophet teacheth then, that all the faculties of his ſoule were bent, and tied him to ſeeke and deſire the Lord.

Others take this word ſpirit, for the regenerate part: and thus by the ſoule, they vnderſtand the naturall man; and by the ſpirit, the grace of God, which is ſupernaturall. But this cannot ſtand: for the naturall man neuer ſeekes vnto God; yea, and we know by experience what ſtriſe wee haue in our ſelues when we aſpire vnto God; as alſo with what great difficulty we wind our ſelues out of this repugnancie. This interpretation then needs no long refutation, ſeeing it manifeſtly croſſeth the very text of holy Scripture. Moreouer, it ſufficiently appeares by many places, that theſe words, Spirit and Soule, import as much as vnderſtanding and heart.

In what ſenſe the word night is taken in this place.

By night, the holy Ghoſt often meanes aduerſities; which are compared vnto darkneſs and obſcuritie. But in this place I expound it a little otherwiſe: as if the Prophet ſhould ſay; There is no time ſo vnfitting and inconuenient, which I take not to call vpon thee, and to ſeeke vnto thee. This expoſition di-

fers not much from the firſt, yet it is ſomewhat more generall: for the night ſeemes to be ordeined for reſt, in which all the deſires and trauels of men ceaſe; ſo as there is little difference betweene ſleepe and death. But when it was time to take reſt and to be quiet, then the Prophet ſaith, he awaked to ſeeke GOD, ſo as no occaſion could hinder him from it.

Where is the practiſe of this dutie become in theſe dayes? See Pſal. 119. 55. & 62.

The meaning whereof is not as if thoſe which ſleepe can haue any ſetled or ſtable thoughts: but ſleepe it ſelfe being a part of our courſe whilſt we ſeeke God, though we lie as in a trance without vttering any word, yet then we may be ſaid to praiſe him by faith and hope. But the Prophet ſpeakes not of ſleepe here properlie, but rather by way of ſimilitude, as it further appeares plainely by the member following, where the morning is oppoſed to the night: and thus he notes out a continuall courſe.

In the next place we are to conſider of the reaſon which he yeelds of his ſo doing when he ſaith, that the Inhabitants of the earth ſhall learne righteouſnes by the iudgements of God: ſignifying thereby that men are inſtructed and taught to feare God by his rods wherewith he ſmites them. For in proſperitie they forget him, ſo as their eyes ſtand out for fatnes: they reioyce and keepe a coyle, and can not abide to be brought into any good order. The Lord therefore is faine to repreſſe their pride, and to teach them how to bow vnder his hand. Laſtly the Prophet here confeſſeth that himſelfe & the reſt of the faithfull were prepared by the corrections of the Almightie to kiſſe the rod, and to ſubmit themſelues to his gouernment; and to put themſelues vnder his protection: for vnleſſe the Lord maintaine his owne right and authoritie ouer vs with an out-ſtretched arme, none of vs all will willingſie frame our minds aright to do him ſeruice.

Verſ. 10. Let mercie be ſhewed to the wicked, yet he will not learne righteouſnes: in the land of vprightnes he will doe wickedlie, and will not behold the Maieſtie of the Lord.

THe Prophet oppoſeth this ſentence to the former: for he had ſaid that when the faithfull are afflicted, or ſee others in the like caſe, that they ceaſe not for all that to reſt in the aſſurance of Gods fauour, and to hope conſtantlie in his help. Now on the contrarie he ſaith that ỹ wicked can not be brought to loue God, albeit he labour to draw and knit them vnto him by all ſorts of his benefits: nay rather they become the worſe, although he ſhew himſelfe moſt gracious towards them. It may ſeeme then at the firſt bluſh that this verſe ſhould be contrarie to the former: for it was there ſaid that the iuſtice of God is knowne vpon earth, euen then whilſt he himſelfe ſhewes that he is iudge of the world, and executes vengeance vpon the iniquities of men. But here he ſaith, that the wicked can not be allured nor drawne by any meanes to ſerue God: and ſo farre is it off that they are any thing the better for the ſtripes which they receiue, that they waxe worſe and worſe, and that whilſt he lades thē dayly with his benefits: for it is out of controuerſie that all make not a right vſe of afflictions. What vſe I pray you made Pharaoh of the plagues wherewith God ſmote him? did not the blowes which he felt make his heart the more hard?

The wicked are bettered neither by corrections nor benefits.

Exod. 7. 13.

But howſoeuer he ſpake generallie of the inhabitants of the earth before, yet he only and properlie meant Gods elect. I denie not but this benefit redounds ſometime to hypocrites alſo, to wit, that they are now and then touched with the feeling of Gods Maieſtie: yea and they are often reſtrained from breaking out euen for feare of the whip. Notwithſtanding becauſe the Prophet here deſcribes the fruites of true repentance, it muſt needs be that he ſhould only meane the children of God when he ſpeakes of the inhabitants of the earth.

Now ſome reade this verſe by an interrogation thus, Shall the wicked obteine fauor? or, Wherefore ſhould the wicked obteine fauor? As if the Prophet meant to ſay, that they were vnworthie to taſte of Gods mercie. But for mine owne part I rather thinke that the wicked will neuer be taught to do well, albeit God ſhould allure them thereunto by powring out all his benefits vpon them. The Prophet therefore here reſtraines that which he ſaid before in generall termes. And when he ſaith that they do wickedlie in the land of vprightnes, he therein further amplifies the vnworthines of this ingratitude. It was enough and too much that they had alreadie abuſed Gods benefits, and made themſelues more obſtinate thereby: but they made their ſinne aboue meaſure ſinfull when they dealt thus wickedlie in the land which God had hallowed. Now he ſpeakes only of Iudea; albeit wee may alſo applie it to other Countries wherein God is now worſhipped: But at that time Iſaiah could giue this title to none other, becauſe there was no knowledge of God but in Iudea. For this cauſe he calles Iudea the land of vprightnes: and thus I interpret it, becauſe the Prophet vſeth the word Necechoth, which is of the femenin gender, and can no way be referred to men.

This land was adorned with this title in regard the law was in force there, and for that the people were the peculiar choſen of God: therfore the Prophet addes this to aggrauate the peoples vnthankfulnes, as hath been ſaid. For their expoſition is farre wide from the naturall ſenſe, who extend it generallie to all the world: becauſe in what place ſoeuer we liue God maintaines vs vpon this condition, that we behaue our ſelues vprightlie towards all. The Lord indeed hath now cauſed his kingdome to ſpread into all places; the land of vprightnes therefore is whereſoeuer his name is called vpon: and thus we deſerue a double condemnation if wee yeeld not teſtimonies of true thankfulnes by giuing our ſelues to pietie & good works whē God prouokes vs thereunto by ſo many of his benefits.

How farre this land of vprightnes may now be ſaid to extend it ſelfe.

Where

Where he addes, that the reprobates shall see the maiestie of God; it is not to lessen the fault, but rather to augment and increase it: for it is a foolish and wicked ingratitude in men to bee careleſſe of Gods glory, which plainly shines before their eyes. The wicked then are no way excusable: for although God proclaime his name diuers waies; yet in this so cleere a sunshine they see nothing. Questionlesse there want not euident signes at all times by which the Lord manifests both his glory and greatnesse: but their number is very small who take it to heart, as we haue seene before, Chap. 5.19.

The Lord not onely sets forth his maiestie and glory by his ordinarie workes in nature, but also by certaine signes and worthy documents, wherein hee fully instructs vs as touching his iustice, wisdome, and goodnesse. The wicked shut their eyes at it, and perceiue it not, albeit they be very quicke and sharpe sighted in other matters. This frowardnesse and peruersitie the Prophet now reproues. Others thinke hee threatens the reprobates here, as if they were vnworthy to behold the workes of God. Which although it be true, yet seeing this member is ioyned to the rest, the Prophet still reproues the sottishnesse of those, who are so farre off from making benefit of the workes of God, that rather they become the more senseleſſe by them. For which cause it should not seeme strange vnto vs at this day, if there be few which come to repentance, albeit Gods iustice manifests it selfe so diuersly: for infidelitie is alwaies blinde, when it should behold the workes of God.

Infidelitie alwaies blind when it should behold the workes of God.

Verſ. 11. O Lord, they will not behold thine high hand: but they shall see it, and be confounded with the zeale of thy people; and the fire of thine enemies shall deuoure them.

THis is an exposition of the former sentence: for hee enters into no new discourse, but expounds that at large, which he had said before in few words. He said in the other verse, that the wicked would not behold the maiestie of the Lord: now he shewes that this magnificence of the Lord is the same which appeares in his workes. For the Prophet sends vs not to the hidden maiestie of God, which wee cannot behold with our eyes; but brings vs to his workes, which hee here represents by a figure, vnder this word hand. Well, he accuseth the wicked once againe, shewing that they haue nothing to alleage for their defence; neither can they couer themselues vnder any pretence of ignorance: for albeit they were starke blind, yet was the hand of God made manifest enough; so as nothing could hinder them from seeing of it, but their owne grosse vnthankfulnesse, or rather wilfull sottishnesse. For many haue skill enough to pleade ignorance, affirming that they perceiue not these workes: but hee telles such, that Gods hand is stretched forth; not onely in such wise that it may be discerned of a small number, but also farre and neere.

They shall see it and be confounded.] He makes it very apparent, that this beholding is not the same whereof he spake before, when hee said, that the wicked saw not the maiestie of the Lord: for they saw it well enough, but they regarded it not. Notwithstanding, at the last they shall see it, although too late, and to their great disaduantage. For hauing a long time abused the patience of God, in shewing themselues obstinate and rebellious, they shall be constrained in the end to take knowledge of his iudgements. Thus albeit Caine, Esau, and the like (who repented their sinnes too late) fled from Gods presence, yet in despight of their teeth they were made both to see and feele that he was their Iudge: Gen. 4. 13. and 27.38.

God may well suffer the wicked to take their swinge for a while, but in the end hee paies them home. Heb. 12.17.

Thus he often drawes some remorse as it were euen from those that despise him, to the end he might cause his power to shine cleerely: but such apprehensions bring them no profit at all. The Prophet then so threatens the wicked, whose blindnesse hee hath rebuked, that he therewithall takes from them all pretext of ignorance; plainely telling them, that the time shall come, wherein they shall know with whom they haue to doe, and shall then well perceiue that this maiestie and high hand of God which they reiected & made light of, ought not in any sort to bee contemned. For they ouerflow in all riot and dissolution with their eyes shut, they flout and mocke, thinking God will neuer call them to iudgement: yea, which more is, the miseries and afflictions of the faithfull, are things wherein they take great delight. Thus they looke vpon vs with disdaine, as if they were out of all danger, hardening their hearts more & more: but in the end, they shall know that the seruants of God haue not serued him in vaine. Now that hee might the better shew that this beholding of God, should not onely be vnprofitable, but also hurtfull to the wicked, he saith, that they shall be confounded, when they shall see the blessing of God vpon his people, wherein they shall haue neither part nor portion.

In the next place he further augments the sharpnesse of the punishment, in regard that these vngodly ones shall not onely be consumed with enuie, when they shall see the children of God deliuered from these miseries, and exalted into glory; but they shall also be stricken with no lesse an euill, to wit, the fire of the enemies shall deuoure them. The zeale of the people then in this place, signifies the indignation wherewith the reprobates shall bee inflamed when they shall compare the condition of the faithfull with theirs.

Hee calles that the fire of the enemies wherewith God consumes his aduersaries; taking this word fire, for Gods vengeance: for it must not be taken here for that visible fire wherewith things are consumed in this world; neither yet for lightning onely; but by a figure it is taken for a cruell torment: for so by this word the holy Ghost is wont often to note out the extreme wrath of the Lord. Yet I denie nor but the Prophet alludes to the deſtruction of Sodome and Gomorah.

Verſ. 12. Lord vnto vs thou wilt ordaine peace: for thou alſo haſt wrought all our workes for vs.

THis tends to the conſolation of the faithfull. As if he ſhould ſay; We ſee what will fall vpon the heads of the wicked, for thou wilt caſt them out of the company of thy children, & wilt conſume them with fire as thine enemies: but we ſhal haue an happy and bleſſed eſtate. The verbe Shaphat, which ſignifies to Ordaine among the Hebrewes, is as much to ſay, as to Eſtabliſh: as if he ſhould ſay; Thou wilt hold and preſerue vs in peace continually. The wicked indeed inioy a kind of peace, but it laſts not long: our peace is ſeated and eſtabliſhed in the Lord, and hath ſuch a foundation as ſhall indure for euer. Now by the word peace, he meanes a ſetled and laſting felicitie. Hence let vs conclude then, that the children of God which truſt in him, are fully bleſſed: for the life of the wicked is more then miſerable, albeit it be ſoaked in much deliciouſneſſe and pleaſures, as thoſe that haue all things at their wiſh. There is no aſſured nor ſtable peace then, but in the fatherly loue of our God.

By workes, hee meanes all the good which God doth to his choſen: as if he ſhould ſay; All our affaires and actions: all things which we vſe for our benefit in this world, in a word whatſoeuer, we put our hands vnto. Thoſe then who haue alleadged this place, to ouerthrow the doctrine of free will, did not well vnderſtand the Prophets meaning. I grant it is God onely that works, whatſoeuer is good in vs; ſo as all our vprightneſſe proceeds onely from his Spirit: but the Prophet meant ſimply to teach here, that wee receiue all the good things which we inioy, onely from the hand of God; and thence concludes, that this fauour ſhall neuer ceaſe, till wee be come to full and perfect happineſſe.

He that hath begunne a good worke in vs, will perfect it vnto the end. *Phil.*1.6.

Moreouer, ſeeing God is author of all bleſſings, wee ought eſpecially to be mindfull of thoſe which are chiefe and principall: for if wee ought to acknowledge that the things which ſerue for our maintenance in this life, are the gifts of God; much more ought we ſo to doe in things appertaining to the ſaluation of the ſoule. If ſo be then we owe thankfulneſſe for his liberalitie in ſmall things, how much more ſhould wee acknowledge his goodneſſe in things that are high and excellent? But what need haue wee to obiect this text againſt the Papiſts, to refute their doctrine of free will, ſeeing they may be eaſilie anſwered by other places: yea, we haue infinit teſtimonies beſide which are much more euident.

Thus it ſeemes then that the Prophet ſtirs vp the peoples mindes to thankfulneſſe: for hee commands them ſo to admire the goodneſſe of God in his benefits, that they confeſſe all things they haue to be his gift. We haue here then a very fruitfull doctrine; to wit, that the faithfull are to conceiue an aſſured hope of Gods goodneſſe for the time to come, by conſidering what benefits they haue receiued from him in times paſt; and thence to conclude, that he will vndoubtedly haue eare ouer them hereafter. Haue wee then at any time had experience of Gods mercy towards vs? Let vs learne to truſt in him for euer: and ſeeing it hath pleaſed him to ſhew himſelfe ſo bountifull and readie to doe vs good, let vs boldly and conſtantly ſettle our hearts in this truth; to wit, that hee will neuer faile vs.

Benefits receiued of God in times paſt, ought to incourage vs to hope for the like in time to come

All the faithfull haue done thus; and this way haue they confirmed themſelues in the faith: for ſee how Dauid ſpeakes, Pſal.138.8. Thou Lord wilt not forſake the worke of thine owne hands. And Saint Paul ſaith; He which hath begun a good worke in you, will perfect the ſame: Phil.1.6. Likewiſe the Patriarke Iacob ſaith; Lord, I am leſſe then all thy mercies and trueth which thou haſt ſhewed thy ſeruant: but thou ſaidſt; I will doe thee good, &c. Gen. 32.10, 11, 12. For God is not like to men; that is, to be wearie in well doing, or to be drawne dry by too much giuing; but the more good he hath done vs, ſo much the ſtronger ought our hope to be, and to receiue daily increaſes.

Verſ. 13. O Lord our God, other Lords beſides thee haue ruled vs: but wee will remember thee onelie and thy name.

THis verſe containes a complaint which the faithfull make, becauſe they were oppreſſed vnder the tyranny of the wicked. Thus this ſong is compoſed to comfort the hearts of the faithfull, who in regard they were to vndergoe an hard condition of baniſhment, and to bee expulſed out of that good land which was vnto them a ſigne of eternall happineſſe: as alſo being depriued of the ſacrifices of the holy aſſemblies; and ſo in a manner, of all conſolation and comfort; being furthermore ſhut vp vnder the bondage of the Babylonians, in a ſtrange Country, baniſhed from their Country, and ouerwhelmed with ſhame and moſt grieuous afflictions; they might yet notwithſtanding by this ſong, powre out their ſighes vnto God, and ſo find ſolace in him.

He ſpeakes therefore in the name and perſon of all the faithfull, who in appearance ſeemed to be reiected of God, but therewithall profeſſing, that they were his people, and ſo conſequently, did put their confidence in him. But had they not great cauſe to mourne thus, when they were in bondage vnder the tyrannie of other rulers beſides the Lord himſelfe, who once had gathered them in vnder the wings of his protection? Hence therefore it followes, that if they had not been eſtranged from him, they had neuer fallen into ſo wretched a condition, as to be expoſed to the mercileſſe tyrannie of their enemies. But it ſhould ſeeme by this, that the gouernement of Princes is contrarie to that Obiect.

Anſ. which God himſelfe exerciſeth; notwithſtanding that they rule in his name: but the Prophet ſpeakes not of thoſe heere who beare rule for our good, but of ſuch as are Idolaters, and enemies of the true doctrine. Dauid himſelfe was a King, hauing a diuers gouernment from that which God exerciſeth, yet ſo, that he was Gods miniſter notwithſtanding for the common good and ſaluation of all the people that were committed to his charge; and likewiſe maintained the true Religion, which theſe tyrants deſired wholly to ouerthrow. The like alſo did iuſtlie befall the Iewes, who had well deſerued to be ſubdued vnder the crueltie of Infidels, ſeeing they refuſed to obey God who vſed thē ſo louingly.

1 But it is not amiſſe to note the cloſe oppoſition which is heere put betweene God and the faithfull Kings who gouerned the people

2 vnder his name and authoritie; and thoſe tyrants who at the laſt oppreſſed them vnder vniuſt lawes. This will the better appeere by a like place out of Ezechiel, I haue (ſaith he) giuen them good lawes by the which they might liue: but becauſe they haue not obſerued my iudgements, and haue caſt my ſtatutes behind their backs; prophaning mine ordinances, and ſetting their eies towards the Idols of their fathers: therefore I alſo gaue thē ſtatutes which were not good, and iudgements in which they ſhould not liue, Ezech. 20.24. Now in regard they might haue proſpered and beene happie by Gods bleſſing in times paſt if they had yeelded their obedience to his word: therefore Ezechiel threatens them, that Tyrants ſhall rule ouer them, and in ſpite of their teeth ſhall cauſe them to ſubmit themſelues to their cruell edicts and lawes: yea and that without bringing any profit or reward at all vnto them.

It is iuſt with God to make vs ſerue cruel Lords, when we will not yeeld willing obedience to his lawes.

Iſaiah in this place bewailes the like miſerie: Oh (ſaith he) whilſt the Lord reigned ouer vs we had much adoe to content our ſelues

1 with our eſtate: but now we are conſtreined

2 to beare a wofull ſeruitude; and therein are iuſtlie puniſhed for our wickednes. The faithfull alſo which liue vnder the Papacie; or ſuch as are forced to yeeld in any ſort to wicked lawes and conſtitutions full of ſuperſtition, may well take vp the like complaint: for they are vnder ſuch an authoritie as is againſt God: they are oppreſſed vnder more then a barbarous ſeruitude which binds not the bodie only, but leades them to the flaying of their ſoules.

The ſlauerie of ſuch as are vnder the tyrannie of the Romane Antichriſt.

But we will remember thee only.] It ſeemes this particle ſhould be oppoſed to the former thus, Albeit theſe prophane Lords would turne and withdraw vs from vnder thy gouernment, yet will we hold our ſelues faſt vnto it, becauſe we aſſuredlie know our ſelues to belong to thee. But there may be gathered from hence a more ample doctrine, to wit, that although carnall reaſon is readie to ſay that ſuch as are made a pray to their enemies, and cruellie vexed vnder their tyrannie, are forſaken of God: yet the Iewes ceaſe not therefore ſtill to reioyce in him; notwithſtanding they ſaw him nothing neere vnto them: for the only remembrance of his name ſuſteined them; and did ſweetly feede and nouriſh their hope. Thus there is an oppoſition of great weight betweene the remembrance of Gods name, and the preſent feeling of his fauor: for it is a rare and ſingular grace of God conſtantlie to cleaue vnto him, when he ſeemes to be abſent and farre off from vs.

A ſingular grace of God it is to cleaue faſt vnto him whē he ſeems to forſake vs.

Others tranſlate, In thee, and in thy name: but here is no ſuch coniunction. To let that paſſe therefore, this place affords vnto vs ſuch conſolation as is exceeding neceſſarie for our times, wherein the peruerſe vnthankfulnes of men by caſting off the ſweet yoke of God, haue drawne vpon themſelues a grieuous and cruell ſlauerie: neither are we to wonder if we ſee this tyrannie alreadie exerciſed euen in many places where the name of God is called vpon. The faithfull, I ſay, muſt not therefore be diſcouraged; only let them reſt their hopes vpon this conſolation, to wit, God will neuer vtterlie forſake thoſe whoſe whole ioy and delight conſiſts in the remembrance of his name. Let them not feare then, I ſay, at any hand to profeſſe this their confidence before all men. What confidence? Truly that they had rather die ten times then once to recoile back from God, and ſo to darken his glorie. For whoſoeuer he be that through feare giues place to men, let him know for a truth that he hath not as yet rightlie taſted how gracious the Lord is. Whileſt we enioy the free vſe of Gods word then, let vs diligentlie exerciſe our ſelues in it, that ſo we may arme our ſelues therewith againſt the time of need, to the end the world may know that we haue not ſtudied it as in a dreame.

A Conſolation fitting our times.

Better to die often then once to reuolt.

They that ſin againſt conſcience for feare of men, neuer yet taſted in truth how gracious the Lord is.

Verſ. 14. The dead ſhall not liue,* * neither ſhall the dead ariſe, * becauſe thou haſt viſited and ſcattered them, and deſtroyed all their memorie.

* Or, being dead they &c.
* Or, being ſlaine they ſhall not &c.
* Or, for this cauſe thou haſt &c.

THe Prophet comes againe to ſpeake of the wofull end of the wicked, whoſe proſperous eſtate often diſquiets and diſmaies vs, as we may ſee in the 37. Pſal. and in the 73. 17. That our eies then may not be dazeled in the beholding of preſent things, the Prophet threatens that their end ſhall be moſt wofull. Others expound this place of the faithfull, who ſeeme ſo to die in the eyes of the world, as if they ſhould neuer riſe againe: but it is very cleare that he here ſpeakes of the wicked and reprobates, which will euidentlie appeere by the contrarie to this, which is added in the 19. verſe. For we haue in this place an oppoſition betweene the reſurrection of the good, and the bad, whoſe eſtates would be little differing one from another, vnleſſe it ſhould appeere that the one ſort were iudged to eternall death, and the other to a bleſſed and an euerlaſting life. Nay the wicked are not ſimplie condemned to eternall perdition, but all the iudgements of God which befall them in this life, are as it were the beginnings and ſeales vnto them of their endleſſe torment, for they can not be relieued by any conſolation at all. Why ſo?

Euery iudgement that lights vpon a reprobate in this life, is a ſeale vnto him of his endleſſe torment in the life to come.

ſo? Becauſe they inwardly feele that God is their enemie.

Whereas we haue tranſlated Slaine; others reade it Giants: but ſeeing the word Rephaim, in many places of the Scriptures is taken for the ſlaine, it will agree beſt if wee take it ſo here; otherwiſe the oppoſition would not be fitting.

Pſal. 88. 10. Prou. 2. 18. & 9. 18. & 21. 16.

That which followes; For this cauſe haſt thou viſited them, is put here by way of expoſition: for he ſhewes why the reprobates periſh without hope of any reſtauration; to wit, becauſe God hath determined to caſt them away. Now what can they expect from Gods wrath which is inflamed againſt them, but death and perdition?

Verſ. 15. Thou haſt increaſed the nation, O Lord; thou haſt increaſed the nation: thou art made glorious: thou haſt enlarged all the coaſtes of the earth.

THis verſe is diuerſly expounded: for ſome think the Prophet ſhewes how the faithfull are not preſſed with one affliction alone, but are plunged ouer head and eares as it were in extreme miſeries, and yet can ſee no iſſue out of them. Others expound it more ſimply thus; O Lord, thou haſt inriched thy people with many benefits: and ſo they think that the Prophet mentions thoſe bleſſings which God beſtowed vpon his people diuers waies: as if he ſhould ſay; Thy people, Lord, haue felt by experience, how liberall thou art by the infinite benefits which thou haſt beſtowed vpon them. But when I conſider that which by and by followes, where hee ſaith, thou haſt enlarged; that is to ſay, thou haſt cauſed thy kingdome to ſpread, which was once ſhut vp within verie narrow bounds; I had rather ioyne theſe two things together; for ſo the latter member expounds the former; and that alſo which followes, to wit, that God ſhall be glorified, agrees very well. For wee know that Gods glorie ſhines in nothing more, then in the aduancement and inlargement of his Church.

Gods glory ſhines in nothing more, then in the inlargement of his Church.

It is as much then as if hee had ſaid; Lord, thou hadſt in times paſt but a little handfull of people, but now thou haſt multiplied and increaſed them. For the Gentiles were adopted and ioyned to the Iewes, on condition that they both ſhould make but one people. And thus the Lord added an infinite number to them; for the children of Abraham were gathered out of all nations. We muſt therefore ſupply in this place an addition of a greater number, and not of benefits; in this ſenſe, Thou didſt not content thy ſelfe Lord, with that ſmall number which once thou didſt inioy: and therefore thou gatheredſt vnto thy ſelfe a people without number out of all the quarters of the world.

Now this belongs to Chriſts Kingdome, which was euey where eſtabliſhed by the preaching of the Goſpell: and the Prophet now extols and notes our Gods mercy touching this increaſing and multiplication by the word enlarged. I grant this phraſe ſtraieth not much from our common manner of ſpeech, when wee vſe to ſpeake of the inlarging of a dominion, or of an inheritance: yet it is not the Prophets meaning to ſay, that the land ſhall become greater, but that it had larger bounds, and a more free habitation by meanes of the mutuall ſocietie of the inhabitants after the pure worſhip of God was publiſhed euery where: for the diſcords which were betweene the Iewes & Gentiles ſtraitned their dwellings, and made them leſſe free then otherwiſe they would haue been. Wee haue here then a promiſe touching the vocation of the Gentiles; which ought greatly to haue comforted the faithful in their exile, and in that miſerable ſcattering and baniſhment from the Church: for howſoeuer they ſaw themſelues wonderfully diminiſhed and weakned, yet they might without all peraduenture, aſſure themſelues that they ſhould not onely increaſe to an infinit number; but that ſtrange nations alſo, and thoſe that were farre remote, ſhould be added vnto them.

A promiſe in this verſe, touching the vocation of the Gentiles.

Verſ. 16. Lord, in trouble they haue viſited thee: they powred out a prayer when thy chaſtening was vpon them.

THis may bee well expounded of thoſe hypocrits who neuer ſeeke vnto God, vnleſſe they be conſtrained thereunto by miſeries and calamities. But ſeeing the Lord alſo inſtructs the faithful by his rods and chaſtiſements, as the Prophet hath heretofore ſhewed: therefore I had rather referre theſe things ſimply vnto them. Firſt, to the end they may know that God is iuſt in his iudgements. Secondly, that they might thereby learne to feare the Lord, and euery day to grow vp in it more and more. Thirdly, that they might feele that the bitterneſſe of the medicine is taken away by the fruite which they receiue from it.

Verſ. 8. 9. Three ends of afflictions. 1 2 3

Thus Iſaiah then ſpeakes here in the perſon of the Church; that ſo, whenſoeuer the faithfull ſhould reade this ſentence, they might acknowledge that they were neerer vnto God in their afflictions, then when they abounded in all things which their hearts could wiſh; for then commonly we wax proud and forgetfull: ſuch is the frowardneſſe of our nature. Is it not needfull then that we ſhould be tamed & brought vnder by force of armes? This meditation is very profitable to correct the bitterneſſe of our troubles: for when we know what benefit redounds to vs by them, it makes vs leſſe to abhor them.

Iſaiah ſpeaks here in the perſon of the Church. We are neerer God in afflictions, then when we inioy all that our hearts can wiſh.

The word Lachaſh, (which wee haue tranſlated Prayer) ſignifies, To murmure. We are not to take this ſentence then for a well framed praier; but for ſuch a one, as teſtifieth that the heart is pent vp in great dolours, as thoſe who feele ſuch anguiſh, that they can ſcarcely open their teeth to vtter their perplexed thoughts. He therefore ſpeakes of ſuch a praier as is pure and far from all counterfetting: for when Gods ſeruants are vnder heauie afflictions, they ſtudie how to breathe out their ſighes, as witneſſes of their extreme griefes. In time of proſperity, men can ſpeake with open mouth; but in aduerſitie, they are ſmitten downe, they dare not open their lips: ſhewing the conceptions of their hearts, rather with inward grones, then with words. Thence proceede thoſe ſighes which cannot be expreſſed, whereof S. Paul ſpeakes, Rom. 8. 26. The Prophet then pronounceth this of the faithfull, to whom indeed this doctrine ought to be reſtrained: for albeit inward garboiles doe now and then force out groanes euen from the very reprobates; yet they are hardened more and more, and become ſo much the more fierce and obſtinate.

Verſ. 17. Like as a woman with child, that draweth neere to the trauaile, is in ſorrow, and crieth in her paines, ſo haue wee been in thy ſight, O Lord.

18. Wee haue conceiued, wee haue borne in paine, as though wee ſhould haue brought forth winde: there was no helpe in the earth; neither did the inhabitants of the world fall.

1 TWo things are to be noted here principally. Firſt, he compares the faithfull to women in trauaile; wherein their paines are vnſpeakeable, as it is well enough knowne. The afflictions of the faithfull therefore, he ſaith, cauſeth them to caſt forth verie bitter and loud cries. Whence we gather, that the Prophet ſpeakes not here onely of that ſorrow which proceedes from the ſuffering of outward griefes and diſcommodities; but rather reſpects thoſe horrible vexations which ſharpely wound, and with incredible vehemencie aſſailes the hearts and ſpirits of the godlie, when they feele that God is angrie with them, their conſciences alſo checking them. No bodily paine therefore may bee compared with the griefe of the Spirit, which is moſt liuely expreſſed by the particle before thee.

Sight of Gods anger the chiefe cauſe of griefe. See Prou. 18. 14.

2 In the ſecond place he goes further, and exceeds the meane which is in his ſimilitude: for where paines haue no end, the condition of the faithfull is far worſe then is the condition of women in trauaile. For being once deliuered from their ſorrowes and griefes, they reioice in ſeeing the fruite which they haue brought forth; yea they forget all the paines which they indured: but hee ſaith here, that ꝙ faithfull are in cõtinuall trauaile. Why ſo? Becauſe they ſtill are aſſaulted with new pangs and trauailes; and whẽ they thinke the birth is neere, then they bring forth nothing but ſorrowes and anguiſh, which is expreſſed by the word wind: to wit, they ſaw no appearance of any deliuerance or eaſe of their ſorrowes. For ſo he forthwith expounds himſelfe when hee ſaith, that there was no helpe for them in the earth. That is to ſay, we ſee no ſuccour at all.

John 16. 21.

He addes, that the inhabitants of the world did not fall: for the Hebrew word Naphal, ſignifies to fall. Some affirme, it ſignifies to dwel. If we take it in the latter ſignification, the ſenſe wil be, That the Iewes ſhal not dwel; that is, they ſhall not returne into their Country; the inhabitants which inioyed it, ſhould not periſh. But if we follow the common tranſlation, this muſt be referred to the wicked on this wiſe; The inhabitants of the world oppreſſe vs, and yet they fall not. Why ſo? Becauſe they haue more then heart can wiſh. For when the wicked floriſh, as Salomon ſaith, then Gods children muſt of neceſſitie ſigh, and be like vnto women in trauaile with child.

Yet let vs not refuſe euen this hard condition, if wee would haue any place in Gods Church. It is moſt certaine that the common lot of all men is to beare ſundry and infinite calamities: and thence came the old prouerb; It were beſt of all neuer to haue been borne; or being borne, to die quickly. But we ſee that the faithfull are tired with extreme miſeries, and exerciſed therewith aboue all others. For God meanes to try their faith, to the end they may ſerue him, hauing renounced their luſts, and the world alſo. Seeing the Lord then hath ſuch a ſpeciall care of them, he will chaſtiſe them; and in the meane while, will ſuffer the wicked to run riot into all miſorder.

Why God corrects his children, and lets the wicked in the meane while run riot.

Hence alſo wee are admoniſhed, that wee muſt not onely ſuffer one or two calamities, and ſo an end, leſt we ſhould think our ſelues diſcharged after wee haue indured ſome few aſſaults: for we muſt alwaies be prepared to meete with new trials. When the Lord takes vp his children, he lets them not down forthwith. For we muſt be content euen then to bring forth the wind, whẽ we thinke ꝙ houre of deliuerance is come: our ſorrowes ſhall ſtill increaſe, and our throwes ſhall ouertake one another at euery turne. Wee muſt hold out with patience then in this combate, as long as God ſhall be pleaſed to exerciſe vs vnderneath it.

We will therefore follow the vſuall expoſition, They fell not: for as the Lord now and then cheeres vp the hearts of his children, in manifeſting vnto them the light of his countenance in their ſaluation, and in ſhewing vengeance vpon the wicked: ſo he alſo giues them with all occaſion of mourning, by cauſing them to ſee their aduerſaries euery way aduanced into high place of rule and authoritie ouer them. And if the Lord hath ſo exerciſed his Church in former times, why ſhould we thinke much if hee take the ſame courſe with vs now?

By the Inhabitants of the world, he meanes the prophane and vnbeleeuers: for he oppoſeth the reſt of the world to the countrie of Iudea, which by way of excellencie he called the land, or the earth, verſe 15. making mention of the Inhabitants thereof apart.

The day of reſurrection, the day of our refreſhing. Mat. 25.32.

All miſeries are forerunners of death.

Chriſt hath by his death taken away the curſe both of theſe beginnings of death, as alſo of death it ſelfe.

A commendation of Iſaiahs faith in God, and loue to the Church.

Iſaiah ſtill continues to ſpeake of this Conſolation, and turnes his ſpeech vnto God: and thus he ſhewes that our beſt courſe is to bend all our ſenſes towards him, as oft as we are to reſiſt temptations. For wee ſhall find nothing more hurtfull vnto vs then to vtter words at randon, pleaſing our ſelues in them: for what doe we elſe but roule our ſelues hither and thither, and at the laſt plunge our ſelues into many errors? We can chuſe no way therefore that is more ſafe then to draw neere vnto God, who only is able to quiet our diſtreſſed conſciences: which if we doe not, we muſt of neceſſitie meete with many encumbrances, which will ſhake our faith. Will you haue the ſumme of this verſe then? If God be the protector of his ſeruants, notwithſtanding they be as good as dead, ſhall they not liue euen in death it ſelfe, or rather ſhall they not haue power to riſe againe although they be altogether dead? Yes ſurely.

But it may here be demanded of what time the Prophet ſpeakes in this place, for many expound it of the laſt reſurrection. The Iewes referre it vnto Meſſiah and his kingdome: but they deceiue themſelues, becauſe they imagin that this was fulfilled at his firſt comming: our writers that are Chriſtians haue alſo miſſed the marke, who haue reſtrained it to the laſt Iudgement. For the Prophet comprehends the whole kingdome of Chriſt, euen from the beginning thereof vnto the latter end. Why ſo? Becauſe the hope of the bleſſed life alwaies ouercomes the world, as we ſhall ſee anon. Now to the end we may the better vnderſtand the Prophets meaning, we muſt firſt know, that life is not promiſed generallie vnto all, but only to ſuch as die in the Lord: now he ſpeakes of the faithfull which ſo die, whom the Lord preſerues vnder his ſafegard. We know that God is the God of the liuing, and not of the dead, Math. 22.32. Are we the Lords? Doubtleſſe we ſhall liue. But we muſt in the meane while become as thoſe that are dead, for our life is hidden, and as yet we can not ſee that which we hope for. Thus then he only ſpeakes of the dead; that is to ſay, of the condition of the faithfull which ſit now in the ſhadow of death, in regard of the many afflictions wherewith they are dayly viſited: whence we ſee that this can not be reſtrained to the laſt reſurrection. For we contrariwiſe affirme that the reprobates are dead, euen whileſt they liue. Why? Becauſe they neuer taſted of Gods fatherlie loue in Chriſt, wherein the true life conſiſts, and therefore they periſh in their brutiſh ſottiſhnes. But becauſe the faithfull runne vnto God, therefore they obteine life in the middeſt of their greateſt dangers, yea, euen in death it ſelfe: but in regard they ſet this laſt reſurrection before them as the end of their hope; therefore it can not be ſaid properlie that they liue, til that day be come; that being then freed from all ſorrowes and corruption, they may receiue a ſure life that neuer decaies. And therefore S. Paul very fitlie ſhewes that it were to turne the order of things vpſide downe, if that the faithfull ſhould liue till ſuch time as Chriſt who is the fountaine of life appeeres. Therefore it is we ſaid before that Iſaiah here comprehends the whole kingdome of Chriſt: for albeit we begin to feele the fruits of this conſolation when we enter into the Church, yet we wholie enioy not the full meaſure thereof till the day of the reſurrection be come, wherein all things ſhall be perfectlie reſtored, in which reſpect it is alſo called the day of reſtauration, Act. 3.21. Here then we ſee the only remedie to mitigate the bitternes of all our griefes, to wit, euen to turne our eies to the beholding of this day, in which God ſhall ſeparate the good from the bad.

As death then naturallie deuoures and deſtroyes all the race of Adam, ſo the miſeries to which they are ſubiect in this world are forerunners of the ſame death. Their life therefore is but a kind of death; but in regard that by the redemption wrought by Chriſt the curſe of God is taken away both in theſe beginnings of death, as alſo in death it ſelfe: therefore it is rightlie ſaid, That all thoſe that are grafted into Chriſtes bodie liue, whileſt they die, becauſe all their euils are turned vnto their good, Rom. 8.28. Whence it followes that they alwaies come forth as thoſe that are more then conquerors, euen out of the very iawes of death; and that till they be fullie and wholie knit vnto their head. Would wee then be eſteemed in the number of thoſe that are dead in Chriſt, of whoſe life he is the ſure gardian? We muſt then lift vp the eies of our faith aboue the whole courſe of nature.

But this is yet better expreſſed by the word body, or carcaſe, as if he ſhould ſay, this old rottennes which it ſeemes hath conſumed the bodies of the faithfull, ſhall hinder the Lord nothing at all to make them riſe vp in full beautie againe. As touching the proprietie of the Hebrue phraſe, ſome tranſlate it, With my bodie: others, Which are my bodie. Others againe, ſupplie a particle of ſimilitude, As my bodie: but in regard the ſenſe agrees well enough without adding or diminiſhing, let vs content our ſelues with that which the words do plainely ſound of themſelues, and ſo had I rather take it by way of application.

At the leaſt this word is added of ſet purpoſe, ſo as the Prophet thereby ioines himſelfe to the whole bodie of the Church: and thus he placeth himſelfe in the number of thoſe which being dead in the Lord, do notwithſtanding wait for a reſurrection apart. And in that he mentions himſelfe in particular, it is that he might giue the more authoritie vnto his doctrine. For he thereby ſhewes that he ſpake from the heart, vttering and teſtifying by this his confeſſion the fruit of his faith, according to that ſentence, I beleeued, therefore did I ſpeake, Pſal. 116.10. 2. Cor. 4.13. otherwiſe the wicked and prophane may well diſcourſe in words of Gods mercie, and of life eternall, and yet in the meane while haue no feeling at all of theſe things in their heart. As did that falſe Prophet Balaam, who knew well enough that that which he ſpake was true; and yet for all that receiued no profit by his prophecies himſelfe: Num. 23. 19. and 24. 5.

But our Prophet ſpeakes in this place far otherwiſe; for he profeſſeth, that he is of their number who belonged to a better life: thus ſhewing that he willingly vnderwent the ſorrows and calamities which God laid vpon him for the furtherance of his mortification; as one indeed that choſe rather to ſuffer afflictions with the people of God, then to inioy the pleaſures of ſinne for a ſeaſon. Now thus he makes it cleere to all the world, that he ſpeakes not here of things whic hee knew not, or of that which he felt not; but of thoſe things which he learned by experience. Yea, hee ſhewes hereby, that his confidence was ſo great, that he willingly ranged himſelfe among a company of dead bodies, which yet ſhould (as he beleeued) be reſtored to life, chuſing rather to bee accounted a rotten carcaſe, knowing himſelfe to bee a member of the Church, then to be in his full ſtrength out of the ſame. And this doubtleſſe cauſed his doctrine to be ſo much the more effectuall: for he oppoſeth it to the former ſentence, verſe 14. in which hee ſaid, that the wicked ſhould not liue; becauſe all hope of (a ioyfull reſurrection) was taken away from them.

Obiect. If any obiect that the reſurrection ſhall be common as well to good as to bad; it is eaſilie anſwered: for Iſaiah ſpeakes not here onely of the reſurrection; but of that felicitie which the faithfull ſhal inioy. I grant the wicked ſhall riſe, but it is to eternall perdition: their reſurrection therefore ſhall be to their ruine and death; whereas it ſhall bring happineſſe and glory to the iuſt.

Anſ. He calles the inhabitants of the duſt, the faithfull, who are humbled vnder croſſes and afflictions, who in life haue death continually before their eyes. Yet I deny not but they alſo inioy the benefits of God euen in this life: but by this ſimilitude the Prophet ſets out their miſerable condition, as thoſe that beare in their bodies the dying of the Lord Ieſus: 2. Cor. 4. 10. For it is needfull that their outward man ſhould be beaten downe and mortified, till at the laſt it be brought to nothing, that ſo the inward man may be renued daily: 2. Cor. 4. 16. If we meane then to haue any part or portion in this conſolation, let vs willingly content our ſelues to lie downe in the duſt.

For this cauſe hee commands the dead to ariſe and ſing; which may ſeeme to be very vnfitting for men in their caſe, there being nothing among them but a ſorrowfull ſilence. In this therefore the Prophet ſhewes an apparent difference betweene the elect of God, who ariſe by an heauenly power, albeit they be as good as rotten in their graues, and lie buried in the duſt; and the reprobates: for they being ſeparated from God and Chriſt, the fountaine of life, wither away, whileſt they liue, that ſo death may vtterly deuoure them.

An apparent difference betweene the elect and the reprobate.

Now in that he promiſeth to giue them the dewe of the meddow, hee thereby inricheth his doctrine with a verie elegant and fit ſimilitude: for we all know that the flowers do fade and die in winter, but eſpecially in meddowes, for they ſeeme to be altogether dead, neither can a man be perſwaded to the contrarie, that ſhall onely behold the vpper face of the earth; but the rootes notwithſtanding lie hid vnderneathe, which after they haue ſucked in the dewe of the ſpring time, doe againe gather ſtrength and life: ſo as the flowers which before were withered away and dried, doe then become freſh and greene.

Thus the people ſhall gather new force after they ſhall bee reuiued and watered with this fruitfull dewe of Gods grace, although for a time it ſeemed they were wholly withered and gone. Sure theſe ſimilitudes which are drawne from ſuch things as are familiarly knowne amongſt vs, haue great force in them to worke vpon our affections. For if flowers or graſſe, which are wet with the dewe that falles vpon them, doe ſprout forth, and wax greene; how much more ſhall we be reuiued if we be watered with the quickening deawes of Gods grace? Why ſhould not our bodies receiue new liuelineſſe, albeit they were rotten before? Hath not God as much care ouer vs, as he hath ouer the hearbs? Is not the holy Spirit of greater force then the deaw? Saint Paul I remember vſeth the like ſimilitude, 1. Cor. 15. 36. where hee ſpeakes of the reſurrection: but in regard he applies his metaphor to another purpoſe, I thinke it not amiſſe to let it paſſe for this time; becauſe I would not willingly confound that place with this. Let it ſuffice vs that we haue attained the true meaning of the Prophet.

What force familiar ſimilitudes haue to work vpon our affections.

Note.

In the end of the verſe where I haue tranſlated, The earth ſhall caſt forth her dead: ſome tranſlate it in the ſecond perſon; Thou ſhalt bring downe the land of Giants: or, Thou wilt bring downe the Giants in the earth. I reiect not this interpretation, becauſe the words may well beare this ſignification: but as I take it, the firſt ſeemes to agree beſt to the text, although the matter be not much materiall, in regard of the ſubſtance. For this muſt be referred to the conſolation which we mentioned a little before.

Verſ. 20. Come my people, enter thou into thy chambers, and ſhut thy doores after thee: hide thy ſelfe for a very little while, vntill the indignation paſſe ouer.

IN this verſe hee exhorts the children of God vnto patience, that they might cõtinue to beare their miſeries and afflictions quietly, as alſo to remaine inuincible againſt all the ſharpe temptations, which as it ſeemed ſhould ouerwhelme them. There was great need of this exhortation therefore: for the pitifull caſe into which the poore people were ſoone after brought, ſeemed in all outward appearance to bee farre off from the promiſe which was formerly made vnto them. The Prophet then like a tender hearted nurſe, takes this troubled people by the hand as it were, who otherwiſe knew not what ſhift to make, and carries them aſide into a ſecret place to lodge them in ſafetie, till theſe ſtirres and hurly burlies were appeaſed. Now whereas he calles them my people, he ſpeakes in the perſon of God, and not in his owne.

By chambers, he meanes a quiet and peaceable ſtate of conſcience: to wit, when with boldneſſe of courage and confidence, wee arme our ſelues with patience, in waiting for the comming of the Lord: as Abacuk, who hauing foretold what calamitie ſhould befall the Iewes, profeſſeth that hee ſtands all day vpon his watch-tower: that is to ſay, in a place of ſafetie, to expect the euent in patience and ſilence. Iſaiah commands them to doe the like here: as if he ſhould ſay; You that are the ſeruants of the Lord, get you into your chambers, or into ſome other ſequeſtred place, when you feele your ſelues aſſaulted with ſuch temptations as you are not able to reſiſt.

But for as much as it is not ſufficient to be once well fortified againſt the violence of garboiles and ſtirres, he therefore alſo commands them to ſhut the doore after them, which is to be referred to conſtancie and perſeuerance: as if he ſhould ſay; Looke to it that the diuell finde not the leaſt creuiſe open to aſſaile you: for hee can eaſily enter into our hearts, if we giue him but the leaſt aduantage that is.

Whereas he bids them to hide themſelues, his meaning is, that the faithfull ſhould inioy a ſecure freedom, if ſo be they were couragious in waiting for the comming of the Lord: for albeit we ought to fight boldly and valiantly, yet ſeeing the power of God is often manifeſted in our weakneſſe, wee cannot poſſibly take a better courſe, then in all humilitie to run and ſhrowd our ſelues vnder his wings, that ſo hee may ſaue vs from all inordinate feares and terrors. Furthermore, in regard that wee are giuen to boiling paſſions naturally, and are euer and anon caried away with impatiency, if we feele not Gods help at hand to ſuccour vs preſently: therefore hee ſaith, that theſe ſtormes and tempeſts ſhall blow ouer, and continue but a while. We muſt make account to fight euery day againſt one temptation or other; neither muſt wee thinke to come to the end thereof as long as we liue: and this is it that makes our miſeries ſeeme ſo wonderfull long and tedious vnto vs. But if we compare them with that eternitie wherin we ſhall inioy happineſſe without end; the meditation thereof will cauſe them to ſeeme but as a moment. As Saint Paul in a certaine place ſhewes, that the light afflictions which for a ſhort ſpace wee ſuffer in this world, are no way to be compared vnto that eternal weight of glory which ſhall bee reueiled in the world to come: 2. Cor. 4. 7.

2. Cor. 12. 9.

Wee muſt make our accounts to meete with new conflicts euery day.

Rom. 8. 8.

When the Prophet addes, vntill the indignation be paſt: he meant thereby to remoue all difficulties out of the mindes of the faithfull: and it is no leſſe then if hee had promiſed them deliuerance out of hand. Mee thinkes this word indignation, ſimply conſidered in it ſelfe, ſignifies that affliction which proceedes from the wrath of God. Others referre it vnto the enemies of the Church; which ſenſe though I reiect not, yet the firſt likes me better. For wee ſee how carefull the Prophets are to inſinuate into our mindes, that no euil befalles vs, but by the hand of God, and that he neuer ſends the ſame without cauſe, but is firſt prouoked thereunto by our ſinnes and offences. Hence we learne that God will not be angry with his Church for euer, but will cauſe his wrath to ceaſe at the laſt, euen as we ſee it to fall out in ſtormes and tempeſts: and this is the cauſe why the faithfull beare their croſſes with the greater courage. For thus the Church ſaith, Mich. 7. 9. I will beare the wrath of the Lord, becauſe I haue ſinned againſt him, &c. Why ſo? She knew well that God meant her good in chaſtiſing of her. Now our Prophet brings in the Lord ſpeaking, (as I touched before) to the end his exhortation might haue the better authoritie.

No euil befalles vs but by the hand of God.

God will not alwaies retaine his anger towards his Church, but wil cauſe his wrath at the length to ceaſe. Mich. 7. 18. Zac. 1. 12, 13

Verſ. 21. For behold the Lord commeth out of his place to viſit the iniquitie of the inhabitants of the earth againſt him: and the earth ſhall diſcouer her blood, and ſhall not hide her ſlaine.

NO doubt but it is an heauie temptation to the faithfull, when they ſee the wicked exerciſe their rage againſt them, and in the meane while, that God ſhould hold his peace: for in ſo doing, they imagine he hath forſaken them. The Prophet then labours to preuent this temptation, and ſhewes, that howſoeuer the Lord hath been ſilent for a while, yet hee will in the end ſhew himſelfe in due ſeaſon, to giue reliefe to his ſeruants, and to puniſh the wrongs that haue been done him. Thus by the word of comming forth, he deſcribes the Lord reaching out his hand as it were to his children: as if the ſame had been hidden before, in regard they felt not his helpe. For that is the cauſe why he ſaith, the Lord comes forth into fight; namely, to ſuccor his Church, and to execute his iudgements vpon her enemies: for in former time it ſeemed he had kept himſelfe cloſe and altogether ſhut vp in heauen. We may alſo verie well affirme, that Iſaiah alludes to the ſanctuarie; which maner of ſpeech is often met withall in the bookes of the Prophets. As if he ſhould ſay; Howſoeuer the prophane nations deſpiſe the Arke of the couenant, being ſeated in a very meane place; yet from thence ſhall the faithfull feele by good experience, how readie the power and fauour of God is preſt to ſuccour them, and that hee is not called vpon in this holy place in vaine. In the meane while, wee muſt hold this as a ſure principle; that albeit the wicked ſcorne the Temple, as if it were no better then ſome Country barne, or ſome ſuch like thing; yet euen from thence will the Lord come forth, when he sees the time fit to defend and to auenge his peoples quarrell vpon all the inhabitants of the world.

And this exposition sutes better then if by the word place, we should expound that he should come forth of heauen; for Isaiah meant to expresse somewhat more. The Prophets whē they make any mention of heauen they therewithall present before vs the glorie and maiestie of God: but our Prophet in this place respects our capacitie, that is to say, when we feele that God who in times past seemed to be farre off, and hidden out of our sight, doth at the last appeere for our comfort. He also hath vsed a particle demonstratiue, and a participle of the present tence for the greater certentie of the matter; as also to the end the faithfull might not thinke much to bridle their passions by patience till his comming forth.

Hitherunto appertaines that which he ads touching the visiting of iniquitie: for it were contrarie to his nature who is the Iudge of all the world to suffer wicked men to giue ouer themselues to all wickednes without impunitie. There is in the verb, to visit, a similitude well enough knowne: for we thinke that God either sees not at all, or else is busied about some other matters when he withholds or deferres the execution of his iudgements be it neuer so little a while.

These words also, against him, want not their weight: for it is often said that when the wicked lay their ambushes they spread a net or dig a pit for themselues. The sense then is, that all the annoyances & oppressions which the wicked bring vpon the Church, shall in time fall vpon their heads that haue been the contriuers thereof. Psal.9.15, & 57.6.

Lastly, there is also a very great vehemencie in the word, shall disclose: for now whilest the wicked shed and tread vnder foot innocent blood, the earth seemes as it were to suck and drinke it into her womb: in the meane while it seemes the death of the faithfull is quite and cleane forgotten, and the memorie thereof raced out of mens minds for euer; yea, and ỹ God himselfe vtterlie neglects it. These are mens imaginations, but the Lord witnesseth the contrarie here. He calles the blood of the earth then, which the earth hath drunke in, as it is said Gen.4.11. The earth hath opened her mouth to receiue thy brothers blood, when the blood of Abel was shed. For the Lord in that place amplifies and aggrauates the foulenes of the fact when he saith, That the earth is defiled with ỹ blood which was shed: and therefore he therein shewes, first, how pretious the death of his Saincts is in his sight: secondly, what care he hath of the same; and lastly, that he will reuenge it. For the earth it selfe shall be armed to punish the cruelties which haue been exercised by tyrants and the enemies of the truth against the faithfull: so that there is not the least drop of blood which is shed that shall not be accounted for. Let vs therefore remember this consolation, and set it alwaies before our eyes when the wicked smite vs, laughing and sporting themselues whilest they vex vs with all maner of outrages. For God in the end will shew that innocent blood hath not cried in vaine, because he can neuer forget his Saincts.

A Consolation which we ought to haue continuallie before our eies.

THE XXVII. CHAPTER.

Vers.1. In that day the Lord will visit Leuiathan that pearcing Serpent, and Leuiathan that crooked Serpent, With his sore and great and mightie sword: and will kill the Dragon that is in the sea.

THE Prophet speakes heere of Gods iudgement in generall, and so comprehends the whole kingdom of Satan. For hauing spoken before of the vengeāce of God against tyrants and vnbeleeuers which had shed innocent blood, he now passeth on further, and publisheth the edict it selfe. The word Leuiathan is diuersli expounded, but generallie it signifies a serpent, or the whales and fishes of the sea, which are as mōsters in regard of their excessiue greatnes. Now howsoeuer this description agrees to the king of Egypt, yet vnder this one kind he meant to comprehend all the enemies of the Church.

For mine owne part I make no question but by way of Allegorie he speakes here of Satan and his whole kingdome, describing it vnder the figure of some monstrous beast, and therwithall also priuilie taxeth the subtelties wherewith he couers his deceitfull baits. And thus he meant to preuent many doubts wherewith (as with mightie billowes) we are at euery turne tossed to and fro, whilest God on the one side promiseth to assist vs, and yet Satan on the other side ceaseth not to make vs feele the force of his darts and craftie conueyances: for his cunning is exceeding great to worke mischiefe, and his wrath is wonderfull hot against the poore Saincts of God. Gen.3.1. Satan.

But in the meane while the Prophet shewes that neither his force nor fraude shall be able to let the Lord from destroying both him and his kingdome. Furthermore, it is not to be doubted but as he here speakes of Satan himselfe, so likewise of all his imps and instruments by whom he gouerns his kingdome, and molests the Church of God. Let it be granted that this kingdome be furnished with infinite policies, and also with an inuincible power, yet shall the Lord easily bring them all to nought. Satans imps.

Which that we may the better conceiue, the Prophet opposeth against them the mightie and sharp sword of the Lord, by which it will be no masterie for him to slay his enemie how strong or subtile soeuer he be. We are to make account then that we ſhall euer haue to deale againſt Satan, who like a roaring Lion ſeekes about whom he may deuoure: and the world on the other ſide being like a Sea in which we are floting vp and downe, wherein euery moment diuers monſters aſſaile vs, indeuouring to ſinke our ſhip, and to caſt vs away: neither is there any force left vs, by which we may reſiſt them, vnleſſe the Lord be our helpe. And therefore by this deſcription the Prophet meant to ſet before vs the dangerous eſtate in which we ſtand; ſeeing we haue (on euery ſide) ſo many ſtrong and furious enemies, being alſo full of fraud. In regard whereof, wee ſhould be put to our ſhifts, and vtterly vndone, if God preuented them not by oppoſing his inuincible power againſt them for our defence. For this wretched Kingdome of Satan can neuer bee deſtroied, but by the ſword of the Lord.

The Church aſſailed on euery ſide with mightie and ſubtile enemies.

Nothing but Gods ſword is able to ſubdue Satans kingdome.

But wee are to obſerue what he ſaith in the beginning of the verſe; to wit, In that day. For thereby he meanes, that God permits Satan to vphold and continue his Kingdome for a time; but ſo, that it ſhall downe in the end; as Saint Paul ſaith, Rom 16.20. The Lord will ſhortly tread downe Satan vnder your feete. And thus by this promiſe wee ſee, that the time of our warfare is not yet accompliſhed, but that we muſt fight valiantly till this enemie be wholly ſubdued: who yet will neuer ceaſe to aſſaile vs as long as we liue, albeit he hath bin put to the worſt an hundred times. Let vs arme our ſelues then to wage battell with him continually, and to beare off the violent blowes, wherewith hee will try whether our armour be of proofe or no: but that we may not be diſcouraged, let vs alwaies caſt the eye of our faith to that day, in which all his forces ſhall be daſht in peeces.

Our warfare is not yet accompliſhed.

The epithites wherewith he ſets out this Leuiathan in part, notes his cunning and ſubtile policies; alſo in part his open crueltie: and thus he lets vs ſee that his ſtrength is vnable to be matched or ouercome. For the word Beriach, ſignifies a bolt or ſtake of yron: vnder which the Prophet by a figure meane to note out a piercing power, either in regard of the venomous biting, or the violence of Satan. The ſecond is drawne from the verbe Akal, which ſignifies to ouerthrow, and is to be referred to his ouerthwart and crooked bowings and turnings.

Verſ. 2. In that day ſing of the vineyard of *red wine.

*Or, to the red vine.

NOw he ſhewes that all this ſhall be done for the ſaluation of the Church. Why ſo? Becauſe the Lord prouides for the ſafetie of all ſuch as he hath once vouchſafed to receiue vnder his protection. That the Church then may inioy a ſure eſtate, Satan with all his retinue ſhall be brought to nought. And hitherunto tend all the adminiſtrations of Gods vengeance vpon his enemies; namely, to ſhew that hee hath care of his Church. Now albeit the Prophet expreſſeth not the word Church in this place; yet it is euident enough, that it is ſhe to whoſe heart the Lord ſpeakes on this gracious manner. Nay this figuratiue manner of ſpeech hath greater emphaſis in it, then if he had in plaine words called them the people of Iſrael: for in as much as the excellencie of a vine, conſiſts chiefly in the placing and planting of it, and alſo depends vpon the continuall dreſſing of it: if the Church be Gods vine, we thence gather, that ſhe cannot floriſh, but by the continuall courſe of his daily fauour and bleſſing vpon her. By this ſimilitude, hee alſo expreſſeth what ſingular loue and affection the Lord beares vnto her, as we haue more fully declared in the fifth Chapter.

Now he calles it a red vine: that is to ſay, very excellent. For red wine in the Scriptures, ſignifies excellencie, if wee conſider other places thereof well. Now he ſaith, that this ſong ſhall be ſung in that day, in regard that for a time the Church ſhould bee miſerably waſted; ſo as it ſhould become like vnto a deſert, or a place vntilled. But therewithall hee foretels that after this waſte, ſhe ſhall be reſtored, and filled with ſuch plentie of excellent fruit, that ſhe ſhall haue ample occaſion to ſing for ioy.

Verſ. 3. *I the Lord doe keepe it: I will water it euerie moment: leſt anie aſſaile, I will keepe it night and day.

*Or, I am the Lord that keepes it.

1

IN this verſe the Lord ſhewes what care he hath for this vine, and what diligence hee vſeth in dreſſing and keeping of it. As if he ſhould ſay; I omit no care nor paines that belongs to a good maſter of a familie, who prouidently prouides all things fit for his houſhold in due ſeaſon. Now hee not onely ſhewes what hee will doe when the time of ioy and gladneſſe ſhall come; but he alſo tels what benefits the Iewes had receiued from his hands before, that ſo they might be put in the better hope for the time to come. But in the mean while, we muſt ſupply a cloſe oppoſition here, of the time which is betweene theſe two: for God ſeemed vtterly to neglect his Church, and that in ſuch wiſe, as it became like a deſert. And hence it was that the vineyard of the Lord was ſo ſpoiled and waſted, to wit, becauſe the Lord left it for a time, and gaue it vp as a pray into his enemies hands. Whence we gather, that our welfare will ſoone decay, if the Lord doe neuer ſo little withdraw himſelfe from vs: as on the contrarie, that all ſhall goe well with vs, as long as he aſſiſts vs.

Our welfare ſoone decaies, if God doe but a little withdraw his hand.

Now he mentions two points wherein the Lord will ſhew his diligence; to wit, hee will water his vine continually, and will alſo incloſe and watch it, that it be not ouerrunne by theeues or wild beaſts, but may be preſerued from all diſcommodities. Theſe two things are chiefly to bee looked vnto for the good conſeruation of a vine; to wit, that it be well husbanded, and well fenced. By watering of it, he comprehends whatſoeuer belongs to the dreſſing and manuring of it: wherein he promiseth to leaue no dutie vnperformed whereby the good thereof may be procured.

2 But vnto this, vigilancie must needs be added: for what would it auaile to husband a vine with great labour, if afterward it should be left open for theeues and beasts to enter in and spoile it at their pleasures? The Lord promiseth therfore that he will likewise keepe it, that no hurt be done vnto it, but that the fruites may haue time to ripen; and may afterward be reaped in their season. Howsoeuer this poore vine be subiect then to many inconueniences by reason of enemies and cruell beasts which will still be assailing of it with great furie, yet God promiseth that he will interpose himselfe for her defence, so as it shall be kept safe and sound from all dangers. Now seeing he hath appointed a certaine day in which we shall sing this song, let not our hearts quaile if for a time he withdraw his help from vs. Be it that he leaues vs to be spoiled and vexed for a little while, yet will he let vs see in the end that he hath not forgotten vs.

God will neuer cease to supplie his Church with necessarie benefits.

Vers. 2.

Vers. 4. Anger is not in me: Who would set the briars and thornes against me in battell? I would goe thorow them, I would burne them together.

THis verse conteines a most sweet consolation in it. For the Prophet therein shewes the incredible loue which God beares to his people; albeit they be of a peruerse and wicked spirit. God takes vpon him heere then (as we shall see anon) the person of a louing father greatlie offended, who is angrie with his sonne, yet so, that he must needs shew how much he is inclined to pitie and compassion, because ỹ ardent loue he beares to his sonne ouercomes all his displeasure. In a word, he shews that God can not so hate his chosen, but that he therewithall will make them feele his fatherlie loue towards them, euen in the middest of his corrections wherewith he visits them. The Scripture is wont to set forth God vnto vs many waies: for sometime it sets him before vs as one whose wrath

1 is kindled, and as one terrible to behold;

2 againe, in other places, shewing nothing but mercie and loue. Now why is he set forth thus diuerslie? Surely because wee are not capable of his goodnes. For this cause he is faine to shew himselfe froward with such as are froward; and pure with the pure, as Dauid shewes, Psal.18.26. For he manifests himselfe in such wise vnto vs, as we giue him occasion. And if he shew himselfe seuere at any time, we may thanke the hardnes of our owne hearts for it.

God can not so hate his chosen, but he makes them feele his fauour.

But the Prophet speakes not here of all indifferentlie, but of the Church only, to whom he will euer be a father, notwithstanding that he chastise and correct her for her sinnes and iniquities. His Church shall continue safe then, howsoeuer she be vnworthie of such a benefit. This sentence therefore must be restrained to the Church, that so there may be a relation alwaies had betweene God and his elect: whom he can not but dearely loue, although his anger be seuere against the reprobate. Thus we see the excellencie of this Consolation: for if we be sure that we are the called of God, we may boldly resolue that he can not be angrie with vs: and to speake properlie, it is impossible. Why so? Because he loues vs with such a constant affection, as he can neuer lose it. I denie not but God at that time hated some euen among this people, and yet he calles them his beloued, because of his secret adoption. Now by how much the more God shewed himselfe good and gratious towards the people, by so much the more were they all left without excuse that had prouoked his wrath against them by their rebellions. Neither need we doubt but he aggrauates their fault by this circumstãce, to wit, that he is enforced to change his wonted affection towards them in regard of their frowardnes. For hauing spoken of his mildnes, he suddenlie cries out, Who would set the briars and thornes against me in battaile? Or (as others translate) who will make me like the briar and the thorne? Now it were not amisse to reade it, Who will set the briar against me, that I may fight as the thorne against it. For there is no coniunction copulatiue betweene these two words. But I willinglie content my selfe with the first exposition, to wit, that God wisheth he might haue to do with thornes and briars, which he would quicklie consume with the fire of his indignation. But if any 3 had rather say that the Prophet here taxeth the doubts which often troubles vs by reason of our owne infidelitie, when we feele the anger of God to be kindled against vs, as if he should say, You much deceiue your selues in that you compare me to a thorne and a briar; that is to say, in attributing a cruell or froward disposition of nature vnto me: if any (I say) shall thus interpret it, I hinder him not to follow the same: and yet I suppose it to be besides the Prophets meaning. Whereas o- 4 thers also thinke that God here puts vpon him the person of one that is angrie, as if he should say, I will no longer be so milde nor easie to be intreated as I haue been heretofore: this also seemes so constreined that it needs no further refutation. I grant, that as God is gratious and mercifull by nature, so nothing goes more against the same then roughnes and seueritie; as one that is constreined to borrow another nature (as it were) from others, when he would shew himselfe angrie. But if the text be read as I haue first interpreted it, I doubt not but it will be sufficient of it selfe to refute the rest, to wit, that God takes vp a heauie complaint that he is not to fight rather with thornes, then against his vine, which he is therefore constreined to spare, because it is his inheritance.

God can not be angrie with his chosen.

This verse must be restrained to the Church.

That which followes after, I will goe by steps thorow them, and burne them doth also confirme mine exposition: for burning belongs to thornes and briars; all which the Lord would burne euen as if he made war against them: and therefore he shewes, that he will carrie himselfe more moderately, because hee hath to doe with his vine. Hence we gather, that if

If God refraine his anger towards vs, it is not for our merits, but for his free election ſake.

if the Lord be not angry with vs, wee are not to attribute it to our owne merits or deſerts, but to his owne free election. For in ſaying, who would ſet him, he apparently ſhewes, that he hath iuſt cauſe to make war vpon vs, and vtterly to conſume vs; were it not for the compaſſion he hath to his Church. And we ſhould alſo be like to thornes and vnbeleeuers, vnleſſe the Lord in his mercy, did vouchſafe to ſeparate vs from amongſt them, leſt wee ſhould periſh with them. If any would ioyne theſe two words, in battell, with theſe words, who would ſet the ſenſe alſo would not be amiſſe.

Verſ. 5. *Or will he feele my ſtrength, that he may make peace with me, and be at one with me?

*Or, let him make peace with me, let him make peace with me.

THe Hebrew particle is often diſiunctiue; and therefore this place is expounded as if it had been ſaid; Either let her feele my ſtrength, or let her make peace with me: that is to ſay, if ſhe make not peace with me, then ſhall ſhe feele my ſtrength, to her great loſſe. Others expound it a little otherwiſe; Who will feele my ſtrength? that is to ſay, who will repreſſe it? But I leaue this interpretation, becauſe it ſeemes too much conſtrained; contenting my ſelfe with that which is moſt receiued. The expoſitours thinke then that God threatens the Iewes, as one that aſſaies all meanes to bring them home into the right way: for God muſt worke vpon vs many waies, in reſpect wee are ſo accuſtomed to abuſe his patience and goodneſſe. And therefore he often teſtifies, that hee will bring vpon vs the puniſhment of our ingratitude; which it ſeemes Iſaiah doth in this place: as if he ſhould ſay; If this people will not accept of my kindneſſe, and repent, and ſo make peace with mee, I aſſure them they ſhall feele the waight of my hand, which hitherunto I haue withholden from them. There may another apt ſenſe be alſo gathered hence, and yet ſomewhat differing from this. As if the Lord ſhould exhort the people to acknowledge his power, by which they might be brought to ſeeke peace with him: for whence proceedes that brutiſh confidence, that wee feare not the anger of God, but becauſe we reuerence not his power as we ought to doe? *

Yet had I rather take it here by way of interrogation; which kind of reading we often times meete with all; as thus: Will hee feele my force that hee may make peace with me? as if a father being in ſome perplexitie and care for the good of his ſonne, ſhould take vp a ſorrowfull complaint on this manner; Will not this vntoward boy indure that I ſhould doe him good? I am at my wits end, I know not how to deale with him; he will abide no rough handling: and yet he abuſeth my lenitie. What ſhall I doe? Surely I will turne him out of doores, if I ſee no amendment: and then I thinke hee will feele how great the power of a father is, whereby I haue hitherto maintained him. For ſeeing he cannot beare kind vſage, I will try what ſeueritie will worke. Will hee not at length acknowledge what mine authoritie is ouer him, and ſeeke to bee at one with me? Now wee ſhall the better vnderſtand this, if wee conſider that all our euils ariſe from the want of being touched with the feeling of Gods goodneſſe: for could it once come into our mindes how many benefits wee haue receiued from his hands, it would ſuffice to withdraw vs from all our our bad courſes, and wee would forthwith ſeeke to bee reconciled vnto him.

Our miſeries ariſe from the want of feeling of the Lords goodneſſe.

We may behold here then, how carefull our heauenly Father is for our ſaluation, as one that would make vs feele both his power and goodneſſe; that ſo perceiuing the worth of them both, we might partake in the fruits of both more and more. In a word, he would be as familiar with vs, as with his children, if our owne wilfull malice did not hinder him. Seeing then we will not indure that he ſhould deale graciouſly with vs; muſt hee not needes manifeſt his power and greatneſſe, that we being humbled by the ſame, and touched to the quicke with his iudgements, we may with all meekeneſſe ſeeke vnto him, and gladly ſue for pardon and fauour at his hands? now this is brought to paſſe when we conuert vnto him without faining: for it cannot be that we ſhould finde fauour in his ſight, as long as wee pleaſe and flatter our ſelues in our vices. On the other ſide, if wee make peace with him, then muſt wee make full account to bee at enmitie with Satan and ſinne.

Note how carefull the Lord is for our welfare.

Let vs make our account that if we will make peace with God, we muſt be at enmitie with Satan and ſinne.

But the doubling of the words giues vs moſt cleerely to perceiue, how deſirous the Lord is to be at one with vs: for hee might haue ſaid in a word, that hee is willing to make peace with vs, and readie to forgiue. When then he doubles it twice, Let him make peace with me, I ſay, let him make peace with mee: he therein expreſſeth with what a willing and readie mind, yea and with what feruent deſire hee haſtens to aboliſh all our iniquities.

Note Gods willingneſſe to be at peace with vs.

Verſ. 6. Hereafter Iacob ſhall take roote, Iſrael ſhall flouriſh and grow, and the world ſhall be filled with fruit.

NOw hee ſhewes by the effects, what this loue is whereof he ſpake in the former verſes. For the better vnderſtanding whereof, wee muſt conſider the eſtate of this ancient people which was Gods heritage: not by their deſerts, but by the benefit of the free adoption. The Lord had iuſt cauſe to bee angrie with them, ſo farre forth as to caſt them wholly out of his ſight, and to roote them cleane out. But hee refrained his anger, becauſe hee had to doe with his vine and inheritance. For his onely meaning was, that the people ſhould acknowledge their fault, and by that meanes returne into fauour with him. And this is the cauſe why hee addes this promiſe to the former, leſt the people ſhould deſpaire, by being ouermuch feared with this power of God, from which theſe rods and chaſtiſements were threamed to proceed. For it is easie to slip into desperation by the sense of Gods iudgement, if there be not some hope left vs of mercie.

Verſ. 2, 3.

It is an easie matter to slip into desperation by the sight of Gods iudgement, vnlesse some hope of mercie be left vs.

Therefore he saith, that Iacob shall take roote againe: as if he should say, I haue in deed wasted my Church, and brought her almost to nothing, yet shall she recouer her first florishing estate, so as she shall fill the whole world; for she shall increase more and more after she is reconciled vnto me. Now this similitude which is drawne from taking roote, is very elegant, because we are as good as plucked vp by the rootes whilest God is angrie with vs, for then we are as good as dead and vtterlie cut off: but how soeuer the Lord afflicts his Church, yet he neuer suffers the rootes to die: true it is they lie hid, but yet in time they shall reuiue and bring forth fruit.

God afflicts his Church, but he neuer suffers her roote to perish.

Whereas he saith the world shall be filled with the fruit of these rootes; that was accomplished at the comming of Christ, who gathered and multiplied the people of God by his Gospell: for then Israel and the Gentiles were vnited into one bodie, and so the difference was taken away which was betweene them in former time. Now we are not ignorant that the Gospell, and the whole fruit which it brought forth, proceeded first from the Iewes.

Ioh. 4. 22.

Vers. 7. Hath he smitten him as he smote those that smote him? or is he slaine according to the slaughter of those that were slaine by him?

HE confirmes the former sentence, to wit, that they might see sure and euident signes of Gods loue and goodnes euen in his chastisements: for he is wont so to correct his people that whilest he beates thē downe with his left hand, he susteins them with his right. This verse is diuerslie expounded: some interpret it thus, Haue I smitten Israel, as his enemies haue smitten him? The Assyrians shewed them no mercie, but vexed them with all rigor, but I haue moderated my wrath, and haue not smitten them for their ruine: whereby I haue well shewed that I was not their enemie. And yet me thinks the other exposition pleaseth me better, which also is the most receiued, to wit, that a difference is here put betweene the faithfull and the wicked: for the Lord punisheth them both indifferentlie; but yet after a diuers maner. For in punishing the reprobate he giues way to his anger, because he meanes to root them out in regard they be vessels of his wrath ordeined to destruction, as those that haue no taste nor feeling at all of his goodnes: but when he corrects his children, he moderates his anger, and aimes at a contrarie marke, for he thereby meanes to worke their amendment, and to draw them to himselfe, that so in the end they may haue a better & a more permanent estate.

God afflicts the elect and reprobate both alike in this life, but after a diuers maner.

Rom. 9. 22.

Quest.

But may some man say, Wherefore doth the Prophet vse a relatiue here, saying, of him which smote him. I answere, it is because the Lord often vseth the wicked as his instrumēts to correct his chosen, and that for their greater humbling. For no doubt it is a very great triall the Lord puts vs vnto, when he suffers vs to be oppressed vnder the tyrannie of the wicked: for we doubt sometimes as if he tooke part with them against vs, or as if he hated vs, and meant to disappoint vs of his succor. For the preuenting of this doubt, he saith, It is true, that now and then he permits the wicked to afflict his people, and to worke their wills vpon them for a time, but in the end they themselues with their impietie shall be punished much more sharplie then they haue punished the faithful. Notwithstanding if any had rather follow the first exposition, I leaue it to his choice, namely, that the Lord will not deale with vs as with his enemies. Thēce came that sentence, It is better to fall into the hands of God, then into the hands of men: for the Lord can neuer forget his couenant; wherein he hath giuen his word to vse his Church with all louing and fatherly affection.

2. Sam. 24. 14.

Vers. 8. *In measure in the branches thereof wilt thou contend with it, * when he bloweth with his rough wind in the day of the east winde.*

* or, although he shal blow.

THis is the second proofe of Gods mercie towards his elect; whom he iudgeth with the world, lest they should be condemned with the world: for whilest he smites them, he so moderates his blowes, that he still hath an eye to their weaknes; so as he will neuer correct them beyond measure. As touching the word measure, all the expositors conclude that it signifies moderation: for otherwise wee were neuer able to beare Gods hand; but should be ouerwhelmed forthwith: but he holds an euen hand, and is also faithfull, as S. Paul saith, and wil not suffer vs to be tempted aboue that we are able to beare, 1. Cor. 10. 13. And thus Ieremiah desires the Lord to correct him in iudgement, that is to say, in measure, that so the blowes might be proportionable to his infirmitie. But the expositors agree not in ỹ interpretation of these words, in the branches: for some translate, In setting one of them against another by ciuill warres: Others, that God will reuenge their wickednesses by that sword which themselues haue drawne out and put into his hand. But I passe by both these expositions, because I can not approue of them: that interpretation which I take to be the most probable is theirs, who expound, In his buds, that is to say, In his plāts, signifying, that the Lord will not only curse their goods, but their persons also. For we know that Gods chastisements are of diuers kinds: the lightest are those whereby he depriues vs of outward things, which are commonlie termed the goods of fortune. His meaning is then, that God will so chastise the faithfull, as he will not only touch them in their persons, but he will also depriue them of ordinarie foode, to wit, of wheate, wine, oyle, and other like commodities which the earth brings forth: for the verb Shalach (wher-of this word bud comes) ſignifies to bring forth, ſprout, or bud.

But I haue another expoſition which comes neerer the Prophets meaning; to wit, that God contends with his Church in her buds or branches: for albeit hee lops off the branches, and cuts downe the body of the tree alſo, yet he will not ſuffer his wrath to conſume the rootes and all: but the tree ſhall ſpring, becauſe there is alwaies ſome ſap in the rootes, which God will neuer ſuffer to die nor decay. And this fits well with the ſixt verſe, where hee promiſed that Iſrael ſhould take roote, and bring forth fruit. He expounds that then which hee ſpake before; to wit, in meaſure: that is to ſay; hee will not plucke it vp by the rootes: for the Lord will lop off that which appeares on the outſide of the tree; to wit, the branches and the leaues; but he will keepe the roote ſound. As for the reprobates, hee will vtterly ſtub them vp, and ſo mangle them to peeces, that they ſhall neuer ſprout more.

Whereas others haue tranſlated; He blew with his wind: I haue thought it better to ſay; although he ſhall haue blowed: for he continues the ſimilitude in which hee alluded to the herbes and plants, which wither away when any ſharpe wind blowes vpon them; yet it is but in the vpper parts, becauſe the roote lies alwaies warme in the earth. So, albeit the Lord comes violently vpon the faithfull, and disfigures them ſo, that they ſeeme as good as brought to nothing, yet is hee wont to preſerue ſome ſappe and ſeede within them.

Whereas the Prophet names the eaſt wind; he reſpects the ſituation of Iudea, becauſe that wind did much hurt there; as wee may ſee by many other places. Now we know that euery Country hath his particular wind, which is noiſome vnto it. As for example; ſome haue the the north-eaſt wind; ſome the ſouth wind: others the eaſt wind riſing vnder the Sunne, which is very hurtfull; for it makes the corne to ſhed, blaſts and ſpoiles al fruits; it ſhakes the trees, and leaues nothing almoſt in the fields y is good behind it. By this eaſt-wind then, ſome vnderſtand that which is towards the Sunne riſing, being exceeding noiſome to many Countries.

Verſ. 9. By this therefore ſhall the iniquitie of Iacob bee purged, and this is all the fruit, the taking away of his ſinne: When hee ſhall make all the ſtones of the Altar as chalke ſtones broken in peeces, that the groues and images may not ſtand vp.

HAuing ſpoken of the chaſtiſement of the people; he now begins in plainer words to ſhew, that the Lord wil ſo prouide for their ſaluation, by thoſe rods wherewith he corrected them, that they ſhall feele the fruit thereof. I grant he ſpake of this before, but now he expounds himſelfe more cleerely; to wit, that all the afflictions wherewith God humbled them, ſhould ſerue as medicines to purge their ſinnes, ſo as they ſhould recouer his former fauour.

In what ſenſe it is ſaid that afflictions purge away ſinnes.

But will ſome man ſay, are ſinnes purged by afflictions, by which God corrects vs? If it bee ſo, then it followes that they are ſatisfactions for ſinnes; as the Papiſts teach. For theſe two things depend one vpon another; to wit, if God correct vs for our ſinnes, that they may be done away; then if he ſends no affliction, it followes that there muſt be ſome ſatisfaction in ſtead of it. But it is no hard matter to looſe this knot, if we note that the Prophet meddles not here with this queſtion; namely, whether wee merit remiſſion of ſinnes by workes, or whether afflictions bee ſatisfactions for our offences. For his purpoſe is plainely to teach, that corrections are remedies ſent of God, whereby hee cures our maladies, in regard we are wont to abuſe his patience and long ſuffering. Needfull it is therefore that he ſhould force vs to acknowledge our ſins, & to beare afflictiõs patiently: and thus afflictions are as purgations whereby our wicked luſts are conſumed, euen as if they had paſſed thorow the fire; which metaphor the Scripture is often wont to vſe. But they can no way become ſatisfactions: I grant men may bee prepared by them to repentance.

Obiect.

Anſ.

Corrections are Gods medicines by which he cures our maladies.

Pſal. 66. 10. 12.

Pſal. 89. 46.

Thus hee teacheth then that the faithfull haue none occaſion at all to repine againſt the hand that ſmote them; but rather to acknowledge that God vſeth this as a meanes to procure their ſaluation; becauſe otherwiſe they would not be brought to taſte how good and gracious he is. If any deſire a ſhorter diſtinction, we ſay in a word, that chaſtiſements purge our ſinnes mediately, but not immediately, for they bring vs to repentance; which in its order and place, leades vs to the obtaining of the forgiueneſſe of ſinnes.

Now whereas we haue tranſlated, Behold, all the fruit ſhall be, &c. others read it in the genitiue; Of the taking away: but I hold it better to reade it in the nominatiue caſe, in which it is. The word all, is often taken for great, or abundant: hee meanes then that there ſhall come a plentifull harueſt as it were, by theſe afflictions. To be ſhort, hee would haue this correction to be well taken, in regard of the profit which it brings with it; that the faithfull bearing of them patiently and quietly, might thereby be purged from their corruptions, and brought into the way of ſaluation.

Afflictions ought to be taken in good part, in regard of the fruit they bring with them.

But in the next place the Prophet expounds himſelfe yet more cleerly, where hee ſpeakes of the aboliſhing of ſuperſtitions: for whileſt Iſrael was in proſperitie, they neuer thought of repentance: and truely it is giuen to men naturally to wax extreme proud and ſtubburne, when they inioy eaſe and pleaſure. He ſhewes then that God meant together with their chaſtiſement, to purge their ſins; becauſe they had ſoothed vp themſelues in their naughtineſſe before, whileſt the Lord heaped vp bleſſings vpon them, and cauſed them to feele his goodneſſe and mercy: but now they ſhould change both their mind and their maners, acknowledging and confessing that they were iustlie punished. Now the Prophet puts one kind here for all, to the end we should comprehend the whole vnder this part: so as in a word he notes out the abolishing of all Idolatrie and superstition. For he mentions not the Altar which was consecrated vnto God, but that which themselues had dedicated to their Idols. When the stones of it then should be broken, the Idoles ouerthrowne, and dasht in pieces, so that no signes of Idolatrie at all were to be seene, euen at that very instant should the sinnes of the people be taken away.

If sinne be put away when all Idolatrie is banished: then whilst Idolatrie remaineth sinne must needs be imputed.

Hence we learne that we can looke for no pardon from the Lord vnlesse we forthwith repent vs of our sinnes: for whosoeuer he be that flatters himselfe in his filthines, he shall assuredlie pull downe the wrath of God vpon his owne head, which he ceaseth not to inflame against him. Our iniquitie then is taken away when we are touched with a true feeling of repentance. In the second place obserue, that albeit repentance be an inward affection of the heart, yet it stayes not there, but brings forth fruites to the view of men. For it is in vaine to make men belee ue we feare God, vnlesse we cause our light so to shine before them by our outward works: for we can not separate the roote frō the fruite. Thirdly we haue to note, that the Prophet mentions Idolatrie principallie in this place, because it is the fountaine from whence all euils flowe. For whileſt Gods pure worship and sincere religion florisheth, you shall see the duties of charitie necessarilie to flow frō thence: but we no sooner forsake God, but he forthwith lets vs fall into all sorts of vices. And this is the maine reason why he comprehends all kinds of wickednesses vnder the name of Idolatrie. Besides, we see that he not only condemnes Images and Idols, but whatsoeuer the Iewes had inuented without the prescript rule of the law: whence it followes, that all will-worship is reiected of GOD. Where he addes in the end, that they shall no more arise or stand vp: he shewes how odious a thing Idolatrie is in Gods sight, seeing he will haue the very memorie thereof to be quite abolished, so as afterwards there should no signe thereof be left at all. And yet the Prophet meant to expresse somewhat more, to wit, that our repentance should be such, as that we ought to perseuere therein cōstantlie vnto the end. For we call not that true repentance when men are only moued vpon some sudden passion to renounce and abolish their superstitions, and then forthwith to suffer them to sprout and increase againe, which yet we see comes often to passe in manie, who in the beginning seemed to be consumed with zeale in an outward shew, and within a while haue growne key cold againe. But the Prophet here notes out such a constant zeale, that those who haue once begun to forsake and renounce their abominations, hold out and perseuere in a good course vnto the end.

The forsaking of God, the next way to tumble vs headlong into the committing of all iniquities.

God reiects not Idolatrie alone, but all willworship, all be it be grounded vpon neuer so good intents.

True repentance holds out to the end.

* Or, neuertheleſſe.

Vers. 10. * Yet the defenced Citie shall be desolate, and the habitation shall be forsaken, and left like a Wildernes. There shall the Calfe feede, and there shall he lie, * and consume the branches thereof.

* Or, shall brouze vpon the tops thereof.

YEt.] Some take the Hebrue Coniunction Vau, for a particle of rendring the cause; and some, as if it signified Otherwise: therefore it will beare a double sense. If we interpret it For, then the Prophet should giue a reason of that which went before: but that is against the drift of the text; and besides, it is vtterlie a verie absurd exposition. Those who take it for Otherwise, haue the most likelihood: for this threat may well agree, If you repent not, looke to the issue; Your Citie which is so well fortified, shall be made like a wildernes. But yet me thinks this is too constreined a sense. I had rather then expound it, Notwithstanding, or neuertheleſſe: for the Prophet meant to say, that Ierusalem and the rest of the Cities of Iudea should be destroyed: neither could Ierusalem possiblie escape, albeit God meant to spare his people. This admonition was very requisit, because the faithfull might haue been discouraged in seeing this holie Citie ouerthrowne, and the Temple laid on heapes: but they knew by the former prophesies that God had meanes enow in store to conserue his Church, and the consideration thereof vpheld them. The Prophet then goes about to preuent this temptation. And from hence learne, that we ought neuer to be out of heart howsoeuer we be brought to a great exigent; and that the Lord begins to handle vs with all extremitie. Now albeit this threatning may well concerne all Iudea, yet I rather thinke that he speakes here principallie of Ierusalem, which was the Mother Citie of that countrie.

Whereas he addes that the Calfe shall feede there, it is a figuratiue maner of speech much vsed among the Prophets as oft as they mention the destruction of a Citie: for they then forthwith shew that the place shall be made pasture ground. In which we haue to obserue what should moue the Lord to execute such a iudgement as to put brute beasts to feed in that place which the Iewes by their wickednes had prophaned. Surely he had adopted them to be his children, and therefore it was their duties to haue yeelded subiection to so louing a father: but in regard they had broken out into licentious behauiour against him, and had shaken off his yoke, it was iust with the Lord as a punishment of their ingratitude, that the place of their dwelling should now be inhabited by better inhabitants, taken from among brute beasts, rather then men.

The sinnes of a nation may so farre prouoke the Lord, that where it was an habitation for men, it shall become an habitation for beasts only.

Whereas he saith the tops, it is to augment the description of this waste and desolation: as if he should say, There shal be such plentie of grasse, that the Calues shal only brouze vpon the tendereſt parts thereof. The word Saiph signifies also a bow or branch: but because they naturallie sprout vp on high, I take it here for the top, or end. We may also affirme that the Prophet alludes to the faire shew which which the Citie had, it being in times paſt beautified with faire and high buildings; but nothing ſhould be ſeene there (theſe houſes being throwne downe) but graſſe, and boughes of trees, wherewith the calues being plentifully fed, ſhould onely for wantonnes, browze vpon the tops thereof.

*Or, his harueſt ſhall dry. *Or, ſhall come, and ſhall ſet, &c.

Verſ. 11. *When *the boughes of it are dry, they ſhall be broken: the women come and ſet them on fire: for it is a people of none vnderſtanding; therefore hee that made them ſhall haue no compaſſion of them; and he that formed them ſhall haue no mercy on them.

SOme thinke the Prophet hath reſpect to the ſimilitude of the vine, whereof hee ſpake in the beginning of this Chapter; and therefore they tranſlate, When the branches ſhall die. I grant that the word Keſirah, is ambiguous: but becauſe the ſimilitude of the harueſt agrees better; as alſo that the Hebrew word may be ſo expounded, therefore I had rather take it in this ſenſe. And yet I trãſlate not, When the harueſt ſhall be dried; but, Whẽ the harueſt ſhal dry. Now, To dry in this place ſignifies nothing elſe but to come to ripeneſſe; as if hee ſhould ſay, Before the crop be ripe it ſhall be cut downe: and ſo the Lord will depriue thee of that which thou thoughteſt thou hadſt ſure enough in thine hand. Where he ſaith, the women ſhall come; his meaning is, that God ſhall neede no ſtrong armie of men to finiſh this buſineſſe, but poore weake women ſhall ſuffice: and thus he amplifies the indignitie that ſhall bee offered them in this chaſtiſement. For he threatens that the calamitie ſhall be full of ſhame and reproach, in regard that it is a greater diſgrace to be praied vpon and ſpoiled by the hands of fillie women, who were neuer expert in feates of armes, then by men who are ſouldiers by profeſſion.

In the next place hee ſhewes the cauſe of this ſo great a calamitie: for at the firſt bluſh the Lord might ſeeme too ſeuere in ſuffering his choſen to be ſo miſerably vexed and ſcattered, without any ſuccour. Why ſo? Becauſe it is contrary to his louing and fatherly diſpoſition, to deale thus with his children. But our Prophet ſhewes, that God did not correct the Iewes ſo rigorouſly without good reaſon, for they were deſtitute of vnderſtanding, & ſound iudgement. It is not for nothing thẽ that he ſaith, ignorance was the cauſe of all their miſeries: for ſeeing true wiſdome conſiſts in the feare of God, doth not the holy Ghoſt iuſtly condemne all them to bee blind earthwormes, who deſpiſe God to walke after their owne inordinate luſts?

Prou. 1.7. Pſal. 111.10

Ignorance excuſeth not.

For ignorãce is for the moſt part ioyned with malice.

And yet ſuch a blindneſſe cannot excuſe nor free vs from being guilty of malice: for they that offend God, doe it maliciouſly, notwithſtanding they bee hoodwincked, in reſpect of the violences of their luſts: ignorance and malice then are ioyned together; yet ſo, that this ignorance proceedes from a corrupt deſire of the heart. Thence is it that the Hebrewes call all ſinnes generally by the name of ignorances: and thus Moſes ſaith, Oh that they were wiſe! Deut. 32.29. Now euery one may eaſily bee drawne to ſubſcribe to this, by conſidering in himſelfe with what crooked affections he is carried away: for being once depriued of the light of holy doctrine, and deſtitute of vnderſtanding, the diuell ſets vs going with ſuch a head ſtrongneſſe, that we neither feare Gods hand, nor make any account of his holy word. And that he may ſet vs ouer bootes and all, as they ſay, in the next place hee ſtriues to take away from vs all hope of pardon, which may be referred to the whole body of this people in general. For albeit that a remnãt were preſerued, yet the wrath of God ceaſed not for all that to be inflamed againſt the whole multitude in generall.

Whereas the Prophet calles God the maker and former of Iſrael; it is not meant as in reſpect of the creation of heauen and earth; but becauſe he made & formed Iſrael his Church anew, by the worke of regeneration: in which ſenſe, Saint Paul ſaith, that we are the workemanſhip of God: as wee alſo haue ſhewed in another place. Now the reaſon that moued Iſaiah to ſpeake thus, was to aggraiuate and to amplifie the meaſure of their vnthankfulnes, to which they were growne: ſhewing that they were iuſtly puniſhed, becauſe they diſhonoured and diſreuerenced that God moſt ſhamefullie, who had both formed and preſerued them.

Eph. 2.10.

Chap. 17.7.

Verſ. 12. *And in that day ſhall the Lord threſh from the chanell of the riuer, vnto the riuer of Egypt: and yee ſhall bee gathered one by one, O children of Iſrael.

*Or, yet notwithſtanding.

IN this place the Prophet mitigates the ſharpneſſe of the former ſentence: for it was an horrible iudgement of God vpon this people, to be left deſtitute of all hope of fauour or mercy. The Hebrew particle Vau therefore, ſhould bee tranſlated as it was in the tenth verſe; Notwithſtanding, or, Neuertheleſſe it ſhall come to paſſe in that day. Alſo the Prophet vſeth a ſimilitude, wherein he compares the gathering of the Church to corne that is threſhed; which is afterwards ſeparated from the chaffe. But what might mooue him to vſe this ſimilitude? The poore captiues were ſo oppreſſed, that they appeared no otherwiſe, then as corne that is hidden and ſcattered vnder the chaffe. The Lord was faine to diuide that which was hidden vnder this confuſed heape then, as with a fan. This ſimilitude therfore of threſhing out the corne, doth very fitly reſemble this gathering.

By the chanell of the riuer, vnto the riuer, bee meanes Euphrates and Nilus: for the people were driuen partly into Caldea or Aſſyria, and partly into Egypt: for many fled into Egypt, when the reſt were carried captiue into Babylon. Thus then he foretelles how the Lord wil gather his people from all quarters, not onely from Caldea, and out of the whole region of Mesopotamia, but from Egypt also.

I haue translated one by one: others turne it; Euery one from euery place: but this is too constreined an exposition. I therefore take mine to agree best: and thus there may bee a double sense, Either I will gather you all till I come to one: or, I will not gather you by bands or companies, but one after another: as we see it come to passe in the gathering in of those that haue wandred and ranged hither and thither. For all cannot be mustered at an instant, but they must bee gathered to their files one by one. So the Iewes being scattered and dispersed abroad, could not easily bee gathered and vnited together. His meaning is then, that this dissipation should be no impediment vnto them to be restored to a flourishing estate againe; which indeede afterwards came to passe. For the Iewes were sent home, not with troopes of horsemen and chariots, nor with any great power of men, neither yet with swords and speares; but as Hosea saith, by the onely hand of the Lord. See Hosea 1.7.

Vers. 13. In that day also shall the great Trumpet be blowne, and they shall come which perished in the land of Ashur, and they that were chased into the land of Egypt; and they shall worship the Lord in the holy mount at Ierusalem.

HEre he expounds the former verse: now he vseth another similitude, in which he shewes, that God shall be of sufficient power to bring home his people with little adoe. For as Kings are wont by the onely sound of a trumpet, to assemble great armies; so he shewes that the Lord will quickly call his people together: in respect of whom, this prophecie should bee no lesse effectuall, then the voice of the trumpet is, which assembles souldiers together. He calles them the lost people, in regard they were so miserably dispersed, so as they seemed very neere to such a forlorne estate, as was vtterly without any hope of being restored: for had the Monarchy of their enemies continued, it is like enough they would neuer haue released their prisoners. For they caried them not captiues so far off, but they went therewithall to abolish the name of Israel by little and little.

That which the Prophet addes of Egypt, containes yet a more excellent testimonie of Gods loue: to wit, that those which fled thither, should be gathered, albeit they were vnworthy of pardon. For their offence was double, as Ieremiah verie well shewes in the seuen and twentith verse of the tenth of his prophecie. For first of all they had obstinately rebelled: and in the second place, they would not obey the reuelation of the Prophet. For they ought rather to haue submitted their neckes to the yoke of the Babylonians, then to haue fled into Egypt, against the expresse commandement of the Lord. 1 2

Now our Prophet shewes further, what fruit should come of this deliuerance; to wit, as soone as the Iewes shall returne out of captiuitie, into their owne land, they shall then worship the Lord their Sauiour better then euer they did, in all puritie and vprightnesse: for by the mountaine, hee meanes the Temple and sacrifices. True it is that this was accomplished in the time of Darius: but doubtlesse the Prophet extends his prophecie further off: for this restauration was as it were an obscure shadowing out of that deliuerance which they obtained afterwards by the meanes of Christ: at whose comming, the spirituall sound of the Trumpet, that is to say, of the Gospell, was heard; not onely in Assyria, nor in Egypt, but in the vttermost bounds of the earth. And then were the people of God indeede, summoned to meete together in mount Zion, that is to say, in the Church. For wee know it is vsuall with the Prophets thus to speake, when they purpose to shadow out vnto vs Gods worship and seruice, and a true harmonie and consent in godlinesse and religion. Thus applying their manner of speaking to the custome that was in vse among that people, that so they might be the better vnderstood of all: we also know that the Gospell came vnto vs out of this mount Zion, of which we haue spoken more amply in the second Chapter.

It is the duty of such as haue receiued any deliuerance from God, to returne him thanks and praise for the same. Ezra 6.1.

THE XXVIII. CHAPTER.

Vers. 1. Woe to the crowne of pride, the drunkards of Ephraim: for his glorious beauty shall be a fading flower, which is vpon the head of the valley of them that be fat, and are ouercome with wine.

Isaiah enters now into a new sermon, as it were altogether diuers from the former, from which also it should be separated. First, hee shewes that the wrath of God is neere vnto the Israelites, and then to the Iewes. For it is very likely the Prophet foretold these things when the Kingdome of Israel flourished: which yet wee cannot affirme for certaine, albeit it sufficiently appeares y the ten Tribes were not yet caried away captiue. This course the Prophet takes then; first he shewes that the indignation of God is ready to fall vpon Israel. in regard of the grosse wickednesses, and all sorts of corruptions which bare sway amongst them: for they were puffed vp with pride & arrogancie; yea, they had plunged themselues into all disorders, and ouerflowed in all voluptuousnes and dissolutions. Thence they grew to an 1 2

open contempt of God: for we dayly ſee that when men giue themſelues ouer to their luſts, they eaſily forget him. In the next place he ſhewes how God moderates this his anger, by ſparing the tribe of Iudah: for when the ten tribes were led away captiues with the halfe tribe of Beniamin, the Iewes yet remained vntouched. This mercie of God the Prophet magnifies, to wit, that he would not ſuffer his Church whollie to periſh, but preſerued a ſmall remnant. Thirdly he ſhewes that the Iewes had alſo corrupted themſelues, ſo that they would not indure that God ſhould continue his mercie towards them: wherfore ſeeing impietie reigned as much amongſt them as it did among the Iſraelites, they likewiſe muſt make account to feele the rod as well as their brethren.

Which order we ought diligentlie to obſerue: for many deceiue themſelues in the expoſition of this place, in regard the Prophet hath not named Iſrael expreſſlie. But it is a thing well enough knowne that the tenne Tribes are comprehended vnder this word Ephraim. As touching the word woe, becauſe the particle Hoi doth for the moſt part ſerue to expreſſe an execration, I would not depart from the common opinion of the expoſitors, eſpeciallie ſeeing the Prophet vſeth a plaine denunciation of iudgement. Yet if any had rather turne it, Alas the Crowne, I hinder him not. The letter Vau ſhould be taken as a particle that ſhews the cauſe, thus, For his flowre ſhall be fading. He compares the honor and glorie of Iſrael to a flowre which fades, as ſhall be ſaid by and by. In a word, he taxeth the wealth of the Iſraelites: for by the Crowne of pride he meanes nothing elſe but the falſe confidence wherewith they were ſwollen in regard of their ouermuch abundance and riches. You ſhall euer lightlie ſee theſe two ſinnes goe hand in hand: for the ouerflowing of worldlie commodities begets pride and crueltie, becauſe in proſperitie we ſoare aloft, and can not vſe theſe things with ſobrieties as we ought.

Riches euermore begets pride.

Now the Iſraelites dwelt in a very fat and fruitfull ſoile: and that is the cauſe why Amos calles them the fat kine of the mountaine of Samaria, Amos 4. 1. Being puffed vp then in regard of their riches, they (proudly) deſpiſed both God and men. And therefore the Prophet calles them drunkards, in regard that being made drunke with their proſperitie, they feared no danger nor inconuenience; nay, which was worſt of all, they would not ſubiect their hecks to Gods yoke.

As a fading flower.] I make no queſtion but he alludes to the Crownes they vſed in banquets at that time, which alſo are vſed at this day in many places. The Iſraelites gaue themſelues to gluttonie & drunkennes: no doubt alſo but the fruitfulnes of the land was an occaſion vnto them of this their intemperancie. In calling this flower fading, he ſtill proſecutes his ſimilitude, alluding elegantlie to flowers, which quicklie wither.

He alſo ſaith that this glorie is vpon the head of the fat valley, becauſe they ſaw the fat paſtures and the fruitfulnes (which cauſed them to ouerflow in pride) vnder their feet. Others tranſlate valley of ointments: but this agrees not ſufficientlie. For by this word the Prophet ſignifies ſuch an abundance and fulnes as made them forget and deſpiſe God and all godlines.

By the word head, he alludes to the ſituation of the countrie, in regard the Iſraelites dwelt for the moſt part in fat and fruitfull vallies. He attributs a Crowne vnto them, compaſſing the whole land and kingdome, becauſe it floriſhed, and abounded with all ſorts of good things. For he meant to note out their wealth, which begat careleſnes, ſecuritie, boldnes, intemperancie, and crueltie.

And this doctrine alſo belongs (as well) to vs (as to them:) for we are admoniſhed by the example of theſe, to vſe our proſperitie moderately, otherwiſe we ſhall be vnhappie euery kind of way. For the Lord will curſe our riches and abundance.

Verſ. 2. Behold, the Lord hath * a mightie and ſtrong hoſt like a tempeſt of haile, and a whirlewind that ouerthroweth, like a tempeſt of mightie waters that ouerflow, which throw to the ground * mightily.

* Or, mightie and ſtrong.

* Or, with the hand.

3. They ſhall be troden vnder foote, euen the Crowne, and the pride of the drunkards of Ephraim.

THis may be referred to the Aſſyrians, as if the Prophet ſhould ſay, They are euen readie to come vpon you vnder the leading of the Almightie; and that at an houres warning whenſoeuer it ſhall pleaſe him to call them forth. Yet had I rather take it for a ſtaffe, or ſome ſuch like thing, whereby the Lord would bring downe the height of Iſraels pride. He compares this ſtaffe, or whatſoeuer thing it was, vnto a whirlewind, or deluge of waters, which beate downe graſſe and flowres, and marre all the beautie of the earth: wherein he continues forth the ſimilitude of the fading flower wherof he ſpake in the beginning; for there is nothing more hurtfull to the tender flowers then a ſtorme of haile, or a whirlewind.

Now he vſeth a particle demonſtratiue, to wit, Behold, becauſe the wicked are not ſtirred nor moued, be the danger neuer ſo imminent. He tels them then that he ſpeakes not as of things that are to be called into queſtion, neither of ſuch things as come out of his owne head, but of that which ſhould ſpeedilie fall out.

Where I haue tranſlated, with the hand, S. Ierome turnes it, A ſpacious land: but this croſſeth the very text. Others take it for ſtrength: and ſo they affirme that he ſpeakes of a violent driuing an end. But the natiue ſenſe, as I think, is this, that all the glorie and magnificence of ỹ Iſraelites ſhall be throwne downe, euen as if a man ſhould puſh downe one ouercome with drinke with his hand. The third verſe is only a confirmation of that which went before.

S. Ierome.

Vers. 4. For his glorious beautie shall bee a fading flower, Which is vpon the head of the valley of them that bee fat, and as the hastie fruite afore summer, Which while hee that looketh vpon it while it is in his hand, hee eateth it.

It is not an easie matter to humble such as are besotted with the pleasures of this life. Denys a tyrant of Sicilia.

HEe almost repeates the verie same words which were in the first verse: for it is not an easie matter to humble and terrifie those that are besotted with the pleasures of this life, whose eyes are hoodwincked by reason of abundance and prosperitie. For Denys the second, a tyrant of Sicilia, became so bewitched, that hee was ready to fall on his nose euer and anon, because hee was an excessiue eater and drinker at great banquets: and thus mens mindes are intoxicated, through ouer much pampering of themselues with delicates, so as they both forget God and themselues. The Prophet then repeates one and the same thing twice, to these that were so blockish and dull of hearing: to the end they might vnderstand and beleeue that which otherwise would haue seemed incredible.

But hee yet adornes his speech by another goodly similitude, which is verie fitting for his purpose; for fruits that are hastiliæ vipæ, are best esteemed, in regard they come first, and giue some hope of a future increase; but they last not long, neither are they fit to keep. And besides, they are fit for none but great bellied women, or for childrē; or else for youths, which being inordinate in their appetites, deuoure them by and by. Now he saith, that such shall be the felicitie of the Israelites: as if hee should say; Your prosperitie wherein you so much reioice, will not last very long, but will be eaten vp in an instant. Now looke what Isaiah threatens to the kingdome of Israel, the same belongs also to all the world. For men by their ingratitude, are the cause that all the benefits which the Lord bestowes vpon them, cannot come to ripenesse. Why so? Because wee abuse and corrupt them by our naughtinesse. Thence it is that we bring forth hastie fruites of small continuance, which otherwise might last to nourish vs a long space.

Vers. 5. In that day shall the Lord of hostes be for a crowne of glory, and for a diadem of beautie vnto the residue of his people.

HAuing spokē of the Kingdome of Israel, he comes now to speake of the Tribe of Iudah, and shewes, that in the middest of this so fearefull a iudgement of God, hee will alwaies cause his mercy to be felt. So that howsoeuer the ten Tribes were gone and lost; yet the Lord would reserue a remnant which should be consecrated vnto him, that therein the crowne and the diadem of his glory and magnificence might be found: that is to say, the Church shall neuer bee so mangled and disfigured, but that the Lord wil find a means to crowne and decke her with honour and glorie. And yet I extend not this prophecie indifferentlie to all the Iewes, but onely to the elect, who were miraculously preserued from death: for albeit he calles this one Tribe and an halfe but a remnant, in respect of the other ten Tribes; yet wee shall see hereafter, that he puts a difference betweene those who were of the Tribe of Iudah onely. Neither are wee to wonder that the Prophet speakes thus diuersly of one and the same people: for sometimes he directs his speech to the whole body as it was generally infected with vices; and another while he applies himselfe to the faithfull in particular. It is certaine that hee rightly calles the Iewes a remnant of people, in regard of the ten Tribes which had reuolted from the pure seruice of God, and had separated themselues from the vnity of faith: but if we shall consider them without comparison, and shall view them as they were in themselues, apart from the rest, hee had iust cause to tax their wickednesse.

The Church shall neuer be so disfigured, but the Lord wil find a means to decke her with beautie and honour, Cant. 1.4.

I am not ignorant that others are of a contrary iudgement; the reason is, because he by and by speakes of wine, vers. 7. and so they thinke this sentence should bee ioyned with the beginning of the Chapter thus; It may be the Lord will spare the Iewes; but how is it possible he should, seeing they are as bad as the rest? Seeing then that they are guiltie of the same sinne of vnthankfulnesse, must they not needes share with them in their punishment? But these expositours doe not aduisedly consider that the Prophet is about to set forth a testimonie of Gods singular fauour, in that hee did not cause his whole indignation to fall at once vpon all the race of Abraham: but albeit hee ouerthrew the Kingdome of Israel, yet he gaue the Iewes respite to see whether they would repent or no. Now with the setting forth of Gods patience towards them, hee vnder hand amplifies the fault of this peoples ingratitude. For should not they haue learned wisdome by their brethrens harmes? yes; the calamitie of the Israelites should surely haue awakened them, and drawn them to repentance. But they past it ouer lightly, and neuer tooke it to heart. Were they not vnworthy of so many benefits then, that would take no benefit thereby? Well, yet the Lord was pleased to conserue his Church euen in the middest of them.

Now you see the cause why hee deliuered Iudah and the halfe Tribe of Beniamin, out of ỹ calamitie in which he wrapped the Israelites. Moreouer, because Iudah was a verie small Tribe, and was therefore contemned of their brethren the Israelites, the Prophet affirmes that there is glory and riches enough in God, to supply all outward wants. By this place we are taught what is the true way vnto saluation; euen to place our whole happinesse in God himselfe: for we no sooner turne backe to the world, but wee gather flowers which fade and wither, yea and vanish away by and by. But alas this phrensie reignes in

euerie place more then it ſhould: for men will ſeeke to bee happie without God: that is to ſay, without happineſſe it ſelfe. Iſaiah alſo ſhewes, that no calamity, be it neuer ſo great, can any way let God to inrich and adorne his Church. For when all things ſhall ſeeme as good as deſperate, yet God liues ſtill to crowne his ſeruants with glory. It is to be noted alſo, that he promiſeth the Church ſhall bee beautified with a new hew, euen then when her multitude ſhall be diminiſhed; that by this meanes the faithfull might neuer be diſmaied in the moſt horrible waſte that may befall them.

Verſ. 6. And for a ſpirit of iudgement to him that ſitteth in iudgemẽt, and for ſtrength vnto them that turne away the battell in the gate.

THe Prophet ſhewes the cauſe why the Lord wil beautifie the remnant with new glorie. For hee propounds before them the eſtate of a right gouernment, vnder which a people is preſerued: which conſiſts in two things principally; that is to ſay, Counſell and ſtrength. By counſell and wiſdome, affaires ought to bee managed amongſt the ſubiects at home: force and munition are for the annoiance of the enemie abroad. Now for as much as Kingdoms and Commonwealths vphold and maintaine their eſtates by theſe two meanes, therefore God promiſeth the ſpirit of wiſdome and ſtrength vnto his people. And therewithall teacheth them, that the gift of both theſe are in his owne hands, and that they are not to be ſought elſewhere: for neither can the Magiſtrates gouerne the Citie well, in giuing to euery one his due: neither can the Captaines and Leaders repulſe the enemie, vnleſſe both be led and directed by the Lord.

Wiſdome and ſtrength are the Lords, Iob 12.13. Pſal. 127.1.

Verſ. 7. But they haue erred becauſe of wine, and are out of the way by ſtrong drinke: the Prieſt and the Prophet haue erred by ſtrong drinke, they are ſwallowed vp with wine, they haue gone aſtray through ſtrong drinke; they faile in viſion, they ſtumble in iudgement.

HEe now directs his ſpeech vnto the profane deſpiſers of God, who were Iewes onely in name; and ſets forth their ingratitude to the full: for albeit they had ſo euident a teſtimonie of Gods wrath before their eyes, and ſaw their brethren ſeuerely chaſtiſed in their ſight; yea, albeit they had good experience of his mercie & patience towards them, yet could they not be brought into the right way, by this ſo fearefull an example of ſeueritie: neither could they be brought to anie amendment by ſo liuely a taſte of Gods goodneſſe in ſparing of them.

He ſpeakes here of wine and ſtrong drinke, by way of ſimilitude: for I vnderſtand not this place of the common ſinne of drunkenneſſe, againſt which he ſpake in the firſt verſe; but I rather thinke hee meanes they were become like vnto drunkards, in regard they were depriued of common ſenſe and vnderſtanding. If the word As, therefore be ſupplied to wine and ſtrong drinke, then the ſenſe will be the more plaine and euident. I deny not but men wax worſe then beaſts, by the exceſſe of taking in meates and drinkes: nay, queſtionleſſe their exceſſe therein had ſore dazeled the ſpirits of the Iewes: but if we conſider well of the whole courſe of the text, it will bee eaſie to ſee, that he condemnes their iniquitie vnder a ſimilitude.

Where hee addes, the Prieſt and the Prophet, he continues the amplification of their ſinne whereof wee ſpake before: ſo that the common people were not onely drunke, but euen the Prieſts themſelues, who ſhould haue been lights to haue giuen direction vnto others: for they are compared to the ſalt of the earth, as Chriſt teacheth: now if they grow vnſauorie and graceleſſe, what ſhall become of the multitude? if the eye be darke, what ſhall become of the parts of the whole body? Mat. 5. 13. and 6. 23.

But the worſt of all was, that they erred not onely in open wickednеſſes, but in viſion and iudgement alſo: whence we may gather, that the ſtate of the Iews was very deſperate. And here haue we a faire looking glaſſe, wherein we may take a thorow view of our ſelues. Is it not ſtrange, that after ſo many miſeries and afflictions, which God hath vſed to purge out our corruptions, that the Church ſhould yet notwithſtanding be ſo impure? But ſuch is our frowardneſſe, that wee kicke againſt the prickes: ſo that howſoeuer the Lord indeuors by all meanes to correct our vices, yet we not onely fruſtrate the ſame by our rebellions, but daily gather new defilements to the former, wherewith we were ſpotted before. It is no meruaile then if men now adaies are ſo hardened and wax worſe and worſe, notwithſtanding the Church hath been ſo manie waies humbled: for Iſaiah affirmes, that the people in olde time did the like.

Now whereas the Lord ouercame ſo great and execrable a villanie, by his ſoueraigne bountie, and did ſtill preſerue his Church; we muſt needes acknowledge that this came to paſſe by his ſecret purpoſe, far beſides the expectation of any: for he ſhall preuaile but little with vs, if he onely vſe ordinarie and common remedies.

From this place alſo it appeeres how ſottiſh & childiſh the Papiſts are in their brags, who haue euer in their mouthes the Church, the Church: & vnder the title of their Prieſts, Biſhops, Prelates, & their authoritie, reſiſt the open and manifeſt Scriptures: as if, forſooth, theſe holy orders could neuer erre. Indeede they would make vs beleeue, that they haue the holy Ghoſt ſhut vp in their braine, as if they were the body repreſẽtatiue of ỹ whole Church which is neuer forſaken of God. But here we ſee what Iſaiah ſaith of the Prophets and Prieſts of his time, whoſe calling was far more excellent then was the calling of anie (of their ſhauelings.) Doubtleſſe if euer there were a true Church of God, it was amongst the Iewes: and the calling of the Priests of that time was approued of by his word, for which these haue not so much as a syllable. And yet he shewes that euen they were not only corrupted in maners, but erred also in vision and in iudgement: and not only that, but the Prophets also, whom God raised vp extraordinarilie to be helps vnto the Priests in regard of their negligence: euen these became blinde in their reuelations, and in that holy ministrie of teaching and instructing the people. What is more vaine then, then vnder the pretext of a titularie office to exempt themselues from erring, when as yet in the meane while they haue not only forsaken the Lord and all true religion, but haue also troden vnder foot all honestie, and yet are not ashamed to defend their tyrannie by all the meanes they can?

Vers. 8. For all their tables are full of filthie vomiting: no place is cleane.

HE goes on with the similitude, and represents out vnto vs as in a glasse the maners of such as are giuen to gluttonie: for hauing once cast off all humanitie, they not only become like brute beasts, but plunge themselues into all filthines. Doubtlesse it is an odious and vile spectacle, to see tables bestrawed with vomitings: and therefore Isaiah vnder this figure shewes, that the whole liues of these people were very noysome and vnsauorie. Yea we may safely coniecture that the Prophet in a word meant to say, That things were whollie corrupted and prophaned amongst the Iewes; so that if any one approched but neere to their tables, he should find nothing but drunkennes, and filthie vomiting: that is to say, he that should obserue their cariage, should see no part thereof free from loathsome vices and impieties. And as for the doctrine, which of all other was the most pretious, truly that was so corrupt, that it stanke no lesse then if it had beene defiled with spewings and excrements. Now it is not my purpose to soare aloft into allegories heere, as some doe.

Vers. 9. Whom shall he teach knowledge? And whom shall he make to vnderstand the things that he heareth? Them that are weaned from the milke, and drawne from the breasts.

THe Prophet in this place with great astonishment shewes, that the peoples disease is growne incurable, and that God had no more fit medicines left in store to heale them, in regard he had but lost all the labor and cost which he had spent to recouer them. Truely, behold heere the most soueraigne remedie that God can vse, when he seekes to call such as are gone astray out of the right way, neuer ceasing to call vpon them that erre, to that purpose: but when this takes none effect; what hope is left of their recouerie, that refuse to be ordered by those meanes that should do them good? He complaines then that God is driuen to his shifts (as it were) in regard the people were become so senseleese that they would not endure he should cure them: and therefore he compares the Iewes to little children lately weaned, or to such as begin to prattle, vpon whom a man should lose his labor that should endeuor to teach them any thing.

S. Peter for good cause exhorts the faithfull to draw neere, and as newborne babes to suck in the sincere milke of the word, that they might grow thereby: 1. Pet. 2. 2. for a man will neuer shew himselfe teachable vnlesse he puts off that rebellion which all of vs haue brought with vs from our mothers wombs. But the Prophet here condemnes another kind of Childhood, to wit, when men be so besotted in their vices that they meditate no more in the heauenlie doctrine then if they were become starke idiots. And therefore some fondlie ioine this verse and that place of S. Peter together: for they make the Prophet speake as if the Lord should be brought in seeking such disciples as were emptied of all pride; and were become like children lately weaned. But he rather complaines that his doctrine was published in vaine, being propounded as a matter of wonderment to fooles and vnwise, who yet are not children in malice, but in vnderstanding, as S. Paul saith 1. Cor. 14. 20. It will also appeere by that which followes in the text, that howsoeuer they could not comprehend his doctrine, yet that God was not to be accused of ouergreat seueritie if he reiected them, and would no longer lose time in speaking as to deafe eares.

Vers. 10. For precept must be vpon precept, precept vpon precept, line vnto line, line vnto line, there a little, and there a little.

THis verse sufficientlie manifests that the Lord complaines as one that had lost all his labour, in teaching a people obstinate and vnteachable. For the case was all one as if a man should take vpon him to instruct little children, to whom he must repeate the letters ouer and ouer, who yet immediatlie forget what was taught them. For although the Master should spend a whole day in teaching them a letter, yet the next day he must begin his labour afresh, and so the next to that likewise, and yet he shall gaine nothing by it, albeit he bestowes all the paines and skil he hath. Those who change the Prophets words here, that they might not offend the eares of the readers, do by an affected phrase of speech corrupt the sense, and cause his words to lose that grace which otherwise is in them: for in repeating the same words, hee meant to signifie a variable and continuall repetition, which we know is very troublesome. For it is a similitude drawne (as we haue said) from little children, whose memories the Master dares not charge with any great matter, because they are vncapable of it, but is faine faine to diſtill the firſt principles into them as it were drop by drop. And for that cauſe he repeates the ſame thing once, twice, yea, many times, and is ſtill refreſhing their memories with their old leſſon. In a word, ſuch ſchollers muſt be alwaies fed with milke, vntill they bee growne to more maturitie and ripenes of iudgement.

The Prophet in like manner ſomewhat after a quipping manner of ſpeech, vſeth theſe words; heere a little, and there a little. Thoſe interpret it ill, as I thinke, who reade the word a little, line: as if the Prophet had had reſpect to a building that goes vp ſlowlie, and is raiſed an end by lines, now a little, and then a little. For this had been an improper ſimilitude, and too farre fetched, ſeeing he ſpeakes heere of childrens firſt rudiments. I confeſſe indeed that the ſame Hebrew word is vſed in the 18. Chapter, where I haue trãſlated, From all parts, or, Line after line, and ſo in manie other places: but the circumſtance of this text requires another ſenſe, as alſo in Pſal. 19. 4. Vnleſſe the word line, or meaſuring inſtrument ſhould agree better there: yet I denie not but vnder a figure it may well be taken for inſtruction, or rule. For in as much as the rule or plummet which they vſe in buildings is called by the ſame name, as we ſhall afterward ſee in this Chapter, it is no maruell if it be referred to other rules.

Verſ. 11. For with a ſtammering tongue, and with a ſtrãge language ſhall he ſpeake vnto this people.

WHereas ſome ſupply, that it is as if one ſpake, it is ſuperfluous. I referre this to God then, who, as the Prophet ſaith, ſpake in a ſtrange language to this barbarous people. This reprehenſion ought therefore to haue pierced them to the heart, in regard that by their owne default they made him to ſtut and ſtammer, who yet giues ſpeech vnto all. He threatens them not, but rather accuſeth them of blockiſhnes, in that they made the heauenlie doctrine to become nothing elſe but a confuſed ſound vnto them, ſo as they receiued no benefit by it, becauſe they wittinglie ſtopped their eares againſt it. The Prophet therefore compares their follie to a thing againſt nature, in that they would not heare the voice of the Lord.

Verſ. 12. Vnto whom he ſaid, This is the reſt: giue reſt to him that is wearie: and this is the refreſhing, but they would not heare.

SOme expoũd this ſentence in many words thus, If anie ſay vnto them, This is the reſt, they will not heare: but this is of no force, neither doth it make that coherẽce which it ſhould. The Prophet rather ſhewes why God became a barbarian (as it were) to the Iewes: to wit, becauſe they wanted eares to heare him; ſo that in effect he ſpake as vnto them that were deafe, for they would not learne what this reſt meant. But this deafnes proceeded from rebellion; for they preſumptuouſlie reiected all wholeſome doctrine with a ſeuled malice. It was a frowardneſſe doubly inexcuſable then, to reiect that reſt which was offred them, which all men alſo naturally deſire. They were too farre gone alreadie in impietie to ſtop their eares when God ſpake: but their ingratitude was much more inſupportable to deſpiſe ſo deſireable a benefit with ſuch an high hand. The Prophet ſhewes them therefore what fruite they might haue reaped from the obedience of faith, of which they depriued themſelues by their owne obſtinacie. He blames their blindnes and ignorance then, becauſe all this proceeded from their rebellion: in that they maliciouſly ſhut their eies againſt the cleere light, which ſhined vnto them from heauen, and loued rather to grope in darknes then to walke in the light. 1 2

Hence we gather, that the vnbeleeuers doe willingly plunge themſelues into a miſerable vnquietnes of mind as ſoone as God tenders his word vnto them: for he allures all men to partake in this bleſſed reſt. He ſhewes vs alſo the marke, vnto which if we leuell the whole courſe of our liues, true felicitie attends vs; ſo as hauing once heard the heauenlie doctrine, no man can run aſtray, vnleſſe he will doe it wittingly. Oh how amiable then ought this good word of God to be in our eyes, ſeeing it brings vs ſo ineſtimable a benefit with it, when with reſt and peace of conſcience we may poſſeſſe ſo perfect a bleſſednes! All will in words affirme boldly, that nothing is better then to dwell in a place of reſt: and yet where is he that makes account of it when it is offred him? Nay, all in a maner ſhun it, as if men had agreed with a common conſent to liue in miſerable perplexitie, and continuall trembling of heart. In the meane while, none is to murmure and ſay, that he ſinnes ignorantlie: for what is more cleere and manifeſt then the doctrine of God? all excuſes of men therefore are but in vaine. In a word, what is more abſurd, then to lay the fault vpon God, as if he taught men either obſcurely, or confuſedly? Now as God here teſtifies that hee ſhewes vnto men by his word the way how to come to an aſſured reſt: ſo on the other ſide hee certifies the vnbeleeuers, that the continuall broiles which are within them, are the iuſt recompences of their wickedneſſe. What an ineſtimable benefit Gods word brings, if our owne infidelitie depriued vs not of it. All men naturallie deſire reſt, yet few take the right way to enioy it. 1 2

Where it followes, Giue reſt to him that is wearie, ſome expound it, as if God required works of charitie, if ſo be we will find fauour in his ſight: and theſe workes are here comprehended vnder a part for the whole. But as I thinke the Prophet meant another thing: he rather ſhewes what reſt it is which God affords vs for the releeuing of our infirmitie: and certainly we are conuinced of ouer great ingratitude, if neceſſitie, which of it ſelfe is a ſharpe ſpurre, cannot for all that quicken vs forward to ſeeke this remedy. This ſentence of the Prophet tends almoſt to the ſame end that the words of Chriſt do, Math. 11. 28. Come vnto me all ye that trauell and are heauie laden, and I will eaſe you. So that Iſaiah ſets the choice of two things heere before the Iewes, We are conuinced of great ingratitude, if our owne neceſſities can not quicken vs vp to ſeeke the remedies which God freely offers vs.

1 to wit, whether they had rather be comforted and refreshed; or to fall vnder the burthen, and so be ouerwhelmed. Wherein hee confirmes that which I touched erewhile; to wit, that God exhorts not those that haue neede of rest, to come vnto him in vaine; as he saith, Chap. 45.19. I haue not said in vaine to the house of Iacob, Seeke yee me. Are wee taught by this word then? Surely if the fault be not in our selues, we may safely rest in the doctrine which he sets before vs. For it is not his custome to feede vs with vaine hopes, though men are often wont by fond conceits, to throw themselues into many griefes and vexations.

2 Moreouer, in that he shewes that this rest is prepared for those that are wearie and groane vnder the burthen: we are taught, therein at the least, to haue our recourse vnto the word of God, to the end wee may obtaine rest. By which wee may be assured, and that by good experience, that it is the propertie of this word, to quiet our boiling passions, and to appease our distracted and amased consciences. Whosoeuer hee be then that wanders in seeking rest out of the bounds of this word, shall alwaies be vexed, and shall surely tremble in continuall feares: and good reason, for they will bee wise and happie without God. This, as we see, befals the Papists, who hauing scorned this peace, are therefore tossed to and fro all their life time with horrible anxietie. For Satan turnes and windes them, that they are euer vexed with terrible astonishments, and yet can neuer find anie place of rest.

It is the propertie of Gods word to bring assured rest to our soules. See Ier. 6.16.

Verse 13. Therefore shall the word of the Lord be vnto them precept vpon precept, precept vpon precept, line vpon line, line vnto line, there a little, & there a little, that they may goe and fall backward, and bee broken, and bee snared, and bee taken.

ALbeit the Prophet repeates the same speech with the former, yet ỹ sense doth a little alter: for now he denounceth the punishment of this so wilful a deafenesse whereof he spake. The iudgement is, that God shall so dazle their wits, that they shal not only reap no fruite at all of the doctrine of saluation, but an emptie and vnprofitable sound. In a word, from the former verses he concludes, that seeing the word of God had in no sort profited the Iewes; that their vnthankfulnes should now be punished. Not that Gods word should bee cleane taken from them; but in wanting vnderstanding and a right iudgement, they should groape for the way at noone day, and should not finde it. And thus God blindes the eies, and hardens the hearts of the reprobates more and more, when they are waxen incorrigible.

Note that God may continue his word in a nation, & in the meane while deprive them of the benefit thereof.

Saint Paul alleadgeth this place when hee reprehends the foolish conceit of the Corinthians, who were so possessed with pride, that they admired none but such as spake vnto them in strange languages, 1. Cor. 14.21. It being an vsuall thing with the common people, to wonder at strange & vnwonted things. But this place of Paul is ill vnderstood, by reason they haue not well pondered the Prophets words; which the Apostle very fitly applies to his purpose. For he declares how the Corinthians were caried away with a foolish and vnbridled ambition, vnreasonably affecting things altogether vnprofitable; and thus were become children, not in malice, but in iudgement and vnderstanding. By meanes whereof, they pulled the curse of God wittingly vpon themselues; wherewith the Prophet had threatned the Iewes in this place. And so it came to passe, that the word of God was vnto them precept vpon precept, receiuing no more fruit by it, then if one had told them a long tale in a language they vnderstood not. Men are growne exceeding fond therefore, when they begin to throw themselues by a vaine affection into wilfull blindnesse and benummednesse of spirit; with which plague the Lord here threatens the obstinate & rebellious. Saint Paul then expounds and cleeres this sentence of the Prophet verie well; shewing, that such as abuse the doctrine of saluation, are vnworthy to profit any thing at all by it.

We had almost the like place to this in the eight Chapter, where our Prophet compared his doctrine to letters sealed vp: and anon he will liken it to a closed booke. This falles out when the Lord depriues men of the light of his spirit, and of sound iudgement for their vnthankfulnesse sake; that seeing, they might not see; and hearing, they might not heare at all: whereby hee punisheth them most iustly. We ought to obserue this well, for wee often take our selues to be great proficients, and to be exceeding happie that we haue the word of God amongst vs: but what profit get we by it, vnlesse our vnderstandings be fitted to conceiue it, and our hearts framed to be directed by it? For wanting this, wee are more accursed, then if we had not the word at all. And therefore wee stand in neede of a twofold grace: First, that God would inlighten vs by his word: secondly, that hee would open our eyes, and dispose our affections to imbrace the obedience of it. Otherwise, the light of the Gospell shall stand vs in no more stead, then the light of the Sun doth to the eyes of him that is starke blind.

Chap. 8.16. Chap. 29.9. 10.

We are in worse case in inioying the word, then if we were vtterly bereaued of it, vnlesse we yeeld obedience therunto.

By this chastisement then we are admonished, not to abuse the word of God by our prophanenesse; but to vse it to that end for which he hath ordained it.

Let vs beware how wee abuse Gods word.

In the end of the verse he shewes, what ruine is like to fall vpon those that profit not by this cleere light of the word, euen to bee left without a guide, and to stumble and fall; because they are departed out of the right way. But he telles them their falles shall not be easie, for they shall be broken.

By the word snared, hee vseth an other similitude; to wit, that snares are prepared for vnbeleeuers, wherein they shall be hampered and led to destruction. Wee haue had the like speech in the eight Chapter, and almost moſt expreſſed in the very ſame words: for there the Prophet handles the ſame doctrine, as touching the blinding of the people, who by the hardneſſe of their hearts, had prouoked God to anger. Now his purpoſe is here to ſhew, that ſuch who take the bridle in their teeth, and will needes turne their backs and be gone from the direction of the word, are verie neere to a ruinous downefall. For they ſhall either meete with ſtumbling blockes, againſt which they ſhall daſh themſelues in peeces, or with nets, in which they ſhall be ſnared and taken. In a word, they ſhall no way eſcape; for a miſchiefe watcheth for them at euerie turning, who will not walke in the paths which God ſhewes them; for either they ſhall fall and bee broken before all men; or themſelues by priuie wiles, ſhall intrap their owne feete in the ſnare.

Verſ. 14. Wherefore heare the word of the Lord yee ſcornefull men, that rule this people which is at Ieruſalem.

HEe (further) amplifies that ſharpe reprehenſion which he vſed before, and withall, addes a conſolation to reuiue the hearts of the faithfull. For as on the one ſide hee threatens the wicked with deſtruction; ſo yet on the other ſide he leaues matter of conſolation for the faithfull, aſſuring thē that their ſaluation is deere and pretious to God. Now by the word mockers, hee meanes thoſe that were wittie and malicious, who by their wilie deuices, thought to eſcape the iudgements of God: for the verbe Luts, from whence this word mockers is deriued, ſignifies to cauill and to mocke. Now he ſpeakes not here to common perſons; but to the Princes and Magiſtrates, who thought themſelues wiſer and more prudent then thoſe that were vnder their gouernment. But they imployed this dexteritie of wit, in deuiſing how they might play mocke holy day with God. It is not for nought thē that the Prophet doth tauntingly accuſe them, in calling them ſcorners. As if hee ſhould ſay, You thinke you haue ſuch deepe deuices in your heads, that you can circumuent the Lord; but he will not take it at your hands.

Surely the greateſt conflicts which the Prophets had, were againſt the rulers of the people: for howſoeuer all eſtates were horribly corrupted, yet they being ſwollen with a falſe conceit of their owne wiſdome, were the moſt obſtinate and vntractable of all others. This is to be ſeene at all times almoſt: for albeit the common people be caried away with a violent brutiſhneſſe, yet doe they not ouerflow into ſuch impietie as the great ones, Courtiers, & ſuch other ſubtile heads do, who thinke to goe beyond all men in fineneſſe of wit. The Miniſters of Gods word then had need to arme themſelues (with the ſword of the Spirit) principally againſt ſuch ſubtile enemies: for there are none ſō dāgerous, that not onely hurt themſelues, but leade others alſo by their example, to become ſcoffers and deſpiſers. And for the moſt part, they dazle the eyes of the meaner ſort, by means of their authoritie and great titles.

Is it not a fearefull and prodigious thing, thinke you, whē the gouernors of the church are not onely blind, but alſo labour to put out the eyes of others, and imbolden them to deſpiſe God, to contemne his holy word, and to rent it in peeces with their ieſts? yea, when they imploy the vttermoſt of their wits and skill to ouerthrow true religion. But we ought to bend our forces againſt ſuch kinde of men, and that according to the Prophets example in this place, and not to be outfaced in this fight, whatſoeuer they can ſay or doe vnto vs. And himſelfe ſhewes how ſuch ſcorners ſhould be vſed: that is, not much to trouble our heads in deuiſing how to inſtruct them, (for teaching wil doe them little good) but wee ought to rebuke them ſharply, and to terrifie them with Gods iudgements. The greatneſſe of the offence is augmented in regard ſuch had place in Gods ſanctuarie, and thereby infected his choſen people with their vile behauiour.

Verſ. 15. But yee haue ſaid; We haue made a couenant with death, and with hell are we at agreement: though a ſcourge runne ouer, and paſſe thorow, it ſhall not come at vs: for we haue made falſhood our refuge, and vnder vanity are we hid.

HEre the Prophet addes the reaſon wherefore he called them mockers; namely, becauſe they had caſt off all feare of God. And hee ſhewes how they made themſelues beleeue, that (of all men) they ſhould neuer be puniſhed for their tranſgreſſions, ſo as they grew the more braſen faced. And as if this had been a ſufficient warrant for them, they gaue themſelues the more freely to doe euill, and without any feare, purſued whatſoeuer their luſts led them vnto. And this is it that he meanes by their couenant with hell and with death: for they audaciouſly ſcorned all the threatnings and plagues of God; becauſe they tooke themſelues to be out of his gunſhot.

By the word Kozeb, he ſignifies that which he ſaid touching the word Berith, which ſignifies a couenant: for he repeates one thing twice. This word Kozeb, which ſignifies viſion, is as much as wee vſe to ſay, To vnderſtand: and it ſeemes there is a ſecret oppoſition in this place betweene the viſions of the Prophets, and thoſe cunning deuices which theſe wilie ellowes delighted in. But yet in the meane while it is certaine, that theſe fine heads neuer came ſo far as to brag thus, and to vtter ſuch words indeed; for that had been too ridiculous, and little children might haue laughed at them. Moreouer, they alwaies ſtudied doubtleſſe how to get themſelues all the credit they could among the people, albeit they deſpiſed God, & reiected al holeſome admonitiōs; they would not be ſo groſſe then to confeſſe that they made falſhood their refuge.

But

But the Prophet obserued their affections and outward practise, and not their faire shewes: and considered what was in their hearts by their deeds, & not by their words. Now because men are wont to please themselues in their vices, and with brasen faces, in despising Gods threatnings, it proues by their practise that they haue made a couenant with death, which they nothing feare though God terrifie them with it: therefore the Prophet in generall reproues this carnall confidence, which makes men forget the remembrance of God and his iudgements, whereby they wittinglie deceiue themselues as if they were able to escape his hands.

Lucianists. But especiallie he closeth with these Lucianists and mock-Gods, who thinke they are in nothing so wise as in deriding of God: and the more they would couer their villanie, the louder ỹ Prophet cries out with open mouth against them; as if (out of some darke corner) he should draw all their deepe and desperat thoughts into the light. After this sort I pray you behold the wit, the cunning, and subtletie of these wise men of the world, who being inuironed with miseries and ruine on euery side, do yet thinke themselues hidden in safetie. Are they not well worthie therefore to seeke their saluation in lies, seeing they despise the saluation of God which themselues scorne and deride? Indeed they couer their practises with cunning deceits, and vnder goodly pretexts, and in the meane while take them for nothing lesse then lies: but (whatsoeuer they imagin) the Prophet hits the naile on the head (as we say) and calles them by their names.

A double simile. As touching this clause of a scourge running ouer, the Prophet vnder those words comprehends two similitudes. For first he compares 1 the afflictions and calamities wherewith God chastiseth the wickednesses of the world to a 2 scourge: and then resembles the same to a deluge, in regard of the violence and vehemencie therof. Now these scoffers thought themselues cock-sure in regard of being hurt by any such tempests, how sharp or furious soeuer they were, and made full account to escape; albeit they ouerranne the whole land: prouided ỹ they were fortified with falshood and with vanitie before hand. They could not but see what iudgements and calamities men are subiect vnto: but because they beheld not Gods hand in them, nor considered his prouidence, but imputed whatsoeuer fell out to blind fortune, therefore they sought remedies and leaning-stocks whereby they might secure themselues, and keepe back these scourges farre off from them.

Vers. 16. Therefore thus saith the Lord God, Behold, I will lay in Zion a stone, a tried stone, a pretious corner stone, a sure foundation. He that beleeueth shall not make hast.

NOw Isaiah comforts the faithfull, and threatens the wicked with their iust and deserued perdition. First, he sets downe the consolation which concerned the faithfull, who were then in stead of a May-game to these Gallants. For we see how the wicked are not ashamed at this day to deride our simplicitie, holding vs no better then idiots, that in the middest of so many troubles and bitter persecutions wee still hope notwithstanding, that God will turne all to the best for vs. The Prophet soares vp and relieues the hearts of ỹ good with this consolation then against the insolencie of the reprobate, to the end they might goe on cheerefullie and boldlie, contemning all their flouts & mocks, and might also be assured that their hope should not be in vaine. The word demonstratiue Behold, is put heere for the greater assurance of the matter; as if he should say, Albeit the vnbeleeuers make no reckning of my words, nor giue any credit vnto them, yet will I be as good as my promise for all that. The pronoune I, is also of great weight, for the further confirmation of the prophesie. Now for the words, first Bochan is put by way 1 of an epithite with the word stone, and signifies, Of proofe; and may be taken as well in the actiue signification, as in the passiue, or for a stone vpon which the whole building is to be framed and ordered as to his rule: or for a tried stone. But the first exposition seemes to agree best, and the proprietie of the Hebrew tongue requires that we interpret it rather in the actiue signification. He calles it a tried stone then, in regard of his effect, because the whole building was to be squared and fitted vpon this stone, otherwise of necessitie the whole house must sinke.

The word corner which he addes to it, signifies, 2 that it beares vp all the weight of the building; and by this title (which is also giuen him in Psal. 118. 22.) his power and vertue is recommended vnto vs. Lastly, he calles 3 it a foundation, or (if we may so speake) a foundation fundamentall: thus proceeding by little and little, and as it were by degrees to the cõmendation of this stone. For he shewes that it is not a common stone, or such a one as is taken out of many which serue in the building: but that it is a rare and excellent one; euen such an one as beares vp all the weight thereof. It is a stone then; yet so as it filles the whole corner: and is so the corner stone, that the whole building is laid vpon it. For as no man can lay any other foundation, 1 Cor. 3. 11. so must all the Church & her members rest and be built vpon it only.

Some translate the second part of the verse as if it were an exhortation, Let not him that beleeues make hast: but I rather take it in the future tence, in regard it agrees best both with the scope of the text, as also because it is approued of by the authoritie of S. Paul. I denie not but the Apostles followed the Greeke translation, and in vsing their libertie, were content to giue the sense of the place without looking curiouslie to the words: but they haue in nothing altered the sense, but haue rather truely and naturallie deliuered the same: respecting the drift to which it was rightlie applied. As often then as they alleadge a text out of the old testament, they diligentlie retaine both the end and vſe of it. The Apoſtle alleadging this propheſie tranſlated it according to the Greeke; Who ſoeuer beleeueth, ſhall not be confounded, Rom.9.33. which agrees with the Prophet: for queſtionles his meaning was to ſay, That he which beleeues, ought to be quiet and ſtill; ſo as to deſire nothing beſides; neither wauering in vncertentie, nor yet haſting to ſeeke out new remedies, but ſhall fullie content himſelfe in his faith only. The tranſlation is proper then as you ſee, in regard the word to haſt notes out feruencie, or trembling. In a word, the Prophet meant to cõmend faith by this inestimable fruite; becauſe in it we find aſſured reſt and quiet. Whence it followes, that we ſhall alwaies be in vnquietnes and vexation of mind, vntill ſuch time as we haue attained it: for no other hauen remaines for vs to harbor in in ſafetie, but ſ truth of God, vpon which, if our faith be firmely ſetled, we ſhall finde it the only meanes to ſet vs in reſt and tranquillitie of mind. The ſame Apoſtle in another place deſcribes vnto vs the fruite of this faith, where he ſaith, That being iuſtified thereby, wee haue peace with GOD, Rom.5.1.

A commendation of faith, in regard of her effect.

No peace without that faith which is grounded vpon the truth of God.

Now the Apoſtles and Euangeliſts ſhew that this ſtone is Chriſt himſelfe: for when he was ſent into the world the Church was then truely built and ſetled. For firſt, all the promiſes had their ſtedfaſtnes in him: ſecondly, mens ſaluation reſteth vpon him alone. Take away Ieſus Chriſt then, and the Church by and by falles and goes to ruine. It is euident by the very text it ſelfe therefore that this is to be referred vnto Chriſt, without whom we haue no aſſiſtance of ſaluation, but ſhall be in danger of vtter ruine euer and anon. Moreouer, we haue the authoritie of the Euangeliſts and Apoſtles; yea, the Holy Ghoſt teacheth the ſame plainely by their mouth and miniſtrie.

Chriſt is this corner ſtone. *Mat.*21.24. *Act.*4.11. *Rom.*9.33. *1.Pet.*2.6.

But if we ſhall ſcan things a little better, it will be eaſie to ſee how theſe things are applied vnto Ieſus Chriſt. Firſt it will be granted that Iſaiah doth not for nought bring in the Lord himſelfe pronouncing this, to whom only it belongs to lay the foundation of his Church, as hath been ſhewed before, and ſhal be touched againe hereafter: and beſides, this ſentence is oft met with in the Pſalmes.

Reaſons to proone that this ſtone muſt bee Chriſt.

For though all men ſhould lay their hands to this worke, yet were they not able to lay the leaſt ſtone aright: it is God alone then that founds and builds his Church, howſoeuer for this purpoſe it pleaſeth him to vſe the miniſtrie and labors of men. Of whom is it now, I pray you, that we hold Ieſus Chriſt, but of the Father? It was the heauenly Father then who did and performed all theſe things, and appointed his only begotten ſonne to be the foundation of our ſaluation.

It is God himſelfe that hath builded his Church vpon this corner ſtone.

Obiect. But was not this ſtone laid before? Was not the Church alwaies built vpon this foundation? I confeſſe it was ſo, but only in hope: for Chriſt was not yet manifeſted in the fleſhe neither had he as yet accompliſhed the office of our Redeemer. The Prophet ſpeakes therefore as of a thing to come, to the end the faithfull might be well aſſured that ſ Church which they then ſaw, not aſſailed only, but wofullie rent and ſhaken, and falling as it were to the ground, ſhould be eſtabliſhed by a new prop when it ſhall reſt vpon that ſtone which God would put vnder it with his owne hand.

Anſ.

He ſaith, it ſhall be laid in Zion, in regard Chriſt was to come out thence. Which alſo ſerues much for the cõfirmation of our faith; when wee ſee that he proceeded from that place which was ſo long before appointed vnto him. But Mount Zion now is euery where, becauſe the bounds of the Church are ſtretched to the ends of the world. Now Chriſt is the true tried ſtone: for all the building muſt be ſquared and proportioned vpon him, ſo as we can not be the building of God, vnleſſe we be fitted vnto him. For which cauſe the Apoſtle commands vs to grow vp in him which is the head, in whom all the bodie ought to be knit and ioined together, Epheſ. 4.15. for our faith muſt be whollie proportioned to Chriſt, to the end he may be the rule of it. He is alſo the corner ſtone, vpon which not only a part of the houſe reſts, but the whole weight and ſubſtance of it: for none other foundation can any man lay, ſaith S. Paul, but that which is laid, to wit, Ieſus Chriſt, 1.Cor.3.11. Now yee ſee wherefore Iſaiah leades vs to this foundation when hee brings in the Lord promiſing the reſtauration of his Church: for there was ſuch a wofull deſolation, that it reſembled a waſt wilderne, which could no way be brought into any good faſhion but by Chriſt alone.

The Churches ruins can no way be repaired but by Chriſt alone.

In that he is called a ſtone to ſtumble at: this is by accident: for the vnthankfull who reiect him by their owne malice, finde him to be that which he would not be vnto them. But of this we haue ſpoken in the eight Chapter.

Verſ. 17. Iudgement will I alſo lay to the rule, and righteouſnes to the ballance, and the haile ſhall ſweepe away the vaine confidence, and the waters ſhall ouerflow the ſecret place.

IN regard the waſt of the Church was ſuch, as the faithfull durſt ſcarce hope for a better eſtate, he ſhewes that God hath the meanes readie in his hand to reforme the Church anew. And as before he vſed a ſimilitude taken from building, ſo now alſo by another he teacheth that they needed not to feare as if God were not able in the end to finiſh the good worke of his building begun. In the meane while he doth by the way taxe the pride and inſolencie of ſuch as would be taken to be pillars of the Church; which yet as much as in them lay tooke the next way to ouerturne it. The light of faith was almoſt put out: Gods ſeruice was corrupted: ſo that there was a fearefull deformitie to be ſeene in ſ eſtate of this people, albeit they boaſted themſelues to be the royall Prieſthood. Which we ſee now fulfilled in the Papacie. For they ſtick not to beleh our glorious titles without any ſhame at all, albeit the lamentable confusion which is to be seene amongst them, doth plainely discouer to all the world that there is no forme of a sound Church amongst them. Therefore it is that the Prophet stands to shew at what end the reformation of a true Church ought to begin.

No forme of a sound Church amongst the Papists.

Now it is very likely that the words rule and measure are all one in sense, as may be collected more probablie from the 21. Chapter of the 2. booke of the Kings, vers. 13. where the Lord saith, I will spread the line or rule of Samaria vpon Ierusalem, and the measure of the house of Ahab. Albeit I denie not but he alludes to the ballance wherein things are weighed: but let vs remember that both similitudes are taken from buildings, wherein the master carpenters & masons frame all things by rule, that so a iust proportion may be kept in euery part. And thus it is said, That the Lord hath appointed an equall iudgement to restore his Church by, wherein, without that all things are iumbled confusedlie together, as the ruinous heapes of an house, to wit, when the wicked are exalted, and the faithfull deiected and afflicted. The same he affirmes of Iustice, to wit, that it shall be measured & poized with the ballance, and that all things shall be equalled according to the rule. For by Iustice and Iudgement he meanes a iust and lawfull gouernment of the Church, which is opposed to those disguised shewes which the titularie Bishops so much brag of. Isaiah tels vs then that this foundation is not only laid to the end the Church might be new begun, but also perfectlie restored and whollie setled, as they say.

How Iustice and Iudgement are taken in this place.

The other part of the similitude notes out a most iust equalitie. Nothing can be wanting to the building then if Christ be laid for the foundation: but if he be not laid, all will be full of vanitie and confusion. Now in regard that Iustice and Iudgement could not be receiued whilest these false confidences tooke place, therefore the Prophet shewes that they shall be sweps away, because the wrath of God shall bring downe all pride, and the ouerflowing of waters shall enter into all these secret corners vpon which they so much relied. He threatens then that the hypocrites shal perish with their vaine brags, and that the Lord in the meane while will not faile to prouide for the safetie of his Church.

Nothing wants to the building, if Christ be laid for the foundation.

But he speakes not of these scourges as if the wicked should become any whit the better by them, for lightlie they waxe rather worse and worse. This should be the purgation then, to wit, God would discouer the vaine & false confidéce wherof they boasted, after he had drawne thé out of their dennes. For the wicked thinke they are so couered vnder the cloake of falshood and vanitie, that no blowes can any way touch them: and that is the cause why they flatter themselues till their iniquitie be found worthie to be hated. But the waters will easily come, that is to say, the wrath of the Lord, which runnes and makes a noyse like a streame of waters that will easily breake into the bottome of their lowest caues.

Vers. 15.

Vers. 18. And your couenant with death shall be disannulled, and your agreement with hell shall not stand: when a scourge shall runne ouer and passe thorow, then shall ye be trod downe by it.

BEfore he spake against the hypocrits, who obstinately scorned at God and all his threatnings; and also ouerthrew their goodly discourses, because they imagined that death and they were agreed: that is to say, they promised vnto themselues neuer to be touched with any of Gods scourges for their vngodlines: as if with iesting and scoffing out the matter they could haue escaped from Gods hand. Now he giues them to vnderstand, that as it is certaine they must giue accounts of this vnto God, so they shal be ouertaken with feare & terror in despite of their teeth. For when men grow thus secure and sottish, it proceeds from a kind of giddines or deepe sleep which they are fallen into, so as they can not feele ỹ greatnes of their sinnes, but the Lord will rouze them out of their drouzines well enough, be they rocked neuer so fast asleepe in it, and wil make their forged couenants to vanish away in the aire. In a word, his meaning is to say, That this peace in which the wicked enioy whilest they thus sleepe in their sinnes shall not last euer, for they shall be forced, will they nill they, to acknowledge God to be their Iudge: and although they intended to giue themselues to pleasure, yet should they be surprized at vnawares, and tossed with troubles and griefes of minde in the middest of their rest. For he will apprehend them as malefactors, who hauing broken prison, scorne their Iudges, raile vpon them; and rise vp in all insolencie against them: but espying the Sergeants at their heeles that pursue them, their courage is by and by cooled, and all their mirth is turned into mourning, and then is their state much worse then if they had neuer broken prison at all. Thus the wicked enioy their pleasure which they take in the forgetfulnes of their sinnes committed only for a moment, but the Lord takes them by the neck, and so affrights their consciences, that they can by no meanes obtaine any quiet.

Vers. 19. When it passeth ouer, it shall take you away: for it shall passe thorow euery morning in the day, and in the night, and there shall be only feare to make you vnderstand the hearing.

HE expresseth more in this verse then in the former, for he shewes that the reprobates are neere their destruction, notwithstanding they promise to themselues an eternall happines. The wicked can not but feele the afflictions wherewith they are pressed, but in the meane while they flatter and befor themselues, and thus they thinke to put their misfortunes farre from them. For heare what (deuilish) prouerbs they breathe out, Torment vs not before the time: Let vs be merry whilest whileſt we may; let vs take our pleaſure, and neuer wax melancholicke without cauſe, or for nothing. But the Prophet tels them here, that there hangs an horrible calamitie ouer their heads which they ſee not.

Diuelish prouerbs vsed by the wicked.

And he addes euery morning: that is to ſay, ſpeedily and continually, in regard the wicked neuer feare the Lord till his hand be vpon them. For ſometimes they feare where no feare is; it being only a blind feare, in regard they know not whence it comes. Moreouer, if God threaten, they grow ſecure; becauſe they take him not to bee their Iudge. And thus they had rather feele his hand, then ſeriouſlie to bethinke them what a one hee is.

In that he repeates the morning twice, and by and by after, day and night; his meaning is, that the plague ſhal not ceaſe, but ſhall ouerflow euerie day. And that to this end, leſt they ſhould imagin it to be but a light calamitie, or ſhould feede themſelues with hope of ſome releaſe. For albeit the wrath of God laſts but for a moment towards the faithfull, yet it indures for euer vpon the wicked; for hee neuer ceaſeth to purſue them to the vtmoſt.

The expoſitours agree not about the expoſition of the latter part of the verſe, which I haue tranſlated, Feare onely ſhall cauſe to heare: Saint Ierom tranſlates, Feare giues vnderſtanding to the hearing: but the interpretation following comes neerer the Prophets meaning, Onely armour or feare will make them vnderſtand: that is to ſay; All thoſe that ſhall heare this newes, will become teachable, and will harken to the Lord, becauſe of the rumour which they haue heard. And yet I expound it leſſe conſtrainedly thus, (not ſtanding to refute the expoſitions of others) The time will come, when feare alone will open your eares to receiue admonition. As if he ſhould ſay; Hitherunto (I confeſſe) I haue gained little by the warnings I haue giuen you, but the Lord himſelfe will deuiſe a meanes to teach you; to wit, by the chaſtiſements and calamities wherewith hee will feare you, that ſo you may know with whom you haue to doe. As for example; a ſorrowfull and carefull father that can no way tame a leaud ſonne, will thus ſay vnto him; Seeing thou deſpiſeſt my counſell, the hangman (I feare) muſt one day be thy ſchoolemaſter. And thus deales Iſaiah with the rebels of his time, which ſcorned all his ſermons. The Prophets are no body with you now, ſaith he, but a day will come, that you ſhall know to your coſt, that they haue not ſpoken the trueth to you in vaine. Yet all this ſhall not ſerue the turne, becauſe there ſhall be no place left for repentance in ſo late an acknowledgement: for the Lord muſt bee ſought whileſt he is to be found. Did Pharoah become the better for his chaſtiſements? Exod. 8. 15. What got Eſau by his teares, when hee ſaw himſelfe deprined of his birthright? Gen. 27. 38. For firſt he was deſtitute of true repentance: ſecondly, there followed none amendment of life: Heb. 12.

By the word feare, he ſhewes how fearefull a thing it is to fall into the hands of the liuing God: Heb. 10. 31. and that his word is neuer deſpiſed, but he reuengeth the contempt thereof. Hee takes the word Shemuah here, for that which is heard; to wit, for the doctrine.

Simile.

A day will come, when the wicked ſhall know that Gods Miniſters haue not ſpoken to them in vaine. Chap. 55. 6. Heb. 12. 17.

Verſ. 20. For the bed is ſtrait that it cannot ſuffice; and the couering narrow, that one cannot wrap himſelfe.

BY this ſimilitude hee adornes the former ſentence. For he compares the reprobates that are preſſed with Gods hand, to thoſe that are laid in a ſhort and narrow bed, where they can neither ſtretch nor ſtir any member without much annoiance: ſo that in the place of reſt, they feele nought elſe but diſquietneſſe and griefe. As if he ſhould ſay; You ſhall be ſo hampered, that being compaſſed about with extreme pangs, your bed (which is appointed for you to reſt in) ſhall be in ſtead of a racke, or ſome other kind of torture. And if they ſeek to couer themſelues, euē their couering ſhall be too narrow. Thus their miſeries ſhall be doubled vpon them, becauſe in the middeſt thereof, they ſhall be depriued of all neceſſarie comforts. For hee expreſſeth the maner of their miſerie by the ſimilitude of a ſtrait or narrow bed, to the end they might know, that their condition ſhould bee the moſt wretched of all men, in regard Gods vengeances ſhould follow them thicke and threefold, which way ſo euer they turned them, and yet ſhould find no eaſe or redreſſe at all.

It is a miſerie of miſeries to be diſtreſſed, and in the meane while to want neceſſarie comforts.

Now the Lord is wont to vſe theſe ſimilitudes, to ŷ end he might frame his ſpeech to our capacitie; for otherwiſe we are vnable to conceiue how fearefull his iudgements are. From theſe things we gather then, that the feares wherewith the wicked are troubled and inwrapped, are verie great and terrible, when the Lord begins once to purſue them: for they would gladly hide themſelues then in the deepeſt bowels of the earth, that the Lord might not find them: but he drawes them out into the light, and pins them vp in ſo ſtrait and narrow a roome, that they cannot ſtir a foote.

To what end God is faine to vſe theſe and the like ſimilitudes.

A horrible thing to be purſued by the Lord as an angry Iudge.

Verſ. 21. For the Lord ſhall ſtand as in mount Perazim: hee ſhall bee wroth as in the valley of Gebeon, that hee may doe his worke, his ſtrange worke, and bring to paſſe his act, his ſtrange act.

BEcauſe he ſpeakes here of the reprobate and caſtawaies, the Prophet propounds nothing but horrors and extreme vengeances: for as the Lord ſhewes himſelfe good and gracious towards them that are his; ſo hee ſhewes himſelfe terrible and feareful to them whom he reiects. And for proofe hereof hee alleageth ſuch examples, as wherein the Lord manifeſted his power for the defence of his people; namely, when he put the Philiſtims to flight in the valley of Baal-perazim by the purſuit of Dauid, 2.Sam.5.20.25. 1.Chro.14.11. Secondly, when the Amorites and other enemies were diſcomfited in the valley of Gebeon by the Iſralites, vnder the leading of Ioſhua, who obteined ſuch fauour of the Lord that the Sunne and Moone ſtood ſtill at his requeſt, that he might haue time the better to giue his enemies the foile, Ioſh.10.10.

By the word of ſtanding vp, he notes out Gods power, becauſe we thinke him aſleepe, or ſitting idle in heauen, when he lets the vngodly alone at their eaſe. It is ſaid that he riſeth, or ſtands vp then, whē in all mens ſight he giues teſtimonies of his might, which eſpeciallie appeares when wee behold what great care he hath ouer his Church. And albeit there were ſundrie reſpects which cauſed the Lord in former times to lift vp his hand againſt ſtrangers which were the enemies of his choſen, and now to proclaime open warre againſt the Iewes: yet Iſaiah applies theſe examples very fitlie to his purpoſe, in regard the Lord prouides no leſſe for the ſafetie of his Church by chaſing the domeſticall enemies out of it, then if he bent his force and weapons of artillerie againſt aliants. He holds them then for no leſſe then his enemies, howſoeuer they haue the face to profeſſe themſelues his friends and people.

God prouides no leſſe for the ſafetie of his Church by expelling her domeſticall enemies, then if he bent his power againſt ſtrangers.

Some thinke he calles this a ſtrange worke, becauſe nothing agrees better to Gods nature then to ſhew mercie in pardoning ſins: for when he is angrie, it is againſt his liking, and therefore puts vpon him another nature as it were contrarie to his owne. Becauſe in Exod.34.6. he proclaimes himſelfe to be gracious, merciſull, patient, good, and ſlow to anger, to which the reſt of the Scriptures do accord in many words, and diuers phraſes, ſetting him forth to be infinit in compaſſion. 1

Others expound Strange, in regard he was wont in former time to defend his people; it was therefore a rare and ſtrange worke that he ſhould now be ſo ſeuere towards them to roote them out as his enemies. To ſpeake what I thinke, I take this word Strange for wonderfull, and a thing vnheard of: for ſo we are wont to eſteeme thoſe things that are ſeldome ſeene among men, who as (we know) are much giuen to wōder at new and ſtrange accidents. It is as much then as if he had ſaid, The Lord will not puniſh you after a common and ordinarie maner, but ſo ſtrangely, that whoſoeuer ſees or heares of it ſhall be aſtoniſhed. 2 3

In what ſenſe this word ſtrange is taken in this place.

True it is that all the works of God are ſo many teſtimonies of his power, yea, the leaſt of them is ſufficient to draw vs into an admiration: but in regard they are little reſpected becauſe they are common, we thinke he works nothing, vnleſſe it be by ſome extraordinarie meanes. The Prophet therefore ſets before vs the examples of old time, to the end men might know that howſoeuer this was eſteemed a wonderfull and ſtrange hand of God, yet it was no new thing with him, ſeeing he hath ſhewed the like teſtimonies of his power long ſince, and that no leſſe great and vnwonted. Yet I receiue it for granted and willinglie agree thereunto, that the Prophet oppoſeth the wicked Iſraelites heere, to the Philiſtims and Canaanites: As if he ſhould ſay, The Lord was wont to ſhew miracles when he ſaued his people, but now he will do them for their deſtruction: for ſeeing the Iſraelites haue ſo farre degenerated, they ſhall feele the hand of God in their perdition, which their fathers felt in their preſeruation.

Verſ. 22. Now therefore be no mockers leſt your bonds increaſe: for I haue heard of the Lord of hoſts a conſumption, euen determined vpon the whole earth.

HE againe aduertiſeth theſe wicked ones whom before he had called ſcorners, that their ſubtle deuiſes, contempts, flouts and cauils ſhould ſtand them in no ſtead, becauſe all their fetches ſhould vaniſh into ſmoke; and herewithall exhorts ſuch vnto repentance in whom there was yet left any hope of healing. For this cauſe he repeates the ſame thing often, to trie if he could awaken them: for he affirmes, if they will obſtinatlie ſtand out, they ſhal do nothing elſe but more and more weaue the web of their own ruine. Wheras ſome in ſtead of bonds, tranſlate Chaſtiſements, it agrees not well with the context, which conteines in it a very apt ſimilitude, borowed from nets. For as the Fox that is taken in the net, or ſnare, faſtens the knot the more whileſt he endeuors with ſtrugling to eſcape, and to ſaue himſelfe: ſo the wicked, the more they ſeeke ſtarting-holes, the further they worke themſelues faſt in the ſnare. They will needs be running out of Gods reach, and will kick againſt the pricks, like reſtie iades, who indeuor by all meanes to throw their rider: but what get they in the end by ſuch rebellion and ſtubbornnes? nothing but the harder and heauier ſtrokes. Verſ.14. Simile. Simile.

By this wee are taught how to proceede with wicked perſons, but then eſpeciallie whē wee ſee them deſtitute of the feare of God: Truly we muſt forthwith threaten them that they ſhall eſcape by none of their cunning ſhifts or ieſts from that wrath of God which is readie to ſeaze vpon them. Hence alſo we are admoniſhed, that it is no good ieſting with God, becauſe he ſhewes vs here as in a glaſſe, and that from the beginning of the world, what the end of ſuch haue been as haue ſet light by Gods admonitions and warnings.

Now to the end this propheſie might the rather be beleeued, Iſaiah ſhewes that he ſpeakes nothing but that which was reuealed to him by the Lord of hoſts. The word Calah ſignifies ſometimes Perfection, ſometimes Conſumption, as was ſaid Chap.10.23. but it is to be taken here for Conſumption, becauſe the Prophets drift is to ſhew that the Lord is determined quicklie and whollie to roote out this ſinfull generation from off the earth. Two things are comprehended in this verſe then: firſt, that the world is neere to a feareſull deſtruction (vnleſſe any had rather to referre this word earth to the land of Iudea, which I reiect not.) Secondly, that the day is 1 2

aſſigned, in which it ſhall be done, and that it is alſo at hand. The word heard, is here taken for reuelation: and thus he ſaith it was reuealed vnto him. For as the Lord determined to vſe the miniſterie of his Prophets, ſo did hee alſo reueale his ſecrets vnto them, that they might be the expoſitors of them. It is as much then as if hee had ſaid; The whole world is filled with wicked impieties, the reprobate reioyce in their rebellion, as if there were no God at all to puniſh them: but hee will ſhew himſelfe Iudge and auenger thorowout the earth, or in all the quarters of Iudea; neither ſhall any part thereof be exempt from calamities and affliction, in regard of the open contempt of God and his lawes. Now albeit Iſaiah publiſhed theſe things in his time, yet they no leſſe belong to ours, then to his: for God will ſhew himſelfe to be alwaies one and the ſame, and hath been wont to execute his iudgements with like equitie and iudgement.

Verſ. 23. Hearken ye and heare my voice: hearken ye and heare my ſpeech.

THe Prophet vſeth a preface, as if hee meant to ſpeake of a thing of great importance: for we are not wont to call for audience, or to will the hearers to giue their attention, vnleſſe ſome matter of good conſequence is to be propounded. And yet it ſeems Iſaiah ſpeakes here of common things, as of tilling, ſowing, threſhing, and ſuch like. But the Prophet meant by this to raiſe the mindes of his auditors aboue theſe earthly matters: for ſpeaking of Gods iudgements, and ſhewing how great his wiſdome is by which hee gouernes the world, albeit the wicked ſort thinke that all things goe vpon wheeles at a venture, his deſire was to teach and expreſſe an high myſterie by familiar ſimilitudes, ſuch as were well enough knowne to all.

High myſteries are ſometimes expreſſed by common and familiar ſimilitudes.

We often complaine, as if God altogether wincked at the practiſes of the wicked, becauſe hee thunders not downe vpon them at our pleaſures: but the Prophet telles vs that God ordaines nothing but that which is lawfull and right. This preface then hath this drift; namely, to teach men how foole-hardy they be to ſet God to ſchoole, in that they controll his iudgements, and interpret them to the worſt; the reaſon is, becauſe hee hath ſet a ſchoolemiſtris before them in the ordinarie courſe of nature, in which they may behold theſe things as cleerely as in a glaſſe. Behold here then a ſecret complaint againſt the blindneſſe of men, who ſtumble at the very noone day. He ſhewes that they are ſenſeleſſe and brutiſh, in not cõprehending the workes of God that are ſo apparant; and yet are ſo bold, as to ſubiect that to their ſenſes, and to controll that, which is high and hidden from them. For example, Saint Paul in ſpeaking of the reſurrection, calles them fooles which know not the power of God in the ſeedes that are caſt into the earth. Thou foole, ſaith hee, that which thou ſoweſt, is not quickened, except it die firſt: ſo Iſaiah heere pronounceth them ſenſeleſſe fooles, who are not able to comprehend the wiſdome of God in ſo plaine & euident things. To be ſhort, hee affirmes men to be witleſſe and blind in beholding Gods workes, when they are to profit by them.

The drift of this preface.

1 Cor. 15. 36

Verſ. 24. Doth the Plowman plow all the day to ſow? Doth he open and breake the clots of his ground?

THis place is vſually expounded, as if God taxed the people of ingratitude, in regard that hee had plaied the part of an husbandman with his ground, and had left no coſt or paines vnbeſtowed; but yet had not receiued that fruit which he expected. And thus the Iewes expound it; whom both Greekes and Latins haue followed: but the Prophet meant another thing. For he ioynes this doctrine with verſ. 22. in which hee had threatned that the deſtruction of Iudah, or of the whole earth was reuealed vnto him: and therefore now addes, that God doth not alwaies ſtretch out his arme, neither doth he euer keepe one rate in puniſhing the rebellions of man, but often times winkes thereat, and defets his iudgements for a time. This patience of the Lord the wicked abuſe, taking the greater libertie thereby to ſinne; as Salomon well ſheweth; that is, becauſe all things fall out alike both to good and bad, and that the moſt deſperate wretches doe proſper, when the faithfull in the meane while are ſubiect to many miſeries; yea often to greater then the very reprobates and caſt-awaies: In a word, when the vngodly perceiue no difference (in outward appearance) to be put betweene the godly & themſelues, they either thinke there is no God at all, or elſe that things are gouerned by the diſpoſition of blind fortune. Iſaiah anſwers to this on this manner; Know you not that God hath the times and ſeaſons in his owne power, and that hee hath skill enough to diſpoſe of his matters in all ages? If the Plowman be not alway plowing his ground, nor breaking of his clots, is any man therefore to taxe him of ignorãce? Is it not his wiſdome rather that cauſeth him for a time to ceaſe? For what ſhould a man doe in turning vp the ground continually, but trouble himſelfe to no purpoſe, vnleſſe it were to hinder the growth of his corne? Much leſſe may God bee ſaid then to doe things at random, or without iudgement; for he knowes how and when to performe his worke.

Eccleſ. 8. 11.

The application of this ſimilitude of the Plowman.

Verſ. 25. When he hath made it plaine, Will he not then ſow the fitches, and ſow cummin, and caſt in Wheate by meaſure, and the appointed barley and rie in their place?

26. For his God doth inſtruct him to haue diſcretion, and doth teach him.

27. For fitches ſhall not bee threſhed with a threſhing inſtrument, neither ther shall a cart Wheele be turned about vpon the Cummin, but the fitches are beaten out With a staffe, and Cummin With a rod.

28. Bread corne When it is threshed, he doth not alway thresh it, neither doth the Wheele of his cart still make a noyse, neither Will he breake it With the teeth thereof.

NOw he speakes of the seede, whereof the Plowman puts not in as much as he can; neither powres he it out by heapes, but views the ground, and then sowes it with as much as is conuenient: for otherwise, great heapes would lie and rot, and there would not so much as one kirnell take roote. Againe, he mingles not diuers seeds together, but reserues one part of his field for wheate, another for fitches, and the rest for Cummin: all which he doth by measure, which is here vnderstood by the word Shoreh, which ought thus to be vnderstood as I take it, and not for good, or excellent, for he speakes heere of measuring. He saith the like of reaping and threshing: for corne is not beaten out all after one manner, but wheate is beaten out with the cart wheele, or some ragged or toothed instrument: fitches with a rod, and Cummin with a flaile. Now he speakes heere after the custome of his Countrie: for wheat is threshed in France only with a flaile, Prouence only excepted. To be short, his meaning is, that euery kind of grain is not beaten out after one fashion, but euery one hath such an Instrument as fits the nature thereof. Also that the Husbandman is not alway threshing, but keepes a measure, least otherwise he should bruise the corne.

But who taught him this knowledge? Surely God only. If they then be so well instructed, and so prouident in these small things, what are we to thinke of that great Master and Doctor who hath taught it them? Knowes not he how to keepe a steadie hand and an euen cariage in his works? Foresees not he the fittest times when to execute his iudgements? to wit, when to turne vp the wicked, and to cause his Plowe and Harrowes to passe ouer them? Doth not he know the fittest time when to thresh them out? yea, and how many blowes, and with what kind of punishment he is to strike men? Knows not he what is fittest for euery time, and for euery person? Shall not he that hath framed the whole order of nature, dispose of things by equall proportion? Dare men be so foole-hardie to quarrell with him; or to call his wisedome in question? In a word, the Prophets meaning is, that no man ought rashlie to censure the Lord, if he bring not the way of the wicked vpon his owne head by and by: but rather that men are in this behalfe to represse their boldnes, seeing for the most part they mistake things euen in small matters.

We are not to quarrell with the Lord, if he bring not his iudgements speedily vpon the heads of the wicked, but rather to represse our boldnes in this behalfe.

For if one that knowes not what belongs to Husbandrie should see a Plowman driuing his Plow ouer the fields, making furrowes, and breaking the clods, turning his oxen this way and that way, and following them at an inch, he would surely laugh y man to scorne, and it may be would thinke it a pretie sport for little children: but the Plowman on the contrarie knowing what he doth, can easilie condemne & conuince such an one of rashnes and ignorance: for such as are modest, will iudge that these things were not done in vaine, nor at randon, albeit he knew not the reason. Would not a man thinke that the seed which is cast into the ground were lost? An ignorant bodie would iudge it to be so. And yet if they should giue such a sentence (as those that lack knowledge are alwaies the forwardest and boldest in giuing their verdict) would not men of vnderstanding reproue and condemne such for their rashnes, and that iustlie? Now if the case stands thus, how will the Lord deale with vs (thinke we) if we presume to controll his works, which are so farre aboue our reach, and altogether incomprehensible. Iudge we then by this, how much we ought to flee all ouerweening: and on the other side, in what sobrietie and modestie we are to keepe vnder all our thoughts. For if it be our duties to walke in modestie with men, and not rashlie to condemne that wherof we are ignorant, ought we not much more to walke thus with our God?

There is a place in 2. Tim. 2. 19. 20. which answers to Master Caluins exposition touching this text.

If we ought to iudge modestlie of mans actions, much more of Gods.

As oft then as we shall thinke of the calamities wherwith the Church is so many waies afflicted, let vs not by and by crie out that God hath cast her off, as if because the wicked are let loose, therefore they shall presentlie haue their willes: but let vs on the contrarie assure our selues that the Lord will prouide a remedie for vs when his time appointed is come; and in the meane while let vs reuerentlie and hartilie submit our selues vnder his iust iudgements. Now if any be pleased by taking a narrower view of these words, to gather, that some are punished sooner, some later, as being deferred for a season: this will not only be found probable, but it is also fullie agreed vnto by the Prophet. Hence then there is ministred vnto vs a singular consolation, to wit, the Lord will so moderate his strokes, that at no hand he will bruise or breake in pieces those that are his seruants. Indeed he destroyes the wicked and brings them to nothing; but he corrects his children, that being thereby purged and tamed, they may be brought home into his garner.

God destroys the wicked, he only corrects his children.

Vers. 29. This also commeth of the Lord of hosts, which is Wonderfull in counsell, and excellent in Worke.

SOme expound this place as if the Prophet should say, that this knowledge of Husbandrie comes of the Lord: but I rather thinke it to be the application of the things that went before. For as he hath set forth Gods wisedome in the smallest matters, so would he now raise our minds higher, that we might learne with the greater reuerence to consider of his secret and wonderfull iudgements. We may, and no doubt ought (by the way) to note, as touching that which is conteined in the 26. verse, that not Husbandrie alone, but

all

All profitable sciences the gift of God.

all other profitable arts also are the gifts of God, who powres into their vnderstandings, those artificiall and cunning inuentions. Men therefore ought in no case to wax proud of them, or to attribute the knowledge hereof vnto themselues; as those of old time haue done, who being vnthankfull vnto God, haue deified those whom they thought to bee the deuisers of arts. Thence came the heapes of so many goddes which the heathen haue forged vnto themselues, out of the shop of their owne braine. From out of this workehouse haue proceeded the great Ceres, Triptolemus, Mercurie, and infinit others more, so highly renowned by the words and writings of men. But one Prophet shewes, that as these sciences were giuen them from God, so ought they to be referred to his glory, as to him that is the onely author and master workeman. And if this esteeme be to be held of husbandry and other handicrafts, what shall wee say of the noble and liberall sciences; as of Physicke, Law, Astronomie, Geometry, Logicke, and the like? Shall we not much more affirme, that these are the gifts of God? Nay, shal we not bothcōsider & acknowledge his goodnesse in the bestowing of them, that so as well in the least, as in the greatest thereof, we may set forth his honour and praise?

If God be the author of handicrafts, much more of Liberall arts.

THE XXIX. CHAPTER.

Vers. 1. Ah altar, altar of the Citie that Dauid dwelt in: adde yeere vnto yeere: let them kill lambs.

aOr, Ariel, Ariel, or woe be to, &c.

IT seems this should be another Sermon: in which Isaiah threatens Ierusalem. Hee calles it Ariel, that is to say, the Altar of God; because the whole strēgth of the Citie depended vpon the Altar. For howsoeuer the Citizens trusted in other meanes whereof they had great store; yet they chiefly relied vpon the Temple and the altar, more then vpon anie other defences. They thought themselues inuincible indeed, by reason of their power and forces: but aboue all, they held themselues in a fort vtterly impregnable, in regard that the Lord couered them vnder his wings. Now they imagined that God was with them as long as they retained the Altar, and the sacrifices. Some thinke that the Temple is here called Ariel, because it was proportioned like a lion; to wit, broad before, and narrow behind; but I had rather vnderstand it simply of the Altar; and the rather, for that Ezechiel also giues it this name, Chap. 43.15. This prophecy doubtlesse was directed to the whole Citie; but we must note the Prophets drift, which is to plucke away from the Iewes this fond trust, because they thought God would surely helpe them, as long as the Altar and sacrifices lasted. For they bragged of them, as those who vntruely perswaded themselues that they had serued God to the full, albeit their liues were vile and wicked.

The Prophets drift.

In the next place hee bends his speech against the Citie, which hee adornes with a goodly title, by calling it the Citie that Dauid once dwelt in, and yet onely by way of yeelding so much vnto them: for he will afterwards refute this their vaine pretext, so full of vanitie.

Some by this word vnderstand little Ierusalem; that is to say, the innermost Citie, which was also compassed about with walles: for two Cities were compriſed in one as it were, because it was inlarged and extended the confines thereof further off then at the beginning: but as I thinke this place should be vnderstood of the whole Citie. He mentions Dauid, in regard they gloried as much in his name, as if Gods blessing had bin continually tied to the palace royall: for God indeed had promised that Dauids Kingdome should indure for euer.

2. Sam 7.13. Psal. 89.36.

Hence wee may gather how sottish and ridiculous the Papists are now become, who will needes lincke the Church to Saint Peters chaire; and thus would make the world beleeue, that God can no wherere find a place to dwell in, but in the chaire of Rome. Wee dispute not with them now, whether Peter was euer Bishop of Rome or no: but let vs grant it were vndoubtedly so, yet dare they affirme that Rome had at any time like promise that Ierusalē had? This is my rest, here will I dwell, for I haue a delight therein. Psal. 132.14. But what if God had made them such a promise? doe we not see how Isaiah threatens Ierusalem; to wit, that God is driuen thence, when his word was reiected, and his pure worship corrupted. What shall become of Rome then that hath no promise at all? Dare shee compare with Ierusalem? If God cursed that holy Citie which he had specially chosen; what will he say, thinke you, to other Cities, who haue ouerthrowne all his holy lawes and ordinances?

Papists ridiculous in tying the Church to Saint Peters chaire.

Rome neuer had that promise made her, which God made to Ierusalem.

God is banished from that place whence his word is excluded.

Adde yeere vnto yeere. The Prophet ioynes this with the former, because the Iewes thought themselues cleere aboard, as they say, when they had a little breathing and respite giuen them: for the wicked imagin that there is a truce betweene God and them, when they see no signes of his wrath likely to seaze vpon them: for this cause they promise to themselues nothing but peace, peace; whileſt the Lord suffers them to inioy ease and prosperitie. Against such securitie the Prophet threatens, that God is readie to execute his vengeance; notwithstanding they offred their sacrifices ordinarily, and renued them yeere after yeere. Hence we may learne, that albeit the Lord defers his chastisements, and the executiõ of his vengeance, yet we ought not therefore to defer our repentance. For what if hee spares and beares with vs for a time, hath hee therefore forgotten our sins? No such matter. Let vs bewate how we build our peace then vpon so slipperie a foundation. Let vs at no hand abuse his patience and long suffring, but let the same rather draw vs to repentance, and to the seeking of free reconciliation with him.

Vers. 2. But I will bring the Altar into distresse: and there shall be heauinesse and sorrow; and it shall be vnto mee like an Altar.

I Thinke that the letter Vau, should bee taken here for a particle aduersatiue; as if he should say, Yet will I execute my iudgements vpon you, and will auenge my quarrell, although it seeme for a time, that in thus sparing of you, I am at one with you. In the next place hee threatens them with sorrow and lamentation, in stead of their festiual daies. Some thinke the word sorrow to bee an adiectiue: but I am not of their mind; for it is taken in the same sense in the Lamentations of Ieremiah, Chap. 2. 5. The Prophet shewes then that the Lord will bring this Citie into such distresse, that the Iewes shall well perceiue they haue not to do with men, but with God: so that howsoeuer the Assyrians made war vpon them, yet they should know to their cost, that God was their chiefe Commander and Captaine.

Where hee addes, that it shall bee to him like Ariel, it cannot agree to the Temple onlie: for his meaning is, that the Citie and all shall be sprinckled with the slaughter which the enemies shall make in Ierusalem; which he compares to an altar, whereupon beasts are slaine to be sacrificed: for as oft as the wicked are destinated to destructiõ, the Prophets compare the same to a sacrifice. In a word, in that he alludes thus to the altar, he affirmes that the whole Citie shall bee like Ariel, because it shal ouerflow with the blood of the slaine. Whence it is manifest enough, that an outward profession of Gods worship, together with the externall ceremonies and tokens of his fauourable presence are to little purpose, vnlesse a francke and cheerefull obedience be ioyned therewith. And thus in taunting the hypocrits (who prophanely presented their beasts in sacrifice to God, as if by such meanes they thought to appease his anger) he saith, that all their labour is lost: for hauing polluted the Temple & the Altar, he tells them that none can sacrifice rightly vnto God, but in killing and sacrificing those that were appointed to the slaughter thorowout the Citie; as if he should say, You shall be murthered and killed in euerie place. He calles this sacrifice a violent slaughter, by an improper phrase of speech; because they refused to offer themselues willingly vnto God.

Vers. 3. And I will besiege thee as a circle, and fight against thee on a mount, and will cast vp ramparts against thee.

BY the verbe Chaddur, hee alludes to the roundnesse of a ball; and signifies as much as if in our vsuall speech we should say, I will compasse him about: and thus shewes, that they can no way escape. Where it is added, I will fight against thee on a mount, it concernes the second meanes by which a Citie is to be taken: for they vse to make incursions heere and there, or to lay a standing siege. Now he confirmes the doctrine of the former verse, & shewes that God should be the chiefe Leader in this war, and that the Assyrians should vndertake nothing but by his commandement, notwithstanding themselues were thrust forward with an inordinate lust and desire of reigning ouer the poore Iewes. For it was verie requisite that this people should be fully perswaded, that God was the author of all the calamities wherewith they were oppressed, to the end they might thereby come to a narrow examination of their impieties. Now the oftener wee meete with this doctrine in the holy Scriptures; so much the more carefull ought wee to be in imprinting the same well in our hearts: for the blessed Spirit of God is not wont to repeat one thing againe and againe without iust cause.

Vers. 4. So shalt thou be humbled, and shalt speake out of the ground, and thy speech shll bee as out of the dust: thy voice also shall be out of the ground, like him that hath a spirit of diuination, and thy talking shall whisper out of the dust.

HE derides the pride of the Iewes, who as long as they were in prosperitie (as hypocrits are wont to doe) despised all admonitions and threatnings. The Prophet therefore saith, that they should one day be humbled: to wit, after their pride shall bee taken downe. Not that they shall change their maners, but because shame shal constraine them to turne their wonted mirth into mourning. And therefore here must be a close opposition supplied: for he speakes to those iolly fellowes, who seemed to haue the world at will, who with big lookes disdained euery one, as if they had bin subiect to no God at all. Nay, they feared not to load him with blasphemies and iniuries, and contemned his holy word. This pride, saith Isaiah, shall be brought downe well enough, and this intollerable arrogancie shall cease.

In the next words hee expresseth this further by a similitude, saying, that they shall whisper and speake, as it were, out of the holes of the earth. For he cõpares the voice of those which in times past was so loud and high, to the speech of Coniurers, who giue their answers ſwers out of ſome hollow caue digged vnder the earth, mumbling out I know not what confuſed noyſe; for they ſpeake with no diſtinct voice. His meaning is then that theſe haughtie ones ſhall be like vnto them.

Some expound this as if the Prophet meant to ſay, that their chaſtiſement ſhould nothing profit them: but the text croſſeth that ſenſe; and beſides, he will by and by ſhew that the Iewes ſhould be brought to repentance. But firſt of all he terrifies them, to the end he may beate downe their pride, becauſe they did ſtoutlie & rebelliouſlie deſpiſe all the threatnings of the Prophets. The humbling therefore whereof he ſpeakes ſignifies nothing elſe but that they ſhould be couered with ſhame, in ſuch wiſe, that they ſhould not dare to aduance themſelues, nor to vtter forth their ſwelling words of vanitie.

Verſ. 5. Moreouer, the multitude of thy ſtrangers ſhall be like ſmall duſt, and the multitude of ſtrong men ſhall be as chaffe that paſſeth away, and it ſhall be in a moment euen ſuddenlie.

I Will firſt recite the opinions of others, and then that which to me ſeemes moſt probable. All (in a maner) do thinke that this ſhould be ſpoke of the enemies of the Iewes; for they take the word Strangers for enemies, and ſo they affirme that the multitude of thoſe who ſhould oppreſſe the Iewes ſhall be like the duſt, that is to ſay, infinite. But conſidering all things circumſpectlie, I incline rather to another opinion, to wit, that the Prophet ſpeakes by way of contempt of the fortreſſes and gariſons whereupon the Iewes relied. For they had ſouldiers out of forreine Countries that were valiant vnder their pay. And thus I interpret the word Ariſim, which properlie ſignifies ſo much; neither do I wonder a little that ſome of the Rabbins ſhould take it for the heathen or wicked. In regard the Iewes then drew vnto themſelues diuers gariſons out of ſtrange Countries, they thought they were cock-ſure, and out of danger. The Prophet on the cõtrarie threatens that their gariſons ſhall skirmiſh in vaine, notwithſtanding their companies be many in number, for they ſhall be but as duſt or chaffe, that is to ſay, like vnprofitable offcourings, ſo as they ſhall haue neither ſtrength nor actiuitie.

No wiſdome nor ſtrength againſt the Lord.

Hence may we obſerue, that be our riches or abundance neuer ſo much, yet all ſhall turne to ſmoke as ſoone as the Lord ſhall but blow vpon it. The preparations which men make laſt awhile it may be, but when the Lord ſhall once but lift vp his hand, all ſtrength muſt vaniſh, and become like chaffe.

In the end of the verſe ſome expound, that a ſound ſhall ariſe ſuddenlie, and as in a moment from the inuaſion of the enemies: but I rather referre this word, ſhall be, to the time that this ſhall endure, which ſhall be but ſhort, as ſaith the Prophet: for his meaning is, that theſe gariſons ſhal not hold out lõg, but ſhall vaniſh away in a moment. Men ſhall boaſt but in vaine therfore, ſeeing God is their enemie.

Verſ. 6. Thou ſhalt be viſited of the Lord of hoſtes with thunder and ſhaking, and a great noiſe, a Whirlewinde, and a tempeſt and a flame of deuouring fire.

HE addes the cauſe why all theſe multitudes of gariſons ſhall be like ſtubble, ſetting it forth by a contrarie ſimilitude. For he oppoſeth the wrath and viſitation of the Lord of hoſtes againſt theſe ſouldiers: For alas, how will ſtraw and ſtubble be able to reſiſt the flame of a deuouring fire? How ſhall duſt be able to abide the force of the whirlewind? His meaning is then that the vengeance of God ſhall be ſo great, that no preparations ſhall be able to withſtand it. And in this ſenſe me thinks the text concurres well; the parts whereof would not anſwere proportionablie one to another if we ſhould follow another expoſition. Now by this wee learne, that our enemies which aſſaile vs ſhall neuer attempt more againſt vs then the Lord ſhall permit. If he 1 then be pleaſed to defend vs, our aduerſaries can not hurt vs, although they ſhould ſtirre 2 vp all the world againſt vs. On the contrarie, is he minded to correct vs? We can reſiſt his wrath neither by weapons nor any fortreſſes whatſoeuer, for he will ſweepe them away as with a vvhirlewind; yea, he will conſume them like a deuouring flame, that leaues nothing behind it.

Verſ. 7. And the multitude of all the nations that fight againſt the Altar ſhall be as a dreame or viſion by night: euen all they that make the warre againſt it, and lay ſiege vnto it.

I Expound this verſe otherwiſe then ſome do, who thinke that the Prophet meant to comfort the faithfull, which I confeſſe is not without great ſhew of reaſon. And ſo it conteines a very excellent doctrine, to wit, that the enemies ſhall be like thoſe that dreame, when the Lord ſhall diſappoint them of their hope, euen whileſt they imagined they were ſure of the pray. But this interpretation (for ought I ſee) ſeemes not to agree very well with the text. Sometime it falles out that a ſentence ſounds ſo goodly in ſhew, that we are drawne to ſuch a liking of it that it ſteales from vs the true and naturall meaning thereof, ſo as we neither aduiſedlie conſider the text it ſelfe, nor yet take any great paines to ſeeke out the authors intent and purpoſe.

The firſt member of this ſeuenth verſe is explaned in the verſe following.

We muſt not eaſily bee caried away to like of ſuch a ſenſe of Scripture as ſteales from vs the meaning of the Holy Ghoſt, how goodly a ſhew ſoeuer it ſeemes to haue.

Let vs ſee then whether the Prophets meaning be as they ſay, for ſeeing he ſtill continues to denounce threatnings in the verſes following, I doubt not but he proſecutes his ſpeech in this place, which otherwiſe ſhould be broken off abruptlie in this ſentence. For he rebukes and taxeth the Iewes for their obſtinacie, in that they durſt be ſo bold to deſpiſe God & all his threatnings. To be ſhort, he reproues their falſe truſt and confidence by a very fit ſimilitude, ſaying, that the enemie ſhould ſuddenlie come vpon the Iewes euen at that time when they thought themſelues ſelues ſafe and out of all danger; ſo that the thing ſhall be ſo ſudden and vnexpected, that it ſhall reſemble a dreame. Although then (ſaith the Prophet) thou art now forging in thy braine a perpetuall reſt vnto thy ſelfe, yet God ſhall eaſily awake thee, and plucke this thy confidence away from thee.

Now the Prophet tauntingly ſaith the Iewes drempt, becauſe being plunged in their voluptuouſneſſe, they neither felt nor ſaw anie thing, but (onely) forged to themſelues ſuch a happineſſe in this drowſineſſe, that it held their mindes amazed and confounded. Thence hee gathers, that the enemie ſhould come as in a dreame, to ſcarre theſe dreamers. For it often falles out, that a quiet and ſweet ſleepe, is interrupted with feareſull dreames. It alſo comes to paſſe that the pleaſant things which they dreame of, ſerue them to no vſe: for albeit they thinke nothing leſſe, yet the alarum will be ſounded in an inſtant. But this would bee ſomewhat obſcure, if the Prophet ſhould not explane his meaning more fully in the verſe following.

Verſ. 8. And it ſhall bee like as an hungry man dreameth, and behold he eateth; and when hee awaketh, his ſoule is emptie: or like as a thirſtie man dreameth, and loe he is drinking; and when hee awaketh, behold he is faint, and his ſoule longeth: ſo ſhall all the multitude of all Nations bee that fight againſt mount Zion.

HEe compares the Iewes to men hunger-ſtarued, who ſleepe indeede; but in the meane while, their ſtomacke is emptie and yearnes after meate: and thus it is a thing verie incident vnto them, to bee dreaming of that naturall ſuſtenance which they want. So then when the Iewes ſhould be awaked, they ſhould reſemble affamiſhed perſons. For the Lord admoniſhed them by his Prophets daily, and called them to the heauenly banquet of his word. But they made light of it, neither would they be awaked by it: for they choſe rather to play the ſleepie beaſts in their ſinnes, then to bee filled with theſe ſacred delicates. Whileſt they thus rocked their conſciences aſleepe then, they thought they needed nothing, but were throughly furniſhed for all aſſaies. Iſaiah telles them that this Verſe 7. is but a dreame or deceitfull viſion: for when they ſhall bee well awaked by a ſudden calamitie, they ſhall then feele how lanke and Verſ. 8. emptie they were; and that the opinion of fulneſſe wherewith they were beſotted before, was but vaine & deceitfull. For as the hungry which haue ſuch dreames, are the more greeued by them; ſo the people who were falſly perſwaded that all went well with them, ſhall be much more moleſted thereby, then if they had had no ſuch conceit to poſſeſſe their heads; but had rather confeſſe their nakedneſſe and pouertie. This maner of ſpeech ſeemes ſomewhat ſtrange at the firſt, when hee ſaith, that the multitude of thoſe which fought againſt Ariel, ſhould bee as a dreame, &c. but we muſt reſolue it thus: when the Iewes ſhould falſly perſwade themſelues of deliuerance, as if the enemie were gone far off, they ſhould then immediately feele how much they were beguiled; euen like vnto one that being hungry, and dreames he is filling his belly with good cheere; when hee wakes, is more ſtrongly preſſed with hunger, then if he had dreamed no ſuch dreame at all. I ſee nothing heere then which any way appertaines to conſolation: for hee goes on ſtill with the ſame matter, and cries out againſt the obſtinacie and contempt of the Iewes, whom hee could moue neither by any admonitions nor threatnings whatſoeuer.

This at I thinke, belongs to verſ. 7.

Verſ. 9. Stay your ſelues and wonder; they are blind, and make you blind; they are drunken, but not with wine; they ſtagger, but not with ſtrong drinke.

THe Prophet holds on his purpoſe ſtill, and ſharply taxeth this groſſe ſottiſhnes of the people. Others tranſlate, Be aſtoniſhed: but I had rather take it in another ſenſe, to wit, that albeit they ſtay long vpon this thought, yet notwithſtanding they cannot auoid it, but that their mindes will be aſtoniſhed in long thinking vpon it. In a word, he meant to ſay, that God would ſo ouerwhelme their thoughts, that they ſhould find no euaſion nor iſſue, although they brake their braines neuer ſo much, in deuiſing how to find it out. And forthwith hee giues a reaſon why they ſhould profit themſelues nothing at all, notwithſtanding they were ſo diligent in the matter, and had ſetled their reſolution thereupon; to wit, becauſe they ſhould be like drunkards. His meaning is then, that it muſt be attributed vnto their ſluggiſhneſſe and benummednеſſe, that they were not able to diſcerne nor comprehend any of Gods workes.

Wee ſee the trueth of this fulfilled at this day in many, who haue their ſenſes ſo poſſeſſed and intoxicate with a ſpirituall giddineſſe of braine, that they are as blind as moles euen in things manifeſt and plaine: and although God ſets vp a moſt cleere light of his iuſtice and equity, they are ſo hoodwincked, that in regard of this their confuſed ſight, they wax ſo much the more ſenſleſſe. Now ſuch a blockiſhneſſe is a iuſt puniſhment, whereby God auengeth himſelfe vpon their infidelitie.

But that we may apply this ſentence to our vſe, we are to obſerue that the Prophets words are not to bee taken here, as if hee commanded them to ſtay and to aduiſe longer vpon it; but rather as I haue ſaid, taxeth (and withall derides) their ſottiſhneſſe. It is as much then as if he had ſaid; Thinke vpon it as long as you will, you ſhall vnderſtand nothing. For his meaning is, that they are deſtitute of ſound iudgement and vnderſtanding, and therefore doe in vaine conſider of Gods workes: ſo that as the mole receiues no benefit by the light of the Sunne, no more is it poſſible for thoſe that are ſpirituallie blinded to comprehend the glorious acts of the Lord.

When he calles them blinde, his meaning is, that we are created naturallie to haue reaſon and vnderſtanding whereby to conſider of Gods works: It is by accident therefore (as we ſay) if we be blind; ſo that if ſuch a giddineſſe be fallen vpon vs, ſo heauie a iudgement ought iuſtlie to be imputed to our own vnthanktulnes. He oppoſeth ſtaggering of ſpirit, to a quiet and peaceable minde; for he meanes ſuch a diſquietnes as cauſeth the vnderſtanding to ſhake and reele.

Verſ. 10. For the Lord hath couered you with the ſpirit of ſlumber, and hath ſhut vp your eyes: the Prophets and your chiefe Seers hath he couered.

THat he might the better ſhew the cauſe of this blinding, he attributes it vnto the iudgement of God, who by this meanes auenged himſelfe vpon the peoples impietie. For as it belongs to him to giue eyes to ſee cleerely, and to enlighten a mans vnderſtanding with the ſpirit of iudgement and reaſon, ſo belongs it to him alone to put out all the light thereof when he ſees that by a peruerſe and obſtinate hatred of the truth we willingly deſire darknes. Are men blinded then, and that principallie in things that are moſt euident and plaine? Let them acknowledge that this proceeds from Gods iuſt ſeueritie.

It belongs only to God to open and ſhut vp our vnderſtandings.

He addes alſo, that the people are depriued of the helps and meanes which ſhould bring the light of knowledge vnto them, and ſhould be guides to direct them in their way. For to this vſe are Prophets ordeined, which he notes out by theſe two words Nebiim and Hachozim. In a word, his meaning is, that not thoſe who only are endued with reaſon and vnderſtanding, ſhall be depriued of common ſenſe, but euen the Doctors and Teachers themſelues who ſhould be lights vnto others ſhould become as ignorant as beaſts, ſo as they ſhould haue no knowledge of the right way: yea, they ſhould be ſo farre off from gouerning others, that they ſhould not be able to gouerne themſelues.

Verſ. 11. And the viſion of them all is become vnto you as the words of a booke ſealed vp, which they deliuer to one that can reade, ſaying, Reade this, I pray thee: and he ſhall ſay, I cannot, for it is ſealed.

12. And the booke is giuen vnto him that cannot reade, ſaying, Reade this I pray thee: and he ſhall ſay, I cannot reade.

THe Prophet expreſſeth that more cleerely which he touched before, namely, that the Iewes ſhould be ſo blinded, that they ſhould conceiue nothing, although the Lord ſhould enlighten thē by the manifeſt brightnes of his word. And this he ſhewes ſhould not happen to the common people only, but alſo to their guides and leaders, whoſe office it was to haue been ſo learned, that they might haue ordered thoſe that were out of the way. To be ſhort, this blindnes ſhould ſeaze vpon all eſtates: for he declares that both the ignorant and learned ſhould be ſo dizzie and blockiſh, that Gods word ſhould be vnto them as a booke ſealed vp, in ſo much that they ſhould be able to diſcerne no more thereof then of letters faſt cloſed. He teacheth (albeit in other words) the ſame which he taught in the former Chapter, to wit, that the word ſhould be vnto them precept vpon precept, line vnto line, becauſe they ſhould alwaies remaine in the firſt rudiments, and ſhould neuer attaine to the ſolide doctrine. For in the ſame ſenſe he heere ſheweth, that none from the higheſt to the loweſt ſhould gather any fruite from the word of God. He ſaith not then that the word ſhould be taken from them; but although it were amongſt them, they ſhould notwithſtanding be ignorant of the true meaning of it. Chap.28.13.

The Lord puniſheth the impietie of men two waies; for ſometimes he wholly takes away the vſe of the word; ſometimes he lets them haue it, and yet in the meane while depriues them of the ſound vnderſtanding of it, ſo as in ſeeing they are ſtarke blinde. Firſt then he depriues them of the reading of it, by taking away the bookes of holy Scripture through ỹ tyrannie of the wicked, as it often comes to paſſe: or, by a falſe perſwaſion of men, who thinke they were not giuen to be read of all: Secondly, albeit he ſuffers vs to reade them, and to haue the bookes in our hands, yet becauſe we abuſe them, becauſe we are vnthankfull, and aime not at the glorie of God, therefore we are blinded, and ſee no more, then if we had neuer been enlightned with ſo much as one ſparkle of the word. 1 Chap.6.9.10. 2

We are not to boaſt then that we haue the outward preaching of the word, for that ſhall do vs little good if it become not fruitfull in vs, by cleering our iudgements and vnderſtandings. It is as if he ſhould ſay then, I grant that in regard of the Couenant made by the Lord with your fathers he will let you haue the two Tables of this Couenant, Deut.4.20. 37.& 7.6. but they ſhal be vnto you as a booke cloſed vp, for you ſhall vnderſtand nothing at all.

We are not to boaſt if God cōtinue the externall preaching of his word: for he can do that, and yet for our vnthankfulnes depriue vs of that fruit which we might otherwiſe reape by it.

When we ſee that ſuch things did indeed befall the Iewes, according as Iſaiah foretold, and that we alſo conſider the eſtate of this people whom God had choſen and adopted, me thinks it can not but make vs tremble in our ſelues for feare in beholding ſo horrible a iudgement. For notwithſtanding they were inſtructed both by the Law and of the Prophets, and enlightened with a wonderfull cleare brightnes, yet they fell into horrible ſuperſtitions, and deteſtable impieties, for the ſeruice of God was prophaned, Religion was wholly defaced and ouerthrowne, themſelues were diuided and ſorted into diuers and monſtrous ſects. Laſtly, when the Saduces, which were the wickedeſt of all, had got the preheminence, faith, and all hope

If God ſpared not the naturall brāches, take heed leſt he alſo ſpare not thee. Rom.11.21.

Luk 10.17. Act. 13.8. hope of the resurrection, yea the doctrine of the immortalitie of soules was vtterly abolished: how could it bee I pray you, but the people must become like beasts or swine? For take away the hope of the eternall and blessed life from men, and what shall we make of them? And yet it sufficiently appeares by the testimonies of the Euangelists, that such they were when our Lord Iesus Christ came into the world. For at that time these things were truely accomplished, according as our Prophet foretold; to let vs see that these things were not vttered by him at random, but that they assuredly came to passe, though the wicked no doubt in his time made light account of his words.

Their incredulitie and blindnes therefore fully appeared when this true light came to lighten the world; to wit, Iesus Christ the only light of trueth, the soule and spirit of the law, and the end whereat all the Prophets aimed. Then, I say, the Iewes especially had a vaile laid ouer their eyes; which was figured before in Moses, when the people could not Exod. 34.30 indure to behold him, because of the brightnesse of his countenance. But this is truely fulfilled in Christ, to whom it appertaines to take away and abolish this vaile, as S. Paul teacheth, 2. Cor. 3.16.

Vntill Christ then, the vaile remained ouer their hearts vntaken away in reading of Moses: for they reiected Christ, to whom Moses ought to haue been referred. Now in this place vnder the word Moses, the whole law is to bee vnderstood; which being referred to Christ, the true end thereof, this vaile shall then be taken away. These iudgements of God we ought so to behold, that wee at this day acknowledge him to be the same iudge he was wont to bee, and that the same vengeance is prepared for vs, if we giue not eare to his holy admonitions.

In that he expresly mentions them that are learned and ignorant, obserue that we comprehend not the mysteries of saluation by the quicknesse of our wits, or because wee haue bin well trained vp in schooles; for this could not priuiledge such from the imputation of being blind. Gods word then must be imbraced with our whole affection, if wee mind to bee freed from this vengeance, wherewith not the rude and ignorant alone are threatned, but those also which are booke learned, as they say.

Vers. 13. Therefore the Lord said; Because this people come neere vnto mee with their mouth, and honour mee with their lippes, but haue remoued their heart farre from mee; and their feare toward mee was taught by the precept of men;

THe Prophet shewes that the Lord shall haue very iust occasion to correct his people thus seuerely, albeit it was an hard and horrible punishment, that their mindes should bee so besotted by Gods reuenging hand. But as men are bold and rebellious, so they are easilie drawne to plead with him, as if he dealt ouer rigorously with them: the Prophet declares that God hath performed the office of a iudge; & that the cause thereof rested wholly in men, who stirred him vp by their impietie & rebellion. Also he shewes that the people haue well deserued this chastisement; but especially by their hypocrisie and superstitions. 1 2

Hee notes their hypocrisie, in telling them that they drew neere with their mouth and lips: for so I expound the verbe Nagash, which I take to bee most probable, although others are of a contrarie opinion: for which cause some translate, To shut vp; others To magnifie ones selfe: but the *antithete (to wit, the verbe to withdraw) which is added by and by after, shewes that this is the true exposition, which also is most receiued. Hypocrisie. *That is, opposition.

But he taxeth their superstitions and idolatries, when hee saith, that their feare which they had, was taught by the Commandements of men. Now these two things are for the most part ioyned together. Nay, more then that, for hypocrisie is neuer without impietie or superstition; and on the other side, impietie & superstition is alwaies accompanied with hypocrisie. Superstition. Hypocrisie & superstition goe cõmonly together.

By the mouth and lips, he meanes the externall profession, which is common both to good and bad: but they differ in this, that the wicked haue onely a vaine outward shew, thinking themselues discharged, if they haue opened their lips in Gods worshippe and seruice: but the good present themselues before God in the trueth of their hearts, & in yeelding him obedience with all their power, they acknowledge and confesse how far off they are from performing their duties as they ought to doe. The difference between true worshippers and false.

Hee vseth then the figure called Synecdoche, a thing very frequent in Scriptures; when a part is taken for the whole. But hee made choice of that part which was verie fit for his purpose; seeing men are wont to make most shew of godlinesse by the tongue and lips. The Prophet then comprehends all the other parts of Gods worship, whereby hypocrits are wont to counterfet and deceiue, for they are euerie way bent to lying and vanitie.

We need seeke no better exposition of these words then Iesus Christ, who vpon the speech of washing of hands, (wherewith the Pharises reproued the Disciples, because they had omitted so holy an act in their conceit) that he might convince them of hypocrisie, saith, Isaiah prophecied well of you, O yee hypocrites, saying, This people honours me with their lips, but their heart is far off from me: Matth. 15.7,8. To the lips and mouth therefore the Prophet opposeth the heart; the integritie whereof God chiefly requires of vs. For if we want that, he reiects all our workes, carie they neuer so goodly a shew in the eyes of men. For as himselfe is a Spirit, so also will he Ioh. 4 23,24 be adored and worshipped of vs in heart and spirit: at which end, if we begin not, we may doe what we will in outward shew, but it shall euery whit bee accounted nothing elſe but vaine oſtentation.

Hence we may eaſilie iudge, what eſtimation the religion of poperie ought to haue amongſt vs, who put all their ſeruice of God in ringing, piping, ſinging, mumblings, in ſetting vp candles, in copes, cenſings, croſſings, and a thouſand ſuch fooleries: for we ſee that God not onely reiects theſe things, but alſo deteſteth them.

With what trúperies the Papiſts wold ſeeme to honor God.

Now for the ſecond point: when God is ſerued according to mens inuentions, he condemnes this ſuperſtitious feare, albeit men indeuor to couer the ſame with a faire pretext of religion, deuotion, and feare. Hee giues a reaſon why this is in vaine; to wit, becauſe this people was taught it by the precepts of man. For I read the word Melummadah, (which ſignifies taught) paſſiuely; becauſe the Prophets meaning is, that all order is ouerthrowne, if mens precepts (and not the rules of Gods word) bee taken for the right manner of his ſeruice. For the Lord would haue our feare, and the honour which we giue him, to be squared according to the rules of his word, and demands nothing but a ſound obedience, by which wee diſpoſe of our ſelues and all our actions, according to this rule, without turning either to the right hand or vnto the left. Whence it ſufficiently appeares, that all thoſe who are taught to ſerue God after mens traditions, are not onely ſenſleſſe, but do alſo wearie themſelues in a pernicious labour: for what do they elſe but prouoke Gods wrath againſt them, who cannot more plainly diſcouer how much hee hates theſe wil-worſhips, then by this ſo heauie a puniſhment?

Fleſh and blood I grant thinkes it ſtrange that God not only makes none accoūt of this traſh, but alſo ſeuerely puniſheth mens indeuors, who through error and folly, take much paines to appeaſe him. But wee are not to wonder if hee maintaines his owne authority after this ſort. Ieſus Chriſt himſelfe expounds this place, ſaying; In vaine doe they ſerue me, teaching for doctrines mens precepts: Matth. 15.9.

Some would ſupply a coniunction thus; And precepts: as if the ſenſe were not otherwiſe cleere enough. But it appeares he meant another thing; to wit, that they take a wrong courſe, who follow mens commandements for the rule of their faith and life.

Verſ. 14. Therefore behold, I will againe doe a meruailous Worke in this place, euen a meruailous Worke and a wonder: for the wiſdome of their Wiſe men ſhall periſh, and the vnderſtanding of their prudent men ſhall be hid.

HE not onely threatens the ignorant and common multitude with blindneſſe, but alſo the wiſe, who drew the people into an admiration of them. Now by this puniſhment we may iudge how odious and deteſtable this ſinne of hypocriſie is (before God) of which he ſpake in the former verſe. Is there any puniſhment more to bee feared then blindneſſe and giddineſſe of ſpirit? Men commonly perceiue not the greatneſſe of this miſchiefe; and yet it is of all other the greateſt and moſt wofull. He ſpeakes not of the rude ones then, but of the teachers themſelues, who ought to be in ſtead of eyes to the people. For the multitude are alwaies blind of themſelues, as the reſt of the common ſort are: but if the eyes be blind, what ſhall become of the reſt of the parts of the body? If the light, as Ieſus Chriſt ſaith, be turned into darkneſſe, how great is that darkeneſſe? Matth. 6.23. This is added therefore by way of amplifying this iudgement.

How deteſtable the ſin of hypocriſie is before God.

From this place alſo we may gather, how fooliſh and vaine the boaſting of the Papiſts is, who thinke they haue put all the world to ſilence, if they once alleadge the authoritie of their Biſhops, Doctors, and Prieſts of the Apoſtolicall Sea. It may be they thinke they haue better knowledge then the Iewes. But whence haue they drawne it? They will ſay, from God. But wee ſee the Prophet ſpeakes not here of the wiſe, among the Caldeans or Egyptians: but of that order of Prieſthood, which God himſelfe had ordained: yea, of the Teachers and chiefe heads, and of the ſtandard bearers of the elect people, and of the onely Church of God in thoſe times. In a word, of that high Prieſt who was a figure of the Sonne of God, Chriſt Ieſus. For vnder this name of the wiſe men, hee comprehends whatſoeuer was excellent and in account among the people.

The Papiſts thinke they haue put all the world to ſilēce, if they but once mention the authoritie of their Biſhops and the Apoſtolicall Sea.

Verſ. 15. Woe vnto them that ſeeke deepe to hide their counſell from the Lord: for their Workes are in darkneſſe, and they ſay; Who ſeeth vs? and Who knoweth vs?

THE Prophet once againe ſets himſelfe againſt the wicked and prophane contemners of God, whom before he called mockers; who thought themſelues wiſe in nothing more, then in ſetting light by the word of the Lord. For religion was become a thing too baſe for them: and therefore they ſhrowded themſelues vnder their craftie inuentions, as in a labyrinth; by reaſon whereof, they boldly contemned all the admonitions & threatnings of the Prophet: yea, not onely that, but euen the whole doctrine of ſaluation. It ſufficiently appeares by this verſe then, that this plague (which afterwards ſpread it ſelfe further) was then in the world; to wit, hypocrits were wont pleaſantly to ſcorne God in their hearts, and to deſpiſe the prophecies. Iſaiah cries out againſt them therefore, and calles them Hammaamikim, that is to ſay, Diggers: euen as if they digged themſelues caues and hiding places, thinking thereby to deceiue Gods ſight.

Chap. 28.22.

Hypocrits haue vſed of old to ſcorne both God and the prophecies.

The words following of hiding their counſels may ſerue vs for an expoſition. Some expound this verſe as if the Prophet condemned the curioſitie of ſuch who are too bolde in diuing into the secret iudgements of God: but this exposition hath no good foundation. The Prophet makes it cleare enough of whom it is he speakes, when he addes their scoffing speeches, in that they thought to commit their wickednes so couertlie and priuilie as if none were able to discouer them: now this hiding of their Counsels signifies nothing else but a bold perswasion of escaping Gods hand. And thus the wicked obscure the light, by putting their mists before it, lest their secret peruersitie should be espied.

Thence proceeds this shamelesse question of theirs, Who seeth vs? for albeit they seemed in outward appearance to serue God, yet they thought themselues able not only to put the Prophets to silence by their shifts and deuices, but euen to ouerthrow the iudgements of God. I grant they did not this openly, for such will alwaies hold an outward shew of profession, that they may the better deceiue others thereby: but in their hearts they acknowledge no God, but that which themselues haue forged in the shop of their owne braine. Isaiah then compares these subtle practises of the wicked, in which they so much please and flatter themselues, to dennes or caues, for they thinke themselues to be so couered ouer with a vaile that euen God himselfe can neither see nor surprize them in their wickednes.

Hypocrites acknowledge no God in their hearts, but what they haue forged in their own braine.

Now in regard that the great ones are for the most part tainted with this vice, I thinke the Prophet meant speciallie to taxe them: for they thinke themselues too too simple and dull witted, vnlesse they can despise God, and reiect his Law, beleeuing no more thereof then that which likes their owne humors. They dare not for shame reiect Religion whollie, but are constreined whether they will or no to subiect themselues to some one worship or other. But this they do only because they thinke it will bring them in some profit and commoditie; but are neuer touched inwardlie with any true feare of God at all.

This impietie discouers it selfe in too many in these times, but especiallie since the Gospell was reuealed. We see how easilie men might be brought to be at one with God vnder the Papacie, for had not the Pope forged such a god as would change his shape according to mens seuerall dispositions? what man was there amongst them that had not a deuice by himselfe to purge his sinnes; and diuers seruices wherewith to appease his god? wherefore it is no maruell if grosse impieties appeared not then, seeing they were hidden vnder such couerings; but now they be remoued and taken away, men haue plainely shewed what they were before.

In the meane while the euill whereof Isaiah complained in his time is no lesse incident to those of our age: for men thinke that God sees neuer awhit when they haue put their shifts betweene, as if all things were not naked and bare before his (all seeing) eyes, or as if any were able to hide themselues out of his sight, or to deceiue him. You see the cause then wherfore the Prophet for a more ample declaration saith, that their works were done in darkenes, referring it to the vaine confidence wherewith the wicked are bewitched, who haue their sight so dazeled (notwithstanding the light before them) that in not seeing it, they labor to flee from the presence of God. Nay, which is worse, they promise themselues freedome frō all punishment, and giue themselues the raines to all disorder, as if God lay so closely hid, that he could be no way able to finde them out.

Hereunto appertaines that which they say, Who shall see vs? Not that the wicked vtter such words with their mouths, as hath been said, but because they thought or spake thus in their hearts, as their boldnes and vaine confidence witnessed, for they were so plunged in iniquities, that they reiected all admonitions, euen as if they should neuer haue had any thing to do before Gods iudgemēt seate. The prophet then we see had to deale against such wicked ones, who albeit in outward shew they seemed to haue some knowledge of God, yet they denied him by their works, and persecuted the pure doctrine with all extremitie. Now thus to speake, what is it else but to affirme that God is not the Iudge of the world, and so to pluck him downe from his throne of Iudgement? for he can not be knowne but by his word, which being once suppressed, or reiected, it can not be but himselfe, who is the author of it, must also therewithall be forsaken and reiected.

Vers. 16. Your turning of deuices shall it not be esteemed as the potters clay? for shall the Worke of him that made it say, he made me not? or the thing formed say of him that fashioned it, he had none vnderstanding?

THis verse is diuersly expounded; and there is also some difficultie in regard of two Hebrew particles, Im, and Ci. Im is often taken for an interrogation, sometimes for an affirmation, which is the cause that some take it for Truely. Moreouer, they take the word Haphac for Subuersion, as if he should say, Your subuersion shal be esteemed as the clay. Others, for Thought, that is to say, for the counsels which are working in the braine. But the exposition most receiued is, to take this word for Subuersion or destruction: as if he should say, It will be no more mastrie for me to roote you out, then for a potter to turne his clay in his hand: for you are like vnto it, in regard that I haue formed you: yet because the Prophet seemes to oppose the two foresaid particles one to the other, I encline to another opinion, but so, that I reiect not the former exposition, which in it selfe conteines a very profitable doctrine. Thus I vnderstand it then, Your turning, or remouing; that is to say, the counsels and deuices which runne to and fro in your minds, shall they not be esteemed as the potters clay? for is it not as if the vessell should say to him that made it, Hast thou formed me? Your pride is strange therefore, for you do as if your selues were your owne Creators, and as if you had all things at your beck. But it is my proper office to appoint what I thinke good: and if you dare vsurpe my right and authoritie, be it knowne vnto you, that you haue forgotten your condition, no lesse then if you thought your selues goddes rather then men.

This diuersitie of expositions alters the Prophets meaning nothing at all; whose purpose was to confirme the doctrine of the former verse: for hee againe reproues these proud ones, who attributed so much power vnto themselues, that they would by no meanes be brought vnder Gods yoke, being in such wise bewitched with a false opinion of their owne wisdome, that they contemned all good admonitions, as if they had beene somes pettie goddes. Thus you see how it is said, that they denied God that formed them: for whatsoeuer it bee that men attribute vnto themselues, therein they rob God, and take away that honour which belongs vnto him.

The exposition should be a little differing in the first member onely: those which take the particle im affirmatiuely, draw this sense; Certainely I will breake you, as if a potter should breake the pot which he hath made. But because the Prophet had to deale against great ones, who sought couerts to hide themselues from the Lord, I rather take it by way of an interrogation, as if he should say; Are you such subtile headed fellowes indeed, that by the turnings and discourses which you plot in your minds, you thinke you can bring this and that to passe, as the Potter doth his clay, who by turning it vpon his wheele, makes it receiue what shape it pleaseth him? But let euerie man chuse which sense he likes best: for mine owne part, I haue followed that which I thinke to be most probable.

Vers. 17. Is it not yet but a little while, and Lebanon shall bee turned into Carmel? And Carmel shall be counted as a forrest?

NOw the Lord shewes that hee will let these wicked ones see what they are: as if he should say; You rocke your selues asleep in your pride; but I will wake you ere it bee long. For men are wont to take libertie to themselues to doe euill, till they feele the heauie hand of God: for which cause, the Prophet threatens that his iudgements are readie to seise vpon so brutish a boldnesse. Vnder the names of Lebanon and Carmel, he meant to expresse a renuing of the world as it were, and a change of things therein. But the doubt is, to what end: in which regard, the expositors disagree much one from another: for mount Libanus being replenished with trees and forrests, and Carmel being a fat and fruitfull soile: many thinke that the Iewes are compared to Carmel, because they should become barren: and the Christians to Lebanon, because they should bring forth great plentie of fruit. This opinion hath a goodly shew, and men are vsually very much tickled and delighted with the like deuices: but we find a like place to this in the end of 32. Chapter, verse 5. which will make it manifest, that the Prophet doth here by way of comparison, set forth the greatnesse of Gods fauour: for when he shall begin to blesse his people, the abundance of all benefits shall be such, that Mount Carmel shall lose the report that it had for fruitfulnesse. He saith then, that he will make Lebanon to be like Carmel: that is to say, of a woodland, it should bee made passinage to sow corne in: so as they should gather as much fruit of plowed land, as if their present estate being compared with that which it should be afterwards, it might well be esteemed barren, and desert. But this manner of speech shall be more fully expounded when we come to the 32. Chapter.

with vnapt expositions.

Men much delighted

Others take Carmel for a noune appellatiue: but I had rather take it for a proper noune: for his meaning is, that these so fruitfull fields might well be counted barren and desert, in comparison of this new and extraordinarie fruitfulnesse. Others expound it allegorically, and take Lebanon for the proud, and Carmel for those of meane estate: which is too far fetched; and for mine owne part, I affect alwaies to follow the most naturall sense; and that is it which I haue touched before. Moreouer, to the end the faithfull might not be discouraged, he descends from threatnings to mercy; assuring them that after they shall haue shewed their obedience of faith in bearing the Crosse, which for a time was to bee imposed vpon them, they should behold a sudden change to approch, which would cause them to reioyce. And yet in taking away this hope from the wicked, he signifies that vengeance is then neerest vnto them, when they thinke least of it, and whilest they promise themselues all prosperitie: for when they shall say, peace, peace, then shall sudden destruction ouerwhelme them, as S. Paul saith, 1. Thess. 5. 3.

Vers. 18. And in that day shall the deafe heare the words of the booke: and the eyes of the blind shall see out of obscuritie, and out of darknesse.

HE promiseth, as hath been said, that the Church of God shall continue safe in the middest of these stormes: for albeit the world should be shaken with infinite tempests, and laid on heapes, as if heauen and earth went together, yet the Lord would conserue a little flocke, and raise vp his Church againe, as out of the middest of death. This place ought greatly to refresh the wearie spirits of the Saints, and to confirme their faith: for is it not a miracle of miracles, that so small an handfull of the faithfull (amongst whom remaines the one and the same religion, worship, faith, and meanes of saluation) should be conserued among so many wrackes of Empires which happened here and there?

But it seemes that Isaiah contradicts himselfe; for before he foretold that Gods people should be so besotted, that they should haue none vnderstanding: vers.11,12. and now on the contrarie hee saith, that the deafe shall heare, and that the blinde shall see. His meaning is then, that the Church must first be chastised and purged; not after an ordinarie or common fashion, but so strangely, that shee should seeme as good as vtterly extinct.

And therefore he saith, In that day: that is to say, after God hath punished the wicked, and cleansed his Church, hee will not onely inrich the earth with store of fruits, but with the renuing of the face thereof, hee will also restore hearing to the deafe, and sight to the blind, to the end they may vnderstand his law. For men had neither eres to see, nor eares to heare withall, as long as so horrible a iudgement lasted: for all were so terrified and amased, that none could vnderstand. But when the plagues & miseries should cease, then the Lord would opē the eies of that ẏ were his, to the end they might see & imbrace ẏ goodnes of God. For this is the true way to effect the restauration of the Church; namely, in giuing sight to the blind, and hearing to the deafe: which Iesus Christ, as we know, not onely effected vpon mens bodies, but especially vpon their soules: Iohn 9. We through Gods infinit mercy haue had experience hereof euen in our times, who haue been drawne out of that grosse darknesse of ignorance into which wee were plunged, and hath brought vs out into the true light: for our eyes haue receiued sight, and our eares, which before were close stopped vp, haue been opened to vnderstand, because the Lord hath pierced them, to fit vs for his seruice.

It is an happie thing when temporall blessings and inward renouation go together.

Men are not so fit to receiue cōfort in the day of distresse, as when the storme is ouer.

Wherein the true meanes of the Churches restauration cōsists.

Psal. 40.

True it is that the blessing which he mentioned in the 17. verse, concerning the renuing of the earth, was vnto them a good testimonie of their reconciliation: but the illumination whereof he now speakes, is much more excellent; for without that, all the gifts of God will not onely vanish away, but will also turne to our ruine and destruction. Now the Lord iustly attributes to himselfe alone, so excellent and great a worke: for it is not possible that those which are blind and deafe, should recouer their sight and hearing by their owne power. It appeares therefore that this is promised in particular to the elect onely; because the greatest part of men doe alwaies lie wallowing and weltering in darknesse.

All Gods benefits will turne to our ruin, without we be borne anew.

*Or, Then the, &c.

Vers. 19. The meeke in the Lord shall receiue ioy againe; and the poore men shall reioyce in the holie one of Israel.*

THen the humble shall againe bee glad in the Lord.] I translate this place thus: whereas others expound; The meeke shall continue to reioyce: for the Prophet speakes not of the continuance of ioy, but rather of a new ioy. As if he should say; Notwithstanding they be heauie and sorrowfull now, yet I will giue them cause of gladnesse, that they shall bee once againe filled with ioy.

He speakes of the humble: in which, note that we are prepared by afflictions to receiue Gods grace: for the Lord casts vs downe and humbles vs, that hee may afterwards raise vs vp. When he corrects his children then, we ought not to bee discouraged; but rather to meditate on this and the like sentences, and to hope stil aboue hope. And to cōclude, that after we haue suffered a little while, God will in the end giue his Church ioy and consolation. Moreouer, we hence gather that which I touched before; to wit, that the grace of illumination is not common to all indifferently: for albeit all dranke of the same cuppe of affliction, yet affliction humbled but a few, to make them truely poore in spirit.

Afflictions prepares vs to receiue Gods grace.

Heauinesse may indure for a night, but ioy comes in the morning.

All receiue not benefit alike by afflictions.

Vers. 20. For the cruell man shall cease, and the scornefull men shall be consumed: and all that hasted to iniquitie shall be cut off.

NOw he expounds that more fully, which was said in the former verse; to wit, that the restauration of the Church should consist in rearing vp those that were humbled, and in shewing compassion to the poore. But first of all that purgation of the Church whereof we haue spoken, was necessarie: for as long as God defers to execute his iudgements vpon the wicked, that are mingled among the good; they beare all the sway in the Church, all things are corrupt and out of order, God is neither worshipped nor serued as hee ought, and religion it selfe is trodden vnder foote. When the wicked then are either taken away, or represſed, then the Church recouers her first beauty; and the faithfull feeling themselues disburthened of so manie miseries and calamities, doe begin to leape for ioy.

In the first place he calles the cruell, Arrogant: which word is diuersly expounded: but the Prophet, as I thinke, makes a distinction betweene those who were not ashamed to commit their wickednesse openly; and such, who although they had some shew of goodnesse, yet in the meane while were no better then the rest, because they despised God in their hearts. It may be also that he giues them two differing titles, in regard that as theeues among men, they spoiled, oppressed, and vexed, giuing themselues leaue to commit what them listed. And thus they were not restrained by any feare or awe of God, because they esteemed of religion but as a fable. He also comprehends other wickednesses in adding, that they rose betimes to doe euill: for he speakes not of the Caldeans or Assyrians, but of such as would bee held to be of the number of the faithfull, and boasted, that they were the children of Abraham.

Vers. 21. Which made a man to sinne in the word, and tooke him in a snare: which reproued them in the gate, & made the iust to fall without cause.

WE haue told you heretofore with whom the Prophet had to deale; namelie, with with hypocrites, and prophane contemners, who eſteemed all the reprehenſions & threatnings of the Prophet but as wind, and had forged to themſelues a god of their owne deuiſing. For ſuch who only ſought libertie to liue as they liſted in their luſts and wicked courſes, were vtterlie vnable to beare the ſharp reproſes of ỹ Prophets, neither would they bee touched nor repreſſed by their good willes. For which cauſe they were diligent in noting and obſeruing their words, either to ſnarle at them, or to wreſt ſomething or other to their purpoſe. Neither do I doubt but he here taxeth the wicked who were offended at the plainnes of the Prophets, and with their ſharp and vehement rebukes, as if they meant to bring the necks of the people, princes, and prieſts vnder their girdles.

2 Thence it is that theſe calumniations and falſe accuſations are raiſed vp againſt the 3 faithfull ſeruants of God at this day: thence is it alſo that ſuch doubtfull and curious queſtions are propounded vnto them, euen as nets and ſnares to put the innocent in hazard of their liues, or elſe to plunge them into ſome imminent danger. And we ſee that the Scribes and Phariſes did the like euen to Ieſus Chriſt himſelfe, Matth. 21. 23. and 22. 17. Iohn 8. 6. The laſt member of the verſe which is added by way of expoſition, ſhewes, that this is not to be vnderſtood of ſlanders and other cunning deuiſes in generall, by which the ſubtle are wont to intrap the ſimple: for the Prophet rather more plainly condemnes the wicked conſpiracies by which the vnbeleeuers indeuor to exempt themſelues from all reprehenſions and cenſures. Now in regard that their aſſemblies were kept openlie for giuing ſentence in iudgement, and that the gates were alwaies repleniſhed with people, the Prophets tooke opportunitie from thence to reproue all ſorts, ſo as they ſpared not the Iudges themſelues. For the matters of life and death at that time were in the hands of ſuch wicked and godles wretches, that it was needfull to rebuke them very ſharplie. But inſtead of making any good vſe of theſe admonitions to come to amendment of life, they became ſo much the worſe, and raged againſt the Prophets, and laid ſnares to catch them, for as Amos ſaith, They hated him that reproued in the gate, and abhorred him that ſpake vprightlie, Amos 5. 10.

This appertaines to all, and eſpeciallie to Iudges and rulers in Common-wealths, who are the moſt impatient, and wil by no meanes abide the leaſt reproofe. They loue to reigne as Kings, and would be ſo eſteemed of others alſo, albeit they be worſe indeed then the meaneſt good ſubiect.

The expoſitors agree not in the expoſition of the verb Iekoſhun, which ſignifies to ſpread nets: for ſome take it to chide, others, to do wrong, as if the Prophet accuſed the malepertnes of thoſe who gaue ouer themſelues to violence, and by meanes thereof baniſhed ſuch out of their preſence as ſhould any way touch the in their reputations. But as I hope the readers will approue of that reading which I haue followed.

He alſo ſaith that the iuſt was ouerthrowne without cauſe, for they did what they could by craft and wicked practiſes to bring the iuſt into hatred, as if they had been the only wicked men in the world: but after they haue borne their ſcoffes and reproach for a while, their enemies at length ſhall come to deſtruction. For this is the Conſolation which the Lord giues the faithfull, to wit, that he will not ſuffer the wicked to ſcape ſo ſcot-free but they alſo ſhall ſmart for it, and in the end ſhall be ſuppreſſed, howſoeuer for a time they had the world at will. But we muſt haue patience to wait for the accompliſhment of theſe and the like promiſes. Verſ. 20.

Let patience haue her perfect worke.

Verſ. 22. Therefore ſaith the Lord vnto the houſe of Iaacob, euen he that redeemed Abraham: Iaacob ſhall not now be confounded, neither now ſhall his face be pale.

THis is the concluſion of the former ſentence, for he comforts the people, to the end they ſhould not deſpaire in this poore and wofull eſtate into which they ſhould be brought. It is alſo needfull to note the time vnto which theſe things ought to be referred, to wit, to the time of the captiuitie when the Temple was ouerthrowne, the ſacrifices aboliſhed, ſo as it ſeemed religion was wholie rooted out, and all hope of deliuerance taken frō them. There was great cauſe therefore why the hearts of the people ſhould be ſuſteined and vpheld by theſe propheſies, to the end that the wrack and ruine of all things being come vpon them, they might haue this planck (as it were) to ſaue themſelues from Ship-wrack, vpon which if they kept themſelues ſtirnely, they might by meanes thereof come ſafe to ỹ ſhore. By this let vs be warned alſo to imbrace the like promiſes by faith, and when all things ſhall ſeeme deſperate, yet let vs reſt vpon them with our whole hearts.

Now he ſpeakes of the houſe of Iaacob, in which we are to note, that the vertue of Gods word is perpetuall, and of ſuch efficacie, that it brings forth fruit as long as there is a people in the world which adores and ſtands in awe of him. For there are alwaies ſome whom God reſerues, becauſe he will not ſuffer the race of the faithfull to periſh. Hath the Lord ſpoken it then? let vs beleeue him, and doubteleſſe the time wil come in which we ſhal reape the fruit of our faith. For as his truth is firme and ſtable in it ſelfe, ſo if we reſt conſtant the vpon him, wee ſhall neuer be deſtitute of comfort.

Doubteleſſe there is an end, and thy hope ſhall not be cut off. Prou. 23. 18.

None that truſt in him ſhall be confounded. Pſal. 34. 22.

It is not without cauſe alſo that he addes, that God who now promiſeth to be mercifull vnto Iaacob, ſaith, that he redeemed Abraham: for he therein brings the people to the beginning of the Church, that cōſidering Gods power, which from time to time was manifeſted by ſo many famous examples, they might haue no occaſion at all to call his truth into queſtion. If ſo be then they gloried in that they were the children of Abraham, they were alſo therewithall to thinke from what place the Lord did firſt deliuer him, to wit, from the seruice of idols which he and his father worshipped: Iosh.24.2. But he redeemed him often besides that; to wit, when he was in danger in Egypt and in Gerar: Gen. 12.17. & 20. 14. Also when he discomfited the kings: Gen. 14.16. Lastly, when God granted him issue euen at the time when hee was past power to beget any: Gen.21.2. For albeit the Prophet had a speciall respect to Gods adoption, when he commanded him to goe out of his fathers house: yet vnder this redemption, he comprehends also all the benefits which God bestowed vpon him: for we see that Abraham was not redeemed onely once: that is, from extrem dangers and perils of death. Now if the Lord raised vp his Church in the onely person of Abraham, and that in such a time as he had lost all strength to beget any children to conserue the same after him; will not the Lord preserue it for the time to come, when in mans iudgement it was as good as forlorne? What a miserable waste was there of the Church, at the comming of Christ? How many enemies were there which opposed the same? Yet did he set vp this his kingdome in despite of them all: the Church florished and made all the world to wonder at the glorie of it. Let vs not doubt then but that the Lord will in his due time manifest his power both in auenging himselfe vpo the enemies of his Church which oppresse it, and in restoring of her to her first beautie.

A singular consolation.

When he saith, Iacob shall not be confounded; we often see that the faithful are constrained to hang downe their heads with shame, as Ieremie witnesseth; I will put my mouth in the dust: Lament.3.29. Also Micha saith; The time is come, in which the wise shall put their hands vpon their mouth, and licke the dust: for when the Lord corrects his people so sharplie, the faithfull must needes bee confounded therewith. But the Prophet afterward shewes, that this shall not indure for euer. Let vs not dispaire then in aduersitie: for albeit the wicked make vs their laughing stockes, and lade vs with all the indignities in the world, yet will the Lord in the end draw vs out of this shame and confusion of face.

Mich.7.16.

Marken tō this O thou troubled soule, and know it for thy selfe. Iob.5.27.

Yet the Lord therewithall shewes, that this fauor belongs not vnto such proud ones, who either are obstinate, or oppose their hard heads against Gods blowes that hee laies vpon them; but that it onely belongs vnto the humble, who are bowed with shame, walking humbly with their heads bowed downe.

Obiect.

But may some obiect, how can it bee said that Iacob shall not be confounded, seeing he was dead long before? it seemes hee attributes some feeling to the dead, and then they know what we doe in this world: thence the Papists argue, that the dead know all that we doe. I answer, there is here the fayning of a person; which is often found in the Scriptures: in which sense Ieremy saith; That a voice was heard in Ramah, Rachel weeping for her children and would not be comforted for them, because they were not: Ier.31.15. For in that place he sets forth the desolation of the Tribe of Beniamin, by the lamentation of Rachel, which was the grandmother as it were. So Isaiah brings in Iacob couered with shame and confusion, in regard of the vices and wickednesses of his posteritie. For as a wise sonne is the glory of his father, so a foole is an heauinesse to his mother: Prou.10.1. Although mothers doe cocker their children most, yet are they ashamed when they see them offend. How much more fathers then, whose loue being guided by discretion, are chiefly carefull for the well ordering and instructing of their children. Must they not needs be much more grieued, in seeing them wax wicked and dissolute? But the Prophet meant here to touch the people to the quicke, in setting Iacob their father before them; who being adorned with such rare graces of God, was now dishonoured by his successors: so as if himselfe had been present to haue seene them, it would haue constrained him to blush for shame. He therefore taxeth the vnthankfulnesse of the people, who in stead of honouring, dishonored their father.

Vers. 23. "But when hee seeth his children, the worke of mine hands in the middest of him, they shall sanctifie my name, and sanctifie the holie one of Iacob, and shall feare the God of Israel.

"Or, for when he shall see, &c.

THe particle Ci, is here to bee read in its proper signification; to wit, For; because the Prophet giues a reason why the shame of Israel should be taken away: that is, he should haue children raised vp vnto him againe, as it were from death to life. In that the Lord cals them the worke of his hands; I nothing doubt but he therein meant to expresse the admirable worke of their redemption: for he makes those new men, (as it were) whom hee adopts and ioines vnto him for his children; as it is said, Psal.102.19. The people that shall be created, shall praise the Lord: in which place the holie Ghost doth in like manner speake of the restauration of the Church. For there is no mention heere of that vniuersall creation of mankind, vnder which all good and bad are comprehended, as wee haue often said: but he now brings vs to the knowledge of his power, to the end we should not iudge of the saluation of the Church, by viewing her present estate. Here therefore wee must note diuers oppositions: first, betweene the deformitie of the Church, and her beautie or excellencie betweene glory and shame: secondly, betweene the people of God, and other nations: thirdly, betweene the worke of Gods hands, and the worke of men, (for the Church can no way be reestablished but by the onely hand of God:) fourthly, betweene her florishing estate, and that miserable waste by which she was pittifully rent in sunder before. For he calles the middest of her a perfect restauration; by which the people shall be so reunited and ioyned together, that she shall not only possesse the borders of the land, but the middeſt and the chiefe place thereof alſo. Laſtly he ſhewes what the end of our redemption is, whē he ſaith, That they ſhal ſanctifie his name: for we are all created to the end Gods goodnes may be magnified amongſt vs. But becauſe the moſt part of men doe ſhun this end, God hath choſen his Church, in which his praiſes do ſound and continue, as it is ſaid in the Pſalme 65. 2. Praiſe waiteth for thee ô God in Zion. Now becauſe many ſheep in the flock grow corrupt, the Prophet aſſignes this office to ỹ faithfull, whom God miraculouſlie had preſerued.

The end of our redemption noted.

Praiſe waiteth for the Lord, but it is in Zion.

Moreouer, becauſe the hypocrites honour God with their lips, and are farre from him in their hearts, as we haue ſeene verſe 13. Iſaiah addes feare to praiſes: ſhewing by this, that praiſes are of no account with God, vnleſſe we truly and with our whole hearts doe ſubiect our ſelues vnto him: neither yet, vnleſſe our whole life teſtifies for vs that we take not vp his holie name fainedlie nor hypocriticallie.

Praiſes are of no account with God, vnleſſe they proceed from a reuerent feare of his Maieſtie.

Verſ. 24. Then they that erred in ſpirit ſhal haue vnderſtanding, and they that murmured ſhall learne doctrine.

HE yet againe repeates this promiſe which he touched in the 18. verſe: for whileſt mens vnderſtandings are poſſeſſed with ignorance and blindnes, deſtruction beſiegeth and enuirons them about, although they otherwiſe flow in abundance of all worldlie wealth. The Lord therefore minding to prepare for the reſtauration of his Church, begins to cleare and enlighten the vnderſtandings of thoſe who before erred in darknes by the light of his word. And this he doth by the ſecret inſtinct of the Holy Ghoſt: for it is to little purpoſe to be taught by the externall miniſtrie, vnleſſe he vouchſafe to teach vs by his working inwardlie in our hearts.

Externall teaching will be to little purpoſe, vnleſſe God works inwardly in vs by his holie Spirit.

In the ſecond member ſome tranſlate detracters, others vagabonds: but the word ſignifies, that thoſe who reſiſted the Prophets before, and could not beare their reproofes, ſhould now become teachable and obedient, and therefore I haue turned it murmurers. By this we ſee how admirable Gods mercie is, in that he thus brings ſuch home into the right way, which deſerued no ſuch fauor; and not only that, but makes them partakers of his greateſt benefits. But let euery one lay this to his owne heart: for which of vs is it that hath not ſometimes or other murmured againſt God, and deſpiſed his holy doctrine. Yea, if God ſhould not pacifie our murmuring thoughts and affections by ſtilling and fitting them for his ſeruice, the moſt of vs would periſh in our owne follies.

THE XXX. CHAPTER.

Verſ. 1. Woe to the rebellious children, ſaith the Lord, that take counſell but not of me; and couer with a couering, but not by my ſpirit, that they may lay ſinne vpon ſinne.

Certaine reaſons why the Prophet denounceth this woe againſt the Iewes.

THE Prophet heere denounceth a woe againſt the Iewes, who being impatient in ſuffring the aſſaults wherwith the Aſſyrians and other enemies preſſed them, did ſtraightway runne downe into Egypt to require help of them. But this reprehenſion may ſeeme ſomewhat too ſharp, if we ſhall only conſider how lawfull it is for the diſtreſſed and weake to aske help euen of the wicked; eſpeciallie when they are vniuſtlie vexed: for it is naturall to all men to ſeeke protection and defence in time of danger. But if we looke vnto the firſt cauſe of this, we ſhall find that the fault which the Iewes committed in this behalfe, was not ſmall, nor yet to be endured. For firſt of all it is not a light ſinne, but rather a wicked rebellion for a man ſo to be the gouerner of himſelfe, that he deſpiſeth and contemneth to be vnder the yoke of Gods gouernment. Now the Lord had ſtraightlie forbidden them to haue any familiaritie, or to make any leagues with the Egyptians, of which there were two principall cauſes.

Nature teacheth vs to ſeeke reliefe in time of danger.

1 The firſt reaſon.

Exod. 23. 31. Deut. 17. 16.

The firſt was generall, and likewiſe had reference to other nations, with whom the Lord would not haue his people to conuerſe, nor to make any confederacies with them, leaſt they ſhould be corrupted by the ſuperſtitions of the Gentils. For it often falles out (I know not how) that by little and little we learne the vices of thoſe with whom we conuerſe and are familiar. And as we naturallie imitate their vices rather then their vertues, ſo are we by and by infected therewith, and afterwards the infection growes to ſpread it ſelfe inſtantlie. This is come to paſſe in this realme of France, which hath conuerſed with other nations: for hauing been too diligent in framing themſelues to follow their euill example, they haue now fraughted themſelues full of filthineſſes. Yea, this inordinate deſire of leagues & confederacies hath opened the dore for the Turks to enter into Aſia, and now hath giuen him paſſage into Europe: and howſoeuer they ſtill retaine their wonted frugalitie in meates and drinks, yet nothing remaines to all countries which they haue ouercome by force, but the villenies and pollutions which they haue left behind thē. The ſame may well be ſaid of our countrie of France, by hauing familiaritie with diuers other nations.

Two principall cauſes why God forbad the Iſraelites to haue any familiaritie with the Egyptians.

We ſooner imitate others vices, rather then their vertues.

France corrupted by hauing conuerſation with other nations. Turks.

The other cauſe was ſpeciall and peculiar to this people onlie: for the Lord hauing deliuered them out of Egypt, meant that they should euer retaine the remembrance of so great a benefit, and for that end gaue them in charge to haue no familiaritie with the Egyptians, fearing lest if they should fall into league with them, the memorie of so famous a deliuerance might easilie slip from them: by meanes whereof also, they might bee in danger to lose that freedome, in continuing to be thankfull for the same, which thankfulnesse was inioyned them by God. Was it not an vnworthy thing then to entertain friendship with so prophane a nation, and that to the dishonour of the Almightie? But especially seeing it was his will that his people should acknowledge him alone sufficient to preserue them in safetie, they should haue relied vpon this his promise, & freely haue disclaimed all other helpes. You see then that it was a very horrible sin thus to defraud God of the honour which to him belonged, and to labour after acquaintance from all parts with all prophane nations; for had they satisfied themselues with Gods onely protection, they needed not to haue bin so readie to run downe into Egypt.

Exod.13.3. 8.14.

Verse 2.

They were therefore iustly to bee conuinced of their infidelitie, in that they bestowed so much paines this way, and made such a stir in procuring their helpe. Neither is it to be doubted, but that the Prophet also was the more quicke and sharpe in speech against so sacrilegious a sinne; because thereby they bereaued God of the praise of his almightie power, in trotting thus vp and downe to get succour at the hands of strangers: for which cause the holy Ghost in an other place compares this lust to an inordinate loue; yea to most brutish whordomes. For Ezechiel shewes that their coniunction with the Egyptians in this behalfe, was no lesse then if a mans wife in her excessiue heate of lust, should not onelie runne after adulterers, but should euen desire to haue companie with Asses and horses.

Ezec.16.26. Ier.5.8.

I grant our Prophet doth not simply condemne al leagues with idolaters in this place, but hee respects that prohibition which was expressed in the very law of God it selfe; to wit, that they should haue no association with the Egyptians at all. Hee is thus moued to indignation against the Iewes therefore, chiefly in regard of this prohibition, because it could not bee but Gods dishonour must of necessitie be ioyned with this their running downe, as desperate men into Egypt.

Deut.17.16. Exod.13.17.

This is the cause why hee calles them peruerse and rebellious children, which phrase wee haue expounded in the first Chapter. His meaning is, that either they were men sunke deepe in their obstinacie, wittingly and willingly reuolting from God; or that they were so rooted in obstinacie, that there was no soundnesse nor integritie left in them. In the very entrance then hee chargeth them that they were men giuen vp to their owne counsels, and therewithall did cast off the Lord. Although some expound, To spread the effusion or shedding; and that it agrees with the Prophets meaning: yet others in mine owne opinion, haue turned it better; to wit, who cover the secrets: and this reading I haue followed. The reason is, because he speakes here of counsels and priuie plots, by which, in thinking to deceiue the Prophets, their meaning was indeed to flee from Gods presence.

Chap. 1.4.

Those which translate, That they may couer themselues with a couering, are grosly mistaken: for albeit the Iewes sought to the Egyptians for securitie; yet doth the Prophet rather aime at their wilie plottings; of which I spake erewhile, and both the expositions come all to one sense.

Now hee repeates one and the same thing by three phrases of speech: first, that they couered their counsels from God: secondly, that they asked not counsell at his mouth: and thirdly, that they would not be gouerned by his Spirit. For those that are caried away with a conceit of their owne wit, doe willingly giue themselues to cunning deuices, whereby they may couer their infidelitie and rebellion: and for as much as it was not their meaning to obey Gods word, therefore they neuer craued the direction of his Spirit. Thence comes that sorrowfull and wofull euent: for it cannot be auoided, but those counsels and determinations which the Lord gouernes not, must come to a miserable and fatall end. What wisdome is there but that which proceedes out of his mouth? Let vs seeke vnto it then; that is to say, let vs aske counsell of his word: so shall wee also haue the direction and gouernement of his Spirit, from whence proceedes all wisdome and counsell.

Counsels that are not directed by God, must needes haue a fatall end.

They that take counsell from Gods word, shall be sure to be directed by Gods Spirit.

But wee are to note that the word and the Spirit are matched together: which crosseth those fantasticall spirits, who leaue the word forsooth, to aspire to Oracles and secret reuelations. And thus they would come vnto God, but they will not keepe the Kings high way, as they say; nay, rather despising it. What doe they else then, but striue to flie without wings, as the prouerb is? Let vs therefore hold vs fast to this principle, that whatsoeuer we consult or enterprise in the whole course of our life, without warrant from Gods word, will in the end deceiue vs, because we begin at the wrong end; for that onely ought to be our guide. And surely if we doe but well bethinke vs of our owne ignorance, or rather our great brutishnesse, wee may easilie bee brought to confesse that our madnes is worthy to be condemned; to wit, if we shal thinke our selues so wise as not to vouchsafe to inquire at Gods mouth.

Prouerbe. Principle.

If any obiect, that all things are not comprehended in the holy Scriptures; neither doth it in euerie small circumstance resolue our doubts: I answere, all things whatsoeuer that concerne the well ordering of our life, is fully conteined therein. Let vs then once conclude in our selues, that the word of God shall haue the rule ouer our thoughts and actions, and that we seeke to square them according vnto that; then may we be sure that God will neuer suffer vs to hang long in suspence, but will giue vs a way and passage out of all difficulties and incombrances. And yet it may be wee shall wait long for the accomplishment of this worke; but in the end it is certaine

Obiect.

Ans.

If we will yeeld our selues to be ruled by Gods word, he will not suffer vs long to linger in our doubtings.

certaine the Lord will deliuer and draw vs out of them all, if we be willing and readie to obey him. Be it therefore that we are carefull in laboring & ſeeking after ſuch meanes as may ſerue Gods prouidence: yet muſt we alwaies nouriſh this meditation in our breſt, to wit, that we begin nothing, till we be aſſured that the thing is well-pleaſing and acceptable in his ſight.

Begin nothing till thou beeſt aſſured that thou takeſt in hand is pleaſing to the Lord.

The Prophet we ſee then condemnes the boldnes of ſuch who ſeeke to ſuccour themſelues by vnlawfull cauſes, thinking that way to proſper beſt, when they vſe all meanes be it right or wrong, euen as if they meant thereby to be their owne ſauiours. Now it is certaine that this proceeds from infidelitie and diſtruſt, becauſe they thinke God to be inſufficient to ſaue them, vnleſſe they yet runne to ſeeke help of ſtrangers, although it be flatlie forbidden them: From thence comes thoſe vnlawfull contracts and craftie conueyances, by meanes whereof men thinke their affaires ſhall haue better ſucceſſe, then if they walked honeſtlie and vprightlie one with another. Wee for our parts doe ſee infinite examples of this vnbeliefe in all the parts of mens liues: for they thinke themſelues as good as vndone, if they ſhould make it their reſolution to be content with the only bleſſing of Almightie God, and to deale truly and iuſtly with men.

Men for the moſt part thinke themſelues vndone, vnleſſe they liue by vnlawfull meanes.

But let vs know that we are not only caſt off and forſaken, but curſed of God, as ſoone as we bend our ſelues to ſeeke defence from vnlawful helps. Let all our enterpriſes, counſels and ſtudies therefore begin at Gods reuealed will. It is our dutie alwaies to waigh with our ſelues what he commands or forbids, that ſo being whollie deuoted to his ſeruice, and to the obedience of his Commandements, we may ſuffer our ſelues to be guided by his Spirit, which if we refuſe to do, then ſhall our preſumption coſt vs the ſetting on, as they ſay.

He ſaith, that they laid ſinne vpon ſinne, becauſe the Iewes did nothing elſe by their goodly preparations wherwith they thought to furniſh themſelues, but daſht their foot againſt the ſame ſtone, and of one euill made twaine, which was too great alreadie: for the fault is much more blame-worthie and to be condemned when by vnlawfull ſhifts we labor to flee from vnder the hand of God.

A third reaſon.

But we are here to obſerue one thing more ſpeciall as touching the Iewes, who by the help of the Egyptians would put the Aſſyrians to flight, and yet themſelues had called the Aſſyrians to help them againſt the Iſraelites and Syrians. Aſſhur preſſed the Iewes very ſore, and doubtleſſe it was a iuſt puniſhment of God vpon them for their incredulitie, who ſought for help of men rather then of God. And this we ſee hath been the practiſe of many others alſo, who haue not ſtuck to ſeeke help euen from the Turke. Well, the Iewes were ſo farre off from repenting themſelues of their ſinne, or acknowledging God to be iuſt in the puniſhment thereof: that they added ſinne to ſinne, as if the committing of one offence had made amends for the committing of another. Theſe are the cauſes then why our Prophet deales ſo roughlie with them: for thoſe that goe on ſo in their wickednes, and do violétlie ruſh againſt God himſelfe, and will not ſuffer themſelues to be brought into the right way, neither by admonitions nor corrections, are worthie to be puniſhed with the greater ſeueritie & rigor.

Verſ. 2. Which walke forth to goe downe into Egypt, (and haue not asked at my mouth) to ſtrengthen themſelues with the ſtrength of Pharoh, and truſt in the ſhadow of Egypt.

WE haue told you before why the Prophet blames this deſcent, or going downe. But becauſe ſo groſſe a rebellion did much amplifie their ſinne, he once againe repeates it, that they did this without conſulting with his mouth, nay expreſly againſt his inhibition. He alſo brings them to the fountaine of this euill, when he tels them that they did it to ſtrengthen themſelues, becauſe they relied vpon the ſtrength of the Egyptians. From hence then ſprung that peruerſe deſire of theirs to make a league with them, in which they ſufficientlie ſhewed that they made ſlight account of Gods power, not much caring whether they truſted in him or not; and thus made their impietie manifeſt to all the world.

Obiect.

But ſome might obiect, that men are Gods ſeruants, and that euery man may lawfullie vſe their help when he needs the ſame. I anſwere, mans help muſt be vſed, yet ſo, that in the meane while we reſt and depend vpon the alone help of God. But there was a ſpeciall cauſe to blame the Iewes, in regard they knew well that God had forbidden them to ſeeke for any help of the Egyptians: and therfore in this their fact they tooke ſo much from God, as they attributed to Pharaoh and his hoſt. It is not without cauſe therfore that our Prophet doth here make a flat oppoſition betweene Pharoah and God: for the creatures are ſet as oppoſite againſt him in battell, either when they exalt themſelues againſt him, or when men abuſe them, and truſt in them, or deſire them more then is permitted vnto them.

It is lawfull to vſe the help of man, prouided that wee whollie depend vpon God for a bleſſing.

Verſ. 3. But the ſtrength of Pharaoh ſhall be your ſhame: and the truſt in the ſhadow of Egypt your confuſion.

NOw he ſhewes what the end of the wicked ſhall be that deſpiſed God and his word, and followed ſuch counſels as themſelues liked: to wit, that all their enterpriſes whatſoeuer ſhould turne to their ouerthrow. He alſo threatens them that they ſhall not not only be left fruſtrate of their hope, but that they ſhall alſo goe to ſeeke that with great loſſe and confuſion, which ſhould bring them nothing in the end but ſhame and ſorrow.

This muſt be alwaies the lot of the wicked, for howſoeuer for a time they ſeeme to be whollie at their eaſe, and that all things fall out according to their desire; yet in the end the same things shall turne to their ruine. This is the iust reward of their presumption, when they dare to passe the bounds of Gods word: for things attained by vnlawful means, shall neuer bring profit to the possessors. He speakes of the strength of Pharaoh, by way of yeelding or granting: as if hee should say; You verily thinke Pharaohs strength is your safetie: but be better aduised, for it shall bring you nothing but shame and dishonour. The shadow of Egypt vnder which you hope to shrowd your selues, shall cause you to be cast downe with confusion of face. These two words of confusion and ignominie, are to be taken both in one sense; but the latter is added by way of amplification, because it carries greater weight with it then the former.

Things attained by vnlawfull meanes, shall neuer bring profit to the possessors.

Vers. 4. For his Princes were at Zoan, and his Ambassadours came vnto Hanes.

WEe may see by the Prophets words, that the Iewes not onely desired the aide of the Egyptians, calling them to aide and succour them: but he expresseth somewhat more, to wit, that they obtained not the same without great cost and labour. For it could not be auoided, but they must needes make long iournies, take much paines, and be at extraordinarie charges, to goe laden with their presents to the furthest Cities of Egypt, which he here names. For they sent no common persons on these ambassages, but Lords and great Princes. The reprehension therefore is the sharper, because they had basely sought succour of the Egyptians, trotting vp and down like poore suters. We are also to note ỹ antithesis here which we spake of before; to wit, that God was ready at hand, and neere to be found; so as they needed not to trauell far, nor to be at any great expences to call vpon his name: for he tied himselfe vnto them by this promise; This is my rest: Psal. 132. 14. and had told them that in that place hee would be found of them. But these poore wretches in despising God, did rather choose to vex themselues, by running to the vttermost parts of the world, then to inioy that present helpe which was offred them within the walles of their owne Citie.

Vers. 5. They shall be ashamed of the people that cannot profit them, nor helpe nor doe them good; but shall be a shame and also a reproch.

HE confirmes the former sentence: for it was a wonderfull hard matter to perswade the obstinate sort amongst the Iewes, that all things which they tooke in hand without the expresse warrant of Gods word, should turne to their ouerthrow. Now to the end they might be the more seuerely punished, God suffered them sometimes to prosper in their wicked courses; that so, being more and more seduced, they might in the end breake their owne neckes: for it came to passe by his iust iudgement, that Satan drew them on by little and little with his sweete baites, till hee had caught them fast in his nets. But in the end it was euident that they were not onely depriued of that succour which they expected, but were also sharplie corrected for their presumption and infidelitie.

Men may sometimes prosper in bad and euill courses, but it is to make their downfall the greater in the end.

The Prophet threatens them then that the Egyptians shall not onely deceiue them, (as it often falles out that the wicked either giue vs the slip when we haue most neede, or doe treacherously betray those whom they haue set a gog with faire promises) but that they should stand them in no stead, although they did their best indeuours to keepe that faith which they had promised. For let men do the vtmost they can for vs, yet in as much as the issues of all things rests in the hands of God, we shall receiue no benefit thereby, vnlesse God bee pleased to adde his blessing. When the Prophet spake this, it was verie doubtfull and hard to bee beleeued, that so mightie a people should bee vnable to giue them helpe: but we ought to hold it for a sure principle, that all the comforts which the world is able to set before vs, shall turne but to smoke, vnlesse the Lord be fauourable and mercifull vnto vs.

Men can doe vs no good further then it pleaseth God to blesse their indeuors for our good.

A Principle.

Vers. 6. The burthen of the beasts of the South in a land of trouble and anguish, from whence shall come the young and old Lion, the Viper, and fierie flying Serpent against them that shall beare their riches vpon the shoulders of the Coltes, and their treasures vpon the bunches of the Camels, to a people that cannot profit.

HAuing inueied against the consultations of the Iewes, in seeking helpe from the Egyptians, he now scornes them for the large expences, and great paines which they were at to bring this about: and therefore he denounceth the same curse which he did in the beginning of the Chapter; because they foolishly busied themselues much in trangressing Gods commandement. He mentions the South, because they passed thorow the South Country, wherein Egypt was situated from Iudea. And in regard of the way thereunto, he calles the beasts, and speakes to them: the rather to shame men, who were become sensleſse, and would heare no admonitions at all. He therefore shewes that the effect of this propheeie shall extend it selfe to the very brute beasts, seeing men did shut their eares against it. For seeing this people did proudly contemne these threatnings, the Prophet doth for good cause direct his speech to the Horses and Camels, who though they were destitute of reason, yet should they perceiue that God spake not in vaine.

Furthermore, the Prophet shewes that Egypt (vpon which this people thought to build build their perfect happineſſe) ſhould proue a land of trouble and affliction, euen to the verie beaſts. The way was long and tedious, yet they ſpared no coſt to ſatisfie their inordinate luſts: yea they were ſo violently ouerſwayed and caried away therewith, that no diſtance of place, nor length of way could poſſibly coole or abate the ſame.

Now Iſaiah threatens them with a ſpeciall iudgement, (beſides the former incumbrances) which ſhould catch hold vpon them; to wit, that wild and cruell beaſts, that is, the young and old Lion, ſhould meete them. Which was no new nor extraordinary accident vnto them that trauelled betweene Iudea and Egypt. Therefore hee heere notes out ſome thing more rare and dangerous; to wit, that beſides the ſore trauaile, diſcommodities, and charges which they ſhould be at, God in his iuſtice would meete them with ſuch misfortunes, that in the end they ſhould miſerably periſh. This doctrine ought to be applied vnto vs, who are too much wedded to the verie ſame vice: for as ſoone as any ſhew of danger ariſeth, wee by and by haſten to vnlawfull ſhifts, imagining that they ſhall doe vs good, albeit we know they be condemned of God. Is it not great reaſon then, that if wee will needes partake with this people in their ſin, that wee alſo ſhould ſhare with them in their puniſhment, vnleſſe we preuent the ſame by repreſſing our ſtubburnneſſe and vnbeliefe by Gods word? We ought alſo to obſerue and take heede of this folly, which caries vs away in ſuch wiſe, that we care for no coſt, nor refuſe any paines whatſoeuer, to ſatisfie and accompliſh our ouer great fond and furious luſt. Whileſt we were captiues vnder the Papacie, we had too woſull experience hereof, trotting hither and thither, and made long and wearieſome pilgrimages to diuers Saints, when as yet the moſt tedious iournies were eaſie and light vnto vs: but now when wee ſhould yeeld obedience vnto God, and beare the light yoke of Chriſt, wee can indure no paines at all.

Men will take great paines to fulfill their owne luſts, but none at al in yeelding obedience to the Goſpell.

Verſ. 7. For the Egyptians are vanitie, and they ſhall helpe in vaine. Therefore haue I cried vnto her: their ſtrength is to ſit ſtill.*

*Or, Surely.

THis verſe containes in it the expoſition of the former ſentence; for he denounceth and repeates but the ſame thing as it were; to wit, that the Egyptians ſhall ſtand the Iewes in no ſtead, albeit they weary their bodies, and empty their purſes neuer ſo much in ſeeking helpe at their hands. As if hee ſhould ſay; Egypts ſtrength ſhall be vnprofitable vnto you, notwithſtanding they ſhould do their vttermoſt, and imploy all their power to that end. Thus the Iewes ſhould be vtterly fruſtrated of their hopes, and to their great griefe ſhould find themſelues much deceiued. The letter Vau, here ſignifies For, or, Surely, as I haue tranſlated it.

In the next place he ſhewes that the Iewes haue nothing to ſay for themſelues, in that they were thus giddy headed to runne into Egypt, and that they were vtterly vnworthy of pardon, in regard they would not repent, but wilfully and wittingly poſted downe thither, albeit they had been admoniſhed to tarrie at home. For I refer this crying vnto Ieruſalem, to the perſō of God: wherein he complaines that he did but loſe his labour, in ſeeking to reclaime them by ſo many and plaine admonitions: therewithall ſhewing, that it was not without good cauſe that he had forewarned them to ſit ſtill; for he therein ſought to preuent the afflictions and calamities which otherwiſe he foreſaw would ſurely fall vpon them. But whence, I pray you, ſprang this vnquietneſſe? Truely from this, that Ieruſalem would not beleeue the word of the Lord. In a word, he ſhewes that meere rebellion of heart pricked them forward to trot into Egypt. Why ſo? Becauſe they might haue liued in ſafetie, if they would haue tarried at home.

The verbe to crie, ſignifies that they were not onely admoniſhed by words, but alſo by ſtripes: whence it appeares, that their obſtinacie and rebellion was the greater. He takes ſitting ſtill here, to remaine and to reſt quietly in the houſe: for he will ſhew afterward, that it had been their parts to haue been of a quiet ſpirit. See now the fountaine from whence this vnquietneſſe and ſtirring, yea, this their madneſſe and giddineſſe of head ſprang. Oh! They thought that the Lord was too weake for their defence, vnleſſe the ſtrength of Egypt were alſo added thereunto. For it is the propertie of infidelitie, to ſollicite the hearts of ſuch as giue not honour enough to the power of God, to be in continuall vexation of ſpirit, without anie reſt at all.

The nature of infidelitie.

Verſ. 8. Now goe, and write it before them in a table, and note it in a booke; that it may be for the laſt day for euer and euer.

HAuing conuinced the Iewes of manifeſt incredulitie, now he would haue it ſigned and ſealed as it were vpon perpetuall record for a witneſſe vnto all poſteritie, to the end thoſe which ſhould ſucceed might know both how obſtinate & rebellious this people were; as alſo how iuſtlie God inflicted his puniſhmeſits vpon them. We haue told you before that the Prophets were wont to gather their Sermons into certaine chiefe heads, and afterwards to faſten them vpon the gates of the Temple: which being read and viewed of all at leiſure, the Miniſters tooke them thence and laid them vp ſafely in Cheſts in the Temple: and thus the booke of the Prophets were conſerued, and afterward gathered orderlie into volumes. But when among the reſt there was ſome rare and excellent propheſie and worthie of memorie; then the Lord commanded that it ſhould be written in greater letters, the better to draw the people to ỹ reading of it, that they might mark it the more diligentlie. The Lord now commands mands the Prophet to doe the like, thereby shewing that this was no ordinarie matter, but the whole to be carefullie written, and very attentiuely read. Yea, that it should not only be read, but also so ingrauen as it were in mens memories, that it might neuer be raced out.

No doubt but the Prophet got great hatred of all hands by this propheſie, in regard he was not afraid to bring them thus vpon the open ſtage, not only to ſhame them among thoſe that then liued, but among the poſteritie alſo, and that from generation to generation. For what can men leſſe indure, then to haue their wickednesſes publiſhed, or that the ſame ſhould ſtand as it were vpon record in the minds of men? oh! they can not abide that; they deteſt and abhorre it, accounting it a moſt vnworthie fact. Yet the Prophet notwithſtanding was to goe thorow with it, and to yeeld obedience vnto God, albeit he thereby got the hatred of men, yea and it may be put his life alſo in danger: which conſtancie of his we are carefullie to obſerue, in regard that he nothing feared the feare of men when the queſtion was of his obedience to his God, and the diſcharge of his dutie. Then he contemned hatreds, enuie, hurlie burlies, threats, falſe alarums, and all dangers, that ſo he might the more freely and boldly performe that charge which was impoſed vpon him. In which reſpect it is our parts to follow and imitate his worthie example if we meane to giue eare and to follow Gods call.

Iſaiahs conſtancie worthie to be obſerued & followed.

Before them.] Others tranſlate, with them. But the word Before, agrees beſt, for he meant to prouoke the Iewes in the ſight of all, by ſetting forth this propheſie written in a Table. And hence may we gather that wicked men ought to be ſeuerelie reprehended, and that in the preſence of all, albeit they ſtorme neuer ſo much at it; as being a thing which at no hand they can away withall: for howſoeuer ſuch reprehenſions and threatnings doe them little or no good, yet others peraduenture may be warned thereby, when they ſhall ſee them ſo branded with perpetuall ſhame and infamie.

Wicked perſons muſt be ſharplie reprooued, though they ſtorme neuer ſo much at it.

Iere.17.1. That which is recorded elſewhere, to wit, the ſinne of Iudah is written with the penne of a diamond, and grauen vpon the table of their hearts, ſhall be fulfilled in them. Neither ought they once to imagin that they ſhall eſcape, albeit they contemne the propheſies by ſtopping their eares at the publiſhing of them: for their wickednes ſhall be manifeſt to the view of men and Angels. Furthermore, in regard they did neuer willinglie repent themſelues, nor were aſhamed of their ſinnes, the Lord commands a ſpectacle of their infamie to be erected, and ſet vp before the eies of all: for as they were wont to engraue victories, or ſome notable things in tables of braſſe, ſo would God haue their ſhame noted in publike tables, which the Iewes notwithſtanding labored to hide and couer by their cauils. For this was an extraordinarie matter as I ſaid erewhile, that the Prophet was charged to defame his owne nation by ſo ſolemne an edict, for which cauſe it is added, that it ſhould be for the laſt day, that ſo they might be had in deteſtation for euer; or, becauſe that when the great Iudge ſhall appeere and ſit in Iudgement, and that all bookes ſhall be opened, then the ſinnes of the wicked ſhall be truly diſcouered: for then the things which before lay hid and buried as it were in obſcure darkenes, ſhall be diſcouered and brought to light.

Let vs heere obſerue diligentlie that the propheſies were not written for the men of one age alone, but alſo for their children and all poſterities which ſhould be inſtructed, to the end they might learne to eſchew that hardnes of heart which was in their forefathers, Pſal.78.6.7.8. and 95.8. And that which S. Paul ſaith of the whole Scripture, that it is profitable to teach, to admoniſh & comfort, agrees alſo to this propheſie: for we know that theſe points are needfull to be knowne in all times, 2.Tim.3.16. Let vs reiect then the imaginations of thoſe franticke ſpirits and bad companions, who affirme, that this doctrine was fit for that time, and not for this. Let ỹ faithfull, I ſay, learne to ſtop their eares at ſuch blaſphemies, and to driue them farre away from them: for albeit our Prophet be now dead, yet muſt his doctrine ſtill liue and bring forth fruit amongſt vs.

Note that the propheſies were not only written for them of former times, but to inſtruct vs and our poſteritie after vs.

Verſ. 9. That it is a rebellious people, lying children*, and children that would not heare the law of the Lord.

* Or, For.

THe particle For, ſerues as an expoſition, in regard the Prophet now explanes that which the Lord would haue publiſhed to all poſteritie, namely, that the obſtinacie of this people was paſt cure, becauſe they would not ſuffer themſelues to be brought into any good order, notwithſtanding they were dayly taught and inſtructed. Beſides, we may from their vaine bragges gather how much theſe goodly Epithites did pierce and gall ỹ hearts as well of ſmall as great: for they gloried they were the holie poſteritie, and how they iſſued out of Abrahams loines, as if Gods adoption had ſerued for a vaile to couer all their groſſe and palpable wickednesſes, though they were neuer ſo manifeſt. Nay, God meant to lay them open, and to publiſh their wickednesſes with ſound of trumpet, as it were. For in accuſing them to be ſuch as refuſed to heare the law of the Lord, he therein opens the fountaine whence all preſumption flowes, to wit, the contempt of the word, which diſcouered their impietie in deſpiſing euen of God himſelfe: for they lie who ſay they will ſerue God, and yet will not be in ſubiection to his Commandements.

Iſaiah alſo aggrauates their offence for reiecting the medicine that ſhould haue cured their maladies, which medicine was offred them in his (wholeſome) doctrine. For this cauſe he calles them rebellious, vntamed, or wild; as alſo liers, or diſloyall, in regard that whoſoeuer will not ſubmit himſelfe to Gods word, doth openly turne his back vpon him, no leſſe then if God plaid the tyrant in exacting acting ſome vnreaſonable thing at his hand: and therewithall doth alſo ſhew, that hee is bewitched with the illuſions of the diuell, and giuen vp to the vanity of his own heart, ſo as he hates all integritie.

He that refuſeth to ſubmit himſelfe vnder the cenſure of the word, taxeth God of tyrannie, is bewitched of Satan, and hates integritie.

Verſ. 10. Which ſay vnto the Seers, See not; and vnto the Prophets, Prophecy not vnto vs right things: but ſpeake flattering things vnto vs; propheſie errors.

HE now in plainer termes, ſets forth and ſhewes as in liuely colours, what that obſtinacie & contempt of the word is, whereof hee ſpake before: for the wicked not onely ſcorne all inſtruction, but doe alſo furiouſly reſiſt it; yea, they wiſh it were vtterly aboliſhed and buried in euerlaſting forgetfulnes. This is it which Iſaiah meant to ſay; to wit, that they did not onely turne their eares, eyes, and all their ſenſes from holy doctrine, but could very well haue found in their hearts that it had been vtterly extinct and aboliſhed: for the wicked are euermore pricked forward with ſuch rage, that they would haue no mention at all made of that which they cannot abide to heare of. For the power and efficacie of the word ſo galles and ſtings them, that they ſhew themſelues to be no better then furious wild beaſts in rage and crueltie. Faine would they eſcape, but they are compelled in deſpite of them to heare God ſpeake; yea and to tremble before his Maieſtie.

1 Now it vſually falles out that after this bitternes againſt the word, in the next place they fall to hate the Prophets that haue bin 2 the Miniſters of it: and not onely that, but to lay ſnares, and to vex them with perſecutions, baniſhments, and oft times with death it ſelfe. By meanes whereof, they thinke vtterly to roote out & race from off the earth, both the doctrine, and Doctors alſo that teach it. For men had rather heare dreames and fables, then to bee faithfullie taught.

The Prophet ſets not down here the verie words which they ſpake; to wit, as if they had openly pronounced them; but hee ſhewes what was in their hearts: for hee had not to deale with ſuch fooles as would goe blaze their impieties to the whole world: no, they were growne to the height of hypocriſie. For they made the world beleeue, they were ſuch as ſerued God deuoutly, and therefore complained as if the Prophets did them great wrong, ſo to diffame them. But Iſaiah pluckes off this viſard wherewith they couered themſelues, and lets the world ſee what they were indeed; ſeeing they would not be brought to giue place to the trueth. For whence (I pray you) proceeded their murmurings againſt the Prophets, but that they neither could nor would hearken to the voice of God?

The Prophets were called Seers, becauſe the Lord reueale that vnto them, which they were afterwards to reueale vnto others: for they were as beacons ſet vpon an hil, and as watchmen, thence to diſcouer a farre off tidings either of that good or euil which was by and by to inſue. But the people could not abide to heare of troubles; and therfore they hated the Prophets, who by laying their ſins cloſe vnto their conſciences, were therewithall proclaimers of Gods vengeance which was ready to ſeaze vpon them. To this appertaines theſe words, ſee not, propheſie not right things: not that they vttered theſe things indeed, as we haue ſhewed before; but becauſe they thought thus in their hearts, in which they wiſhed the Prophets would be leſſe ſeuere. For it went againſt the haire (as they ſay) to bee ſo ſharply dealt withall. Doubtleſſe none of them would once ſhew themſelues ſo impudent, as in plaine termes to deſire they might be ſeduced; or to ſay, that they would reſiſt the trueth: for in outward profeſſion, they made the world beleeue they ſought to promote the ſame with all diligence, as all our aduerſaries the Papiſts doe at this day: but they denied that the ſermons of Iſaiah, or of the other Prophets, were the word of the Lord. They were not afraid to tell Ieremiah that he was a lier; and not onely that, but gaue him threatning words ſaying, Thou ſhalt not prophecy in the name of the Lord, leſt thou die by our hands: Ier. 11. 21. Thus we ſee the publiſhing of the truth was to them a thing intollerable. Now in turning their eares from it, what could they elſe beleeue but lies? See then how they ſought to be ſeduced and deceiued wittingly.

But hee diſcouers the fountaine from whence all this ſprang, when hee ſaith, they deſired to be flattered. For they would haue been moſt readie to haue heard and receiued flattering words, and could well haue found in their hearts that their eares might haue been tickled in the name of the Lord forſooth. What is the reaſon then why the world is not onely ſubiect to bee gugled by impoſtures, but alſo that it earneſtly ſeekes and receiues the ſame? Surely becauſe all men naturally deſire nothing more, then that they might be ſuffered to rot in their filthineſſe, through flatteries. But the meſſengers of God muſt of neceſſitie bee ſharpe in their reprehenſions for all that, if they meane to approue themſelues vnto God. Whence it followes, that worldly men cauill fooliſhly and childiſhly when they ſay, we could bee content to bee Gods diſciples with all our hearts, if hee would not deale too ſeuerelie with vs. Which is all one, as if for their ſakes they would cauſe him to alter his nature, and to denie himſelfe: as alſo Micheas ſaith, that the Iewes cared for no Prophets, but ſuch as would propheſie vnto them of wine & ſtrong drinke: Mich. 2. 11.

Verſ. 11. Depart out of the way: goe aſide out of the path: cauſe the holy one of Iſrael to ceaſe from vs.

THE ſumme is, that when the Prophets are deſpiſed, God himſelfe is therewithall deſpiſed and reiected, ſo as he hath no more audience. This the wicked cunningly diſſemble, because they are ashamed to confesse so great a wickednesse against themselues: but it goes neuer the better with them for all that. For God wil be heard by those to whom he hath giuen commandement to speake vnto vs, and to publish that doctrine which is contained in his word. Ought he then to be heard? Is any reuerence due vnto him? Let vs shew it in imbracing his word, as it is contained in the writings of the Prophets and Euangelists. Which I wish should be well noted, to vphold the credit of the word: for those that reiect it, doe as much as if they denied God to haue any being.

Would wee obey God? let vs shew it by our obedience to the doctrine of the Prophets and Apostles.

Againe, the cause of such impietie is here touched, which doubles the fault; to wit, because God flatters vs not in our sinnes, but performes the office of a good and expert Physitian. Men desire to be flattered, and cannot willingly indure that God should threaten them: thence proceedes this hatred and reiection of the word: thence comes that furious war which they raise vp against the Prophets, whose threats and reprehensions they can by no meanes indure. For what cause should men haue to reuolt from God, and from vnder his rule and gouernment; were it not that they please themselues with the mists of errors, and hate the right way? The Prophet therefore fitly ioynes these two thigs together: first, the contempt of heauenlie doctrine: secondly, the hatred of vprightnesse. 1 2

Vers. 12. Therefore thus saith the holy one of Israel; Because you haue cast off this Word, and trust in violence and wickednesse, and stay thereupon:

HE addes the chastisement of this impiety; to wit, that they should not escape vnpunished, because they refused to heare the Lord speaking vnto them: which contempt he expresseth the more fully by the verbe to Reiect, or, to disgorge. He calles it this word, vsing therein a word demonstratiue, in regard that men willingly forge vnto themselues a word agreeable to the manner and course of their owne life: but they will giue God no audience when hee speakes. Afterwards hee opposeth Gods milde summoning of them, and an exhortation to a quiet rest, against their turbulent enterprises, saying; You trust in violence and stay thereupon. The word Osek, signifies rapine and extortion, in things appertaining to mens substance: others translate, Riches ill gotten: others, Slander, or, misreporting: but they expresse not the Prophets meaning sufficiently. For mine owne part I refer it not to Riches gotten by wicked practises; but rather to the pride and rebellion, wherewith this people were puffed vp.

Violence and wickednesse.

The word iniquitie, afterwards added, is not to be restrained to iudgement; because as I thinke, it hath a larger scope: for by these two words, the Prophet meant to set forth the impudencie of the wicked, who proudly and insolently exalted themselues against God. Why so? Because they would alwaies do what them listed, and withstood him and his sacred will. And as the Poets fained that the Giants made war with God, so these resisted him when he threatned, perswading themselues that they were able to make his force to recoile by their pride and ouerweening. A fiction of Poets.

Vers. 13. Therefore this iniquitie shall be vnto you as a breach that falleth, or a swelling in an high wall, whose breaking commeth suddenly in a moment.

THis is the sentence touching their punishment, which Isaiah sets forth by a goodly similitude: for he compares the wicked to a wall that is cracked or swollen. Now as the swelling of a wall, shewes that it is readie to fall, because it cannot long stand vpright, vnlesse all the parts be equally knit together; so the pride and insolencie of the wicked, is an infallible signe & token of their present destruction: for the more they are puffed vp, the more sudden shall their downfall be. And as they are full of wind, so it is not possible, but being ouercharged therewith, they must forthwith breake in sunder. Hee bids them therefore to exalt themselues and to behaue themselues malapertly against God, if they will: but in conclusion, hee will quickly ouerturne your pride & presumption; for it is nothing else but a bubble ful of wind. Hence we are to be admonished, that there is nothing better for vs, then that wee wholly submit our selues vnder God: and so to gather in all our spirits, that we bind our selues perpetually to doe him seruice. For whosoeuer hee be that shakes off this humilitie, and growes proud, must needes breake in sunder with gathering in ouer much wind. The Lord indeed for a time suffers the wicked to swell, and make their great risings and ouerflowings appeare, that in the end they might pull ruine and destruction vpon themselues, by their pride and vaine boastings.

Vers. 14. And the breaking thereof is like the breaking of a Potters pot, which is broken without pitie: and in the breaking thereof, there is not found so much as a shard to take fire out of the harth, or to take water out of the pit.

WHen a wall falles downe, yet there remaines some remnants of the ruines thereof; and besides, the stones will serue for some good vses; yea, that which is fallen may be reedified. But our Prophet prophecieth here, that those which shall behaue themselues thus rebelliously and proudly against God, shall perish in such sort, that they shall neuer be healed; so that the remainder shall be vtterly vnprofitable. He therefore vseth a similitude taken from an earthen vessel, whose broken peeces can neither be made vp, nor gathered together againe. Which threatnings ought ought greatlie to moue vs to imbrace ỹ word of God with all reuerẽce, when we heare that ſo horrible punishmentes are prepared for thoſe which deſpiſe the ſame: for the Prophet ſhewes that they ſhall be whollie deſtroyed and vtterlie confounded, and takes away all hope of their reſtauration. And good reaſon: For wee ſee how the contemners of God ceaſe not dayly to ſet vp their Creaſts, notwithſtãding they haue had the foile three or foure times: Why ſo? Becauſe nothing is more difficult then to pluck from out of their hearts that falſe confidence which was faſt rooted therein.

Verſ. 15. For thus ſaith the Lord God the holie one of Iſrael, In reſt and in quietnes ſhall ye be ſaued; in quietnes and in confidence ſhall be your ſtrength: but yee would not.

HEre the Prophet ſhewes one ſpeciall touching the contempt of God. For when hypocrites are generallie admoniſhed, it toucheth them little or nothing at all: the Prophets therefore vnto their generall doctrines adde particular applications; touching in a ſpeciall maner the conuerſation of thoſe with whom they had to doe, and ſo alwaies aimed at ſome certaine marke, or end. For his aduerſaries might thus cauill and ſay, Wherefore doeſt thou accuſe vs of ſo great an impietie, as if we meant to reiect the word of the Lord?

The prophets are wont to deſcend from generall doctrines to particular applications.

This particular therefore is alledged to preſſe vpon their conſciences, and to cut off all occaſions of vaine cauillations. As if he ſhould ſay, Did not the Lord tell you that in reſt and ſilence ſhould be your confidence? Why ſtaid you not vpon this counſell of God? To what purpoſe haue you kept ſuch fiskings to and fro? Thus the Prophet conuinced them with ſuch forcible argumẽts, that without extreame impudencie they were vnable any way to excuſe themſelues: or if they did, yet he went away with the victorie, as they ſay.

He calles the Lord the holie one of Iſrael, the rather to reproach them the more for their vnthankfulnes, that ſo they might the better know what ſuccour they might haue had frõ him who would haue been their gardian, and as their protector. But hauing once deſpiſed him, their diſtruſt caried them away to ſeeke help of the Egyptians; which queſtionles was a wickednes vtterly inſupportable. This Epithite then conteins vnder it a bitter complaint, in regard they had ſtopped vp the paſſage againſt the Lord, who drew neere vnto them for their good.

Some tranſlate the word Shnuah Repentance; others, whom I had rather follow, Reſt: for I thinke the Prophet meant often to tell the people that the Lord required nothing of them but to reſt themſelues quietly in him. Neither is it ſuperfluous that he recites one and the ſame thing in two words: for of ſet purpoſe he hath put theſe words reſt and ſilence together, that he might the better reproue the diſtruſt and incredulitie of the people.

Moreouer this ſentence conteins two parts, to wit, a Commandement, and a promiſe: for he commands the people to ſit ſtill; in the ſecond place he promiſeth an aſſured deliuerance. In regard the people gaue no credit to this promiſe, they therefore obeyed not the commandemẽt: for how ſhould they obey him, in whom they beleeue not, or vpõ whoſe promiſes they reſt not themſelues? We need not maruell then if they be depriued of peace and reſt, which without faith can haue no place; neither can faith be without the promiſes: which being receiued, then, and not before, the troubled and perplexed minds come to be quieted. Infidelitie then only is it that begets this trouble, and therefore the Prophet hath iuſt cauſe to reproue it, ſhewing, that it is the fountaine from whence all their miſerie ſprang.

A Commandement, and a promiſe.

In theſe words, Shall ye be ſaued. No obedience without faith. No peace without faith. No faith without a promiſe. Only faith quiets perplexed conſciences. Infidelitie the mother of vnneceſſarie feares and diſtractions.

Now albeit our condition be not altogether like to that of the Iewes; yet God would haue vs quietly to wait for his ſuccour, to the end we ſhould not be troubled or perplexed, but to hope in his promiſes. This doctrine ought to be common to all the faithfull, for Satan inuẽts nothing elſe but how to trouble and vex them, and to cauſe them to fall from that happie eſtate in which they are. Moſes long ſince gaue this admonition, ſtand you ſtill, and the Lord ſhall fight for you, Exod. 14. 14. Not that he meant they ſhould fall aſleepe, or be idle, but he only required they would keepe this peace in their hearts, Coloſſ. 3. 15. which if we inioy, we ſhall finde by experience that it alone will ſuffice vs for our ſuccour; but without it we ſhall be ſure to be puniſhed for our lightnes and preſumption.

This doctrine belongs to vs.

A peaceable and quiet conſcience will giue ſufficient comfort in all diſtreſſes.

Verſ. 16. For ye haue ſaid, No, but we will flee away vpon horſes, therefore ſhall yee flee: We will ride vpon the ſwifteſt, therefore ſhall your perſecutors be ſwifter.

HE ſhewes how they would by no meanes quietlie wait for the ſaluation of ỹ Lord, for they choſe rather to haue help from the Egyptians. But there is heere a goodly meeting together of words, whereby he turnes againſt themſelues their owne ſpeeches that were ſo full of vaine confidence: for in the firſt place he takes the word to flee, to eſcape, and in the ſecond place, to take their flight. The Iewes ſaid it was much better for them to preuent the preſent danger in fit and conuenient time, and therefore promiſed themſelues good ſucceſſe if they vſed the aid of the Egyptians. Truly ſaith Iſaiah, I denie not but you ſhall flee, yet not for your ſafetie; for you ſhall turne your backs vpon your enemies, and ſhall be purſued of horſes much ſwifter then your owne.

But wee ſhall perceiue yet more cleerely what vice it is which Iſaiah here taxeth the Iewes withall, by their preſumptuous anſwer, No: to wit, that they obſtinatlie refuſed to yeeld obedience to that counſell which God gaue them by his Prophets, and thought it safer for them to prouide for their owne defence by some other meanes. Thus in contemning God, they esteemed the false conceit touching the meanes of their saluation, which they had forged in their owne heads, (before that which he had prescribed them.)

To trust in God whilest outward helps faile vs, manifests that we haue faith.

Let vs in any wise therefore turne away our eyes from beholding present things, and from relying vpon humane helpes, that so we may wholly depend vpon God; for then wee shew whether we trust in him or no indeede, when outward means faile vs. I grant it is verie lawfull for vs to vse the things of this life: but alas, wee are of such a crooked nature, that in vsing of them, for the most part wee leaue and forsake God, and wholly abuse those his good gifts. Besides, we are to obserue how wofull their end is, who trust more in outward helpes then in God. For all things must needes goe backward, and fall out against their expectations: for example, wee see that whilest these Iewes imagined to saue themselues, they are constrained to flee away with shame and disgrace, and in the meane while did themselues no good at all. It may so fall out, I grant, that things may haue some outward shew of good successe in the beginning; but it is onely to the end, that the change when it comes, might bee the more cumbersome and heauier to beare. Isaiah denies not but Egypt might afford them some helpe: but withall he tells the Iewes, that God would finde meanes enough so to crosse and ouerthrow that helpe, that they should no way escape his hand. For though the whole world should doe their vtmost, yet shal they neuer be able to defeat God of that which he hath determined.

A hard matter to vse this world as if we vsed it not.

All things must of necessitie succeed ill with them that trust more in the creature, then in the Creator.

An heritage is hastily gotten at the beginning, but the end thereof shall not be blessed. Pro. 20.21.

Vers. 17. A thousand as one shall flee at the rebuke of one: at the rebuke of fiue shall yee flee, till yee bee left as a shippe mast vpon the toppe of a mountaine, and as a beacon vpon an hill.

BEcause the Iewes trusted in their strength, in regard of their multitude, (which men are apt to do when they see and behold their power) the Prophet plainly tells them, that all the strength they are able to make at home, shall doe them no more good, then if it were far remote from them. Why so? Because the Lord would so breake and so daunt their courage, that all their forces should stand them in no stead. For to what purpose serue weapons or an host of men; yea what good can garrisons or fortresses doe, when mens hearts are appalled in them with feare? Alas! all our power is but weakenesse, except the Lord fortifie and strengthen vs with the power of his holy Spirit. This sentence is often found in the law; to wit, that when they haue forsaken the Lord, many of them shall bee put to flight before a few of their enemies: Deut. 28.62. But the diuersitie betweene the Law and the Prophets, is this; the Prophets apply that to some particular vse, which Moses deliuered generally, as we haue shewed elsewhere.

No strength but from the power of Gods holy Spirit.

The difference betweene the Law and the Prophets.

Wee haue therefore to note three things here. First, that we shal haue no more strength then that which is giuen vs of God. For if he sustaine vs not by his almightie power, wee shall forthwith be out of heart. Secondly, it comes to passe by Gods iust iudgement, that men should make vs afraid, when hee cannot obtaine so much of vs, as to write his feare in our hearts. For it is equall that mens words and threats should quaile vs, when we despise the voice and threats of the Lord. We may also note in the third place, that the Lord hath no neede of any great preparations to correct vs; for if he lift vp but his least finger against vs, we are forthwith vndone: he needs not an host of men to ouerthrow vs, bee wee neuer so well fitted and furnished to withstand him. Moreouer, he tels them that their calamitie shall last vntill they be brought to nought: so as there shall onely remaine some small markes of Gods mercy, amidst so great a waste and destruction of the land.

It is iust with God to feare vs with the wordes of men, when we will not tremble at his voice.

3

Where he saith, as the mast of a ship in the top of a mountaine, it may be expounded two waies. Some thinke the similitude is taken from a wood or forrest cut downe: for when men do so, they leaue certaine taire and high trees standing, which may serue for ships. But the word Har, is taken for a rocke, or rocky place against which ships vse to wracke themselues; after which, there is espied a mast, or some such thing, as witnes of that shipwracke. The Prophet yet addes another similitude taken from the signes of victorie, which are vsually erected and set vp after the discomfiture of the enemie. In a word, hee shewes that there shall bee so small a remainder of men, that it shall much resemble a generall waste and desolation. As if he should say; This great multitude now dazles your eyes, but there shall come such an ebbe and scattering of them, that there shall not bee left so much as the face of any people. By this are we admonished, how humble, modest, and meeke wee ought to bee notwithstanding our great riches and strength: for if we lift vp our hearts, the Lord hath skill to take vs downe by and by, and to make vs become more dastardly then women or little children: so as we shall not dare to looke one of our enemies in the face; and if wee doe, yet all our forces shall melt away as snow (before the sunne.)

The first Simile.

The second Simile.

As a beacon.

Let not the strong man glory in his strength. Ier. 9.23.

Vers. 18. Yet therefore will the Lord wait, that hee may haue mercy vpon you: therefore will he be exalted, that hee may haue compassion vpon you: for the Lord is the God of iudgement. Blessed are all they that wait for him.

THe Prophet now addes a consolation: for hitherunto hee hath so terrified them, that all the faithfull amongst them might haue been driuen to dispaire. His meaning is therefore, to comfort their hearts; that so hauing tasted how pitifull and gracious the Lord

Still the Lord in wrath remembers mercy. Hab. 3.2.

Lord is: in the middes of theſe their calamities they might notwithſtãding poſſeſſe their ſoules in patience, and vphold their faith by the power of the promiſes. This waiting hee oppoſeth then to that ouer-great haſt, againſt which hee cried in the beginning of the Chapter. For there hee reproued the people for their poſting downe into Egypt, and condemned therein their infidelitie: but now contrariwiſe to their reproach he tels them, that the Lord will not render like for like, albeit they haue much diſhonored him; neither wil he haſten to puniſh them. Others expound, He commands you to wait; or, He will make you wait. But as I thinke the ſenſe which I haue giuen agrees beſt.

Our God will not render like for like. Pſal.103.10. 12. 13.

Now that we may the better cleare this ſentence, we muſt lay this foundation, to wit, that God alwaies keeps a meaſure in his corrections: the reaſon is, becauſe he is inclined to mercie, which we gather from the word Iudgement: for the Prophets meaning therein is, that the Lord not only chaſtiſeth, but alſo euermore vſeth a moderation in his chaſtiſements, according to that in Ieremiah, Correct me ô Lord, not in thy wrath, leſt I be conſumed and brought to nought, Iere.10.24. Alſo in another place, I will not vtterlie cut thee off, but will correct thee in iudgement, Iere.30.11. Thus Iudgement is oppoſed to ſeueritie; the Lord ſo moderating his blowes in ſmiting the faithfull, that he cuts not off from them all hope of their ſaluation, for of that he alwaies hath a moſt tender reſpect. And therefore as Abacuk ſaith, In the middes of his wrath he euermore remembers mercie. He is not like one of vs then, to take the aduantage preſentlie, and to flie vpõ vs. Alas! ſo we ſhould be brought to nought by and by. No, he attends vs with patience.

God keeps a meaſure in his corrections, becauſe he is inclined to mercie.

God not only chaſtiſeth, but keeps a moderation in his chaſtiſements.

Iudgement In this place oppoſed to ſeueritie.

The Lord is patient towards vs becauſe he would haue none of vs to periſh. 2.Pet.3.9.

Moreouer, it is a confirmation of no ſmall weight, when he addes, that God will ſhew a ſigne of his glorie in pardoning his people. Where I haue tranſlated, He will be exalted, that he may be mercifull; others turne it, When he ſhall be mercifull. But I thinke the firſt tranſlation ſutes beſt. It ſeemes to vs ſometimes that the Lord either ſits idle in heauen, or ſleeps when he permits the wicked to offer violence to his people? and the ordinarie phraſe of the Scripture is, that he ſits ſtill, or is farre off when he defends not his Church. When therfore he had let looſe the raines to the Chaldeans to oppreſſe the Iewes, they might haue thought he had beene aſleepe. Wherefore the Prophet ſaith, that the Lord will exalt or raiſe himſelfe againe, and wil goe vp into his Iudgement ſeate. What to doe? That he may ſhew you mercie.

Where he ſaith, Bleſſed are all thoſe that wait for him, this flowes from the former part of the ſentence, wherein he called the Lord the God of Iudgement. When the Prophet ſpeakes thus graciouſly of him, it is that he might perſwade and exhort the Iewes to hope and patience, for the people were full of diffidence, and were toſſed to and fro with a marueilous vnquietnes, and vexation of ſpirit: Why ſo? Their infidelitie peſtered them ſo miſerablie, that they were not able with quiet minds to wait vpon God. Well, to remedie this vice, he exhorts them to wait, that is, to hope. Now hope is nothing elſe but the perſeuerance of faith, when we peaceablie wait for the accompliſhment of Gods promiſes. Where he ſaith, Thoſe ſhall be bleſſed that wait for him, on the cõtrarie he ſignifies, that ſuch as ſuffer themſelues to be ouerſwayed with impatiencie, and haue their refuge to wicked ſhifts, ſhall be accurſed, and in the end ſhall periſh: for without hope in God, there is neither ſaluation nor happines.

Hope and patience.

A definition of hope.

If they be bleſſed that wait for God, theſe muſt needs be accurſed that flee from him. Without hope, no happines nor ſaluation.

Verſ. 19. Surely a people ſhall dwell in Zion and in Ieruſalem: thou ſhalt weepe no more: he will certainlie haue mercie vpon thee at the voice of thy crie: When he heareth thee, he will anſwer thee.

HE confirmes the former ſentence, to wit, that the people ſhall indeed be afflicted, but yet that in the end they ſhall returne vnto Zion. But this was a matter very incredible, eſpecialle after the ruin of Ieruſalem and the whole land, for then it ſeemed that all the people were cõſumed: yet the Prophet giues them a promiſe that the Church ſhall continue ſafe. He begins at Mount Zion where the Temple was erected, and ſaith, that the Lord ſhall yet be there called vpon: then he addes, that it ſhall be alſo in Ieruſalem: thereby vnderſtanding the ſpreading and increaſing of the Church; together with the reſtauration of ſuch things as before were ruinated. In the meane while he admoniſheth them that Ieruſalem ſhall be repeopled, becauſe God had his dwelling there.

We muſt dwell in Zion and in Ieruſalem if we will haue our requeſts heard and granted.

When he addes, thou ſhalt weepe no more, it is to ſhew that their lamentations ſhould not laſt alwaies. The Church, that is, all the faithfull, ſhould be in great heauineſſe whileſt they remained in ſo miſerable and in ſo wofull an eſtate; but Iſaiah tels them ỹ this their ſorrow ſhall haue an end: and in this ſenſe is it ſaid in Pſal.126.9. that thoſe which ſow in teares ſhall reape in ioy. The Lord often ſuffers vs to be preſſed with wonderfull anguiſhes, but in the end he will relieue vs, and giue vs matter of gladnes, to wit, when he turnes the captiuitie of Zion: for this is the true ioy of the faithfull. Moreouer, in as much as it is a thing very difficult to reioyce whilſt the tokens of Gods iudgements preſent themſelues to our view on euery ſide, the Prophet ſets the cauſe of ioy before vs in his mercie: for we may aſſure our ſelues that all ioy and reioycing ſhal returne and abound as ſoone as Gods anger ſhall be appeaſed towards vs, according as we haue before alledged that famous ſaying of the Prophet Abacuck, that in the middes of wrath the Lord remembers mercie: and neuer ſo farre afflicts his Church, but he limits, moderates, and meaſures his blowes by iudgement.

The returning of Zion captiuitie, the matter of our true ioy.

Our ioy flowes from Gods ſhewing of mercie.

Though God be moſt readie to ſhew mercie, yet will he be ſought vnto. Ezek.36 37.

Our Prophet likewiſe ſhewes by what meanes we may obtaine this grace, in ſaying, it ſhall be when God ſhall heare the voice of thy cry. For in theſe words hee incites and prouokes

To demand pardon of God without sense of sin, is the next way to deprive vs of this mercy here promised.

uokes the faithful to prayers, and ardent sighes and groanes: for if wee aske pardon of God, and be not touched with repentance and remorse for our sinnes; whence indeed this cry ought to proceed, we are vtterly vnworthy to haue any mercy shewed vs. Would wee then haue the Church deliuered from death, and restored vnto a prosperous estate, no lesse thē if she were raised vp out of her graue? Oh let vs cry vnto the Lord, that hee may heare the voice of our cries, sighes, and groanes. For alas! if wee be void of the affection of prayer, how can wee looke for any succour of him?

No looking for succour without the affection of prayer.

To answere here signifies nothing else but that God wil cause vs to feele by experience, both his helpe and fauour: for the Lord answers vs not by voice, but by the effects. And yet let vs not thinke he will forthwith answer our cries. Why so? Many times there is much weaknesse of ours mingled with them; so as they be disordered by reason of our vnbridled passions: he will assist vs when it shall be expedient for vs; so as wee shall proue by experience that hee hath respected our saluation.

Vers. 20. And when the Lord hath giuen you the bread of aduersitie, and water of affliction, thy raine shall be no more kept backe, but thine eyes shall see thy raine.

HEe continues on his former speech, confirming the hearts of the faithfull, lest they should faint: for patience alwaies begets hope of a better issue. He therefore instructs them patiently to beare the chastisement to come, because they should onely feele Gods wrath therein for a time; but soone after, the storme shall be blowne ouer; hee promiseth them that ioy and deliuerance shall bee at hand, because God will turne his anger away from them.

Patience begets hope of a good issue.

See Hos. 14. 5

I expound the latter Vau, After that: as if hee should say; After you haue been thus afflicted, then the Lord will blesse you; for hee will change your mourning into ioy. Whereas some take the word Raine, for Instructer, it agrees not with the text: for albeit the principall fruit of our reconciliation with God, stands in the inioying of faithfull Teachers, yet because the common people had suffered much want, Isaiah fitting his speech according to their weaknes, giues thē therin a taste as it were of Gods fatherly goodnes in mentioning great plenty of all things.

Psal. 30. 5.

By the words bread and water, hee signifies an extreme pouerty and want of outward things: and therefore hee addes aduersitie and affliction. Now in stead of this penurie, he promiseth to send them fruitfull increases, which he expresseth vnder the word Raine. For hee takes the cause for the effect: as if he should say; The earth shall be exceeding fruitfull: in which phrase of speech, the Prophet also had respect to the situation of that Country; which waited for no other meanes to make it fruitfull, but the raine which fell from heauen; for it was not watered by the ouerflowing of riuers or fountaines, but onely with raines. Isaiah therefore shewes that the Lord will send abundance of those fruits, which otherwise he could haue diminished or taken away by barrennesse. In any wise therefore let vs learne to comfort our soules with these and the like promises, when wee shall in anie sort feele the hand of our God heauie vpon vs.

See Deut. 11. 10.

Vers. 21. And thine eares shall heare a voyce behind thee, saying; This is the way, walke yee in it, when thou turnest thee to the right hand, and when thou turnest thee to the left.

THe fruitfulnesse of the land, whereof hee spake before, ought to bee esteemed a good blessing of God. But behold here the chiefest cause of ioy and gladnesse; to wit, when God vouchsafes vnto vs the wholsome & sincere milke of the word (for our soules.) For there is no famin of bread that ought so much to affect vs with feare and perplexitie, as the famin of Gods blessed word. And indeed looke how much more precious the soule is then the body, so much the more ought we to feare that famin aboue all other famin: as also another Prophet telles vs: Amos 8. 11. Our Prophet then promiseth vnto the Iewes a benefit, aboue all benefits the greatest. What is that? They shall now bee fed with the word of God, which had been exceeding scarce amongst them before. The false Prophets I deny not will boast, that they also haue the word; yea with greater boldnesse many times then the faithfull Teachers themselues. They forsooth will be taken and held for good guides, euen whilest they lead men into error, and at last, plunge them with themselues into euerlasting perdition. But the word which shewes vs the direct way, comes of God alone. And yet if he did not therewithall promise to giue eares to heare it, the word of it selfe shoud little auaile vs: for so he should indeed speake but to deafe eares, neither should we perceiue ought but a confused sound.

The famin of Gods word a famin of all famins.

But the inioying of it a benefit of all benefits.

False Prophets would be taken for the onely Doctors of the Church.

True doctrin it selfe shall auaile vs nothing at all, vnlesse God giue vs eares to heare it.

When he saith therefore that hee will be behind vs as a guide, wee may thereby perceiue, that God will not suffer his word to be spoken to vs in vaine, but will so worke inwardly vpon our iudgements and affections, that they shall bee bowed to a true and willing obedience. For all of vs naturally are vnteachable, so that we stand in need to bee wholly reformed by the worke of the Spirit. And therefore the word, shall heare, is of great weight in this place.

Now he compares God to a schoolemaster, who sets his scholl.ers before him that hee may the better teach them, and keepe them in order: wherein vndoubtedly, hee shewes the great affection and exceeding care which he hath ouer vs, in that he contents not himselfe to goe before vs, but also to watch vs at euerie turne with his gracious eye.

God not onely vouchsafes to teach vs, but to watch and attend vs with a gra-

Moreouer, the Prophet shewes, that those which which follow God, ſhal neuer goe out of their way. For by the verbe exhortatiue, walke yee in it, hee addes ſome reliefe to helpe our perſeuerance leſt ſome difficultie or other might ſlake our courſe, as it often falles out.

But that which he addes of the right hand and the left, may ſeeme abſurd, in regard that when Moſes ſhewed the people the way in which they ſhould walke, hee therewithall forbad them to turne either to the right hand, or the left: Deut. 5. 32. & 17. 20. For that way is ſtraight, and no man ought to ſeeke out any by-waies. What might be the meaning of our Prophet then? I anſwere, hee mentions the right hand and the left in this place, in another ſenſe then Moſes doth. For it is taken here for all ſorts of counſels which wee ought to aduiſe of; which are diuers in regard of the diuerſitie of occaſions that we meete withall: and according as euerie one meetes with ſundry difficulties, and agreeable to his affaires and occaſions, heis to take aduice and deliberation.

Thus hee calles right hand and left, all the actions of life whatſoeuer; to the end that in all our enterpriſes, wee might haue the Lord for our guide, and that we might put nothing in execution, till wee haue called vpon his name, whether we turne to the right hand, or to the left. Hence we gather an exceeding comfort and conſolation; to wit, that the Lord will be with vs in our enterpriſes, and will direct our way before vs, whither ſoeuer wee turne, prouided that wee willingly ſtray not out of that path which he hath laid before vs.

Vers. 22. And yee ſhall pollute the couering of the images of ſiluer, and the rich ornaments of thine images of gold, and caſt them away as a menſtruous cloth, and thou ſhalt ſay vnto it, get thee hence.

HEnce it appeares, that this direction which God will giue vnto his Saints, ſhall not be in vaine: for hauing abandoned their falſe worſhip, they ſhall giue themſelues to the true. And the Prophet plainly mentions their externall profeſſion of pietie, when they ſhall make it appeare vnto all, that they haue renounced idols, and all idolatry. For ſeeing images are inſtruments of idolatrie and ſuperſtition; therefore thoſe who are truly conuerted vnto God, muſt needs abhorre and deteſt them: yea, and as much as in them is, prophane and pollute them; as we read Iehu did, who prophaned the Altars of Baal, and made a iakes of his Temple: 2. King. 10. 27. Faithfull Princes and Magiſtrates ought to follow his example, and ſuch as haue done the like, if they will giue any true teſtimonie of their ſound conuerſion. I grant repentance hath his ſeat in the heart, and hath God for a witneſſe of it; but wee can diſcerne it no way but by the fruits. And here vnder one kind, Iſaiah comprehends all. For in generall hee toucheth one note of true repentance; to wit, when men make it appeare, that they count all things cõtrary vnto Gods true worſhip abominable.

When he ſaith, that the idols are prophaned, his meaning is not, that euer they were holy. For how can that be eſteemed holy, which is erected to Gods diſhonour; which alſo polutes men with the filthineſſe of it? But in regard that men (being beſotted with a falſe opinion) attribute ſome holineſſe vnto them, therefore he ſaith, they are polluted, and that they ought to bee reiected and caſt away as filthy things of no worth.

Alſo in calling them images of gold and ſiluer; he therein ſhewes, that the faithfull ceaſe not to abhor idolatry, what loſſe or diſaduantage ſo euer come vnto them thereby. For many are loth to abandon idolles, becauſe they thinke thereby they ſhall loſe gold, ſiluer, or ſome ſuch like thing; and therefore had rather retaine them, then to ſuſtaine the leaſt incommoditie. Couetouſnes ſo holds & hampers them, that they thinke it ſafer wittingly to offend God, and to defile themſelus with ſuch abominations, then to loſe the paring of this or that trifle. But we ought to prefer Gods pure worſhip and ſeruice, before the moſt pretious things in the world. Let vs deſpiſe gold let vs caſt pearles frõ vs, & abhor whatſoeuer is deere vnto vs, rather thẽ to ſuffer our ſelues to bee polluted with ſuch vile traſh. In a word, there is not ỹ thing to be named for price & excellencie, which we ought not to eſteeme baſe & vile, when wee are to ouerturne the Kingdome of Satan, and to ſet vp the Kingdome of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, which conſiſts in his pure worſhip. For thus ſhall wee indeed make it manifeſt to all the world, whether the loue of true religion hath takẽ any place in our hearts yea or no; namely, when hauing indeed ſhewed our deteſtation againſt our owne peruerſe ignorance, we be alſo prouoked to put far away from vs all pollutions and defilings.

Vers. 23. Then ſhall hee giue raine vnto thy ſeede, when thou ſhalt ſow thy grounꝺ; and bread of the increaſe of the earth; and it ſhal be fat and as oyle: in that day ſhall thy cattell bee fed in large paſtures.

24. The oxen alſo and the young aſſes that till the grounꝺ, ſhall eate cleane prouender, which is winnowed with the ſhouell and with the fan.

AGaine he ſhewes by the effects, how deſirable a thing it is to be conuerted vnto God; ſeeing this is the fruit of true repentance, that God will receiue into his fauour the repentant; and will ſo bleſſe them, that nothing ſhall be wanting: nay, rather they ſhall be ſatisfied to the full with all ſorts of bleſſings. For as miſeries and calamities proceed from the wrath of God, which we ſet on fire by our ſinnes; ſo when he is at one againe with vs, all things fall out well, wee are inriched euery way; as wee may plainly ſee in the dious eye whither ſoeuer we goe.

Obiect.

Anſ. What is meant by the right hand and the left in this place.

That cannot be eſteemed holy, which is ſet vp to diſhonour God withall.

Gods pure worſhippe muſt bee deerer to vs then the moſt pretious thing the world can afford vs.

Note.

How wee manifeſt that the loue of the truth is truely ſeated in our hearts.

Images inſtruments of idolatry. Such as be truely conuerted vnto God, muſt of neceſſitie abhor and deteſt idols.

Faithfull Princes ought to imitate Iehues example, in polluting & prophaning idols and idolatrie.

Our ſinnes the matter that ſets Gods wrath on fire.

the Law. Deut. 28. Leuit. 26.

He ſpake before of the raine which ſhould make the earth fruitfull, but becauſe he obſerued no order in beginning with earthlie and temporall benefits, therefore he now ads to that doctrine which concerned the ſpirituall life, thoſe things which appertaine to the vſe of our naturall and corrupuble life. 1. Tim. 4. 8. Mat. 6. 33. For albeit godlines hath the promiſe both of this life and of that which is to come, yet in the firſt place it firſt aſpires to the kingdome of God.

Our proſperous ſucceſſes in all things depend wholly vpon Gods bleſſing.

Hence let vs learne, that men do but loſe their labour in tilling the earth, vnleſſe the Lord ſend his raine from heauen. It is he that muſt water the labours of our hands, and adde increaſe thereto, or otherwiſe we ſhall but tire and vexe our ſelues in vaine. From his bleſſing only muſt our raine come, and to it muſt wee aſcribe the abundance of the fruites of the earth which from time to time we receiue.

Nothing ſhall be wanting to the conuerted.

Let vs further note that nothing ſhall be wanting vnto vs, but we ſhal reape the fruite of our labors in moſt ample maner, if we conuert vnto God. Let vs alſo know that our ſinnes make vs often ſuffer want, becauſe we by our owne rebellion repell and beate back Gods bleſſing. Let vs no more then attribute the cauſe of famin and the barrennes to any thing elſe but to our owne vnthankfulnes. For the multitudes of people can not be ſo great, but the earth will be able to nouriſh and feed them: but we ſhut vp her womb by our miſdemeanours, which without them would be opened to giue vs all fruits in abundance, ſo as we ſhould liue both peaceablie and happilie.

The earth would neuer be wanting to vs in bringing forth her fruits, but that we cloſe vp her womb by our misbehauiours.

When God is angrie with men the poore dumb creatures fare the worſe: but being reconciled with man, they all fare the better by it. Deut. 28. 11.

That which he addes of the Cattell, ſerues much to ſet forth the goodnes of God, for he ſheds forth the ſame vpon the very brute beaſts. How much more thinke we will he do it vpon men, whom he hath created after his owne image? Now we neede not maruaile that beaſts ordeined for the vſe of man do indure famin as well as their maſters: and that on the contrarie they fare well when God is fauorable to men being reconciled vnto them, which the Prophet repeates and likewiſe confirmes in the words following, in promiſing that oxen and aſſes ſhall eate cleane prouender. For this ſentence is taken out of the Law: and the Prophets vſuallie do ſo, that in the euill plight & death of Cattell, we might behold Gods wrath: and frō the ſight thereof might be ſtirred vp ſo much the more earneſtlie and ſpeedilie to be at one with him, that our houſes might be filled with his liberalitie.

Verſ. 25. And vpon euery high mountaine and vpon euery high hill ſhall there be riuers and ſtreames of waters in the day of the great ſlaughter, whē the towres ſhall fall.

The prophets in deſcribing Chriſtes kingdome are wont to borrow ſimilitudes from things pertaining to our naturall life.

WHen the Prophets deſcribe the kingdome of Chriſt they are wont to borrow ſimilitudes from things appertaining to the life of man: for they could not otherwiſe expreſſe the true felicitie of Gods children vnleſſe they had done it by ſetting the ſame before vs in the image of thoſe things which are ſubiect to our ſenſes, by which men are wont to meaſure out an happie and floriſhing eſtate. The ſumme then is, that ſuch as obey God, and ſubmit themſelues to Chriſt their King, are happie people. But we muſt not iudge of this happineſſe by the abundance of outward things, whereof the faithfull many times haue little enough, and yet ceaſe not to be happie notwithſtanding. But theſe kinds of ſpeech are allegoricall, by which the Prophet applies himſelfe to our capacitie, that by the things which our ſenſes can comprehend, wee might conceiue ſomewhat of thoſe things which are beyond our comprehenſion, which being of ſuch an excellent nature, our vnderſtandings are too ſhallow to conceiue the leaſt part of them.

Happie people that ſubmit themſelues to Chriſt their King.

The faithfull ceaſe not to be happie though they ſuffer want.

Heauenlie things are of that ſupernaturall excellencie, that they can not now be comprehended of vs but vnder borrowed ſpeeches.

When he ſaith the riuers in the mountaines, it is further to ſet forth this ouerflowing of God his liberalitie, wherewith he would enrich his choſen. Waters vſuallie iſſue not out of the tops of mountaines, where nothing is ſeene but barrennes: I grant that valleys are moyſtned & watred with ẏ ſprings; but you ſhall ſeldome ſee fountaines in the tops of hils, yet the Lord promiſeth to bring this to paſſe, howſoeuer it ſeemes a thing vnpoſſible: But by this phraſe of ſpeech he meanes ẏ we ſhall be moſt happie that liue vnder the kingdome of Chriſt, ſo as there ſhall be no place whatſoeuer but he will repleniſh the ſame with all ſorts of benefits: Nothing ſo barren, but he by his goodnes will make it fruitfull, ſo as felicitie ſhall abound in all places. Our eyes ſhould ſee the performance of this promiſe if Chriſt might haue the full gouernment ouer vs, for wee ſhould behold his bleſſing on euery ſide if wee obeyed him with a pure and perfect heart. All things would then fall out to our wiſh: the world, and the vtmoſt bounds thereof ſhould be ſubiect vnto vs: but becauſe wee are farre off from ſuch a kind of obedience, therefore we receiue but a ſmall taſte of theſe benefits, and ſo much thereof doe we inioy, as we feele the growth of the new man in vs.

Happie men and women that liue vnder Chriſtes kingdome.

Note.

Our ſparing obedience prouokes God to be ſparing in beſtowing benefits vpon vs.

By the day of the great ſlaughter, he ſignifies and ſets before them another ſigne of Gods fauour. How? Hee will maintaine thoſe that are his in ſafetie, againſt the rage of the enemie: and thus the Prophet goes about to procure credit and authoritie to his former prophecie: for otherwiſe it had been almoſt incredible, that poore baniſhed exiles ſhould haue inioyed ſo many benefits. Hee ſpeakes here then of the ſlaughter of the wicked: as if he ſhould ſay; The Lord will not onely doe you good in ſauing you, but hee will alſo deſtroy your enemies.

All the expoſitors almoſt thinke the Prophet ſpeakes here of the diſcomfiture of that wicked King Senacherib, when he came to beſiege Ieruſalem: but when I weigh all things aduiſedly, I had rather refer it to the deſtruction of Babylon. For albeit there was a great ſlaughter whē Senacherib was with ſhame put to flight: yet this people was not at that time deliuered. By this we are admoniſhed, that we bee not heartleſſe, though our enemies bee many in number, and haue greater ſtrength, fortreſſes, and more garriſons then wee: for the Lord can eaſily deſtroy them, and yet cõſerue his Church, although for the time he ſuffer them to triumph & to haue al things at their wiſh. Let neither their power nor rage daunt vs then: neither let our hearts faile vs, though we be but a ſmall number: for neither their munitiõs nor fortreſſes, neither yet their furie nor pride ſhall bee able to ſaue them from falling into the hands of the Lord.

Though the enemies of the Church be many and mighty, yet God's power will eaſilie ouermatch them.

Verſ. 26. Moreouer, the light of the Moone ſhall bee as the light of the Sun; and the light of the Sunne ſhall be ſeuen fold, and like the light of ſeuen daies in the day that the Lord ſhall bind vp the breach of his people, and heale the ſtroke of their wound.

THe Prophet contents not himſelfe to deſcribe an vſuall or ordinarie ſtate of happineſſe, except thereunto he adde ſomewhat that is extraordinarie. For hee ſaith, that the Lord will worke far aboue the order of nature, in this his liberalitie. Wee neuer read that the light of the Sunne was augmented, vnleſſe it were when it ſtaid it ſelfe in the daies of Ioſhua, that hee might haue leaſure to purſue his enemies: Ioſh. 10. 13. Alſo in the daies of Hezekias, at whoſe requeſt the Diall went backe ten degrees: 2. King. 20. 11. But our Prophet alludes now to none of theſe miracles. Nay, more then that, he meddles not with the lengthening of the courſe of the Sunne vpon our Horizon; but of the augmentation of the light thereof vnto ſeuen fold more. For he ſhews what the ſtate of the faithfull ſhall be vnder the raigne of Chriſt: otherwiſe, we know that the Lord makes the Sunne to ſhine, no leſſe vpon the wicked then vpon the good: but the queſtion is here, of ſuch a felicitie as the wicked cannot attaine vnto. There is difference between Godsliberality, which extends it ſelf vnto all, and that which is onely proper and peculiar vnto the faithfull; as it is ſaid in Pſal. 31. 20. Great are the benefits which thou haſt laid vp for thoſe that truſt in thee.

Iſaiah ſpeakes of this particular fauour: which that he might the better expreſſe, he takes ſimilitudes from things cõmon to euerie mans eye. And thus ſhewes, that God will inlighten the faithfull with ſuch a light, that the beames of ſeuen ſunnes put together, ſhall be far inferior thereunto. But to the end the ſharpneſſe of their miſeries, wherewith this people were ſoone after ouerwhelmed, might not leſſen the authoritie of this prophecie, he addes yet another promiſe; to wit, that God will (as a good Phyſitian) bind vp, or heale the ſtroke of his childrens wounds. Whence it followes, that there was a neceſſitie of this correction; that ſo by theſe roddes, the people might be prepared to come to repentance: yea, it was neceſſarie that they ſhould be bruiſed and broken, till they were in a manner brought to nothing.

He mentions their ſtroke then, to ſhew that the wound ſhall be great; for the people reſembled a body hurt with many wounds. If at any time then the Lord deales more roughly with vs then hee is wont, thinke, I pray you, vpon theſe prophecies: for the Lord will bind vp our wounds, which may otherwiſe ſeeme mortall and deadly. Now if any aske why the Lord deales thus ſeuerely with his children: I anſwer, wee ſeldome profit in his feare, when he vſeth vs mildely: for our vices are ſo rooted in vs, and cling ſo faſt to our bones, that they cannot bee cut off, vnleſſe God whet his razor verie ſharpe and keene. Queſt. Anſ.

Verſ. 27. Behold, the name of the Lord commeth from farre, his face is burning, and the burthen thereof is heauie: his lips are full of indignation, and his tongue is as a deuouring fire.

HEe foretels the deſtruction of the Aſſyrians, which were then the principall enemies of the Church. I grant the Iewes had almoſt no neighbours that were borderers, but they were againſt them: notwithſtanding in reſpect the Aſſyrians were the richeſt and mightieſt of all others, the Prophet ſcarcely mentions any but them and the Babylonians, who had bin Monarks ouer nations: although ſometimes by a figure called Synecdoche, the Caldeans are ſignified vnder the name of the Aſſyrians.

By the name of God, he meanes God himſelfe: but he vſeth this circumlocution, in regard the Aſſyrians and the reſt of the nations ſerued goddes of gold and ſiluer. For they mocked the Iews, as if they had worſhipped a God in name onely. Why ſo? Becauſe they repreſented him not forth by ſome ſhape or image: as we read of a certaine prophane Poet, who vſed to ſay of them in ſcorne, that they worſhipped the clouds, and a diuinitie that was ſhut vp in heauen. See how infidels and prophane perſons iudge of God according to their outward ſenſes: but our Prophet brings the faithfull to this name of God. As if he ſhould ſay; This God which hath manifeſted himſelfe vnto you by his name; this God whom you neither touch nor ſee, ſhall come, and ſhall auenge the wrongs done vnto you. A prophane Poet. The God whom wee neither feele nor ſee with outward ſenſes, is ſufficient to auenge the wrongs done to his church.

From farre.] He addes this by way of yeelding or granting ſo much as it were vnto the idolaters. For as long as the wicked feele not the hand of God, they thinke him far off; and in the meane while deride the faithfull, as if they truſted in vanitie. The prophet therefore ſpeaking according to the opinion of the vnbeleeuers, ſhewes that that ſame God whom they eſteeme ſo far off, ſhall come: or rather that hee is already come, and is hard at hand. This he ſignifies by the particle Behold, which he oppoſeth to the word farre off: and therein admoniſhing the faithfull alſo to paſſe ouer all impediments, that they may come to the hope of this promiſed redemption.

His face is burning.

Now to ſhew that Gods name is not worſhipped in vaine nor without fruit in Iudeah, the Prophet ſets before them his fearefull power, which he will manifeſt for the ouerthrow of the enemies of his Church. For when he ſpeakes to the faithfull, he ſets him forth gentle, louing, patient, ſlow to anger, and pitifull, to put life as it were into them: but to the vnbeleeuers he propoſeth nothing but horrors and terrors. So that where the wicked tremble at the very naming of God, the faithfull being allured by the ſenſe of his bountie & goodnes, do ſweetlie repoſe themſelues vnder the ſhadow of his wings, and are not oppreſſed with ſuch feares. Hence we are taught alwaies to keepe our hearts in a reuerent awe of God, leſt we finde him ſuch a one to vs, as the Prophet here deſcribes him to the wicked.

Where he ſaith, the burthen of the Lord is heauie to beare, his meaning is, that God will bring ſuch heauie calamities with him when he comes, that the wicked ſhall ſinke vnder them: for by this weight, he vnderſtands the ſtrokes which they ſhall receiue. He alſo expreſſeth the ſame thing in mentioning the lips and tongue. But wherefore did he rather name them then his hands? Surely the wicked mock at all the threatnings which are publiſhed vnto thé out of Gods word, and eſteeme whatſoeuer ſ Prophets ſay, no better then fables. But they ſhall feele one day to their coſt that this ſound which proceeds out of Gods ſacred mouth is no vaine word, neither yet a thunder which only ſtrikes the eares, but they ſhall in the end feele the force of this word which they haue deſpiſed.

Queſt. Anſ.

Verſ. 28. And his ſpirit is as a riuer that ouerfloweth vp to the neck: it deuideth aſunder to fanne the nations with the fanne of vanitie, and there ſhall be a bridle to cauſe them to erre in the charetz of the people.

HE goes on with the denunciation which he began in the 27. verſe, as if he ſhould ſay, The Church in deed muſt paſſe vnder the rod: yet ſo, as the Aſſyrians in the end ſhall vtterlie come to nought. For he ſaith, that they ſhall be ſwallowed vp of the Spirit of the Lord, which he compares to a deepe riuer. Others take the word Spirit for Breath, ſo as it ſhould be an alluſion to the whirlewind, or to ſome boiſterous tempeſt. In the next place he vſeth the ſimilitude of a fanne, which is very frequent in the ſcriptures; and ſaith, that he wil fanne the Aſſyrians to ſhake them out, and to ſcatter them. For this cauſe alſo he addes the word vanitie, that is to ſay, an vnprofitable Fanne, which cannot retaine or keepe any thing, but loſeth whatſoeuer is put within it. For we know God is wont ſometimes to ſift and fanne his owne deere children, but it is to gather thé into his floore as good wheate.

First ſimilitude, of a deepe Riuer.

Second ſimilitude, of a Fanne.

The third, of a Bridle.

The third ſimilitude is taken from a bridle, whereby the Lord vſeth ſometimes to tame the pride and fiercenes of the wicked: in a word, to ſhew that he is their Iudge. I denie not but he alſo bridles and curbs his ſeruants and children, but it is to bring them to tractablenes: for the wicked, he raines them vp ſo hard that he tumbles them into perdition, and that is the meaning of this clauſe where he ſaith is in a bridle to cauſe them to erre. For fierce horſes are tugged this way and that way by their riders; and the more they wince the more they ſpurre them: God likewiſe keepes the wicked ſhort, and handles them ſo roughlie, that they erre at euery blow hee giues them, as Dauid well deſcribes it, Pſal. 32. 10. Now the end of theſe ſimilitudes is to teach vs, that there is no dallying with God. For albeit he forbeares vs for a time, yet at the laſt we ſhall prooue the Prophets words true, to wit, that his ſpirit or breath ſhall be enough to ſwallow vp the wicked, and ſuddenlie to conſume them, no leſſe then if a flood had paſſed ouer their heads. To conclude, ſeeing he ſhewes that the nations were to be fanned in the fanne of vanitie, let vs feare leſt if the Lord find nought in vs but chaffe, he alſo caſt vs vpó the dunghill. Note alſo the difference betweene the children of God and the wicked, both are chaſtiſed alike, but yet diuerſlie. How ſo? The one to be kept and preſerued as pure gold, the other as droſſe to be burnt vp and conſumed.

The end why the Prophet vſeth theſe ſimilitudes.

The wicked and the godly corrected alike: but the one as droſſe to be burnt vp, the other as pure gold to be preſerued for the Lords vſe.

Verſ. 29. But there ſhall be a ſong vnto you as in the night when a ſolemne feaſt is kept: and gladnes of heart, as he that commeth with a pipe to go vnto the mount of the Lord, to the mightie one of Iſrael.

HE ſhewes, that all the euils wherewith he threatned the Aſſyrians ſhould turne to the ſaluation of the Church. Why ſo? Becauſe God would no leſſe ſeuerely puniſh the iniuries done to his children, then if they had been done to himſelfe. And thus he ſets forth his fatherlie loue and his inеſtimable good will towards vs, in that he vouchſafes to take armes euen in his owne perſon as it were for our defence. Whence we may gather, that all the menaces ſo frequent in the holy Scriptures, ſerue much for the conſolation of the faithfull.

Threatnings pronounced againſt the wicked in the holy Scriptures ſerue greatly for the comfort of the faithfull.

In the next place he ſaith, that this ſhall be an holie ſong; and compares it to thoſe that were vſed in ſolemne feaſts: the rather to ſtirre the faithfull vp to thankſgiuing, and to teach them how to order their ioy and reioycing. For it is not enough to reioyce, vnleſſe our ioy be directlie in the Lord, whoſe glorie ſhould alwaies be the marke and end we aime at therein: otherwiſe, our ioy ſhould neither be good, nor acceptable vnto him, but rather prophane and vaine.

If our ioy be not in the Lord, it is a vaine and profane ioy.

Now becauſe the Iewes began their feaſt dáies at the ſun ſetting, and therefore began to celebrate them as ſoone as it was euening, he ſaith, that this ſong ſhall be as in the night. And he yet further expreſſeth the manner of their ioy; to wit, that they ſhall not leape nor skip after the cuſtome of prophane perſons;

The Iewes vſed to begin to celebrate their feaſts the euening before.

but ſhall lift vp their hearts vnto God, reſting in him alone, whom they ſhall acknowledge the ſole author of all benefits.

By the mount, he meanes the Temple which was built vpon it. He calles God the ſtrength of Iſrael, becauſe the Iewes receiued their redemption from his out ſtretched arme; as alſo becauſe they dwelt in quietneſſe vnder his mighty protection: herein aduertiſing them, that they could haue no ſafetie for the time to come, but by putting their truſt in his ſtrength. For alas! as ſoone as we perſwade our ſelues that wee haue any ſtrength of our owne, we forthwith bereaue God of this title; which indeed, none but the humble & meeke can giue vnto him, who are ſtripped of all their owne ſtrength and power.

The mightie one of Iſrael.

Verſ. 30. And the Lord ſhall cauſe his glorious voice to be heard, and ſhall declare the lighting downe of his arme, with the anger of his countenance and flame of a deuouring fire, with ſcattering and tempeſt, and haile ſtones.

HE confirmes that which he ſaid before of the iudgement of God againſt the Aſſyrians, and deſcribes it vnder a figure, as hee and the reſt of the Prophets are wont to do. For whileſt God ſeemes to hold his peace, and plagues not the wicked forthwith, either we thinke he ſleepes, or that he wants ſufficient power: and thus wee are diſtracted with diuers and doubtfull thoughts. And albeit he ſhewes vs ſome one example of his iudgement, yet by reaſon of this ſottiſhneſſe, or rather vnthankfulneſſe, which naturally poſſeſſeth vs, we wittingly put a vaile betweene, by one deuice or other, to darken the glory of God. For either we attribute it vnto fortune, or to the policies and ſubtile inuentions of mans braine: ſo as we will neuer in good earneſt aſcribe the ſame wholly vnto God, vnleſſe he conſtraines vs vnto it by force. This is the cauſe why the Prophet contents not himſelfe to haue once affirmed, that Gods vengeance ſhould fall vpon the Aſſyrians, but alſo in this place is diligent to paint out the ſame in liuely colours, repeating the ſame thing with greater vehemencie.

His meaning is then, that this deſtruction of the enemie ſhall bee ſo famous, that men ſhall be conſtrained to heare the voice of God: that is to ſay, to acknowledge his iudgmẽts, and to confeſſe that this deſolation indeede was from his hand, euen as if himſelfe had vttered the ſame from heauen with his liuely voice in all mens hearing. The ſum is then, that the matter ſhall bee ſo euident, that all ſhall confeſſe this deſtruction came from the mouth of God; to wit, from his ordinance.

1 He begins with the voice of God, to the end we might know that he gouernes whatſoeuer is done in the earth. And therewithall he extolles the efficacie of his doctrine, in which the people were to reſt, till it ſhould bring
2 forth theſe effects in the appointed time. But for as much as the effect incontinently follows this ordinance and voice of God, therfore the Prophet addes, the lighting downe of his arme. For theſe two things muſt alwaies bee ioyned together, it being vnlawfull once to imagin that God is like vnto men, who ſuddenly taking a thing in hand, in the end leaue it vnperfected. No, looke what he ordaines, that he executes: for his hand or arme is neuer ſeparated from the words of his mouth. On the contrary, hee neuer doth any thing raſhly, but that which hee hath ordained before: ſo as all the croſſes which hee ſends, are ſo many documents to vs of his equall and iuſt dealing.

Gods voice, and the lighting downe of his arme, goe together.

In the end of the verſe, hee ſets forth this vengeance of God vnder figures; that by the horrour thereof, the Iewes might raiſe vp their faith on high with ſo much the more courage: for it was a great conſolation vnto them (notwithſtanding the ſharpe ſcourges which they felt) to know that their enemies ſoone after ſhould drinke off this cup, euen to the very dregs. But away with the dreames of the Rabbines, who from this place gather, that the Aſſyrians were indeed ſmitten with thunder; for ſuch a coniecture is moſt friuolous. The Prophet keeps his ordinary courſe, and by theſe ſimilitudes deſcribes Gods fearfull iudgements, in regard that wee are too ſlow; yea altogether vnfit to comprehend them. Therefore to awaken our dulneſſe, wee had need to heare of deuouring fire, of thunders, floods, and deluges of water: which becauſe they are things abhorring to nature, they vſually touch vs the more to the quicke: in which reſpect the Prophets doe the more willingly draw their ſimilitudes from them, to the end wee may apprehend the fearefull reuenging hand of God againſt the wicked.

The vſe of the former ſimilitudes.

Verſ. 31. For with the voice of the Lord ſhall Aſſur be deſtroied which ſmote with the rod.

HE addes this for two cauſes: Firſt, to ſhew why the Aſſyrian was to be broken. For ſeeing hee behaued himſelfe cruelly and ſauagely towards others, it was good reaſon he ſhould receiue like for like. This we know is the vſuall courſe which God takes with tyrants, as our Prophet will tell vs, Chap. 33. Woe to thee that ſpoiledſt, when thou waſt not ſpoiled, &c. Secondly, the Aſſyrians power ſeemed too great to be vanquiſhed. But albeit he was euery way ſo well fortified, that he was not only able to defend himſelfe, but alſo to annoy others; yet the Prophet tels him, Gods onely voice ſhall ſhake him in peeces. By this wee may learne, how vaine the confidence of the wicked is, who haue nothing to truſt vnto but their outward forces; altogether deſpiſing God, as if they were not liable to the ſtrokes of his hand. But the Lord needs no better weapons then his voice to ſcatter all their munitions; for hee will conſume them with the very beck of his countenance. Neither are wee to doubt but the Prophet alſo meant by this meanes, to withdraw the senses of the faithfull from looking to these helpes, lest they should stand to inquire how it might come to passe, but should onely content themselues with Gods promise, who is of power sufficient to execute his counsels as soone as he hath spoken the word.

Vers. 32. And in euerie place that the staffe shall passe, it shall cleaue fast, which the Lord shall lay vpon him with tabrets and harpes: and with battels, and lifting vp of hands shall hee fight against it.

HIs meaning is, that the Assyrians will trie all meanes to flie from Gods hand, but all in vaine; for it shall pursue them whithersoeuer they shall turne them, bee it forwards or backward. Touching these words of the staffe digging, I willingly cõsent to their opiniõ, who thinke it to bee a similitude taken from those that haue laid on so long, till the traces and prints thereof appeare a great while after: as if a whip or staffe had been let into the flesh. Vnlesse any had rather vnderstand that the plague should cleaue fast to the backs of the Assyrian, euen as a foundatiõ is laid fast into the earth. For that which is not rooted in the ground, may be taken away and transported to another place: but hee shewes that this staffe shall cleaue so fast, that there shall bee no remouing of it; neither shall any be able to plucke it away. For God suffers the weight of his wrath to fall vpõ the reprobates which vtterly ouercharge th them: and lest they might dreame of any starting holes, the Prophet cuts off al hope thereof in this word euery place. For so ought the text to be resolued; to wit, whersoeuer the staffe shall light, it shall cleaue fast.

When he mentions the tabrets, it is to shew, that the issue of the war shall not bee vncertain, as it is when forces are of equall strẽgth; but his meanig is, that the Lord shall haue the victory. Why so? Because he shall no sooner vndertake the war, but hee brings that with him ẏ shall do the deed. For tabrets, harps, and hands lifted vp, doe signifie the ioy which they make that haue gotten the conquest, whilest they cry, victorie, victorie.

If the Lord goe into the field, hee will surely conquer.

Some refer that to the host, which he addes in the feminin gender, shall fight against it: but the truth is, hee meant to expresse a greater thing then it; to wit, Babylon, the head Citie of the Kingdome, opposing it to Ierusalem, which hee had noted out before by a like relatiue, vers. 29. From whence we may gather, that the wicked must needes be consumed at the last, notwithstanding the great shew of meanes which they haue to escape the same: for which way soeuer they turne them, or whither so euer they flee, yet the staffe of the Lord shall pursue them, yea and cleaue fast to their backes: they shall neuer bee able to shun his hand, nor beat backe his blowes.

Wee also are now and then corrected by this hand of God, but his blowes shall not alwaies cleaue vnto vs; our wounds shall bee mollified and eased, and our sorrow shall bee turned into ioy. Moreouer, the Lord so fights against the wicked, that they are not able to make their party good, nor yet gaine anie thing by their resistance. He fights with thẽ, but as one that is sure of the victory before he giues the first blow: sometimes hee giues them a little scope indeed, but he takes down their pride whensoeuer it pleaseth him. If we then fight vnder his ensigne, wee may assure our selues of a prosperous victorie: for vnder his leading, we shall be safe from danger, and shall haue certaine hope of conquest in the end.

Vers. 33. For Topheth is prepared of [a] olde: it is euen prepared for the King: hee hath made it deepe and large: the burning thereof is fire and much wood; the breath of the Lord like a riuer of brimstone doth kindle it.

[a] Or before yesterday. [b] Or, his heap is fire.

Isaiah continues his description of Gods seuere punishments, wherein he shewes, that the wicked shall not onely haue their portion of plagues in this life, but shall bee vexed therewith for euer and euer. Why so? Because hell is prepared and made ready for them; not for the poorer sort alone, but for those in great places, euen for Kings & Princes. By Topheth, no doubt he meanes hell: not as though we should imagin there were some place where the wicked are shut vp after their death as in a prison, there to suffer the torments which they haue deserued: but hee thereby signifies their miserable condition and extreame torments. In the booke of the Kings, this word Topheth is taken for the place where the Iewes sacrificed their sonnes to Moloch: 2. King. 23. 10. whereof Ieremiah also maketh mention: Ier. 19. 6. Now this place was destroied by Iosiah, in regard of the horrible murthers and superstitions which were there committed.

For mine owne part, I am out of doubt that the Prophets meant to apply the name of this place, to those exquisite torments which the wicked indure; to the end the faithfull might shudder and shake at the onely hearing of it: as also that euery one might learne to haue idolatrie in the greater detestation.

Let vs learne to make good vse of this doctrine. I 2

This very etymologie agrees to the word Hell: for the valley of Hinnon was taken for hell it selfe, because of the execrable sacrilegies which were there committed. Now because we thinke the wicked shall escape scotfree, when we see them prosper and haue all things at their wish, the Prophet to take away this conceit, saith, that before yesterday, that is to say, from the foundations of the earth, the Lord hath foreordeined what punishments hee will inflict vpon the vngodly. For howsoeuer this decree be hidden from vs for a time; yet it is stable and vnmoueable. Let vs not thẽ iudge of the estate of the wicked by outward appearances, but let vs wait vpon our God, who will take them tardie well well enough in miſchiefes which they plot, and that in his appointed houre. In ſ meane while let vs not be ouer-haſtie to thinke God hath forgotten to be iuſt, for he concluded that which he meant to do, and that long ere we had abilitie to thinke of it: neither can we poſſiblie be ſo ſwift in wiſhing the ſpeedie cutting off of the wicked, but the Lord hath preuented our thoughts and deſires long before, becauſe he hath concluded in himſelfe from the beginning what paines and torméts he will lay vpon them.

Some thinke this place ſhould anſwere to that in the Hebrues, Chriſt yeſterday, and to day, &c. Heb.13.8. But for mine owne part, I ſimply oppoſe yeſterday here to our thoughts, to the end we ſhould not take our ſelues wiſe enough to foreſee & preuent God: for none of his Counſels are conceiued raſhlie, but were eſtabliſhed and grounded in himſelfe from all eternitie. Now he ſpeakes as I haue alreadie ſaid of the torments to come, wherewith the wicked ſhall be plagued; beſides thoſe which are inflicted vpon them in this life. In which regard we may iuſtlie wonder how the Saduces ſhould be ſo beſotted and blockiſh as to reſtraine the rewards and due puniſhments of ſinnes to the afflictions of this life preſent, as if Gods Iudgements reached only to this life preſent. For thus, the phraſes of ſpeech which follow would not agree to bodilie and temporall puniſhments: and the name of Tophet taken by a figure, ſhould only extend it ſelfe to ſome extreame curſe of God.

Saduces.

Now he ſhewes that euen Kings themſelues (whom men commonlie thinke to be priuiledged in regard of their maieſtie and power) ſhall not be exempt from this puniſhment. Their Greatnes dazles the eies of the ſimple, but this ſhall be no ſhelter to keepe them from Gods iuſt reuenging hand in plaguing them according to that which they haue deſerued. He ſaith, they ſhall be caſt into a deepe place, to giue vs to vnderſtand that they ſhall be ſafe enough for euer erauling out thence. He alſo calles Hell large to teach vs, that whoſoeuer they be that conſult together in miſchiefe ſhall periſh, although their number be infinite: for the Lord will not wax wearie in puniſhing of thé, neither ſhal he be ſtreighted of ſufficient roomth to ſhut vp all his enemies in.

Deepe.

Large.

His heape is fire.] Vnder a figure he ſpeakes of the ruine of ſ wicked, becauſe we can not otherwiſe ſufficientlie comprehend the ſame: as on the other ſide, without ſome borrowed ſpeeches, we were not able to conceiue of that bleſſed Immortalitie which is reſerued for vs in heauen: by ſuch ſimilitudes theſe things muſt be applied to our ſenſes. Whence it appeares how fondlie and ridiculouſlie the Sophiſters deale, who goe about too ſubtillie to diſpute forſooth of the nature and qualitie of this fire, and buſie their braines very much to make it appeere what it ſhould be. But let vs reiect ſuch groſſe imaginations, ſeeing we know that the Prophet ſpeakes here figuratiuely, as hereafter we ſhall ſee that to this fire he ioynes the worme that neuer dyes, Chap.66.24.

Sophiſters ridiculous in diſputing about the qualitie of this fire.

THE XXXI. CHAPTER.

Verſ. 1. Woe vnto them that goe downe into Egypt for help, and ſtay vpon horſes, and truſt in charets becauſe they are many, and in horſemen becauſe they be very ſtrong: but they looke not vnto the holie one of Iſraell, nor ſeeke vnto the Lord.

HE now returnes to that which he handled in the beginning of the former Chapter: for he lifts vp his voice againe againſt ſ Iewes, who were accuſtomed whé they were in any danger to ſlee rather to Egipt for ſuccor then to the Lord. Wee haue declared before why this was ſo diſpleaſing a thing in Gods ſight. And to be ſhort, there are two reaſons wherefore the Prophet doth ſo ſharplie reprooue this ſinne. Firſt, becauſe it is vnpoſſible wee ſhould put our truſt in creatures and in God togither, touching the meanes of our ſafetie: for aſ ſoone as we once fixe our eies vpon them, it follows by good conſequence that we therewithall turne them away from God. Beſides, God had ſtraightlie forbidden them to make any contract or league with the Egyptians. Thus there was rebellion mixed with a diſloyall confidence, as if they meant wittinglie and willinglie to pronide for their owne welfare, by deſpiſing and forſaking of God. It behoues vs therefore to conſider from whence this ſinne ſprang if we would vnderſtand the Prophets meaning aright.

Two reaſons ſhewing why the Prophet is ſo ſeuere in reprooving this ſinne of the Iewes.

We can no ſooner relie vpon creatures, but we therewith turne away from the Creator.

Rebellion mixed with their diſloyall confidéce.

Here is a ſecond reaſon which is more particular (which we haue touched before) why the Lord would not haue the Iewes to be acquainted with the Egyptians, to wit, leaſt ſo vnlawfull leagues might in the end aboliſh the memorie of their deliuerance out of Egypt; as alſo leaſt they ſhould marre and corrupt themſelues with the ſuperſtitions and Idolatries of the Egyptians. But theſe reaſons could beare no ſway with them: Gods inhibiting of them could not hinder them from running downe to their confederates, prouiding a buckler thereof to runne againſt the hand of God. In which reſpect it is no maruell that our Prophet is ſo earneſt in rebuking of them for ſo monſtrous an outrage. Their very going downe into Egipt ſimplie conſidered in it ſelfe deſerued a ſharp reprehenſion, becauſe God had forbidde thé ſo to do, Deut.17.16.28. but the offence was much more intollerable through a falſe truſt they had in bereauing

God of that glorie which appertained vnto him, to giue it vnto mortall men.

Now that hee might the better shew how God was robbed of his right by this their fact, hee not onely accuseth them that they leaned and staied themselues vpon the Egyptians, but also hee reproacheth them on the other side, that they looked not to the holy one of Israel. Whence we may more euidently perceiue the cause wherefore Isaiah doth so sharply taxe this disloyaltie of the Iewes. For otherwise the Lord forbids vs not to vse lawfull meanes; as bread, & other sorts of meates, which he hath appointed to serue for our vse. And thus if a man being in danger, shal seeke those helpes which are not forbidden, but ordinary and lawfull, such a one deserues no reproofe, if so be hee therein derogates nothing from Gods power. But it is vtterly abominable and damnable, if we suffer our selues so to bee intangled in these outward helpes, as thereby vtterly to neglect seeking vnto God: and in distrusting his gracious promises, to desire to trust in vnlawfull meanes.

It is lafull for thee to vse those helpes and meanes which God hath ordained for thy reliefe and comfort: but beware of Asa his sin, recorded in 2. Chro. 16. 12.

The word to looke, signifies often in the Scriptures, This trust and confidence; because wee are wont to looke wishly towards them, from whom we looke for succor: Act. 3. 5. To be short, wee are here taught to put the trust of our saluation in none but in God alone: that so wholly resting our selues vpon his promises, we may goe with boldnesse, and aske whatsoeuer is to be desired. He permits vs lawfully to vse all things which he hath ordained for our good; yet so, that all the powers of our soules doe stay vpon him alone.

In calling him the holy one of Israel, hee sets forth the frowardnesse and vnthankfulnesse of this people, that being receiued into Gods faithfull protection, they cared not to contemne so gracious a protector and guardian of their saluation, but chose rather to runne after the lusts of their owne hearts. In adding forthwith the name of God; hee shewes that they could not bee kept in awe, neither by the power nor goodnesse of so louing a Father. Now since it pleaseth him at this day to allure vs by no lesse fauourable kindnesses to come vnto him, wee shall play the rebels egregiously, if we looke any other way, or if we refuse to rest in him onely. Looke whatsoeuer it is then that turnes the eyes of our mindes from looking directly vnto God, shall bee the same to vs as Egypt was to the Iewes.

In the last word of the verse.

Verse. 2. *But yet hee is wiseſt. Therefore hee will bring euill, and not turne backe his word: but hee will rise against the house of the wicked, and against the helpe of them that worke vanitie.

*Or, wise also.

WHere he calles God wise, hee adornes him not with a perpetuall epithite, but taxeth the craft and subtiltie of those whom hee saw to please themselues in their wisdome more then was meete. Hee told them a little before, that they digged deepe to couer their counsels, when by their close and secret practises they thought to flee; and yet to bleare the eyes of the Lord. Now in taunting wise hee derides their follie: as if hee should say; No doubt but you thought your selues to be iollie wise men in so doing: yea, but you haue to deale with a God that hath wisdome also to espie your plots well enough. Wherein hee priuily taxeth them for such as imagined that God could not charge them with any thing, or as if hee had bin one that was vtterly vnacquainted with their doings. In a word, it is as much as if hee should haue said; What will become of this goodly wisdome of yours in the end; will it bereaue God of his Spirit? Nay, contrariwise in reproouing you for your deceit and vanitie, he will shew by the effects, that hee catcheth the wise in their craftinesse. 1. Cor. 3. 19.

Chap. 29. 15

Iob. 5. 19. 1. Cor. 3. 19.

Hence wee may gather a doctrine that is well enough knowne; to wit, that whosoeuer they be that couer their doings by crafty and close practises, shall be so far off from benefiting themselues any thing at all thereby, that they shall so much the more inflame the iust displeasure of God against them. An euill conscience alwaies flees from the iudgement of God, and seekes out corners wherein to burie it selfe (if it were possible) out of his sight. The wicked deuise many waies to defend their sinnes, and to make their partie good against God; pleasing themselues in their wisdome and subtilties, albeit in so doing, they haue no cloke or maske to hide themselues vnder that is of any value. Others being blinded with their owne greatnesse, are bold to despise God and all his threatnings. And therefore when the prophet saith, that God is wise also, he toucheth the soare to the quicke, to the end they might nourish no such good conceit of their craftie deuices, as if they could thereby ouerreach the Lord.

Chap. 30. 1. An euill conscience alwaies flees Gods presence.

Now in regard they were vnworthy that Isaiah should stand ouer-long to pleade the case with them: therefore he tels them flatly, that God hath store of arguments ready to snare these politike heads withall. For first of all, they imagined that God tooke little or no heede how things went in the world, because they, forsooth, were left to sinke or swim (as they say) in the middest of so many dangers. And secondly, they esteemed his menaces to be nought else but so many scarcrowes. Taking it as a thing granted therefore, that it was lawfull for euery one to prouide for his owne safetie: from hence sprang this headines to run any way, and that boldnesse to bee still plotting new deuices. The Prophet shewes then that God will auenge the wrongs which were done vnto him, and that all things are in a readinesse for the execution thereof: moreouer, that his word could not bee violated or ouerthrowne by no deuices nor subtile practises of men.

He calles them workers of vanitie, because they indeuored to fortifie themselues against Gods vengeance, with a vaine and vnlawfull defence: that is to say, with the helpe of the Egyptians.

Egyptians. In the firſt clauſe of this verſe he ſeemed after a ſort to yeeld them the title of wiſe men, becauſe hee oppoſed thereunto the wiſdome of God: but now hauing diſperſed their miſts, hee diſcouers to the whole world their iuſt ſhame and reproch. Hence wee are taught, that it is ſafeſt for vs to renounce our owne reaſon, and to ſubiect it onely to the will of God. Why ſo? Becauſe there is no ſtabilitie nor ſtedfaſtneſſe at all in the plottings of vnbeleeuers: nay, they rather wittingly incenſe and prouoke Gods wrath to burne againſt them by theſe their wittie deuices.

Verſ. 3. Now the Egyptians are men, and not God; and their horſes fleſh, and not ſpirit: and when the Lord ſhall ſtretch forth his hand, the helper ſhall fall, and they ſhall altogether faile.

IT ſeemes that Iſaiah vtters nothing here but that which euery one knowes, neither would any man ſtand to call the truth thereof into queſtion. For who would be ſo mad as to affirme either that ỹ Egyptians were God, or to denie that they were men? This was out of controuerſie; and therefore euery one would willingly aſſent vnto it for the generall. But to come to particularities; there, they were ſo blockiſh, or ſtood in ſuch a mammering, that they called that truth into queſtion, of which before they were fully reſolued.

Thus they waxed proud, taking themſelues to be no more men; and that they might vtterly free themſelues from yeelding obedience vnto God. For this cauſe we are often admoniſhed in the holy Scriptures, not to truſt in man, becauſe nothing is more vain thē he: Pſa. 146.3. Curſed be he (ſaith Ieremiah) that truſts in man, and makes fleſh his arme: Ier. 17.5. Yet we ſee that all, none excepted, determine and conclude of matters in themſelues, as if they were able to bring their deſignes to paſſe an hundred yeeres after, which they haue plotted in their braine: yea, as if they could rule both heauen, earth, and ſeas, and could gouerne all things euen as they liſted. Seeing there is ſuch pride in all of vs, let vs not maruell that the Prophet proclaimes, that the Egyptians are not God, but men. For the Iewes attributed that vnto them, which appertained vnto God. What is that? Euen the protection and ſafegard of the Church; which he ſo reſerues to himſelfe, that he will haue none to meddle with this office. Iſaiah doth therefore tauntingly taxe the Iewes in this place with the contempt of God, and their falſe confidence wherewith they were puffed vp.

The pride of mans heart intollerable.

And thus we may ſee how great difference there is betweene God and men. Men can doe nothing of themſelues, but ſo far forth as God ſhall giue them power. Come we to ſpeake of the nature and excellencie of man, wee may well praiſe the great graces which he hath receiued of God; but oppoſe him once againſt his Creator, then muſt he be accounted leſſe then nothing. For is it poſſible to attribute any thing vnto man, but wee ſhall thereby take ſo much honour from God? This is the cauſe why wee can neuer conſent vnto the Papiſts, when we come to diſpute of the cauſe of our ſaluation, of free will, and of the dignitie of merits and workes: for in as much as men and God, are in theſe things oppoſed one againſt the other, it muſt needs be, that whatſoeuer is attributed to man, is taken from God. But they part ſtakes in ſuch wiſe, as they giue part to God, and part to men: we on the contrary affirme, that the ſole & whole cauſe of our ſaluation, ought to be attributed vnto God: as alſo, that it cannot bee giuen to anie other, but we ſhall therein commit moſt abominable ſacrilege. In a word, let vs know that in this oppoſition, nothing can bee left to man which is worthy of any praiſe.

Why there can be no pacifications betweene the Papiſts and vs.

The great difference that is betweene God and men.

By the word fleſh, he means imbecillity and weakneſſe: for what is in fleſh but onely corruption? He ſpeakes of horſes, but the ſame or the like weaknes agrees alſo to the Egyptiās. As if he ſhould ſay; They and all the forces they can make, are not worth a ruſh. For albeit the Egyptians had a ſoule as well as a body, yet becauſe they were earthly creatures, and dwelt in houſes of clay, they muſt downe. As if hee ſhould ſay; I am ſure you haue no ſpirituall nor celeſtiall power. To which purpoſe the Prophet ſaith, Pſal. 146.3. Truſt not in Princes, nor in any child of man: for his breath departeth, and then all his thoughts periſh.

Now albeit this word fleſh, properly belongs to horſes; yet it is no maruell if men be ſent to take a view of the rotteneſſe thereof, there to learne their owne tranſitorineſſe. But from the threatning that is added, to wit, that this wickedneſſe ſhall not goe ſcotfree; we may learne a generall doctrine. For the Lord will not indure to haue that giuen to the creature, which belongs to himſelfe: nor, that any ſhould repoſe that truſt in men, which ought to be reſerued for him alone. He threatens then as well thoſe which ſhould giue their ſuccour, and ſhould be the cauſe of this vaine confidence, as thoſe which ſhould be ſuccoured, & ſhould ſtay the hope of their ſafetie thereupon. Now if the Lord cannot abide this peruerſe truſt, as touching things belonging to our temporary ſaluation; how inſupportable are thoſe, thinke we, who to obtaine eternall ſaluation, forge diuers truſts, according to their owne fantaſie? For in ſo doing, they exalt the power of men, to ſet it vp in the place of God.

God threatēs both the ſuccourers and the ſuccoured.

If God cānot indure we ſhould leane vpon creatures for ſaluation in matters belonging to this life preſent, much leſſe can he indure vs ſo to doe in things appertaining to life eternall.

Verſ. 4. For thus the Lord hath ſaid vnto me; As the lion and the lions whelpe roare after their pray; againſt whom if a multitude of ſheepheards liſt vp their voice, they will not bee moued, nor will humble themſelues at their cry: ſo the Lord of hoſtes will come downe to fight for mount Zion, and for the ſide of it.

THe Prophet adds this verſe, to ſhew that the Lord is not minded to leaue his God neuer forbids vs to truſt in creatures, but he therewithall leaues ſufficient arguments for our faith to relie vpō himſelf.

Church deſtitute of neceſſarie helps. For if whilſt in forbidding vs to truſt in creatures he ſhould promiſe vs no ſupplie otherwaies, we might haue ſome cauſe to complaine, as if he offred vs matter of deſpaire rather then of comfort. For as we haue ſeene a little before, men are ouer-carefull, becauſe they thinke themſelues not halfe wiſe enough if they vtterlie abſteine from meanes forbidden, to content themſelues with God alone. Seeing hee promiſeth them Gods faithfull protection then, he takes away all excuſe: for what pretext can ſerue vs if we deſpiſe that ſaluation which he of his owne accord offers vnto vs? It is all one therefore as if he had ſaid, It is the Lord that aſſiſts, and will ſtill aſſiſt you; Goe not downe into Egypt then to ſeeke help there.

The firſt ſimile ſetting forth Gods power, which is readie preſt to preſerue his Church.

But he vſeth a very apt ſimilitude, wherein he ſhewes both the power, and louing affection which was preſt for their defence: for he cōpares himſelfe to a Lion which is ſtrong and greedie of his pray. Notwithſtanding he inſiſts vpon the ſecond part, to wit, that the Lord takes hold of vs with great courage, keepes and preſerues vs ſafe in his hands againſt all dangers. In the meane while the Prophet ſets forth his power and might, againſt which no forces nor multitudes of men can reſiſt. Moreouer, ſimilitudes hang not together in all points touching the matter in hand, neither is there any neceſſitie of it: but they muſt be applied ſo farre-forth as the preſent occaſion will permit. When we ſee then that the Lord loues vs ſo dearely, and hath ſo tender a care ouer vs, are we not more then mad if we deſpiſe him to ſeeke other helps, which will be ſo farre off from doing vs good, that they ſhall turne to our great hurt? It is not without cauſe that he addes the ſide of Zion, becauſe the Temple in which God would be called vpon was ſituated there. Looke where Gods pure ſeruice is then, there we may be bold to expect aſſured ſafetie, for he can not be called vpon in vaine. Let vs therefore be his people, and he will not faile to ſhew himſelfe our God.

Verſ. 5. The Lord of hoſts will defend Ieruſalem as the birds that flie: he will deliuer it in defending it, and in paſſing further he will ſaue it.

The ſecond ſimile ſetting forth Gods tender affectiō towards his Church.

THis is another ſimilitude, in which the Prophet ſhews the ſingular care the Lord hath ouer vs, and how diligent and watchfull he is to keepe vs. It is taken from birds, who are exceeding carefull in preſeruing their yong ones: for they will ſtarue themſelues almoſt, and wil feare no danger at all, to yeeld ſuccor and defence vnto them. Moſes vſeth the like ſimilitude, Deut. 32. 11. where he reprocheth the Iewes for their ingratitude: he compares the Lord to an Eagle which trims vp her neſt, ſtretcheth out her wings, flutters ouer her young, and beares them vpon her wings. Chriſt alſo takes vp this complaint ouer Ieruſalem, Oh Ieruſalem, Ieruſalem, how oftē would I haue gathered thee together as a hen gathers her chickens vnder her wings, but you would not! Mat. 23. 37. The ſumme of this place is, That the Lord will be ſtrong enough to conſerue his people, which he loues right dearely, and tenderly cares for them. For Iſaiah promiſeth that God will alwaies performe that for his people, which Moſes ſaith he did for them for a time, becauſe he will neuer forſake thoſe whom he hath once receiued into his loue. To the end therefore the Iewes might not thinke that Gods care only appertained to thoſe of that time, he expreſſie ſaith that God will ſpread his wings ouer Ieruſalem to defend it. Verſe 4. Verſe 5.

Verſ. 6. O yee children of Iſrael returne you, for you are ſunck deepe in reuolting.

THis verſe is diuerſlie expounded, for the Hebrues expound it thus, Returne vnto the Lord, for you haue multiplied reuolts. But as I thinke it ſhould ſimplie be read thus, Returne yet, in as much as you are ſunke deepe in reuolting. His meaning is, that the greatnes of their diſloyaltie ſhould nothing hinder them frō hauing acceſſe vnto God, if they brought repentant hearts with them, and that hee would forgiue them, notwithſtanding they were ſunck very deepe in rebellion; and yet he therewithall galles them to the quick with this ſpurre, to prick them forward to a true ſorrow, and hatred of their ſinnes, to the end they ſhould not bring a fained or halfe repentance as men for the moſt part doe. He ſtirres them vp then diligentlie to conſider how violentlie they haue plunged themſelues into perdition, that they might mourne according to the meaſure of their offences. 1

In the firſt place note that the Prophet extenuates not the fault of this people: for it is requiſit that ſuch as are to be drawne to the Lord ſhould be touched home with the liuely feeling of their ſinnes: for thoſe that flatter themſelues in their vices are farre off from hope of pardon, therefore we can not take a better courſe then to diſcouer at large the foulenes of our ſores, when the medicine is to be applied vnto them.

Such as flatter themſelues in their vices, are farre off from any hope of pardon.

And yet leſt mens hearts ſhould quaile within them, they muſt be cheered and comforted by ſetting the promiſes of life and ſaluation before them: for Satan aimes at nothing more, then to ſteale from vs all hope of pardon. Therefore Iſaiah tels vs that God is readie to forgiue, albeit by their reuolt they had plunged themſelues into the gulfe of hell: and therewithall wee may ſee that the Lord at no time allures vs to repentance in vaine, but forthwith offers vs free remiſſion of all our tranſgreſſions, which is the cauſe why the ſcriptures alwaies ioines promiſes of grace to ſuch exhortations as theſe, to the end that when we are called to repentance, we might know that forgiuenes is alſo at hand.

The oyle of the Goſpell muſt bee mingled with the biting wine of the Law, leſt Satan ſhould make vs his prey.

God neuer allures vs to repentance in vaine, but forthwith offers vs pardon.

The Scriptures alwaies coupleth exhortations to repētance, and hope of pardon together.

Where wee haue tranſlated you are fallen deepe, ſome expound the word Amag, which ſignifies, To be deepe, To multiplie; as if it were a ſimilitude taken from heapes, and ſo it ſhould be read in this ſenſe, As you haue heaped vp ſinnes, ſo now returne. But the firſt expoſition ſeemes to agree beſt. The word

Sarah

Serah, ſignifies reuolt: others take it here for frowardnes; but the other ſignificatiō agrees beſt. And therfore ỹ Prophet ſummons thē to return to ỹ Lord. He cals them children of Iſrael, not to honour them; but in reproach of their ingratitude. For they were rebellious children, which had turned away from that fidelitie and obedience which their fathers yeelded: this title therefore containes in it a diſgracefull quipping of them. In the meane while, our Prophet meanes, that the Lord forgat not the couenant which he made with their fathers, although by their diſloialtie they were far degenerate. For he teſtifies, that hee acknowledgeth them for the children of Iſrael, and will make them partakers of that which hee promiſed to Abraham and the reſt of the fathers, if they wil conuert vnto him with their whole hearts.

Verſ. 7. For in that day euery one ſhall caſt away his images of ſiluer, and his idols of gold, the ſin which your hands haue made.

In the former verſe they were exhorted to repentance, in this verſe the Prophet manifeſts the fruits of their repentance. Repentance is inward in the heart: it muſt therefore diſcouer it ſelfe by outward actions, euen as the goodneſſe of a tree is knowne by the fruits.

HE continues on his ſpeech begun in the former verſe: yet there is this difference, that in the former hee exhorted them to repentance; but in this, hee ſhewes the fruit of it: which manner of teaching is vſuall in the Scriptures. For repentance being a thing wrought in the heart, wherein it hath his ſeate, it muſt ſhew and manifeſt it ſelfe afterwards by the effects and workes, euen as the goodneſſe of a tree within is knowne by the fruits; repentance is ſet here forth by the effects.

Where he ſpeakes onely of idols, it is according to the cuſtome of the Scripture, which often takes a part for the whole. For there is no queſtion but the Prophet meanes the whole conuerſion of men: but becauſe it had bin too long for him to haue numbred vp all the parts of it, he briefly comprehends them vnder this one kind. Now the beginning of repentance is the change of the heart: in the ſecond place we muſt come to the outward fruits; that is to ſay, to the works.

But aboue all, we muſt note the cauſe why he preached repentance; to wit, in regard the Lord had promiſed them a ſpeedie deliuerance: now to the end he might be capable of it, he exhorts them to conuert. Here alſo obſerue, that we reſiſt God by our wickednes-ſes, when we goe on ſtill therein: and thus we hinder the courſe of Gods grace from deſcending downe vpon vs, ſo as hee cannot helpe vs. That his helpe may haue place in our miſeries therefore, he requires that we turne vnto him.

The neatway to procure Gods aid in our miſeries, is to turne vnto him from our ſinnes and iniquities.

He mentions idols of ſiluer, as we haue ſhewed before, becauſe thoſe that repent in good earneſt, are touched effectually with the ſenſe of their ſins. So as they cannot behold the traces of their ſuperſtitions in which God was diſhonoured, without great horror. They therefore abhor ſuch things, and are glad to ſuffer the loſſe of their gold and ſiluer, to teſtifie their vnfained faith & repentance. For whoſoeuer hath truely renounced all his ſuperſtitions, will ſpare nothing to make profeſſion of Gods pure worſhip. And this is the Prophets drift when he mentions gold & ſiluer, rather then wood and ſtones. Now the loſſe of any thing whatſoeuer, be it neuer ſo pretious, is infinit gaine when we are ſeparated and cleanſed from ſuch curſed pollutions.

See chap. 30. verſ. 22.

Why the Prophet mētions gold and ſiluer, rather then wood or ſtones.

As for thoſe who ſtill retaine them, they ſhew themſelues to be intangled with ſuperſtitions, howſoeuer they ſeeme to profeſſe Chriſtianity: and thereby may we know, that their hearts doe as yet remaine vnreformed. Away therefore with the excuſes of hypocrits, who will not wholly renounce idolatry; to wit, what would you haue me doe? How ſhould I liue? Indeede I know that this gold, theſe reuenues are abominable before God, becauſe they proceede from idolatry: but alas! we muſt liue ſome way or other. Away, I ſay, with ſuch childiſh excuſes: for where repentance is wrought effectually in the heart, there forthwith all things that cannot be kept without diſhonouring of God, muſt be caſt away.

Their ſound conuerſion to be ſuſpected, that retaine their ſuperſtitions for lucres ſake.

Which your hands haue made.] The Prophet preſſeth them, that they might the rather acknowledge their ſinne. For when men are accuſed, they would willingly caſt the fault vpon ſome other, and are very loth to confeſſe their guiltineſſe: as for example, the common ſort are ready to accuſe the Prieſts, but few will lay the blame of their ſinnes vpon themſelues. Therefore the Prophet calles them the workes of their hands, that they might know that themſelues were the authors of ſuch abominations. And yet therewithall he lets them ſee how their infidelitie hath cunningly ſeduced them, whileſt they were the forgers of their owne goddes. Hence we may gather, that God reiects all our inuentions; neither can he accept in good part, that ſeruice whereof our ſelues are the authors. I take the word ſinne, appellatiuely: as if hee ſhould ſay; When you behold your idols, then looke vpon your ſin, acknowledge the ſignes of your diſloyaltie, and reuolt. If you bee indeed conuerted vnto God, then ſhew it by the effects, in reiecting your idols, and in renouncing your ſuperſtitions: for this ſhall bee the true triall of your ſound conuerſion.

Men are loth to confeſſe their guiltineſſe.

God reiects our inuentions in his ſeruice.

Verſ. 8. Then Aſſur ſhall fall by the ſword, not of man: and the ſword ſhall deuoure, not that of man: hee ſhall flee from the preſence of the ſword; and his young men ſhall melt, or conſume away.

THe letter Vau, may better be tranſlated into an aduerbe of time; Then Aſſur ſhall fall: that is to ſay, when you ſhall be conuerted vnto the Lord, and that your good conuerſation manifeſts your ſouud conuerſion; then the enemy ſhall fall. For looke how the Aſſyrian was raiſed vp of the Lord, to puniſh niſh the Iewes for their wickedneſſes, and chiefly for their Idolatrie; ſo God alſo promiſeth that this enemie ſhall be cut off when they ſhall ceaſe to ſinne and to ſerue Idols. Thus wee ſee that our obſtinacie is the cauſe why the Lord addes plague vnto plague, and doubles his blowes in purſuing vs more and more. For we ſtill giue him new occaſions of enflaming his wrath againſt vs. If we deſire that God ſhould ſtrike vs more ſoftlie, and that our enemies might at once be deſtroyed and neuer trouble vs more; let vs ſtudie by newnes of life to enter into his fauor againe, for he will by and by lay downe his rods, and take away the force and power of our enemies that they ſhall not hurt vs.

Reforme thy euil maners, and God wil redreſſe thy miſeries.

When it is ſaid that it ſhall not be by the ſword of man: the Prophet thereby meanes that the deliuerance of the Church is the peculiar worke of God: giuing the Iewes to vnderſtand, that albeit there appeered no help in earth, yet Gods ſecret power ſhould be ſufficient to redeeme them. Are our enemies confounded then; is their force repreſſed? Let vs know that this proceeds from the hand of God. Indeed he repelleth the force and furie of the wicked diuers waies; but it is his onely hand notwithſtanding whereby the Church is ſaued. For he ſo works by humane helps, that yet he keepes his choſen after a wonderfull and extraordinarie maner, as may be ſeene euen ſince the beginning of the world: and it is no leſſe eaſie to perceiue it now, if we were not hoodwinked. And yet this lets not, but the Lord may imploy ſome of his ſeruants in the deliuerance of his Church, but ſo, that ſtill his owne hand eſpeciallie ſhines in ſuch a worke.

The redemption of the Church, a peculiar worke of God.

Note.

God vſeth men as inſtruments in ſauing his Church, yet ſo, that his owne power only ſhines in this work. Chap.37.36. 37.

We know this propheſie of Iſaiah was fulfilled when the hoſt of the Aſſyrians was diſcomfited, and when Sennacherib fled. For men commonlie ſee not Gods hand therein, but the Lord manifeſts his power to the end we might know that he is the deliuerer of his Church. And when he freed Ieruſalem from the ſiege which was after laid before it, he did therein as in a glaſſe preſent alſo vnto the Iewes an image of their ſpiritual deliuerance. It is he alone then which will deſtroy our ſpirituall enemies. In vaine therefore ſhall we ſeeke other helps and remedies, and in vaine ſhall we reſt vpon our owne ſtrength which is nothing: for we ſhall neuer ouercome nor be Conquerors but by the leading and help of our God.

Our help ſtands only in the name of the Lord that made heauen and earth.

His yong men.] His meaning is, that the Lord will ſo manifeſt his might againſt the Aſſyrians, that the hearts of young men which are wont to be couragious ſhall quaile and melt as waxe. For in as much as yong men haue leſſe experience then thoſe that are old, they are more raſh and headie. But the Lord will eaſilie coole their heate when the houre is come in which he will deliuer his ſeruants. This is the cauſe why Iſaiah made ſpeciall mention of yong men, as if he had ſaid, the flower, or ſtrength.

See to this purpoſe Chap.40.30

Verſ. 9. He ſhall flee for feare into his fortreſſe, and his Princes ſhall be feared with the banner, ſaith the Lord who hath a fire in Zion, and a furnace in Ieruſalem.

NOw he ſpeakes of Sennacherib, who being ſwallowed vp with feare, ſhould ſhamefullie flee into his fortreſſe in Nineue, as into his neſt. He addes, that his Princes who ſhould incourage the reſt of the ſouldiours, ſhall be ſo ſurprized with aſtoniſhment, that they ſhall neither dare to take vp their weapons, nor to ioine iſſue, as they ſay, but ſhall flee the Standard. To conclude, he ſhewes that he is Gods Herald to proclaime this Edict, that the Iewes might in no wiſe doubt nor diſpute of the euent as they were wont: as alſo that they might not afterward forget ſo great a benefit; neither attribute it vnto fortune.

In the end of the verſe, if we reade as ſome tranſlate, Whoſe fire is in Zion, the ſenſe will be, that God hath a power of fire to deuoure his enemies. Notwithſtanding I thinke the relatiue Aſher is ſuperfluous: or ought to be tranſlated in the nominatiue Qui, becauſe God is properlie called fire, in reſpect of the Aſſyrian whom he will conſume. Now becauſe he ſpeakes of fire, ſome referre it to the Sacrifices: but this interpretation is farre fetched, neither hath it any good ground. For mine owne part I doubt not but his meaning is to ſay, That the Lord hath a fire to conſume the Aſſyrian, or that God himſelfe is as a fire, ſo as he cloſely compares the Aſſyrian to ſtraw, or ſtubble.

He alſo ſaith, that this fire is kindled and maintained in Zion, and in Ieruſalem, that is to ſay, in the middes of his people, to ſhew that the wicked ſhall not eſcape vnpuniſhed, for perſecuting the Church of God. For they ſhall one day feele him their Iudge, who ſtands in the middes of his Church, which for the moſt part is thought to be deſtitute of all help. The ſumme is, that Gods vengeance is prepared for the wicked which haue not ceaſed to moleſt his people, and that ỹ Lord will not reuenge for his owne ſake only, but for his elects ſake alſo. Let vs reioyce in this conſolation, and howſoeuer we ſeeme deſtitute of ſuccor and expoſed to all dangers, yet let vs euermore aſſure our ſelues that our God will be as a conſuming fire againſt our aduerſaries.

God will euermore be a conſuming fire, to conſume the aduerſaries of his Church.

THE

THE XXXII. CHAPTER.

Verſ. 1, Behold a King ſhall reigne in righteouſneſſe, and the Princes ſhall gouerne in iudgement.

The Churches glory begins at the eſtabliſhing of a well ordered ciuill policie.

HIs meaning is to ſay, that God will yet bee good vnto his church; ſo as he will reſtore it vnto the former eſtate. Now the beſt way to bring it thereunto, is when ciuill policie is rightly adminiſtred, and all things ordered according to iuſtice and equitie. No doubt this propheçie belongs to Hezechias, and to his reigne; vnder whom the Church was reformed and brought againe into her firſt glory: for before ſhe was miſerably ſcattered. That wicked and curſed hypocrit Abaz, had corrupted all after his own fantaſie, and had ouerthrowne both the ciuill and eccleſiaſticall policie. The Prophet therefore promiſeth another King, to wit, Hezechias, who by his iuſtice and equitie, ſhould ſet thoſe things in order, which before were confuſed. In a word, he here ſets forth the happie ſtate of the Church, as in a glaſſe: which ſeeing it cannot bee erected without Chriſt, it is therefore certaine that the things here ſpoken of, ought to be referred to him; of whom Hezechias was but a figure, both touching his office and Kingdome.

This propheçie extends it ſelfe firſt to Hezechias: Next, vnto Chriſt, of whom Hezechias was a figure.

He mentions iuſtice and iudgement, according to the vſuall phraſe of the Scripture, which by theſe two words vnderſtands a well ordered gouernment: for iuſtice ſignifies equitie and moderation: and vnder the word iudgement, is comprehended that part of equitie by which the good are maintained and preſerued from the violence of the wicked. It is very certaine that the office of a good Prince, ſtretcheth it ſelfe further then iuſtice and iudgement; for he ought principally to vphold the honour of God, and the purity of religion: but the Scripture is wont to expreſſe the whole obſeruation of the Law, vnder the duties of the ſecond table. For if we abſtaine from violence, if (as much as in vs lies) we labour to releeue the poore and oppreſſed, if we hold the band of peace one with another, wee therein giue good teſtimonie that the feare of God is in our hearts, from which ſuch fruits of faith doe ſpring forth. Vnder a part then the Prophet hath comprehended the whole.

A good Prince muſt carefully prouide for the flouriſhing eſtate both of Church and Commonwealth.

To abſtaine from offring violence, to releeue the poore, to be atpeace with our neighbours, good ſignes of the feare of God.

It is needfull for a good Prince to haue good counſellers about him. Nerua.

But it is not without cauſe that hee mentions Princes. Why ſo? It is not enough that he himſelfe bee a good King, vnleſſe hee alſo haue good gouernours & counſellers about his perſon. For it often falles out, that the people behaue themſelues leaudly vnder good Kings; as we reade of Nerua, vnder whoſe raigne, euery one might doe as he liſted: ſo as the condition of many was much worſe at that time, then in the daies of Nero; for the careleſneſſe of one onely, gaue occaſion to many to become wicked. Kings therefore ought to be furniſhed with good gouernors, which may be as eyes, eares, and hands to his body, in helping him to order things aright. If this bee wanting, a good King ſhall neuer be able ſo to aduance religion and iuſtice; but his officers will bee readie more or leſſe to foreſlow the courſe of good proceedings. And if there be not among the higheſt, ſuch a harmonie and agreement touching theſe things, as is in a well tuned inſtrument of muſicke, the Church & Commonwealth ſhall ſeldome proſper. The counſell therefore which Ietbro gaue Moſes his ſonne in law, is to bee hearkened vnto of euery good King; let him chuſe for his officers ſuch as bee men of courage, fearing God, and hating couetouſneſſe; yea, let him appoint ſuch for his Captaines ouer tens, fifties, and hundreds.

Nero.

Good gouernours, eies, eares, and hands to Kings.

Simile.

Exod. 18.

But now adaies, bawdes, ruffians, flatterers, and ieſters, are forſooth aduanced by Kings, to whom are aſſigned the chiefeſt dignities and places, as iuſt rewards of their flatteries and bawderies. Are we to wonder then when wee ſee commonwealths euery where almoſt fall to ruin, and come to nought, and all true adminiſtration of iuſtice and iudgement abandoned and reiected? No verily. For it is the iuſt puniſhment of our ſinnes; yea, and wee our ſelues deſerue to haue ſuch gouernours, becauſe wee will not ſuffer God to haue the gouernment of vs. How is it poſſible they ſhould inioy this ſo ſingular a benefit, which are knowne rebels, prophane or malicious hypocrits, who caſt the Lord and his heſts behind their backes, and will not indure the ſweet yoke of Chriſt, which would bring with it this happy and floriſhing eſtate of the Church here promiſed?

Our ſinnes the cauſe of all diſorders, both in ciuill and eccleſiaſticall gouernment.

Verſ. 2. And he ſhall be as an hiding place from the wind, and as a ſhadow from the tempeſt, as the riuers of waters in a dry place, the ſhadow of a great rocke in the deſert land.

IN this verſe hee lets vs ſee how exceeding needfull it is to haue a well ordered Commonwealth, when hee calles this King an hiding place for the wind; and the ſhadow from the tempeſt. For the world is neuer in ſuch good caſe, as when euery one willingly abſtaines from that which is euill, and when all quietly ſeeke the benefit of one another, without conſtraint. For as much then as many take libertie to offer violence to their neighbours, by reaſon of their intemperancie and vnruly paſſions, men ſhall be in continuall ſtrife and debate, if there bee not remedies at hand by law, and iudgement ſeates to ſtill and pacifie them: but becauſe many by their lordly au-thoritie are readie rather to raise vp troubles then to allay them: it is not without cause that this good King is heere adorned with such titles.

And if this were rightlie spoken touching the person of Hezekias, how much more doth it fitlie appertaine to Christ, in whom wee haue our sure and only refuge in these tempests? amiddes which wee must be tossed as long as our conflicting dayes shall last in this world. Are we then parched with heate? Let vs learne to shroude vs vnder his shadow. Are we euer and anon tossed with waues, so as it seemes we shall be swallowed vp of them? Let vs runne to him as to our most safe and sure hauen. He will easily still and quiet all tempests. He will set all things in order which before were confused and out of frame.

Christ especiallie is this hiding place.

Christ our shadow and most sure hauen of safetie in the midst of sirie trials, and flouds of aduersities.

Vers. 3. Then the eyes of the seeing shall not be shut, and the eares of them that heare shall hearken.

4. And the heart of the * foolish shall vnderstand knowledge, and the tongue of the stutterers shall be vnlosed to speake distinctlie.

* Or rash, or giddie headed.

HEnce wee may yet better perceiue that the Prophet so sets forth the gouernmẽt and reigne of Hezekias, that his meaning therewithall is to leade vs higher. For he intreates here of the restauration of ỹ Church, whereof there was some resemblance vnder Hezekias, but the full accomplishment of it was vnder Iesus Christ. We know the Church neuer prospers well if it want iust and wise gouernours. But which way can this be attained vnlesse Christ reigne? It followes therefore that himselfe and his kingdome are here recommended vnto vs. Now this promise is opposed to that fearefull iudgement of blinding, mentioned in Chap. 29. 10. 11. Heere on the contrarie he promiseth that true light: so as those which were blinded before, shall now see clearely: the deafe shall begin to heare, the foolish shall vnderstand knowledge, and the stutterers shall speake distinctlie.

He calles them seers & hearers, which ought to haue taken heed to the word of the Lord when it was published vnto them: but they chose rather to remaine wilfullie blinde and deafe, and estranged both their minds and thoughts from wholesome doctrine. Now the Lord promiseth them that hee will restore eyes, eares, tongue, and vnderstanding vnto them. Sure it is that whatsoeuer is heere promised proceeds from the free grace of God: for the question is not now simplie what men shal do of themselues, but of that which God shall worke in them. These then are the speciall gifts of God: as on the contrarie, when he shuts the eyes, takes away vnderstanding, and the right vse of speech, and suffers ignorance and barbarousnes to reigne; these are to be accounted horrible iudgements, whereby God auengeth himselfe vpon the vnthankfulnes of men, and also of their contempt of his word.

The Prophet then promiseth that God taking pitie of his Church, will at the last restore that vnto her which before he had iustlie withheld, and that for the loue which he beares vnto Christ, from whom we must receiue a tongue to speake, eyes to see, eares to heare, and an heart to vnderstand, for till then, we are more then blockish, and smitten as it were with a fearefull sottishnes. Let vs know then that out of Christ there is no spirituall life in the world. Why so? Because euery mothers sonne of vs is blind, deafe, dumb, and foolish, vntill we be gathered into that bodie whereof he is the head: whence it followes, that all these benefits faile when his kingdome is defaced.

It is Christ only that giues vs eies, eares, a tongue, and an vnderstãding heart. No spirituall life in the world out of Christ.

We are also to note that the chiefest benefits which aboue all others we are especiallie to desire are here recommended vnto vs: for riches and the like, in the inioying whereof men vsuallie place their happines, ought to be esteemed as nothing in comparison of these things. Shall we not be more then miserable in the middes of all abundance, if the Lord denie vs these spiritual blessings whereof the Prophet speakes in this place? Take away these, and we may be sure Christ is gone; neither can wee haue any part in him. For from him doe these heauenlie graces flow, as S. Paul teacheth vs, Ephes. 1. 3. Seeing therefore we now enioy these benefits whereof we haue been so long depriued, let vs blush for shame that with our tongues we haue not rendred vnto Christ that glorie which is due vnto him; also that we haue neglected to applie the vnderstanding which he hath giuen vs to the aduancement of his kingdome, and to the furtherance of his seruice: for by neglecting these things, we haue manifested to all the world that his kingdome hath no place in vs. To conclude, for as much as fooles are wont to be rash and headie, therefore the Hebrues take hastines for follie: for wise men are commonlie warie and slow in that they take in hand.

No riches comparable with these benefits, which the Prophet here recommends vnto vs.

Vers. 5. A niggard shall no more be called liberall, nor the churle rich.

THe Prophets meaning is, that all things shall be brought into their order, that men should not esteeme vices vertues, as they did in times past. For where gouernment is confused, the couetous reigne as Lords; because men vsuallie iudge of vertue by power and riches. Let a poore man be neuer so honest, religious, yea, and liberall, according to his abilitie, yet he is generallie despised of all. In an ill gouerned Common-wealth therfore all things are out of frame, but the contrarie easily discouers all such iuglings. For let vertue once be in request, vice will forthwith be brought to light. The godly also haue greater libertie to represse the pride of such as before trode all iustice and equitie vnder foote.

Besides, in regard the Prophet speakes here touching the state and reformation of the Church, the gouernment whereof is spirituall, we must yet raise vp our minds a little higher, higher, that wee may refer all this vnto Ieſus Chriſt, whoſe peculiar propertie it is to diſcouer the vices that are hid, and to take away the vailes & impediments which change the outward face of them: by reaſon whereof, they are for the moſt part praiſed no leſſe then if they were vertues indeed. This hee doth by the Goſpell. How ſo? Through the preaching thereof, he laies thoſe wickednesſes open, which before were cloſe and ſecret, and makes them appeare in their owne likeneſſe: ſo as none ſhall be beguiled by outward appearances, vnleſſe he will wittingly cloſe vp his eyes. Will yee ſee the reaſon then why the Goſpell is ſo generally hated of the world? No man would willingly haue his ſecret filthie thoughts and vile actions made manifeſt.

The Philoſophers diſpute very well in manie places touching couetouſneſſe and liberalitie, and in ſome ſort diſcouer the differences betweene them: but they gage not the conſciences to the bottome, neither doe they truly diſtinguiſh betweene the one and the other. This cannot bee done but by Chriſts light, when hee ſhines by his Goſpell, diſcouering the inmoſt ſecrets of our hearts, bringing vs to a ſpirituall and willing obedience. We are here therefore called to the iudgement ſeate of Chriſt, who onely vnmaskes hypocriſie, cauſing vs to ſee whether we be truly liberall or niggardly.

Verſ. 6. But the niggard will ſpeake of niggardneſſe, and his heart will worke iniquitie, and doe wickedly, and ſpeake falſly againſt the Lord, to make empty the hungry ſoule, and to cauſe the drinke of the thirſtie to faile.

WE may alſo tranſlate, The wicked will ſpeake wickedly: for the word Nebalah, ſignifies all manner of villanie or wickednes, which we commonly call, a man of no worth. We may alſo tranſlate, The foole will ſpeake wickedly: and thus there ſhould be ſome alluſion in the words Nabal and Nebalah; but the ſenſe would be diuers. Notwithſtanding, becauſe he vſed the verie ſame word in the former verſe, when he ſpake of lawleſſe perſons & niggards; I do the rather follow this interpretation. I take the word Aoen, for impietie; for he ſpeakes of a continued liberty to doe euill, as the ſequell ſufficiently ſhewes. Why ſo? Becauſe hee directs his ſpeech to ſuch as plunge themſelues into all manner of leaud behauiour; being without touch of breaſt, and as it were paſt feeling. They ieſt out all admonitions, and ſcorne both God and his meſſengers. But Chriſt drawes euen ſuch forth into the light, and laies that open to the view of their conſciences, which before lurked in ſecret: for to him it belongs to diuide (with his two edged ſword of the Goſpell) euen betweene the marrow and the bones, that euery thought may lie naked and bare before his iudgement ſeat.

Heb. 4.

Our Prophet then continues on the ſame matter which he began to handle in the former verſes. Others expound it otherwiſe, (yet not ſo properly as I thinke) for they take it to be a prouerbiall ſpeech, and expound it in the preſent tence; The villaine ſpeakes of villanie. But if I be not deceiued, the Prophet points out vnto vs an higher matter; to wit, that Chriſt who is the Iudge of the world, will aſcend into his iudgement ſeat to manifeſt what is in the heart of euery one. For as long as he forbeares to execute the office of a Iudge, all things run out of courſe: wicked men are applauded becauſe they carry a faire ſhew of vertue; and the godly are counted as the of-skowring of the world. But Chriſt will bring euery mans doings to the touchſtone that ſow wickedneſſe, which before caried ſome colour of vertue, might be diſcouered. For which cauſe it is ſaid, hee hath his fan in his hand to ſeparate the good corne from the chaffe. This fan is the Goſpell, whereby God as a iuſt Iudge, puts the wicked as it were vpon a racke, and maugre their teeth, makes them to vtter their inmoſt thoughts. Wee haue good proofe of this againe and againe, whileſt wee diſcouer that groſſe idolatry which was ſo masked vnder the papacie, that men tooke it for Gods true worſhip. Oh how wonderfully were the poore people wrapped in ſuperſtitions! Who would euer haue thought that there had lien ſuch horrible monſters (in thoſe times of darkneſſe) within the hearts of men: ſuch as they are now manifeſted to be. For the contempt of God ſo ouerflowed, that ſome ſhewed themſelues beaſts rather then men. But what doe the Papiſts? They cry out as if we by our doctrine had let looſe the bridle to men, and had ſet open the doore to epicuriſme; ſo as it ſhould be lawfull for any amongſt vs (without bluſhing) to doe what he liſt. But let them heare our Prophets anſwer; who telles them, that the truth of God being once brought to light, vile perſons will behaue themſelues vilely, and the wicked will then ſpeake wickedly: otherwiſe, how ſhould Chriſt be a ſpirituall Iudge, if he did not manifeſt the ſecrets of the hearts, and diſcouer the things that were moſt deeply hidden?

Mat. 3.

The Goſpell hath brought popiſh iugglings to light.

Popiſh ſlanderers.

But beſides the ſcoffes which the reprobates caſt forth againſt God, hee taxeth alſo their crueltie, namely, They make emptie the hungry ſoule. Wherein the Prophet orderly recites the ſinnes that are againſt the ſecond table. The wicked begin at the contempt of God: afterwards, they fall into their ſinnes; to wit, they ſpare not to exerciſe crueltie againſt their poore neighbours. What rigor can be greater then to depriue the hungry ſoule of his bread, and the thirſtie ſoule of his drinke? For the very inſtinct of nature muſt needes cauſe our bowels in cõpaſſion to yearne within vs. But when men are growne ſo yron hearted, and haue ſo far degenerated, that they are without ſenſe or feeling of their brethrens wants, doe they not ſhew themſelues worſe then ſauage or wild beaſts, who wil pitie their like?

*Verſ. 7. For the weapons of the churle

churle are wicked: hee deuiseth wicked counsels to vndoe the poore with lying words, and to speake against the poore in iudgement.

WEe must alwaies retaine the future tence, because he disputes not so much what couetous men are, as what they will be, when Christ by the light of his Gospell shall discouer their hypocrisie, lest they should deceiue any. For hee speakes of that heauenlie light which should breake forth to cause secret wickednesses appeare; as wee haue said. Christ then manifests the venome that is hid in the couetous, and shewes with what vnlawfull weapons they fence themselues. If any will interpret the word Kelai, Measures; I hinder him not: but the word weapons agrees best, and hath a larger sense; for vnder it are comprehended all sorts of instruments. He means then by a metaphor to set forth the cunning practises and subtile iuglings, wherewith the couetous beguile the simple, and snare them in their ginnes.

In the next place he shewes the reason of it; to wit, they are alwaies hammering of wicked plots in their heads. Surely hee here describes the maner of the wicked, who busie their braines about nothing else but how they may fill their purses; be it by right or wrong, it is no matter. Such people doth our Lord Iesus Christ here vnmaske, and lets all the world see their priuie packing. Our Prophet amplifies the indignitie of their fact yet further, by other circumstances. For is it not a more grieuous sinne to circumuent the innocent who are vnable to shift for themselues, then such as haue reaching heads? Againe, if with sweete baits, they deceiue vnder pretext of friendship? In the third place, if they do this to the poore, who had more neede to be deliuered? Lastly, if snares be spread euen in the open iudgement seates? No doubt the sinne is greater to spoile the poore vnder colour of iustice, then to set vpon them in the high way. For iudgement seates ought to bee like Cities of refuge for the distressed to flee vnto. What shall we say then, if such places bee made dennes of theeues? On the high way a man may happily shunne a theefe, and may wind himselfe out of his nets: but which way shall a man escape out of the snares which are laid in places of iustice? The circumstances of this text therefore ought diligently to be obserued.

It is a greater sinne to rob the poore vnder colour of iustice, then to set vpon them by the high waies side. Iudgement seates ought to be as cities of refuge for the distressed to flee vnto.

Vers. 8. But the liberall man will deuise of liberall things, and he will continue his liberalitie.

WEe haue told you before that these sentences haue a more spiritual sense then our bare reason can attaine vnto: for the Prophet speakes not so much of Commonwealth matters, as of the reformation of the Church. These things therefore appertaine to the regenerate, ouer whom Christ raignes by the scepter of his word. For howsoeuer many bee called outwardly by the voice of the Gospell; yet few are brought by it to yeeld sound obedience vnto God, or to beare that sweete yoke. Those few doth the Lord make benefactors and truely liberall, in such wise, as they seeke not so much their owne things, as how to benefit the poore; and that not once or twice, and so away, but continue the same from day to day, so as their heate doth rather increase then decrease.

Many called by the external voice of the Gospell, but few are brought thereby to yeeld sound obedience thereunto.

This place is commonly translated otherwise; to wit, that those who are liberall, go on forward, and abound in well doing, because God inricheth them, & recompenceth them with greater benefits. This sense at the first, hath some shew of reason: but the Prophet rather meant, that the liberall shall neuer cease giuing. Why so? Because they shal grow more and more; they shall haue the same will and affections, and shall continue constant in their good course: as it is said, Psal. 112. 9. He hath distributed abroad, and giuen to the poore: his righteousnesse indureth for euer. Now this is added because it is an easie matter to counterfet the liberall person for a time: many also thinke they haue quit themselues well, when they haue giuen a little; but they grow faint hearted by & by, and change their mindes: whereas on the contrary, true liberalitie is not an houres bird, as wee say, but growes on to perfection. Those that are indued therewith, perseuere therein constantly: their liberalitie is not by fits & starts; neither are they like a seething pot, that is now ready to boile ouer, and by & by stands as still as a stone.

The way of the righteous like the light that shineth more and more vnto the perfect day: Prou. 4. 18.

2. Cor. 9. 9.

This is it which our Prophet meant to expresse by the verbe, shall goe forward or continue. Many things fall out often times, which cooles the heat, and hinders the course of our charitie. First, we meete with the strange ingratitudes of men; so as it seemes all our cost is ill bestowed. Againe, many are too greedie, like horseleeches, that still sucke in other mens blood. Yet let vs often and alwaies beare in minde what Saint Paul saith, Gal. 6. 9. to wit, that we shall reape in due season if we faint not. For the Lord exhorts vs not to such a kinde of liberalitie as should last for a day or a weeke, but for our whole life.

Vers. 9. Rise vp, yee women that are at ease: heare my voice ye careless daughters, hearken to my words.

IT seemes there should bee no coherence betweene these words and the former. For before hee spake of the restitution of the Church; but now hee threatens that Gods iudgements are readie to seise vpon those who gaue themselues to a pompous, delicious, and an idle course of life. It should seeme therefore that Isaiah takes vp a new matter in this place. Yet will there be no great inconuenience, if this prophecie be ioyned to the former: for the Prophets vsually keepe this course; first, they lay forth promises of grace grace to the faithfull; then they direct their ſpeech to the hypocrits, teſtifying that the mercy which God promiſeth to his children, ſhall be ſo far off from benfiting of them, that they ſhall ſurely beare the reward of their ſinnes.

Wheras he bends the force of his ſpeech in particular againſt women, the Hebrews vnder this word (according to the vſe of their tong) vnderſtand Cities: but I thinke this ſhould be no figuratiue maner of ſpeech, and therefore I rather reſt in the bare letter. Now he ſpeaks to women rather then vnto men, to ſignifie the greatneſſe of this deſolation: for women and maidens are commonly ſpared in ſuch times, by reaſon of their ſex, being alſo deſtitute of warlike defences. Well, he ſaith the deſtruction ſhall be ſo barbarous, that none ſhall ſcape ſcotfree.

And note that he ſpeakes expreſly of women of reſt, who cómonly are the moſt delicate: for according to their abundance, ſo they may better ſhift for themſelues, and may more eaſilie eſcape dangers, when the poore muſt be faine to goe to the wall. But Iſaiah telles them that they ſhal be conſtrained to riſe and tremble: therein oppoſing this trembling, to that reſt and eaſe which they quietly inioyed. For he commands them to ariſe, as giuing them to vnderſtand, that it was no time for them now to ſit ſtill, becauſe the Lord was about to awaken them out of their ſecure couſe of life.

When he addes, heare my voice yee daughters: by daughters, the Rabbines vnderſtand Cities and Townes; but this ought to be taken litterally, as I ſaid before. Hee ſhewes whence this terror and violence ſhall proceed, which ſhall cauſe them thus to ariſe and tremble; to wit, from the iudgement of God. But he mentions the voice, to ſhew that this ſhall bee no vaine prophecie, becauſe this war was proclaimed againſt them by the commandement of God. As if he ſhould ſay; You ſhall one day feele by experience, what power and efficacie there is in the word of God to awaken you.

Now he blames their idleneſſe, ſecuritie, and delicacie ſo oft, not onely becauſe it ſhould be vnked for thoſe that had bin wont to be at their eaſe, to bee ſo rudely rouzed vp; but alſo in regard it is a thing almoſt vnpoſſible, that the world (in this corrupted and depraued eſtate of mans nature) ſhould not bee too careleſſe in abuſing reſt and abundance. For we then by little and little fall into a ſottiſhneſſe of mind, deceiuing our owne ſoules with vaine imaginations: ſo as all feare is abandoned of euery one: in which falſe ſecuritie, wee eaſily are drawne audaciouſly euen to ruſh againſt God himſelfe, Verſ. 10. Yee women that are careleſſe, ſhall bee in feare abouc a yeere in daies: for the vintage ſhall faile, and the gathering ſhall come no more.

It is a great reliefe to a ſorrowfull

BY theſe words he meanes, that the calamitie ſhall laſt long: for it is a great reliefe to a ſorrowfull mind, when bee thinkes that the miſeries and afflictions which preſſe vpon him ſo neerly, ſhall laſt but a while. But when there is no hope left of ſome comfortable iſſue, nor promiſe of deliuerance, what can enſue thereof but deſpaire? Hee ſhewes then, that they ſhall not ſuffer this extremitie for a yeere onely, but that they muſt expect new afflictions, one in the necke of another. By the word to feare, hee priuily taxeth their drowſineſſe; ſhewing that they ſhall be led away with terror and trembling, ſeeing the ſweet and ſtill voice of wholſome doctrine was ſo tedious vnto them. And in as much as the Iewes were too much beſotted with the loue of earthly and tranſitorie things, hee threatens them with want of bread and wine. And thus hee applies himſelfe to their capacitie.

heart, when it perceiues that though afflictions be ſharpe, yet they are but ſhort.

If they had been better purged from their earthlineſſe, he would rather haue awakened them with the feare of that iudgement which Ieremiah bewailes, Lament. 1. 7. to wit, that the ſacrifices and feaſt daies ſhould ceaſe, and that the holy aſſemblies ſhould be aboliſhed. But becauſe they had plunged themſelues in voluptuous liuing, and had not ſo well profited as to eſteeme ſpiritual benefits, the Prophet applying himſelfe to their weakneſſe, addreſſeth his ſpeech rather to their bellies, then to their mindes.

Now he toucheth the waſting of the fields, which ſhould vndoubtedly follow this war: for abundance is the mother of idleneſſe and ſecuritie. It is therefore as if he had ſaid, The Lord will depriue you of your belly cheere, he will rouze you vp with a witneſſe, and will depriue you of all matter of reioycing. By this verſe then are we admoniſhed not to lie ſnorting in our proſperity; neither to dreame of ſuch a reſt, as if we were to inioy the ſame in this world for euer. No, let vs vſe the good things which God beſtowes vpon vs moderately, vnleſſe we meane that God ſhould awaken and ouerwhelme vs vnawares: and by this ſudden change which ſhall befall vs, vexe vs worſe then wee can expect or thinke of.

Abundance the mother of idleneſſe and ſecurite.

Verſ. 11. Tee women that are at eaſe, be aſtonied: feare O yee careleſſe women: put off the clothes, make bare, and gird ſackcloth vpon the loines.

THis is no ſuperfluous repetition, but rather an amplification of that which hee ſpake of before: for whileſt men are thus rocked aſleepe, hardly can they be awakened by the voice of Gods Prophets. It is needefull then to cry alowd, and to adde rebuke to rebuke. Therefore in that hee multiplies his threatning, he thereby ſhewes how great our ſecuritie is, when men are once blinded with proſperitie. It is almoſt a thing impoſſible for them to heare the voice of God when he admoniſheth them. And to ſpeake the truth, men are in much more danger by proſperitie, then by aduerſitie: for when all things fall out well, they are ready to flatter themſelues ſelues; yea, and to be bewitched with their felicitie. This was the cauſe why he was faine to rebuke the Iewes ſo ſharply; euen to quicken them vp if it were poſſible out of their drowſineſſe. This exhortation then ought to be referred to the time to come: as if the Prophet ſhould haue ſaid; In the end you ſhall tremble, for I can aſſure you, your reſt ſhall not laſt alwaies.

Thus hee ſhewes that this calamitie which was to enſue, ſhould be as a ſeale ſet vnto his prophecie, whereby God would manifeſt by the effects, that theſe words ſhould not vaniſh away in the ayre. Where hee bids them to make bare, and to gird them with ſackcloth, he deſcribes the eſtate of mourners. For when aduerſitie preſſeth any, then they put on ſackcloth, and make the reſt of the parts of their bodies naked: and ſo by outward geſtures and garments, and the like, they manifeſt the inward dolour of their mindes. Hee calles the women then from their delicious and daintie fare, and voluptuous liuing wherein they plunged themſelues, to ſackcloth and other teſtimonies of ſorrow.

Verſ. 12. Men ſhall lament for the teates; euen for the pleaſant fields and for the fruitfull vine.

THis verſe is diuerſly expounded: for ſome without any figure, vnderſtand, that there ſhall bee ſuch great want of food, that women ſhall loſe their milke, and therefore that the infants ſhall weepe ouer the emptie and dried breaſts of their mothers: which we ſee to fall out when people are pined away in great famin. But the moſt receiued ſenſe, and that which agrees beſt, is; that by teates, vnder a figure we vnderſtand fields and vineyardes, which alſo is expreſſed in the very words of the text: becauſe from them, as from the teats of our mothers, we daily ſucke milke & blood as it were out of ỹ earth. His meaning is then, that the fruits of the earth ſhall faile, becauſe the Lord will ſo curſe her, ỹ ſhe ſhall not be able to yeeld any increaſe. Thus men ſhall lament in regard of this great penurie, as ouer the teats of their mother, which were wont to feede them with delicates. This ſenſe I take to be fitteſt, as beſt agreeing to the naturall ſcope of the text: for it was neceſſarie it ſhould ſerue as an expoſition to that which is afterward added, touching the pleaſant field, and the fruitfull vines.

Verſ. 13. Vpon the land of my people ſhall grow thornes and briars: yea, vpon all the houſes of ioy in the Citie of reioycing.

HEe now confirmes the former ſentence, and ſhewes that the cauſe of this famin and barrenneſſe ſhal be, in regard that thornes and briars ſhall grow vpon the land; that is to ſay, the fields ſhall bee laid fallow and barren, whereas before they were fat and fruitfull.

Now this muſt needs be an horrible change: for this Country, as we know, had the praiſe for fruitfulnes aboue any other; not ſo much in reſpect of the ſoile, as by Gods bleſſing, who had ſaid, I will giue you a land flowing with milke and hony: Exod. 3. 8. and 17. Hence (I ſay) came this fruitfulneſſe of that land.

Whereas he calles it the land of his people: he preuents an obiection which they might thus make; what reaſon haue we to feare the barrenneſſe of that land, or that it ſhould not yeerly yeeld vs fruit, ſeeing God who is good vnto all, will be much more a nurcing father to vs, and that in a more particular manner? They thought it then a thing vtterly vnpoſſible, that this land being beſtowed vpon them, who were the children of Abraham, ſhould euer be ouergrowne with thornes and briars. And thus the Prophet rebukes the Iewes the more ſharply, becauſe by their rebellion, they had not onely made void theſe bleſſings of God, but had alſo pulled downe his wrath ſo far vpon them, as to lay their fruitfull land waſte and barren.

The word yea, in the middle of the ſentence, amplifies the doctrine: albeit ſome expound it, For, reading it thus: For gladneſſe is in their houſes. But this ſenſe ſutes not wel, in regard the conſtruction of the words will not beare it. I rather thinke therefore that he inlargeth the ſentence, as if he meant to ſay, that this calamitie ſhall not onely ſeiſe vpon the vtmoſt bounds of the land, but euen vpon the houſes of ioy alſo; to wit, euen vpon thoſe which were ſumptuous and pleaſant, where they were alwaies wont to ſolace themſelues without let in times paſt.

But when the Prophet ſpake theſe things, I warrant you the people of that time laught a good (as we ſay) at him: neither could they heare ſuch vnſauorie newes amiddeſt ſo manie delights which bewitched them. Nay, they tooke foule ſcorne to be ſo dealt with all, becauſe of Gods promiſes, which they tooke to bee ſo ſure, that they thought no want could euer befal them: but Iſaiahs words haue all proued true for all that. By this example therefore let vs learne to vſe proſperitie with ſobriety, and ſo depend vpon Gods promiſes touching his bleſſings, to bee powred out vpon vs, that in the meane while we yeelde obedience to his word with a good conſcience.

Vſe proſperitie with ſobrietie.

Verſ. 14. Becauſe the pallace ſhall bee forſaken, and the noiſe of the Citie ſhall bee left; the tower and fortreſſe ſhall bee dennes for euer, and the delight of wilde Aſſes, and a paſture for flockes.*

*Or, For the, &c.

HE yet ſets forth this deſolation more at large: for, hauing in the former verſe mentioned the houſe of magnificence; hee now addes the pallaces and Cities: meaning to ſhew, that nothing (be it neuer ſo glorious or excellent) could bee exempted from this common

common deſolation. We ſee then that mens eies are dazeled with their owne glorie vntill they lift vp their eies towards heauen, and thus being ſweetly lulled aſleepe in their plentie, they grew feareleſſe and careleſſe of any thing. Therefore he tels them that all their pleaſant and gorgeous things in the land of Iudea, to wit, their Cities, Pallaces, Caſtles & Forreſſes ſhould be laid vpon heapes and brought to nothing.

By the word euer, he againe admoniſheth them (as I haue touched before) that this wound ſhall not be cloſed vp againe in a yeere, but ſhould be long in healing: which ſhould anſwere in proportion to the length of time in which they had hardened themſelues in their vices; for had not the hand of God preſſed them long according to their ſtubborne and rebellious nature, they would haue been readie forthwith to haue ruſhed into their iniquities afreſh.

Verſ. 10.

Verſ. 15. Vntill the Spirit be powred vpon vs from aboue, and the wildernes become a fruitfull field, and the plenteous field be counted as a forreſt.*

*Or, Carmel.

THe Prophet had to deale as we know with the Iewes, amongſt whom the Lord had planted his Church, it was needfull therefore to leaue them ſome hope of ſaluation, leaſt they ſhould diſpaire in the middes of ſo many calamities. For albeit the Lord handles hypocrits roughlie becauſe they falſely ſhroude themſelues vnder the title of being his people; yet is he inforced by one meanes or other to prouide for the good of his Saints. This promiſe is added therefore to put them in hope that God can not, nor will not forget his Couenant; howbeit for a time he ſcourgeth his children ſharplie with the rods of men; for he neuer ſo threatens, but he leaues hope and conſolation for the repentant to cheere vp and refreſh their hearts, and that euen when it ſeemes heauen and earth ſhall goe together.

God neuer threatens ſo ſharpely, but he ſtill leaues hope for the penitent.

And that they might the better taſte this conſolation which our Prophet ſets before them, he raiſeth vp their minds to the author of life. Wee ſee that when all things fadge well, many eate and drinke till their skins crack, as they ſay: If famin pinch, then God is forgotten, and men runne for ſuccor to the earth. It is not without cauſe then that Iſaiah ſaith, the Spirit ſhall come from aboue, which warming the earth, ſhall cauſe the ſame to floriſh with new frutefulnes. Neither do I doubt but he alludes to that ſentence of Dauid, Send forth thy Spirit, and they ſhall be created, and thou wilt renew the face of the earth, Pſal. 104. 30.

This word ſpirit hath two extents here: firſt, to the reſtauration of earthly benefits.

Now in regard that he alſo ſets before them this ſigne as a token that God was reconciled vnto them, he therewithall aduertiſeth them, that the reſtauration of ỹ Church flowes only from his free grace, who can abolith barrennes as ſoone as it pleaſeth him in his fauor to diſtill ſome ſweet dewes from aboue: yea, ỹ he can do it in an inſtant, becauſe at the firſt he created all things of nothing, as if they had been before.

The expoſitors doe diuerſlie tranſlate the latter part of this verſe, where he compares the deſert to Carmell: but as I haue ſhewed in the 29. Chapter verſ. 17. where there is the like phraſe of ſpeech, it ſeemes to me that the Prophet ſimplie ſets forth the effect of this reſtauration: to wit, that the abundance of all things ſhall teſtifie that God is indeed appeaſed towards his people. For the places which were deſerts before ſhould be as Carmell, which was a fat & frutefull ſoile, whence alſo it tooke his name.

Carmell alſo ſhall be as a deſert: that is to ſay, ſo frutefull, that if it be compared as it is now with that which it ſhal be one day, it may well be called a deſert: for it is an amplification of the extraordinarie frutefulnes of it; as if he ſhould ſay, The fields which now are laid fallow and beare nothing, ſhall bring forth frutes: and thoſe which are tilled, and are by nature apt to yeeld increaſe, ſhall wax ſo frutefull, that the abundance which is now vpon them is but barrennes in compariſon of that which ſhall be hereafter. As if we ſhould compare the grounds of Sauoy, with thoſe of Sicilia or Calabria, we would ſay that it were but a deſert. In a word, he ſignifies that there ſhall be an incomparable frutefulnes, which the faithfull ſhall enioy after they be reconciled vnto God; and all becauſe they may vnderſtand what loue he beares them by lading them with ſo many benefits.

Now Iſaiah ſo propheſieth here of Hezekias his kingdome, that therewithall he referres all things to the kingdome of Chriſt, as to the end and full accompliſhment thereof. Come we once to Chriſt, then muſt we expound all theſe things ſpirituallie, that ſo we may know we are renewed, as ſoone as the Lord ſends downe his ſpirit from aboue into our hearts, of barren ground, to make them frutefull. For till we be inſpired from aboue by this holy Spirit, we are rightlie compared to deſerts and parched grounds, ſeeing we bring forth nothing but thornes and buſhes, and are vnfit naturallie to bring forth any good fruite. Thoſe therefore which in times paſt were fruitleſſe, being now regenerated by the Spirit of God, ſhall begin in ſome meaſure to bring forth fruite vnto him: and thoſe who before had ſome outward ſhew of goodnes, ſhall become ſo frutefull after they be thus regenerated by the holy Ghoſt, that comparing the one eſtate with the other, the firſt will be iudged but as a deſert in reſpect of the latter: for all the goodly works that men do before Chriſt hath regenerated them, are but ſo many glorious ſinnes. Therefore when wee ſee the Church oppreſſed euen vnto death, and that her condition ſeemes very lamentable, let vs lift vp our eies to heauen, and depend whollie vpon theſe promiſes.

The ſecond extent.

Verſ. 16. And Iudgement ſhall dwell in the deſart, and Iuſtice ſhall remaine in the frutefull field.

Wherein the true glory of the Church conſiſts.

THe Prophet heere teacheth wherein the true glorie of the Church conſiſts, to wit, when Iuſtice and Iudgement gets the vpper hand: for men are not to reſemble beaſts in ſeeking only after the abundance of earthlie and tranſitorie things. By this it appeares ſufficientlie, that the Iewes were not held by the doctrine of the law in the hope of temporarie benefits only, as ſome fantaſticall ſpirits affirme: but they were by it commanded to reſt in that which was the principall, to wit, that Iuſtice and Iudgement ſhould floriſh amongſt them: neither is it to be doubted but they knew well enough that true felicitie conſiſted therein. We are therefore firſt of all to ſeeke the kingdome of God, and the righteouſnes thereof, and not to place our ioy and happines in the abundance of wheat and wine, as hogges that feede in the trough. For as Zacharie ſings in Luk.1.75. The end of our deliuerance from ſinne and Satan, and of all the bleſſings we receiue from God, is, that we ſhould ſerue him in holines and in righteouſnes all the dayes of our life.

labour after an innocent life.

By Iuſtice and Iudgement then he vnderſtands all vprightnes, as we haue often ſhewed before. See verſ.1. Which albeit they properlie concerne the equitie which we ought to vſe one towards another: notwithſtanding, becauſe it is vſuall in the Scriptures by the duties of the ſecond table to vnderſtand the obſeruation of the whole law, the Prophet here vnder a part comprehends religion and the true ſeruice of God. But the Prophets are wont eſpeciallie to mention the duties of loue and thoſe things that concerne the ſecond table, becauſe we chieflie manifeſt vnto men thereby what affection and loue wee beare vnto God. Now where he ſaith, that Iuſtice and Iudgement ſhall alſo dwell in the deſert as well as in ŷ plowed fields: it ſo much the better appeares that ſuch plentie of bleſſings was promiſed, that the beholding therof ſhould put men in minde of that great increaſe which they had ſeene in the fields before, was but barrennes now in reſpect thereof.

Verſ. 17. *And the worke of Iuſtice ſhall be peace, euen the * worke of Iuſtice and quietnes, and aſſurance for euer.*

* Or, effect.

EVen now he enuaied againſt that peace in which the Iewes were lulled aſleepe. See verſe 9. 10. 11. But heere he promiſeth a peace contrarie to that, which ſhall be a teſtimonie of Gods loue towards them, who will keepe them faithfullie after he hath receiued them into his fauour. The cloſe oppoſition betweene that bruitiſh peace, which the wicked thought they had gotten when they committed all ſorts of wickednes, whileſt they lay ſnorting therein alſo without repentance, and this peace which the children of God enioy by a godly and iuſt life, is here to be noted. For Iſaiah ſtirres vs vp to couet after this latter; and teacheth vs to be aſſured that thoſe with whom God is appeaſed, ſhal enioy a peace that is bleſſed and happie in deed. Thus he ſets integritie before them for the obiect of their deſires, that ſo they may attaine that peace which paſſeth vnderſtanding: for there is no better meanes to liue ſuch a peaceable life as is free from anoyance, then in abſteining from euill, and doing of good, as S. Peter teſtifieth in his firſt Epiſtle, Chap.3. verſ.13.

They that would enioy an happie peace, muſt

But our Prophet leades them higher, to wit, that in liuing holilie and iuſtlie, they ſhall keepe themſelues in Gods fauour. For is it not a thing altogether vnreaſonable, that the wicked ſhould expect peace, when they themſelues will continuallie make warre againſt God? In deed there is none but deſires peace; yea, who is he that can not highlie extoll it? but in the meane while themſelues are the cauſe why enemies are raiſed vp againſt them, for they trouble heauen and earth by heapes as it were with their wickednesſes. Now in regard that this peace which God giues is perpetuall, Iſaiah compares it with that which laſts but for a moment.

The wicked would faine enioy peace, whileſt they make open war againſt God.

In that he calles peace the effect of Iuſtice, let vs thence learne that warres proceed frō Gods wrath, which we ſet on fire by our rebellion, whereas peace on the contrarie proceeds from his bleſſing. When therefore we ſee the enemies boile with rage, exalting themſelues furiouſlie againſt vs, let vs ſeeke no other matter to allay that heate then true conuerſion: for our God will eaſily calme and quiet tumults, we being at one with him: for he it is as the Pſalmiſt ſaith, which makes warres to ceaſe vnto the ends of the earth: he breakes the bow and knappeth the ſpeares in ſunder, and burnes the chariots with fire, Pſal.46.9. but we haue told you before that theſe things belong not only to the time of Hezekias, but ought alſo to be referred vnto Chriſt.

Warres proceed from Gods wrath, which we ſet on fire by our ſinnes. Our ſound and ſincere conuerſion, the onely meanes to ſtill and quiet the rage of our enemies.

Verſ. 18. *And my people ſhall dwell in the tabernacles of peace, and in ſure dwellings, and in * ſafe reſting-places.*

* Or, quiet refreſhings.

AS he hath ſhewed that ſpirituall Iuſtice is that which hath her ſeate in the hearts of men, the ſame muſt be ſaid of peace, which is the fruite of it. Thus when we heare of ſure dwelling places, and refreſhings, let vs remember what Paul ſaith, Rom.5.1. Being iuſtified by faith, wee haue peace with God. This peace Chriſt left with his Diſciples, which the world could not giue vnto them, Iohn 14.27. And what maruell? For as the ſame Apoſtle teacheth, Phil.4.7. This peace paſſeth all vnderſtanding. Hauing once obteined this Iuſtice, we ſhall be no more diſquieted with inward terrors, as we were whē we felt that God was angrie with vs. The wicked conſcience is alwaies at warres with it ſelfe, and in continuall anguiſhes. The wicked therefore muſt needs be toſſed to and fro with diuers garboiles: for he that is deſtitute of righteouſnes, can neuer be in any ſound peace of conſcience. But where Chriſt reignes, there only is the true peace to be found, which the faithfull haue in aſſurance, which makes thē come without feare before the heauenlie throne, not ſo much in reſpect of their owne pietie, as for that they reſt themſelues vpon the ſure rock of Gods mercies in Chriſt. Hence we gather, that Chriſt reignes not where conſcien-ces are troubled and toſſed to and fro with diuers doubtings; in which caſe the Papiſts muſt of neceſſitie be: yea, and all others that caſt not themſelues vpon the meritorious ſacrifices of Chriſt, and vpon that purgation which he hath purchaſed for vs.

Verſ. 19. When it haileth, it ſhall fall on the forreſt, and the Citie ſhall be ſet in the lowar place.

WE told you before, that the Prophets were often wont to ſet forth the kingdome of Chriſt vnder ſhadowes, becauſe they borrowed ſimilitudes from an earthly kingdome, for otherwiſe (in reſpect of our dulnes) we could hardly be brought to comprehend this ineſtimable treaſure of all good things. The meaning is, that the Lord will remoue far off from his people, all incombrances and diſcommodities, and will cauſe them to fall vpon others. Now becauſe in this world were ſubiect to diuers tempeſts and vexations, ſo as wee muſt indure raine, haile, windes, and whirle windes: he ſaith that God by his admirable prouidence will exempt vs from the harme we might receiue by theſe things, becauſe the violence thereof ſhall be driuen by him vpon thoſe of other places.

Many are the troubles of the righteous, but the Lord deliuers thē out of all: Pſal. 34. 19.

By forreſts, hee meanes vaſt and deſert places, where none inhabits. By this we are aduertiſed, that being vnder the protection of Ieſus Chriſt, we are ſo freed from all dangers and inconueniences, that notwithſtanding there are many hailes and tempeſts readie to fall vpon our heads: but the Lord is our deliuerer, who either turnes away theſe eminent perils, or frees them who are in danger to take hurt by them. And that hee might the better confirme that which he ſaid touching peace; he ſaith, that the Cities which ſtood in the plaine, ſhall be out of danger; for they were wont then to build their Cities vpon high places, the rather to preuent aſſaults. Now hee ſaith, that God will ſo defend his people, that they ſhall neede none of theſe vſuall munitions, becauſe the Cities ſhall bee ſafe, though they ſtand in the vallies; neither ſhall they receiue any hurt, albeit they lie open to the furie of the enemie. Why ſo? For the hand of the Lord will ſaue and keepe them. Wil we be ſecure then? Let vs not truſt in horſes, nor chariots, nor yet in defenced Cities, leſt the Lord ſuddenly diſlodge vs: but ſeeing our good and heauenly Father vouchſafeth to take care of our ſaluation, let the protection of ſo good a gardian ſuffice vs.

Verſ. 20. Bleſſed are yee that ſow vpon all waters, and driue thither the feet of the Oxe and the Aſſe.

HE ſhewes how great the change ſhall be, when Chriſt begins to reigne. For hee ſaid before, that there ſhould be ſuch a deſolation, that thornes and briars ſhould couer the face of the holy land, that ſtately houſes ſhould be laid on heapes, and the Cities and palaces vtterly ruined. All theſe things were to fall out when the Country ſhould be ſpoiled by continuall incurſions of the enemie: but now he ſaith they ſhall be bleſſed, becauſe God will giue them the abundance of all things. He adorneth and decketh this fruitfulneſſe with figurative ſpeeches, which may be expounded in plaine words; to wit, that they ſhall ſow in marriſh grounds, and ſhall feede their cattell in thoſe places without feare. Verſ. 13. Verſe 14.

By waters, ſome vnderſtand a fat and fruitfull ſoile: but I take it otherwiſe, becauſe of the generallitie of the particle All: for in calling them all waters, it is as if hee had ſaid, that euen thoſe places which were couered with waters, ſhould be fit for tillage: ſo as they ſhall not need to feare the ſpoiling of their ſeede. It is our manner alſo to driue Oxen, Aſſes, and other beaſts out of the fields that are ſowen, leſt they ſhould crop off, or mar the corne. But he ſaith here, that it ſhall be ſo thicke and faire vpon the ground, that Oxen and Aſſes muſt be driuen thither to eate the firſt growth, as they vſually doe when corne is too ranke.

He calles them bleſſed, according to the vſuall Hebrew phraſe, becauſe their labour ſhould not be in vaine. If it be obiected that there was neuer ſeene ſuch a fruitfulneſſe of the earth, vnder the kingdome of Chriſt: I confeſſe that in the times wherein God hath prouided for his children in greateſt plenty, yet ſome tokens of his curſe might alwaies bee perceiued, wherein the whole race of mankind is wrapped, by reaſon of Adams reuolt. But becauſe the inheritance of this world was reſtored to the faithfull, by the meanes of Ieſus Chriſt, the Prophets vpon good reaſon affirme, that hee will renew the earth in ſuch wiſe, that it being purged againe from her filthineſſe, ſhee ſhall receiue her firſt beautie. Thoſe that reply, that this is not yet fulfilled, ought to take a view of themſelues, to ſee whether they be yet wholly cleanſed from all their ſinnes. And if they be as yet far off from that ſpirituall righteouſneſſe, ſpoken of verſ. 16 let vs bee contented to feele this bleſſing, according to the meaſure of our regeneration; which ſhall neuer be perfected in vs, till hauing put off the infirmitie of the fleſh, wee be fully renewed after the image of God, in true holineſſe and righteouſneſſe. Obiect. Anſ.

If thou ſee not the full accompliſhment of theſe promiſes, impute it onely to thy imperfect obedience: & be content to feele this bleſſing according to the meaſure of thy regeneration.

THE XXXIII. CHAPTER.

Vers. 1. Woe to thee that spoilest and wast not spoiled; and dost wickedly, and they did not wickedly against thee: when thou shalt cease to spoile, thou shalt bee spoiled; when thou shalt make an end of doing wickedly.

Whither this woe be pronounced against the Caldeans.

IF we expound this of the Caldeans, the scope of the place will very well beare it. For seeing in chap. 32. 15. hee promised freedome to the vanquished, it was high time for him now to direct his speech against the vanquishers. Not onely that, but the faithfull also stood in need to be confirmed in particular manner, to the end they might be drawne to beleeue this prophecie, which was almost incredible. It was verie vnlikely that such a Monarchie could suddenly be brought to nought; or that these poore prisoners, destitute of all hope, should by and by be set at libertie, to returne into their owne Country. The Iewes therefore you see, might very well haue fainted in waiting for any succour in such extremities, vnlesse the Prophet had preuented the same by this and the like instructions. He takes away the occasions then which might otherwise haue incited and prouoked them to dispaire, when the Caldeans led them captiue into Babylon; for they then saw no performance at all of these promises, but felt the cleane contrary.

Or, against the Assyrian.

Notwithstanding, because all are of opinion, that this is the beginning of a new sermon, and that these words are directed against Senacherib and his host, I also am drawn to admit, that the Prophet here threatens the Assyrians, with the chastisement of their vniust oppressions and cruelties by them committed, against their neighbours; that so comfort might bee giuen by meanes hereof, to the comfortlesse and oppressed. His meaning is then, that there shall be a wonderfull change when this florishing estate of Niniue shall be brought to ruin, albeit it seemed impregnable. Why so? Because the Caldeans should come against it, and should reuenge the cruelties which the Assyrians had exercised against so many Countries. And to the end his words might haue the greater efficacie, he addresseth his speech euen to the Assyrians, saying; Ho, thou which spoilest; as if he should say; thou hast now libertie to range abroad as thy pleasure, no man dares resist thee; but a day will come, wherein others shall make their pray vpon thee, as thou hast done vpon them.

The Caldeans sent to reuenge the cruelties committed by the Assyrians.

He speakes in the singular number, but it is by a noune collectiue; which is an vsuall phrase of speech. Others read it by an interrogation, Shalt thou not be spoiled? Thinkest thou thy violences shall escape vnpunished? No, they shall one day render thee like for like. But we may follow the vsuall interpretation, by which Isaiah amplifies the iniquitie of the enemie, who was so greedie after his pray, that he spared none: no not those innocents which never wronged him. Wherein we may behold a signe of extreme crueltie. I am very willing to receiue this exposition then; to wit, that in this first member, he describes the disposition of the Assyrians; shewing that they were mercilesse theeues and robbers: and further inlargeth their crueltie, in regard they vexed and spoiled those which neuer hurt the: and all to this end, that when the Iewes should behold such wickednesses, they might first bee brought to consider of Gods iustice therein; and in the secõd place, that hee would not suffer such barbaritie to escape vnpuhished. 1 2

When thou shalt cease.] This is the second part of this verse, in which the Prophet shewes, that the Assyrians do now spoile, because the Lord lets them run riot: but the time of their restraint drawes on, so as they shall haue no more power of doing hurt. If it were said; they shal cease to spoile, when they were able to spoile no longer; the sense would be too barré. Our Prophet therefore mounts higher; to wit, that the time will come, that they shall indeed cease to spoile, because the Lord will tame them, and take downe the pride of their power. Which is as much as if he had said; euen then, when thou shalt be at the highest. Hence we may learne, that tyrants haue their terme limitted, which they shall not passe. They rob and spoile whilest they haue run the length of their chaine, but when they are come to the end of it, they shall be constrained to stay there, as at their last exploit. Let this consolation then cheere vp our hearts, when we see tyrants take their swinge, and doe furiously band themselues against the poore Church: for the Lord will calme their rage well enough; and by how much the more they haue exercised their crueltie; so much the more shall God heape his wrath vpon them. The Lord will cut them off in a moment; for hee will raise vp enemies against them, which shall sacke and spoile them forthwith, and shall reward them that which they haue done to others.

Tyrants haue their terme prefixed, which they shall not passe.

Aconsolatiõ.

We are here also to note Gods prouidence in the change of kingdomes; for vnbeleeuers thinke that all things are hudled together by the hand of fortune: but it is our parts to looke higher; to wit, that the Lord rewards the wicked according to their wickednesse; so as in the end, they shall feele by the effects, that he wil not suffer the wrongs to goe vnrecompenced, which they haue done to the innocents.

Gods prouidence seen in the change of kingdoms.

The euents of things haue confirmed the truth of this prophecie: for soone after the Caldeans subdued Niniue, who by this meanes lost loſt their Monarchie; yea, and in few yeares it was raced and brought into obliuion, that ſhe might loſe her name. Now in reſpect that Babylon which ſucceeded it, was no leſſe repleniſhed with robberies; the Prophet doth rightlie affirme that other robbers ſhall deſtroy it, and the Monarchie being ſubdued, they ſhall pill and take to themſelues that which the Chaldeans had purloined from others.

Verſ. 2. O Lord, haue mercie vpon vs, we haue waited for thee: be thou, which waſt their arme in the morning, our help alſo in the time of trouble.

THe Prophet addes this ſentence, to ſhew the faithfull whereunto they ſhould haue their refuge in ſuch diſtreſſes; yea, euen then when there ſeemed to be no hope of ſaluation: to wit, vnto prayers; beſeeching God that theſe promiſes might take effect when they ſhould be in the greateſt miſerie, and the enemies power at the higheſt to oppreſſe them. We haue neede to obſerue this order diligentlie, for the Prophet hath no ſooner propounded theſe promiſes vnto them, but he forthwith exhorts them vnto prayer. Yea, ſuddenlie breaking off his ſpeech, he comes abruptlie as it were vnto inuocation: for he ſaw how hard a thing it was for the Iewes who were in ſuch miſerie to ouercome that feare wherewith they were almoſt ouerwhelmed. It is not to be doubted but the Lord haſtens to performe the promiſes which he hath made to his children: yet for a while he deferres to do it, that he might thereby exerciſe our patience. But if it come once to waiting, no conſtancie nor perſeuerance at all is to be found in vs, for our hearts are by and by danted and broken in ſunder. Is it not needfull then to haue our recourſe vnto prayers? for therby are our ſpirits cheered and fortified, when we caſt our eye vpon the Lord, by whoſe only direction we get out of all the agonies and anguiſhes which preſſe vs, yet let vs patientlie wait in aſſured hope for that which he hath promiſed: for our God is a faithfull God, he neither will, nor can deceiue vs.

Gods promiſes ſhould forthwith kindle in vs an ardent affection of prayer.

Deut. 7. 9.

Our Prophet further admoniſheth the Iewes not only to conſider in generall the iudgement of God againſt the Aſſyrians, but alſo to behold therein his fatherlie loue towards his choſen people: as if he ſhould ſay, the Aſſyrians ſhall be ſpoiled in deed, yet not ſo much to receiue the iuſt reward of their couetouſnes and crueltie: as that God thereby meanes to ſhew what care he hath for the ſaluation of his Church. Moreouer when he exhorts them to cry for mercie, therein he ſets forth our miſerie. Then, to the end the faithful might incourage themſelues in ſeeking to obteine fauor, they teſtifie that they waited vpon this God on whom they called. For in deed, our prayers are vaine and friuolous, vnleſſe they be grounded on this principle, Let thy mercie ô Lord be vpon vs (ſaith Dauid) as we haue truſted in thee, Pſal. 33. 22. For it were preſumption otherwiſe to preſſe into the preſence of God, if he gaue vs not entrance by his call: who as he for his part graciouſlie inuites vs to come vnto him, ſo muſt we on the other ſide be readie to yeeld our ſelues obedient to his word as oft as we approch neere vnto him.

God iudgeth the enemies of his church not only to recompence the wrongs and crueltie they haue done her into their own boſoms, but alſo to manifeſt the care he hath of her ſaluation.

The promiſes begets faith, faith brings forth prayer. Pſal. 50. 15.

Next of all, patience muſt be ioined with faith, without which, we be vnworthie to be heard, becauſe wee call not vpon God with confidence. Now faith only is the mother of prayer, as ỹ Scripture often teſtifies in many places, without which what remaines but hypocriſie, a vice moſt deteſtable before God aboue all others. Hence it alſo appeares that Chriſtianitie is baniſhed out of the whole kingdome of Poperie: for if Gods chiefeſt ſeruice conſiſt in prayer, and they know not what true prayer is (becauſe they will haue men continuallie to doubt, and accuſe the faith of the Saints of preſumption) how can their ſeruice be acceptable vnto God? Can that be a lawfull prayer which is made in doubting and without reſting aſſuredly vpon Gods promiſes? Thoſe great Rabbins which will be called Doctors of Diuinitie (forſooth) are they not more ſimple in this matter then little children? Certainely our children vnderſtand what prayer is better then they, and haue more godly affection. Wee may alſo learne from this text that faith is proued by afflictions, and the true triall of it conſiſts in a conſtant vndergoing of all dangers and aſſaults, and in reſting ſecurely vpon the word and promiſe of God. For thus we make it manifeſt that we haue truly beleeued.

Patience muſt vnderprop faith and prayer.

Faith the mother of prayer.

Papiſts know not what true prayer is.

Faith is proued by afflictions.

As touching that which followes, Thou which waſt their arme, &c. Others tranſlate, as if it were a continued prayer; Be thou our arme in the morning, and our help in the time of trouble. And whereas the faithfull ſpeake in the third perſon, they take it for a change much vſed among the Hebrues. But I thinke the Prophet hath another meaning, that is, rather to ſet forth the ardent deſire which is conceiued from the conſideration of former benefits. And therefore me thinks theſe words arme of the morning are fitlie added; in which muſt be ſupplied, Thou which waſt, and ſo the faithfull ſet before them the fauours which God beſtowed vpon their fathers. As if he ſhould ſay, Lord, thou haſt heard our fathers prayers; and when they cried vnto thee thou gaueſt them help. Be thou now our ſuccor and ſaluation in our afflictions.

See Pſal. 22. 4. 5.

Arme and Saluation, differ in this; that arme is taken for the power which the Lord ſhewed in defending his Church before it was afflicted; and ſaluation, for the deliuerance thereof when ſhe ſeemed vtterlie waſted. He records the benefits then which the Lord had done to the fathers, that he might moue him to beſtow the like fauor vpon their children: as if he ſhould ſay, Lord, thou haſt heretofore turned away the euils which were readie to ſeaze vpon thy Church; and by thy fauor ſhe floriſhed and proſpered: when ſhe was in trouble thou deliuereſt her: canſt thou now do leſſe for our ſakes, ſeeing it is thy propertie to relieue thy ſeruants when all hope in men is paſt.

The particle alſo hath great force in it to confirme our faith, and to acertaine vs that God, who alwaies continues like himselfe and neuer degenerates from his nature, being euer immutable, will deliuer vs also, for such a one the faithfull haue found him to be. Let vs remember therefore in all extremities how the Lord hath been helpfull vnto our fathers that trusted in his helpe, and hath deliuered them, that thence we may conclude, he will no more faile vs, then he hath done them.

Psal.22.4.

Vers. 3. *At the *noise of the tumult the people fled: at thine exalting the nations were scattered.

*Or, voice.
*Or, peoples.

Hee returnes now to the former doctrine; or rather continues it; hauing in the middest thereof placed a briefe exclamation. First, hee shewed that the Assyrians should be destroyed, albeit they then seemed out of danger. Now he calles forth the Iewes to be eye-witnesses of the same: for the multitudes of the enemies being in a maner infinit, euerie one quaked and thought them inuincible. Isaiah therefore sets before their eyes their fearfull ruin, and that no lesse then if it were alreadie come to passe. He speakes in the plurall number, calling them peoples, because the Monarchy of the Assyrians was compact of many nations, and their Campe was gathered out of many Countries. But be it their numbers were so infinit. What then? Yet they shall miserably perish, saith our Prophet.

Some expound the exaltation, Manifestation; whereby God did notably shew his power: but I take it more simply; to wit, that the Lord, who seemed before to sleep (as it were) whilest the Caldeans spoiled and pilled at their pleasure, shall notwithstanding suddenly awake, and come forth of his place. Neither is it to bee doubted, but the enemie proudly derided this his patience, as if the God of Israel had been subdued and ouercome: but in the end he rose vp, and being set in his throne, he reuenged himselfe vpon the wickednesse of his enemies to the full. There is here then a close opposition betweene this exalting, and that appearance of weakenesse which seemed to bee in the Lord for a time, whilest hee suffered his people to be spoiled and wasted.

By the voice of the tumult, some thinke the Lord would put his enemies to flight, onely with a noise: but I feare lest this interpretation should be more subtile then sound. I willingly take the word voice then, for the noise which should moue the Medes and Persians.

Vers. 4. And your spoile shall be gathered like the gathering of caterpillers: and he shall goe against him like the leaping of the grashoppers.

HE speakes here of the Assyrians. Vnlesse any had rather referre it vnto the Iewes, and so take the word spoile, in the actiue signification; albeit the first sense agrees best. Now this change of persons giues great vehemencie to the prophecie, in that he so plainly aduanceth himselfe against such proud aduersaries, and doth as it were name them. Yet some doubt whether he speakes heere of the finall destruction of this nation, or of that discomfiture in which the host of Sennacherib was destroied before the walles of Ierusalem, by the hand of the Angell. All expositors almost haue followed this latter opinió, which notwithstanding, as I think, is too much constrained. For it seemes the Prophet meant to say somewhat more in the beginning of the Chapter, when he spake of the destruction of this people. Yea, as I haue touched a little before, this prophecie may be extended further off; so as it may comprehend also the Caldeans, which were the last enemies of the Iewish Church. But not to stand much vpon it, it appeares sufficiently that the Prophet directs his speech against the Monarchy of the Niniuites.

Now hee compares this warlike people to caterpillars, because they should haue no power to resist, but shall tremble and be so ouertaken with feare, that they shall be taken vp by troopes and heapes. The similitude is verie fit: and Nahum vseth it, Chap. 3. 16. although somewhat in a different sense. Wee know that this kind of vermin do much hurt, especially to trees; so as they may well bee called the calamitie of the earth. But in regard they are void of defence, albeit they flie in troopes; we know that little children can easilie shake them downe, gather them vp, and kill them by heapes, as many as they meete withall. Our Prophet saith, that the like shall befall to these insatiable robbers: for albeit in that trade they had done much hurt a long time together, yet in the end they should bee easily ruinated, because being faint and feeble hearted, they shall fall into the hands of their enemies; in such wise, that the riches which were hoorded vp in Niniue by theft, should bee caried into Babylon.

The first Simile.

The other similitude of the grashoppers is added, to shew that the Caldeans shall come vp leaping as it were to deuoure the Country. For as these little wormes eate vp all before them; so they flie without ceasing, and in leaping nimbly vp and down, they mar all the fruits of the earth: whereas others refer this to the Assyrians, as if the Prophet compared them to grashoppers, because it was easie to scatter them one from another, it agrees not: for the Prophet sets the armie of grashoppers in battel aray as it were, who by their leaping should ouerspread the earth: and very fitly opposeth them to the caterpillers, respecting herein as well the insatiable couetousnesse as the multitudes of the Assyrians and Caldeans.

The second Simile.

Vers. 5. The Lord is exalted, for hee dwelleth on high: he hath filled Zion with iudgement and iustice.

*The Lord which dwels in the most high places is exalted. He hath, &c.

HE sets that forth at large, which he spake erewhile touching Gods exaltation, going ing on with the ſame argument which was handled before; to wit, that in the deſtruction of ſo famous a Monarchy, men ſhould know how deere and precious the ſafetie of the Church is vnto him, ſeeing for her ſake he will roote out Ninive the Queene of Cities, with her inhabitants alſo. Now this aduertiſement is wonderfull neceſſarie: for hereby we perceiue, that God ſpares not the prophane & wicked; for in ſetting himſelfe againſt their rage, he mindes to let his elect ſee what tender care he hath ouer them.

Firſt hee ſaith, the Lord is exalted on high: whereas on the contrary, the wicked thought to haue beaten him downe to the ground, in the deſtruction of his people. But to the end they ſhould not thinke God to be like vnto thoſe, who being ouercome, recouer new ſtrength vnto them when things are in better plight (as often it falles out in the world, that ſuch win that at one time, which before they had loſt at another) he ſaith expreſly, ỳ God is exalted in the preſence of all, and that ſuch an high dignitie belongs vnto him, becauſe he dwels in the heauen. Whence it appeares, that he is neuer depriued of his diuine right, howſoeuer often times hee ſuffers his power to lie hid: but when it ſeemes beſt vnto him, he will manifeſt his greatneſſe in the view of the whole world: for dwelling in heauen, as wee know, ſignifies an imperial ſoueraignty vnder which the whole world is ſubiected. Thus he ſhewes, not onely that God can eaſily ouerthrow all the pride of fleſh; but alſo concludes from the nature of God, that hee muſt needes ſhew forth his glory at the laſt, when the wicked fall to deſpiſing of him: for otherwiſe he ſhould renounce himſelfe.
